TUTT LIBRARY
COLORADO COLLEGE
COLO. SPRINGS, COLO. 80903

CATALYST

Volume 20, No. 1 Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado 12 September 1986

Chopping the Ninth Block

BY AKLILU DUNLAP

This academic year may be the last for the nine block year. An independent group of faculty members has formulated an eight year block plan that could, if approved, be implemented as early as next year.

The Committee for the Eight Block Year, co-chaired by Judith Genova and Gale Murray, is submitting its proposal for discussion in the September 22 Faculty Meeting. "This plan assumes that the quality of the classroom experience is determined to a great extent by what faculty and students do with their time and minds outside of the classroom," explains the committee in a report describing the proposal. Under the terms of this proposition, the following changes would be rendered:

- A shortening of the academic year.
- A decrease of the teaching load.
- An upgrading of the value of the CC unit.
- A lightening of B.A. requirements.
- An extension of winter and summer breaks.

In formulating the plan, the committee used a pool of ACM, Ivy League and other schools as a basis of comparison. Further, it referred to A Handbook of Accreditation and consulted the North Central Association of Colleges and Schools, this region's accrediting board. A comparative study was made using these references, and the results showed that CC has a heavier teaching load, a smaller unit of credit, a greater number of graduation requirements and one of the longest academic years. Says the committee, "Many high quality colleges have dramatically changed their calendars and requirements since we inaugurated the Block Plan and it is time for us to make our own adjustments." Murray explained,

The CC unit is significantly undervalued.

"The transition process from the nine block year to the one we propose is quite simple." Upon consultation, the board of accreditation deemed the changes too "miniscule" to warrant their concern.

The committee feels the shorter academic year could alleviate the problems of the "uncommonly heavy" teaching load that exists under the present program. Says the group, "Faculty need time for research and reading, not only for their own independent projects, but to keep up-to-date in their fields and to revitalize their classes." These faculty members also believe that students could equally benefit from the change since a qualitative improvement in instruction is expected. Additionally, week long symposiums, co-curricular and extracurricular programs could be incorporated in such a system. What's more, the extensions of the winter and summer breaks would give students the opportunity to find more "competitive jobs," work for longer periods of time, concentrate on theses or independent projects and expose themselves to better internship options. They believe that these gains will more than compensate for the loss of four courses in the B.A. program.

"The CC unit is significantly undervalued," claimed the group. The original appraisal of the unit was based on an estimated number (40-45) of contact hours per course. The committee believes this was an inaccurate count. A research conducted by the administration indicates that a closer evaluation would be over 50 hours. The group proposes that the value of the unit be raised from 3.5 to 4.0 semester credits.

The proposed system calls for modifications in graduation requirements as well. The Committee for the Eight Block Year suggests "that the number of units required for graduation be reduced from 34

Continued Page 2

Cyclists Crank Through Springs

BY DOUG SALL

Those of you who missed the World Cycling Championships were left out of one of the premier sports events in the world, not to mention Colorado Springs, Colorado. THis prestigious event was spaced over twelve days, five of which were reserved for track racing at the 7-eleven velodrome (Aug. 28-Sept. 1), two for the road races at the Air Force Academy (Sept. 6 and Sept. 7th), and the intervening days for special events in which the spectators could participate. The site of the World Cycling Championship for 1986 was chosen two years ago with Colorado Springs in mind because it had access to a velodrome (supposedly the fastest in the world) and a road course that was not heavily populated with cars (Air Force Academy). With the advent of 700 competitors from 62 countries and countless spectators, Colorado Springs hosted the 1st World Cycling Championships ever held in the U.S. The city showed admirable interest and support with sold-out sessions at the velodrome and street lined audiences at the Air Force Academy. To understand the popularity of this event in Europe one must picture stacked crowds of spectators that go so far as to either help their favorite cyclists by supplying nourishment and helpful pushes on hills or purposely hinder other cyclists by blocking or grabbing. The U.S., being more reserved, limited their approval and excitement by loud cheers and clapping. Overall the Worlds were a success with the competitors pleased with the location.

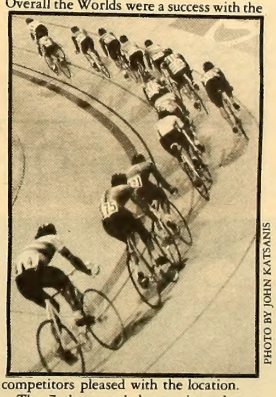

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

The 7-eleven velodrome, in order to accommodate the massive crowds expected, set up temporary bleacher seats. Originally the velodrome was to be used as a training facility for the cyclists at the Olympic Training Center. The track consists of banked concrete that reaches 33 degrees in steepness at the ends and has a length of 333 meters. it is one of 19 velodromes in the United States. The bike frames used on the velodrome are built of aluminum core wrapped with kelvar and graphite. The complete bike weighs from 13 to 16 pounds and costs about 10,000 dollars. Much of the cost is wrapped up in the disk wheels which cost from 600 to 1000 dollars. The basic disk wheel is twice the weight of a standard spoked wheel. The extra weight of the disk wheel is offset because they reduce wind resistence by about 60 percent. Track bikes have no brakes and one fixed gear.

When it was found that the 7-eleven track was excellent for breaking records due to its smoothness and location (less air to break through at higher altitudes) the UCI (Union Cyclist International) deemed it 1st choice for the Worlds. The velodrome lived up to its expectations with numerous records especially in team pursuit (two teams of four riders try to catch each other from opposite sides of the track), flying kilometer (individual rider clocked for three laps), and individual pursuit (one rider pursuing another). Lutz

Continued Page 17

CC Conemtplates Baca Extension

BY TED CRAIG AND DAVID A. FITZGERALD

The Colorado College administration is nearing a decision on acquiring the 300 acre Baca Grande conference center near Crestone, Colorado. The negotiations for the aquisition of the resort culminate a fifteen month investigation into the viability of acquiring a facility located three and a half hours from the Colorado College campus. Under a current proposal the college would operate the conference center for a three year trial period.

The college ended negotiations on the acquisition of the single building conference center and one adjacent townhome. Effective use of the facility, however, would require residential space beyond the single townhome. Securing two to four more townhomes is considered one prerequisite to finalizing the aquisition. According to President Riley, "everything hinges on what we come out of in housing arrangements."

The college's present operating budget would absorb the operation expenses for the conference center. According to President Riley if the operating budget cannot absorb the costs of maintaining Baca Grande, then the school will not acquire the conference center. The administration has not decided which department of the college will assume responsibility for the conference center.

Use of the facility has been the source of an intensive study. An all male panel consisting of Deans Nelson-Cisneros, Ives, and Peterson and professors Enderson, Fox, and Pena, submitted a forty page report to President Riley. Southwest studies professor Gordon also aided in the committee's research.

Despite an abundance of possibilities for Outward Bound and outdoor recreational activities, the administration proposes to make the facility more academically oriented than the CC cabin. The location of the resort makes it ideal for geology field trips, southwest study groups, and even religion department field trips due to the diverse religious groups who inhabit the nearby area. Classes not requiring fieldwork, according to Professor Gordon, would benefit equally well from the detached natural setting. Although the lack of library resources creates barriers, a variety of classes could benefit from a week or even a block long period of concentrated study.

The distance to Baca Grande presents the most problems for operating a new facility. The 3½ hour drive from campus would limit the accessibility and make communication and management of the

Continued Page 5

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Freshmen Frolick see page 9, 11

The Armored Rat Reeps Revenge

see page 18

60320

Continued from page 1

units to 32." In addition, it proposes the general education requirement of 20 units be lessened to 19 and that the maximum number of courses in a major be 13 instead of the current 14. By such definitions, a student would graduate with 128 semester hours. The committee deems that "these changes will bring us in line with comparable institutions." Such stiff and regimented conditions, however, pose one problem it is aware of. There is no room for failing a class. In view of this fact, these faculty members offer summer courses, adjuncts and AP credits as alternatives to making up "missed credits."

The committee is anxious to have the student body informed about the proposal. "We want feedback from the students because this change is a big part of their academic life," commented Geneva. Reports explaining the plan were given to all resident advisors to make available to students in their wings. Finally, a schedule of discussions between students and the committee on the subject has been made:

- Sept. 15, 7:00 p.m.—Loomis Main Lounge.
- Sept. 18, 7:00 p.m.—Slocum Main Lounge.
- Sept. 22, 7:30 p.m.—Mathias Main Lounge.

Brazilian Ambassador To Deliver Jovanovich Lecture

BY ANITA WALLS

Students, faculty, and the Colorado Springs community will have the opportunity to hear the current Brazilian ambassador to the United States speak. Sergio Correa da Costa will be on campus next Wednesday, September 17th to deliver the annual William Jovanovich Lecture.

Correa da Costa has been a diplomat for most of his career. He has served as the ambassador to the Court of St. James and as Brazil's permanent representative to the United Nations from 1975 to 1983. Previously, he was the secretary general of the Ministry of External Relations and five times acting foreign minister and ambassador to Canada. His current position is the Brazilian ambassador to the United States, which he's held since 1983.

In 1982, Correa da Costa was elected president of the Economic and Social Council while representing Brazil at the U.N. During that time, he also was the head of the Brazilian delegation to the Disarmament Conference in Geneva.

The Jovanovich lecture series was established in 1978. Its purpose is to provide a forum for clarification of major public issues. The title of this year's lecture is "Brazil and the United States: Asymmetries and Affinities." Correa da Costa will deliver his speech in Packard Hall at 8:15 p.m.

FIREFLY ANTIQUES

We studied the unusual. Graduated in the unique. And Mastered the unquestionably unlikely.

Besides, we feature the area's best collection of Nostalgia, Vintage Jewelry, Art Deco, fabulous fifties and more.

727 Manitou Avenue
Manitou Springs, Colorado
Open daily, 11-7 pm
Closed Wednesday

Visa & Mastercard accepted
Buy/Sell/Trade

THIS WEEK

SEPTEMBER 14 - 20, 1986

SUNDAY (14)

3:00 pm - FACULTY CONCERT - PACKARD HALL

7:&9 pm - FILM SERIES - OLIN 1

"The Pink Panther"

The inveterate bungler, Inspector Clouseau, of the Paris police, is the sort of man whose wife is not only two-timing him, but is doing so with the very masterful jewel thief he's been assigned to catch. The inimitable David Niven is the suave and ultra-sophisticated cat burgler. Directed by Blake Edwards. (USA, 1963, 113 min.)

FILM SERIES TICKETS ON $1.00 AT THE DOOR WITH CC ID. GEN. ADM. - $2.00

MONDAY (15)

*12:00 Noon - CCCA BUDGET MEETING - STUDENT LEISURE PROGRAM OFFICE, STUDENT CENTER

*12:00 Noon - OUTDOOR RECREATION COMMITTEE MEETING - CUSHING'S

*12:00 Noon - INTERNATIONAL STUDENT ORGANIZATION MEETING - POLITICAL SCIENCE CONFERENCE ROOM

*1:00 pm - RUSSIAN FILM SERIES - ARMSTRONG 108
"Moscow & Leningrad" and "Gustinov's Leningrad." Sponsored by Russian House.

*3:00 pm - IFC MEETING - MATHIAS HALL CONFERENCE ROOM

*Career Center
6:30 pm - SENIOR SEMINAR I - GATES COMMON ROOM
An overview of the Career Center services, resume preparation, and the job search process. NOTE: If you attend this seminar plus Senior Seminar II, you will not have to attend the three required workshops offered later for on-campus interviews. Sign up in the Career Center.

*7:00 pm - LATIN AMERICAN AWARENESS MEETING ARMSTRONG 233
Anyone interested in Latin American culture, arts, history, politics? Newcomers welcome!

MONDAY (15) continued

*7:00 pm - GAY RAP GROUP MEETING
Call x-384 for details

*7:00 pm - DISCUSSION - LOOMIS MAIN LOUNGE
Meeting with students to discuss the Eight Block Year proposal. Faculty members of the Eight Block Year Committee will be present to answer questions and listen to comments. All students welcome.

TUESDAY (16)

*8:00 am - MEDITATION - SHOVE CHAPEL
Music, silence, mystical and/or other writings

*12:00 Noon - LIVE SOLTICE COMMITTEE MEETING - STUDENT LEISURE PROGRAM OFFICE, STUDENT CENTER

*7:30 pm - STUDENT ACTIVITIES NIGHT - ARMSTRONG GREAT HALL
Introduction to extracurricular activities and College services. Representatives of campus offices and organizations will be available to answer questions.

WEDNESDAY (17)

*12:00 Noon - SHOVE COUNCIL MEETING - SHOVE LOUNGE

*1:00 pm - STUDENT ADMISSION REPRESENTATIVES MEETING - ARMSTRONG 306
Orientation meeting

*12:30 pm - EXTRACURRICULAR COMMITTEE MEETING - REHRIG LITTLE ROOM

*3:00 pm - PANNEL MEETING - MATHIAS HALL CONFERENCE ROOM

*Career Center
3:30 pm - RESUME WRITING WORKSHOP - ARMSTRONG 250B
This workshop focuses on how to use the Career Center and how to prepare the resume and application letter. This workshop is required for those students who plan to interview on campus and have not attended Senior Seminar I and II.

*6:30 pm - MILITARY SCIENCE MEETING - ARMSTRONG 233B
Orientation meeting

WEDNESDAY (17) continued

6:00 pm - JOVANOVICH LECTURE - PACKARD HALL
"Brazil and the United States: Asymmetries and Affinities" by Sergio Correa da Costa, Ambassador of Brazil to the United States

THURSDAY (18)

*8:00 am - MEDITATION - SHOVE CHAPEL
Music, silence, mystical and/or other writing

11:00 am - THURSDAY-AT-ELEVEN - PACKARD HALL
Speech by Jane Day (CC Class of '51) related to exhibit at Tutt Library

*12:00 Noon - GREAT PERFORMERS & IDEAS COMMITTEE MEETING - STUDENT LEISURE PROGRAM OFFICE, STUDENT CENTER

*3:00 pm - IFC-PANNEL MEETING - MATHIAS HALL CONFERENCE ROOM

*3:30 pm - BIOLOGY SEMINAR - OLIN 108
"Hawes! Hawes! Hawes!" by Dr. William Weber, Curator of the Herbarium and Prof. of Botany, University of Colorado, Boulder

4:00 pm - WOMEN'S SOCCER - CUTHAM'S FIELD
"CC vs Denver"

*6:30 pm - TRAFFIC COMMITTEE MEETING - ARMSTRONG 257B

*Career Center
6:30 pm - SENIOR SEMINAR II - GATES COMMON ROOM
The interview process in depth. Note: If you attend this seminar plus Senior Seminar I, you will not have to attend the three required workshops offered later for on-campus interviews. Sign up in the Career Center.

*7:00 pm - DISCUSSION - SLOCUM MAIN LOUNGE
Meeting with students to discuss the Eight Block Year proposal. Faculty members of the Eight Block Year Committee will be present to answer questions and listen to comments. All students welcome.

*8:20 pm - POLITICAL UNION MEETING
Lecture at Air Force Academy. Meet at Tunney House parking lot. Call Michael Fine, x-318, for info.

*7:30 pm - AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL MEETING - ARMSTRONG 235

Photo Of The Week

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

David Ives is now operating student services from his home at 931 N. Nevada.

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

SAGA forces students to eat in Bemis Loungs.

Warner Center Construction Disrupts Campus

BY CAROLINE BRYAN

The 1986-87 school year at the Colorado College promises to be, as always, a year of growth and change both for the students and the school as well. Necessary changes are being made in the actual structure of the college to accomodate the growing needs of the students and the faculty. This growth in all areas of the school carries with it a certain amount of confusion, and, in some cases, frustration. With Rastall Student Center transformed into a hard hat area, all of the central facilities that in past years were easy to use and locate have been dispersed.

David Ives, the Director of Rastall Center and the Leisure Program, assures that although the campus has undergone a great deal of shuffling of available space, there have been no sacrifices with regard to student services and organizations. The Hub is now located in the PACC house on the west side of campus, and the Minority Student Center housing NASA, Chaverim, MECHA, and BSU, which originally occupied the PACC house has been relocated to 223 East Yampa.

The new Student Center, the child of Rastall, is now located at 931 North Nevada, and will offer the Arts and Crafts facilities that were previously found in the basement of Rastall. The bookstore is now located in the basement of MacGregor, also on the west side of campus. Off campus mailboxes have been relocated to the basement of Armstrong and can be found directly across from the faculty mailboxes.

Space for student meetings can now be scheduled through Linda Oto x606. So far, there have been no problems in finding available space for such meetings. Armstrong classrooms are available after 3:30, while rooms in Boettcher and the residence halls are available at other times.

David Ives is pleased to report that Benny's, the campus 3.2% bar, will exist once again. Currently, the school is in the process of reapplying for a liquor license which, is required by Colorado State law if there is a change in location. The bar will share space with the Hub in the PACC house, and Ives optimistically projects that Benny's will reopen within the next two to three months. Though this may be a source of frustration for some of the students who had previously enjoyed the proximity and availability of Benjamin's Basement, the college has compensated by placing the six foot large screen television in the Hub which is open until 12:00.

"If we hold together and care about one another and what is going on, this as well as next year will be great years."

—David Ives

The food service at Colorado College has also undergone some major reconstruction. Bemis Lounge has been opened up as a meal facility, and the hours of Bemis and Taylor dining areas have been expanded at critical times. Exact times for each meal can be found in the "SAGA Survival Manual," which is available at the SAGA office in Cossit Hall.

Larry Stahlberg, Food Service Director, reports that despite students' fears of long lines and overcrowded dining areas, the system appears to be operating very smoothly. Larry recognizes that this is mainly due to the "incredible degree of student cooperation." Currently, the system is being monitored very closely, and if there are any changes in the trend SAGA will attempt to deal with those problems as they arise.

Next year, with the opening of the Lloyd Edson Worner Center, SAGA plans to change from the "line system" which has been utilized in previous years, to a "scramble system" which will provide seperate stations for seperate types of food. Ideas for stations include a grill section that will cook food that is made to order, a deli/bar section serving sandwiches, a salad bar section that will be very similar to the current salad bar, and a dessert section which will include a soft serve ice cream machine. Steak nights and theme dinners will be scheduled as usual.

This year, Bemis and Taylor are incorporating an intermediate step from the line system to the scramble system, and although the facilities are not ideally suited to this type of system, it appears to be working well and cutting down on lines for various types of food. Larry sees this as a good indication that the scramble system will work well in the new facilities of Worner Center.

The creation of the Worner supercenter that will bring this great variety of student needs together in one open, airy space ideally suited for it's purposes is necessarily creating some confusion. David Ives recognizes that the interim will be a difficult time, he also believes "if we hold together and care about one another and what is going on, this year as well as next year will be great years."

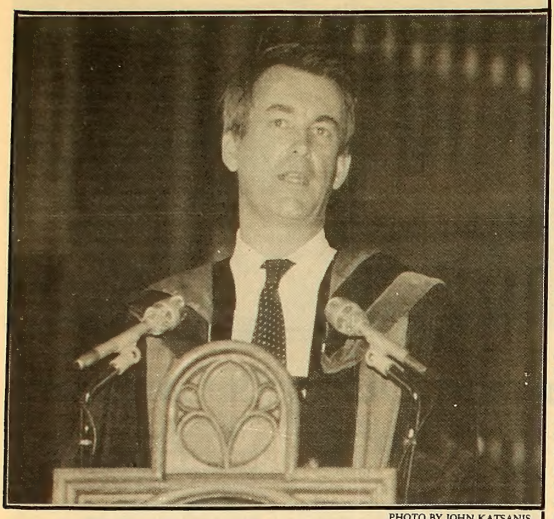

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Cronin To Get The Chair

BY DAVID KLEIN

"I've only been in the chair for a week; I'm looking forward to suggestions from faculty and students," said Professor Tom Cronin about his and CC's first fully endowed chair, the $1 million McHugh Chair of American Institutions and Leadership.

Dean Glenn Brooks explains that Jerry McHugh, head of the donating McHugh foundation has always been concerned about leadership and felt an obligation to serve society. "The foundation gave $1 million to the endowment and the interest from that is earmarked for the seven year renewable chair."

"Tom was the superb occupant for the chair," said Brooks, "First and foremost he is a master teacher. He is also a scholar who does a lot for student organizations." Leadership also happens to be one of Cronin's main areas of interest.

"It [the chair] is great for the college and it's great for me. I am doing those things that I like to do," stated Cronin.

Brooks and Cronin emphasize the breadth and flexibility of the chair. "The chair is designed," said Cronin, "to be flexible, leaving it open to accomodate developing issues." Brooks echos him, saying, "The chair is not confined to the Political Science department."

As Cronin mentioned in his opening convocation speech, he supports an interdisciplinary approach to leadership and forsees that the chair's structure will allow him to pursue this. He believes good leaders are independent thinkers who have the capacity to innovate and experiment.

While the chair lessens Cronin's teaching load and increases his research time and money, it also carries responsibilities. He will be asked to give speeches on leadership topics to students and staff as well as alumni. He specifies his role is not administrative but believes he will "be available to the college and have a part in encouraging things to happen."

CC plans to have five fully endowed chairs by 1989. Currently they are working out the fine points in the decription for the Maytag Chair in Comparative Literature. Cronin thinks these chairs will allow CC to become more competetive with the large research universities like Princeton and Stanford.

In addition to receiving the McHugh Chair, Cronin was also honored nationally with the Charles E. Merriam award for a person whose published work and career represents a significant contribution to the art of government through social science research.

The award was presented in late August at the American Political Science Association's annual meeting in Washington, D.C. Cronin is the first liberal arts professor to receive the award.

Mention this ad for 15% off (sales items excluded)

The Largest Selection
In The Pikes Peak Region

Fine Vintage Clothing and Jewelry for men and women from 20's through 60's

Something wearable
Something different Everything affordable

on-going 50% and 75% off racks

• THROUGH • THE • LOOKING • GLASS •

10 Ruxton Ave., Manitou Springs, CO, 685-1666
(Where Manitou Ave. meets Ruxton)

HOURS: 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Mon.-Sat.
11 to 5 Sunday

Library Reorganizes

BY DEAN CAMPBELL

Beginning in summer 1986, CC's Tutt Library has undergone important organizational and cosmetic changes. Along with the gradual change in book classification from the traditional Dewey Decimal System to the increasingly popular Library of Congress (LC) System, the bound and loose periodical sections have been consolidated, the government documents section has been more centrally located, and the reference section has been moved closer to both information desks. These moves are the culmination of years of ideas and have finally been carried out at the behest of library staff, students, faculty and Tutt's Library Committee.

Tutt's biggest improvement is the change in book classification from the Dewey Decimal System to the more modern and automated LC System. With the LC System, books can be located through computer terminals, eventually eliminating the cumbersome card catalogue. The computer readout will contain information as to the book's availability, as well as the call number, author and publishing information, and location. Eventually, hopes Tutt's Head Librarian John Sheridan, the library computer terminals can be reached from the other terminals around campus, and books could conceivably be renewed indirectly without the book holder actually travelling to the library, eliminating unnecessary wastes of time and travel.

The reasons for changing to the LC System were numerous and varied. Aside from the obvious convenience of increased automation, and the phasing out of the card catalogue, the change to the LC System will provide helpful continuity between undergraduate and graduate studies. With approximately 90% of the nation's research libraries presently using the LC System, the estimated 50-60% of CC students expected to enter graduate school, having become familiar with the LC System here at CC, will have one less adjustment to make upon entering graduate school. As of 9/1/86, only the reference section and books found in the second floor South shelves had been re-classified; further re-classification will occur gradually throughout the school year.

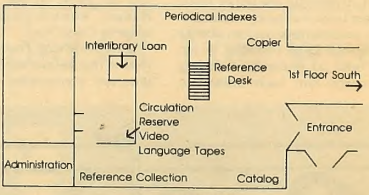
Moving the government documents section to the first floor was done mainly to increase the visibility of this valuable asset. With the documents near the main door, more students will realize Tutt has such a section, and members of the public, who are allowed to use only these public items, will be able to take advantage of the documents without disturbing ordinary library activities. Indirectly, the move creates new group study areas in the third floor's south end, and allows enough room on that floor for all Dewey numbered books 0-699 and 800-899.

Another important move is that of consolidating the formerly various and scattered collections of bound periodicals and combining them with the loose periodicals in one area. This is hoped to eliminate the hassle of hauling vast loads of heavy periodical volumes to and fro when doing research.

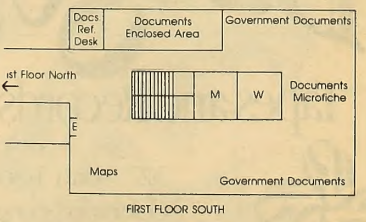
Other measures were taken to further the process started last spring of reducing noise in the second floor atrium. Though for a while last year it seemed that no one actually came to the library to study, reason prevailed, and even more carrels have been placed in between the second floor atrium tables to tone the ridiculous outpouring of idle noise down to a dull roar. Similarly, the presence of additional researchers infiltrating the periodicals section is hoped to create at least an impression of serious studying that may, weigh on the consciennces of the guilty chatterboxes.

Although each of these changes don't by themselves appear extraordinarily significant, the accumulation of nuisances and inconveniences has led to the creation of a much more organized and efficient library. Gone are the days of trapsing madly about in search of various obscure periodicals, as are, hopefully, the nights where the library's main study areas are noisier than most fraternity parties. The entire library staff has worked hard, and will continue to do so throughout the school year, to create a library that is better for everyone.

NOTE: More detailed information packets, including further explanations of the Library of Congress system and the new library layout can be found at the Tutt Reference Desk near the library's main entrance.



FIRST FLOOR NORTH



FIRST FLOOR SOUTH

Real men don't need padded bars.

CC Cadets Shine

BY MAJOR CHUCK SANKEY

Colorado College seniors Scott Thomas and Charles Bradley led the Army ROTC unit to first place among 420 colleges and universities for advanced camp performance. Both Thomas and Bradley were rated near the top in individual performances and contributed to the top ranking of the ROTC unit.

"Camp was difficult mentally and physically", said Bradley, "but the chance to work with so many energetic and dedicated college students was satisfying." When asked what he attributed his outstanding performance to, Bradley said that "the non-sense training of the UCCS cadre and the detailed preparation made camp much easier. I knew what to expect and camp lived up to my expectations. It was tough and I learned a lot."

The number one ranking came in an announcement from US Army Cadet Commando, Ft. Monroe, VA. The students from UCCS and CC ranked first in small colleges and first overall.

"Some of the credit goes to the ROTC cadre, however, most of the credit goes to the students. With 50 percent of the students rated in the top 10 percent, and 88 percent rated in the top one-third of all camp cadets," the performance in rated areas was clearly outstanding, said LTC Robert Knapp, professor of military science. "This ranking will last one year and we believe it reflects the quality of our program. CC students add a great deal to our program and CC should share in our pride", said Knapp.

Economics Department Receives Speaker Endowment

BY GREGORY GRIFFIN

In June of this year, the trustees of the Colorado College voted to eliminate the Business Economics major upon the graduation of juniors eligible for the major as of January, 1986. According to September's department newsletter, although no longer available to students as a major, the Business Economics Department will continue to serve the college community through its full business economics faculty and curriculum as well as its unaltered Economics major.

In addition to this, beginning this year a host of new and renovated programs and activities have been organized in order to involve the entire student body in the study of business, finance, and economics. The most impressive of these, the "Executive-in-Residence Program," will, by means of a $500,000 endowment provided by the Schlessman Foundation, annually bring several business executives to campus for extended periods (normally one block) to teach and discuss the role of business in society. The purpose of the program, as the newsletter states, is to "bridge the gap between abstract knowledge about and practical involvement in the business world." Another new activity is the "Pikes Peak Area Business Economics Roundtable." This program has been designed to involve interested CC faculty and students in speeches and discussions concerning local business and economic topics.

Two existing programs have been revitalized by the Business Economics department, bringing distinguished speakers addressing topics in business and finance. The "H. Chase Stone Memorial Lecture in Finance and Banking" will provide a "renowned individual" to speak during the 1986/87 academic year. The weeklong "Woodrow Wilson Visiting Fellow" program will represent the business world in 1986/87, during which Madellon Talley, former President and Chairperson of Rothschild Asset Management Inc. and author of Career Hang Gliding, will contribute to a discussion of business in today's society.

According to Professor Walter Hecox, chair of the Business Economics Department, these programs have been designed with the intention of attracting and involving the entire CC campus in the business world. Opportunities to take advantage of the faculty, curriculum, and activities offered by the department still exist although the formal Business Economics major does not.

Continued from page 1

property more difficult. The remoteness of the conference center would also raise difficulties for maintenance and for any medical problems which might arise during stay at the resort. Feeding the students is also an issue which must be addressed due to the absence of an adequate kitchen in the conference center.

Doug Fox, religion professor, described some measures for allieviating the problems created by the distance. Interfacing computers with those on campus and building up a small library at the site are possible actions. Still, remoteness is the facilities greatest asset in the eyes of many faculty members. Professor Fox described faculty reaction as mixed, ranging from "extreme enthusiasm to extreme disinterest."

While the Baca Grande acquisition is not finalized, completion of the deal seems probable. "It would be a terrible waste to miss the opportunity to see what we might do," concluded professor Gordon, "a waste not to give it a creative try."

MICHAEL
welcomes you back to college and continues to offer you the finest in Homemade

Sandwiches
Soups &
Salads

Orders to go 633-8588

823 N. Tejon
(3 min. from campus)

And yes we have Roses and Balloons too!

FREE
FLAVORED CORN
Bring this coupon with you the next time you buy a 30 oz. bag of Vic's popcorn. You'll get a FREE medium bag of the flavored corn of your choice.

- buttery caramel
- zesty cheese
- spicy cinnamon

Good at Uintah location only. Limit one per coupon.

CORN Vic's POPPER
1864 W. Uintah 520-9129
Mon-Sat 10-7 Sun 12-6

ART POSTER SALE

UCCS STUDENT CENTER LOUNGE
9-5
MON-WED SEPT 15-17

STUDENT PRICES
Escher, Laser Art, Photography, Museum & Gallery Posters, Art Reproductions from Dali to Monet, Movie Posters and more.
Phone: 593-3450

Josh & John's
Naturally homemade ice creams
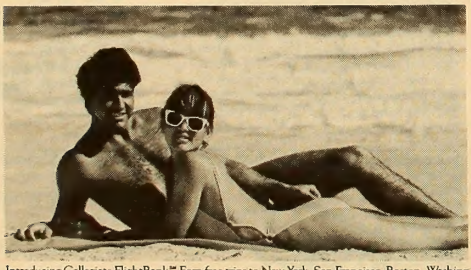
10% discount w/ad
(exp. 9/19/86)
"Over 100 Flavors Rotated Daily"
Downtown on Kiowa btwn Tejon & Nevada
632-0299
Open 11 AM - 12 AM

FINALLY A FREE FLIGHT PLAN JUST FOR STUDENTS.

YOU WON'T GET A BREAK LIKE THIS ONCE YOU'RE OUT IN THE REAL WORLD.

INTRODUCING COLLEGIATE FLIGHTBANK, FROM CONTINENTAL AND NEW YORK AIR.

If you're a full-time student at an accredited college or university you can join our Collegiate FlightBank.℠ You'll receive a membership card and number that will allow you to get 10% off Continental and New York Air's already low fares. In addition, you'll get a one-time certificate good for $25 off any domestic roundtrip flight. Plus, you'll be able to earn trips to places like Florida, Denver, Los Angeles, even London and the South Pacific. Because every time you fly you'll earn mileage towards a free trip. And if you sign up now you'll also receive 3 free issues of BusinessWeek Careers magazine.



Introducing Collegiate FlightBank.℠ Earn free trips to New York, San Francisco, Boston, Washington, D.C., Miami, Chicago, or Denver. Plus, Australia, Honolulu, London, and Mexico. All told, 74 cities worldwide.

SIGN UP YOUR FRIENDS AND EARN A PORSCHE.

But what's more, for the 10 students on every campus who enroll the most active student flyers from their college there are some great rewards: 1 free trip wherever Continental or New York Air flies in the mainland U.S., Mexico or Canada. Or the grand prize, for the number one student referral champion in the nation: a Porsche and one year of unlimited coach air travel.

And how do you get to be the referral champion? Just sign up as many friends as possible, and make sure your membership number is on their application. In order to be eligible for any prize you and your referrals must sign up before 12/31/86 and each referral must fly 3 segments on Continental or New York Air before 6/15/87. And you'll not only get credit for the enrollment, you'll also get 500 bonus miles.

So cut the coupon, and send it in now. Be sure to include your current full time student ID number. That way it'll only cost you $10 for one year ($15 after 12/31/86) and $40 for four years ($60 after 12/31/86). Your membership kit, including referral forms, will arrive in 3 to 4 weeks. If you have a credit card, you can call us at 1-800-255-4321 and enroll even faster.

Now more than ever it pays to stay in school.

SIGN ME UP NOW! (Please print or type) ☐ 1 Year ($10) ☐ 2 Years ($20) ☐ 3 Years ($30) ☐ 4 Years ($40)
Must be submitted by 12/31/86.

Name_____ Date of Birth_____

College_____ Address_____

_____ Zip_____

Permanent Address_____ Zip_____

Full time student ID #_____ Year of Graduation_____

$_____ ☐ Check/Money Order Enclosed PLEASE DON'T SEND CASH
☐ American Express ☐ Visa ☐ MasterCard ☐ Diner's Club

Account Number_____ Expiration Date_____

Signature X_____

FOR MEMBERSHIP APPLICANTS UNDER THE AGE OF 18: The undersigned is the parent/guardian of the membership applicant named hereon, and I consent to his/her participation in the Collegiate FlightBank program.

Signature X_____

Send this coupon to: Collegiate FlightBank
P.O. Box 297847
Houston, TX 77297

168

Complete terms and conditions of program will accompany membership kit.

CONTINENTAL NEW YORK AIR

Some blackout periods apply for discount travel and reward redemption. Complete terms and conditions of program will accompany membership kit. Certain restrictions apply. Current full time student status required for each year of membership. To earn any prize a minimum of 12 referrals is required. All referral award winners will be announced by 8/1/87. 10% Discount applies to mainland U.S. travel only. ©1986 Continental Air Lines, Inc. Students must be between ages 16 and 25. Registration and taxes are the responsibility of the award recipient.

C.C. "Best of Both Worlds"

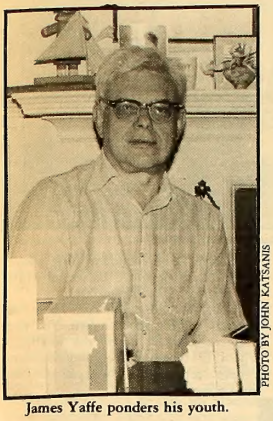


PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

James Yaffe ponders his youth.

BY BILL PORTER

"I never expected to teach," reminisces CC Prof. James Yaffe. "I remember saying to myself when I graduated, 'I will never set foot on a college campus again for the rest of my life'—which goes to show you how foolhardy it is to make predictions about your life."

Yaffe, formerly a free-lance writer before joining the College faculty 20 years ago, started teaching at a relatively late age. "I don't have an advanced degree (he graduated from Yale in 1948 with a B.A.)—I'm not a doctor. I was hired because the school wanted a writer."

Like several other professors here, Yaffe describes himself as a "practicing artist." He explains, "I see a connection between teacher and writer. I believe I can bring to class a view of writing from the inside; it's part of the contribution I feel I can make to the College."

Not surprising, Yaffe particularly enjoys teaching Creative Writing. Because of the freedom the Block plan allows, Yaffe is able to make students "really live like writers for two months (the course is two blocks). They're at the typewriter—or the word processor these days—every day; they get the experience of writing stories, developing ideas, and working creatively. It's a much more realistic view of writing."

Another of his favorites include "Drama and Opera," taught with Prof. Mike Grayson. "You sometimes get the feeling you're a missionary among savages," he concedes, "but I think we've had some success in creating a few opera fans here at CC."

Teaching Shakespeare also gives Yaffe enjoyment, for which he again praises the block system: "It's true we can't teach as many different works—maybe five plays during a block, as compared to eight or nine during a semester, but there are many other things we can do because of the time flexibility. We can read the plays out loud, which is absolutely impossible with a 50 minute bell, and thus gain a better understanding of the entire work."

As for his teaching approach, Yaffe comments, "Every professor has a theory about their own teaching style that would draw horselaughs from the students that have taken their class. For me, I see a constant tension in my style. I strongly believe students should think for themselves, come up with their own ideas and discuss, but I also have the feeling that there are certain ideas in books I want the students to see. In the end, I probably end up talking too much...but I'm always fighting this tendency." He also points out that it would be impossible for him to lecture to 200 students, as is done in most undergraduate classes.

"intensely creative, incredibly interesting and slightly kooky students"

Teaching is a pleasure to this creatively oriented man, especially since "It's almost always more fun to teach good students than to teach really bad students." CC certainly has its share of good students, as Yaffe explains, "The very best students at CC are equal to the very best students anywhere. Even more importantly, we have a large number of potentially great students who are on the verge of discovering the satisfaction of learning, which makes CC even more interesting."

Yaffe also finds that in general CC students do not seem as practical and career-oriented as other youths throughout the nation.

Enrollment in his Creative Writing class is as large as ever and is still filled with "intensely creative, incredibly interesting and slightly kooky students." In fact, Yaffe points out, the English department is being overwhelmed by an increasing number of English majors; "I think this means that this trend away from creativity has led to a counter-trend, where students are saying, 'What the hell—it's so hard to get a job that I might as well have fun at college."

However, to avoid the wrath of the English department, he does mention that CC English majors do very well at getting jobs after graduation. "It's very heartening to notice that CC students write much better in classes full of seniors than in classes full of freshmen. It means the College works."

When he is not enjoying the virtues of teaching, which is at least five months out of every year, Yaffe does "nothing but uninterrupted writing." His published works include seven novels, two non-fiction books, a collection of short stories, several plays, as well as a story published in "Ellery Queen's Mystery Magazine" at the age of sixteen. His most recent creation is "Cliffhanger," produced Feb. 1985 in New York.

He characterizes himself as a "realistic comic writer. I see the mixture of the comic with the serious in life. It would be very hard for me to write a tragic story, although I can teach one in class with great admiration."

Yaffe is not, however, a pretentious writer, claiming "I don't have some great message for the world; I write for the sheer pleasure of creating characters and involving them in interesting stories."

Nor is he an experimenter: "I write in conventional forms in a very straightforward way. I try to create for the reader the illusion of living there, which isn't very fashionable among writers today." Still, he does have "models," in the loosest sense of the word. Tolstoy, Chekov, Fitzgerald, Austin, and Dickens all have "a peculiar sense of excellence that I strive for. You get the feeling that they are 'your kind of writer.'"

Thus, Yaffe sees Colorado College as offering him the best of both worlds—"I am able to teach and able to write."

A Taste Of The Other Side

BY JULIE INGWERSEN

Rise up, students of the campus, you have only your cultural biases to lose. The Russian House has arrived at CC (Tenney House, next to Boettcher) providing a means of increasing the student's awareness of and involvement with CC's Russian Department, in addition to creating a unique opportunity to learn about Soviet life.

One of two theme houses on campus, Tenney is home to fifteen students who have united in an effort to promote appreciation of Russian culture.

Until this year, Russian students had no place to meet where they could explore Soviet civilization in an extra-curricular setting, theme coordinator Mike "The Czar" Fine made his pitch for Tenney House's new guise, and the Russian House was born.

The original intention was for Russian to be the main language in the house, but for reasons of practicality, English is the spoken tongue. Eleven of the fifteen students have had background in Russian language, however, and the house's living room will serve as a classroom for Russian adjunct.

The aims of the House extend beyond the needs of Russian students. A number of all-campus activities are planned for this semester, including a Russian Film Series (which begins this Sunday and provides three films next week), a Soviet Dance Festival featuring traditional and Ukranian dance companies (on the second Saturday of Block 2), and a U.S./U.S.S.R. Relations Symposium in December, organized in conjunction with the Political Union.

The presence of Russian House reflects a growing student interest to learn about one of the superpowers. Be a part of this experience and stop by Tenney House or take advantage of the upcoming Russian events.

We Buy Used Books
- Largest Used Bookstore in Colorado Springs
- 150 Categories of Books
- Well Organized & in Good Condition
- Movies 7 Nites Per Week

Poor Richard's
Bookstore/Cinema
324 N. Tejon 578-0012
Richard Skorman (Please call first if selling books)

WE'LL DO YOUR LAUNDRY!!!

WASHED
DRIED FOLDED

Suds 'um
Laundry & Cleaners

1931 W. Uintah (across from Uintah Gardens)
473-3756 Special student offer w/CC ID.

GRACE CHURCH
PRESENTS

FALL FESTIVAL

SEPT. 13, 10 AM-2 PM

GAMES
BAKE SALE - FOOD
FLEA MARKET - BOOKS
FORTUNE TELLER
JIMMIE JEMS 50% OFF

CC in the 60's Excerps

BY ERIN STRIFF

In the sixties, life at Colorado College was a unique experience. It was a decade of transition, of social consciousness and turblence, and of excitement. CC was a reflection of those times.

In 1969, a theater group wanted to preform "Dionysus in '69" in Armstrong Hall. All the actors were to be nude. Despite complaints from both CC and Colorado Springs, the show went on. Armed guards were present to keep ticketless people out.

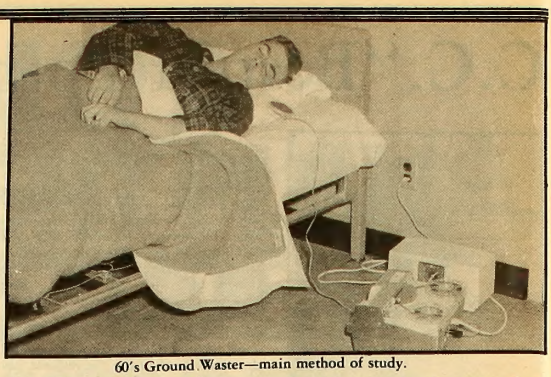
Co-ed dorms in the sixties did not exist. 1969 graduate Crete Wood remembers Mathias: "In 1969, we had to be signed in at our dorm at 10:30. If you wanted to go away for the weekend, your parents had to write a note." If a boy wanted to pick up his date, he had to buzz her from the dorm lobby. He was not allowed to pass that point.

In 1969 there was an increased anti-establishment feeling that permeated everything, including the production of the CC yearbook (The Nugget). Purchasers were given a box that read, "The Disposable 1969-1970 Colorado College Yearbook." It contained a note saying, "Due to the transitory nature of material posessions, we felt it only right to present the Colorado College community with a disposable, do-it-yourself yearbook. If there are sections that particularly offend you, we have included matches so that you may dispose of them in a majestic manner. Or shred for celebrations..." Inside, among other things, was a "CC—Love it or Leave it" bumpersticker, an anti-war box to assemble, various games, pictures to color, and Swap-a-Prof trading cards.

1968 graduate Eve Tilley Keller says, "The students were very orderly about how they approached a problem on campus." The Student Government was actually dissolved for a period, because students felt that the administration and professors were not listening to them.

Students were worried about friends being drafted, and there were anti-Vietnam rallies and marches. There was also a move to abolish ROTC in 1968.

The Doors played for Homecoming at the Broadmoor in 1967. Students also flocked to see Joan Baez play a draft-resistance concert in Shove Chapel.

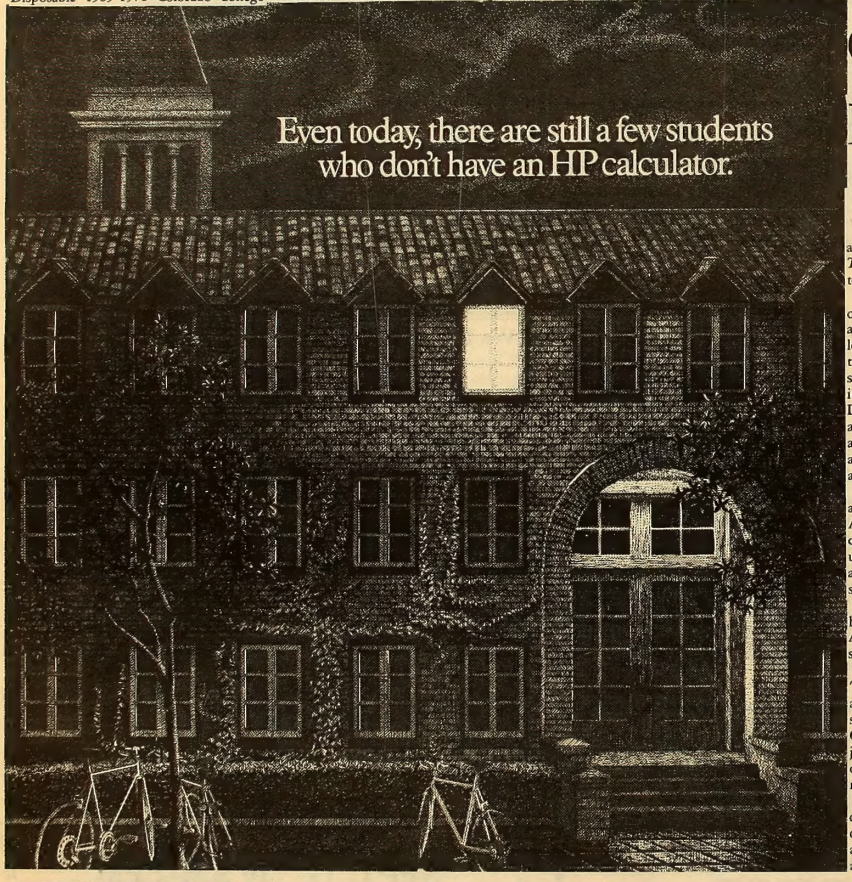


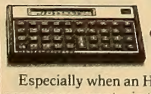
60's Ground Waster—main method of study.

Judy Collins played two folk concerts in Armstrong.

The 1967-68 Nugget tells of a Coffee House that had a "Bohemian atmosphere of checkered tablecloths, candlelight, folk music, and poetry." The yearbook was also filled with quotes. "See me loud with lies, big boots stomping, mind awash with schemes" (Richard Farina). "I am a lover and I have not yet found my thing to love" (Sherwood Anderson). "Excuse me while I kiss the sky" (Jimi Hendrix).

Crete Wood remembers: "There was pressure to be a good student. You were there to learn...It wasn't the traditional school. Everyone was very individualistic. People accepted you the way you were, and liked eccentricities."





Burning the midnight oil may be necessary.

Burning the 2:00 or 3:00 or 4:00 AM oil is absurd.

Especially when an HP calculator can get the answers you want—in time to get a good night's sleep.

For instance, our HP-15C Professional Scientific Calculator has more built-in advanced math and statistical power than any other calculator. Our HP-41 Advanced Scientific Calculators have even more potential.

That's because there are better than 2500 software packages available for them—more than for any other calculator.

There's even a special plug-in software package (we call it the Advantage Module) that's designed to handle the specific problems an engineering student has to solve in his, or her, course work.

No wonder professionals in engineering and the physical sciences widely regard HP calculators as the best you can get.

So check one out. Then, when your mother calls to ask if you're getting enough sleep, you won't have to lie.

By the way, if you want more information, just give us a call at 800-FOR-HPPC. Ask for Dept. 658C.

HEWLETT PACKARD

PG12602

Origins of Life at CC

BY PAT CHISHOLM

Was it fate that put us here, chance, or are we perhaps all part of a divine plan? The Catalyst went to the admissions office to find out.

The Admissions Office uses four main criteria in deciding whom to accept: the application, our high school record, to a lesser degree though still important, teacher recommendations, and standardized test scores. "The application itself is most important," remarks Jane Dailey, Assistant Director of Admissions and CC graduate. Through evaluating the application, "we learn what their goals are and how serious they are about taking advantage of what we offer at CC."

In addition to looking for people who are interested in a liberal arts education, Admissions also looks for diversity and quality. "It's always refreshing to get unusual, creative essays that show talent, and those are the ones that stand out," she said.

Concerning high school records, it is best to have "solid college-prep courses." Admissions looks at the types of initiative students take in high school.

Teacher recommendations also help. "Teachers sometimes are the most frank and are perhaps most likely to tell if the student is intellectual or scholarly." Concerning extracurricular activities and jobs, "quality is more important than quantity," in terms of commitment and maturity.

Last in the hierarchy of admission criterca are the SAT's and ACT's. They carry a fair amount of weight regarding acceptance, but not as much as the application and school record.

Just why does CC have the students it does? (—preppies, granolas, nerds, etc.) "There is a certain amount of self-selection involved. There's the block plan and certain students may be willing to try it."

A few statistics of the class of 1990: the five colleges and universities most applied to were (besides CC): Stanford, Dartmouth, Brown, Pomona, and Carlton. They come from (in order) Colorado (approx. 1/3), California, Massachusetts, Washington, foreign countries (including American citizens), Illinios, Texas, Missouri, Minnesota, New York, and Oregon.

"Are You Experienced?"

BY FLETCHER NEELEY

Here we are at that paragon of academic excellence, The Colorado College. Like most institutions of this sort, the College has an influx of students each Fall. To be sure, this year's incoming freshmen are a veritable cornucopia of personalities, backrounds, and experiences. Let us take an overview of just what is inside that big fruit and nut basket, the Class of 1990.

—Dan Laukitis was a virtual hockey deity in his home town of Peoria, Illinois. Like a very small number of people from this particular area of the U.S.A., Dan (Dangerous Dan to his friends), opted for CC, perhaps demonstrating his rugged and individual spirit. When asked about his plans first block break, he remarked, "I plan to take a hike" atop Pike's Peak, where he will meditate upon Life, the Universe, and Everything.

This is not to say that "Dapper" Dan disdains all social interaction. On the contrary, he wholeheartedly advocates partying as a form of internal release. When questioned about such experiences at CC, he extolled their quality. To quote him, they were "A #1."

Daniel finds golfing here at the College very enjoyable and plans to introduce his latest line of golfing attire, which includes yellow plaid knickers and a blow-lunch hawaiian shirt.

—Jane I (properly pronounced as e, but usually pronounced as i—the explanation of which can be found in her successful bid for the office of Head Girl for the inner-city, Denver high school Manual, in which her main campaign slogan was "I Is The One") finds the Block Plan as quite a challenge, which is a good thing. Jane opted for CC over Swarthmore in the pursuit of intellectual challenge.

—Bonnie Chadwick is a woman of few words, but of great esoteric capacity, being that she was salutitorian. When asked about the seemingly festive atmosphere at CC, she replied, "It is-a-great." She remarked that she had been barbarously attacked by some upperclassman, whose identity remains unknown. "He-a-called me." She did not find the experience favorable. Concerning the Block Plan, she said "It's-a-bitchen."

"She is a follower of this enigmatic religion, but does not suggest smoking ganja as a means of communing with God or "Ja."

—Paige Manger is a graduate of infamous Denver East High. She likes the friendly people at CC, and "digs" the school's proximity to places such as Denver and Red Rocks. She also believes that the small teacher/student ratio aids in-depth study.

She remarked that life in Slocum was "nutty," as two glass objects, apparently explosive, were thrown from a high-story into the dumpster below. She dislikes the metallica atmosphere of her dorm room, i.e. the furniture.

Paige said she enjoyed "The Skankings" and the beat that they had, but that they were not true Rastafari. She is a follower of this enigmatic religion, but does not suffest smoking ganja as a means of communing with God or "Ja."

—Nick Sherman comes from a very militarily-oriented family, and yes, he is related to the famous General Sherman.

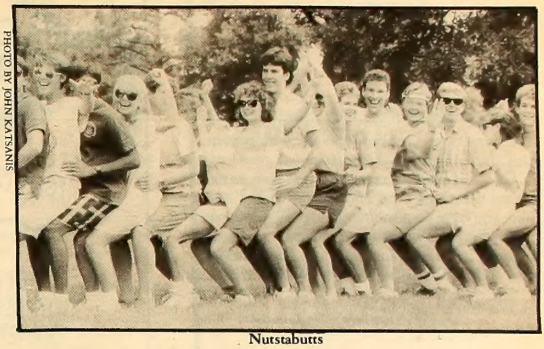


PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Nutstabutts

"Yeah, you've got it dude, the one that marched into the sea. However," Nick continues, "I'm something of a pacifist." Nick, like most freshmen, enjoys the Block Plan and alcoholic jubilation. However, he confided in me that he couldn't believe there weren't any parties on Monday night; although he did enjoy the rest of the week.

Nick said he was confounded by the gargantuan pile of dirty laundry that had accumulated in, or rather, invaded his room. He also said that he was desperately searching for some sort of typing service. As for the Block Plan, "It was radical!"

—Trish Cownie of Des Moines says that she was motivated by location to come to CC. She added that she was not homesick.

Budgeting of time is a primary concern with Trish. "There is plenty of time to study and party." Trish recalled that she had a "spiritual experience" with her Satire and Literature class on the way to the CC cabin. "My teacher was driving like a homocidal maniac."

Commenting further on the location tangent, Trish said that the skiing in Iowa was too hard on her diminutive person and that Colorado ski resorts should be easier to cope with.

—Nedum Ogelman is a nice guy. Concerning dorm life, he said "it's nice." About his neighbors he replied warmly, "they're nice." On the weather, Nedum exclaimed, "it's nice!" Upon further questioning however, Nedum did elaborate. Said Nedum, "I think there is a good balance between sports and school." Nedum of course meant that he is glad to go to a school where academics are primary, which is not always the case in many other collegiate institutions.

Well, I guess it should be a somewhat zany year. This is Fletcher Neeley signing off from the Campus Affairs Desk, Adios.

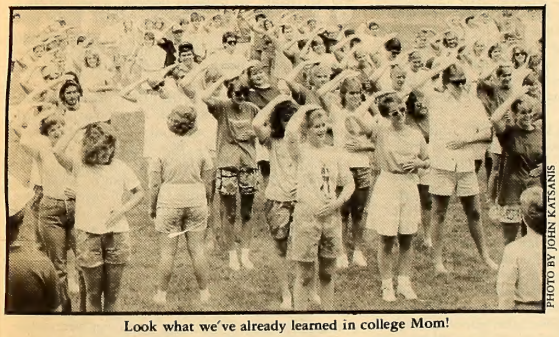

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Look what we've already learned in college Mom!

While you were away ... A new Vintage Store
Manitou Springs
Vintage Clothing Store
Mention this ad for 25% off of anything
In the Promenade - 725 Manitou Ave. - 685-9077

Make Ronnie Proud

BY CHRIS ANDRESEN

According to the media's picture of a college student, there are two thousand "money-hungry, egocentric, Alex P. Keatons" running around the CC campus. The Leisure Program and Career Center are countering this stereotype by sponsoring the 1st annual Student Volunteer Fair to be held Tuesday, September 30, at 7:30 pm in the Armstrong Great Hall. The fair is the College's response to those students who would like to be more involved outside the college environment.

David Ives, Assistant Dean of Students and Campus Center Director, says the Volunteer Fair acts as a "kind of dating game where students can get matched up with an agency that interests them." It is also a response to President Reagan's call for more volunteerism. "Volunteering is an important part of society which has died down in the past couple of years. It's not because students are any less dedicated," Ives explains, "but that the world's just more complicated."

As well as the personal benefits of volunteering, it also provides education and career opportunities. "It's very important for students to have experience when applying for jobs," says Ives. "It doesn't really matter what kind as long as it's experience. Things like organizing non-profit organizations are good tests for the classroom."

Over sixty organizations will be represented, including the American Red Cross, Better Business Bureau, March of Dimes, and the Urban League. "We hope everybody comes, and that it [the fair] motivates them to get involved in the world and community," adds Ives.

The emphasis on volunteering does not end after the Volunteer Fair is over. Both the Student and Career Centers will provide information throughout the year, and "will be interested in any feedback after the Fair is over."

Next Block get involved in the hottest gubernatorial campaign this year-

The Sullivan Campaign of Wyoming is looking for enthusiastic C.C. students for 2nd block.

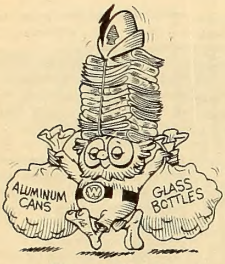
This is the opportunity of a lifetime to take part in one of the hottest gubernatorial races of the year.

For more information contact:
Michelle Sullivan '86
(307) 472-6453

Volume 20, No. 1!

Neither rain nor sleet nor the Friday night party scene nor a broken typesetter will prevent this staff's Catalyst. Here it is.

C.C. is indeed in-transit this year with Rastall closed. To those who know what things were like, you have your memories. To those who do not, you probably will be around next year to reap the benefits of this years toil. Nevertheless, grin and don't bear it. Enjoy it. Welcome back!



Use your head.
Smart people recycle aluminum, paper and glass.

Give a hoot.
Don't pollute.

—The Editors

CATALYST
Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado

DAVID KLEIN
BLAIR SANFORD
Editors

ELIZABETH CHENEY, Opinions Editor
TED CRAIG & DAVID FITZGERALD, News Editors
PATRICK CHISHOLM & KATIE DALSEMER
Features Editors
KATHY MAHONEY & ALEC REKOW, Sports Editors
ERIC BREITBARD, Arts Editor

JOHN KATSANIS, Photography Editor
MIKE FRATERELLI, Copy Editor
JACK KLEIN, Layout Editor

JEAN BOYER
Business Manager

LINDA SHIREMAN, Typesetter
JANE NEWBERRY, Typesetter
LINDA IMHOFF, Typesetter

The Catalyst logo by JANE PATERSON

The Catalyst is published by Cutler Publications, Inc., Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado 80903. Phone (303) 473-2233 extension 675. The Catalyst is printed tri-monthly from September to May, except during holiday periods.

Cutler Publications, Inc. does not discriminate on the basis of race, color, age, religion, sex, national origin, or physical handicap in its education programs, activities or employment policies in accordance with federal, state and local laws.

Editorials appearing in the Catalyst are the opinions of the designated author and not necessarily those of any other Catalyst staff member.

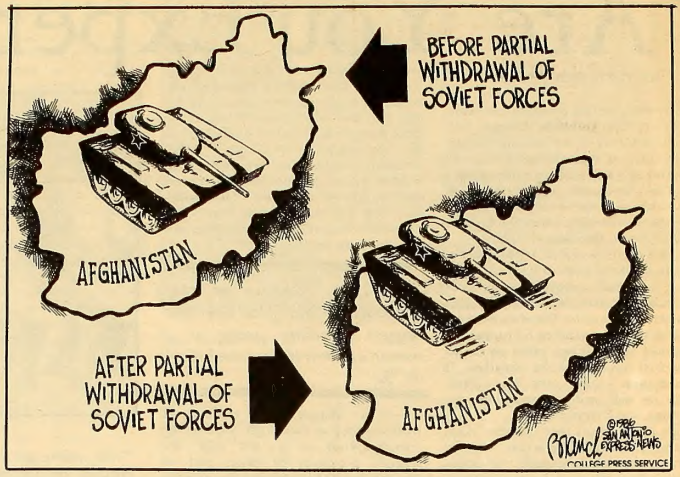
The Catalyst encourages the letters to the editor. Letters should be no more than 400 words in length and be typed or neatly printed. Address letters to the Catalyst, Rastall Center, Colorado College, Colorado Springs, 80903. Unsigned letters will not be printed.

A work of considerable length may be submitted as a guest commentary. Persons interested in submitting commentary should contact the Catalyst at 632-4999 or 473-2233 ext. 675.

The Catalyst reserves the right to edit or cut letters to the editor and guest commentaries.



Borrowing the Blues

BY EVAN WILLIAMS

A blues band is coming to CC on Saturday, (see Arts Section) and there is something ironic in this; a bunch of rich white folks will be enjoying a musical form which the poor black folks developed in response partly to the racial and economic discrimination wrought on them by the rich white folks. Historically, the blues emerged as the black folks, being exploited and oppressed by the white folks, developed autonomous means of expressing themselves, that they might preserve some individual and collective dignity. Yet now the white folks at CC will borrow the blues from the black folks for awhile, long enough to have a good time, but not long enough to examine the totality of the black folks's cultural experience, the less pleasant aspects of their history which contributed to the development of the blues in the first place.

The conveniently superficial manner in which the white folks jam to the blues enables them to avoid confronting fundamental social inequalities so intimately associated with the blues. Moreover, this attitude fails to respect the autonomous integrity of what was once an exclusively black cultural expression, as if the blues were merely available for the white folks' enjoyment, as if it had not once held deeper, more personal meaning for someone else, the black folks. This attitude denies that there might be anything immanently meaningful to black culture until black culture has been successfully assimilated into the dominant white culture. But none of this is anything new; rather, the irony of CC hosting a blues band conforms to a distinct historical pattern. Since the inception of the blues, the white folks have repeatedly expropriated for their own amusement and at their own convenience the blues music of the black folks.

In the 1920's, the music of blues singer Bessie Smith stood as the definitive expression of urban black culture. As a performing musician she was emotionally compelling, a powerful singer, and the lyrics of her songs came close to expressing the totality of black urban life, especially the experiences of black women. Rarely in any culture has a single musician held such prominence as did Bessie Smith among the black folks.

Yet the white folks had heard about her. The black culture of Harlem, the exotic sounds of the blues music, the sensual lyrics of Bessie's songs, the blackness of Bessie's skin, all held a special allure for the white folks. They found something terribly adventuresome about entering Harlem, into the segregated nightclubs, to listen to Bessie sing aobut her "jelly roll", her "back door man", or other topics. It was all great fun, and after the show the white folks went back to their insulated white world and Bessie would leave through the rear exit.

In the 1930's, white folks, like ethnomusicologist John Lomax, decided that it was very important to recognize the undeniable talent of black blues musicians like Robert Johnson and Leadbelly. White folks began to take an interest in obscure black folk music, began to preserve the music on record. Yet all this was done with a condescending, patronizing attitude, as if by recording the black folks, by recognizing the quality of a previously autonomous art form, the white folks were doing some kind of favor for the black folks, as if the blues had meant nothing until the white folks recognized it. This made the white folks feel real good inside, but the black blues musicians could not have cared less; as an autonomous musical form, the blues did not need to be recognized by the white folks to preserve its integrity. Furthermore, this interest on the part of the white folk's did not change the disparity between white and black; the white folk's interest was superficial. In the years after John Lomax went home with his tape machine, Leadbelly died of severe alcoholism and Robert Johnson was stabbed to death in a honky tonk by an irate girlfriend.

The pattern continues in the 1950's, when white folks began to play rock and roll music. At no point in the early development of rock and roll did the white folks acknowledge that black blues musicians had been playing the same thing for years. For example, Elvis borrowed his entire stage routine from Bo Didley and others, but he never credited Bo with anything. True, many black musicians enjoyed successful rock and roll careers, effectively capitalizing on the white market. However, they were required to conform to white expectations, and never expanded beyond the subsidiary role assigned them by white folks. Black musicians such as James Brown had to artificially straighten their hair, others, such as the duo Joe and Eddie, had to submit to being addressed as "those boys" when they were mature men. In general, the white folks acted as if they had invented rock and roll themselves.

Next, in an unusual turn, the 1960's found young British blues musicians such as the Rolling Stones and the yardbIrds attempting to imitate as accurately as possible that 'black sound.' The British musicians recognized the power and excitement of the blues, and they wanted to reproduce it exactly, not adjust it to their own tastes. Perhaps they were less hindered by a latent racism. In any case, British blues musicians were the first white musicians to publicly acknowledge their debt to black blues musicians. For example, the Rolling Stones frequently invited such black blues greats as Muddy Waters, Junior Wells, and Jimmy Reed to appear at their shows. And taking the initiative himself, the legendary Sonny Boy Williamson II invited a white band, the Yardbirds, to perform with him.

Despite this mutual appreciation between black and white, however, the British white folk's interest in the blues was purely from a musical standpoint, an abstract interest that failed to penetrate the full meaning of black cultural experience and history. CC music professor Carlton Gamer once observed that although white musicians such as Jimmy Paige and Keith Richards were highly innovative, contributing significantly to the development of the blues, their music has been at best a thoughtful approximation of the black folks' blues, but not the real thing.

Continued on page 11

Right Perspective Revisited

BY SHANNON WHEELER

No this is not another article by Marcus Hartman, which may bring relief to some and dissapointment to others. This is an article about Marcus, or rather, about his articles. To start with, for those of you who don't know, Marcus was a weekly contributor to the editorial page of this literary masterpiece, now he has graduated and is in the armed forces. He wrote highly controversial articles entitled "The Right Perspective" with an obvious double meaning for the word "right." The articles concerned everything from Divestment to the lifestyles of "granolas" neither of which he took much of a liking to. Yeah so I dangle a "to" here and there. Marcus and I are friends and this is sort of an ode to his writings.

I usually disagreed with Marcus' points of view, however I applaud (not just respect) his voicing of his views. Marcus, through his editorials, made people question and think and argue and learn and that was good. Hooray for Marcus!

We need to make people think in a critical way, to re-evaluate their existing values and to form opinions on controversial subjects using those values. Apathy and ignorance still plague the world, and forcing people to care and think is a goal of all writers, I hope. Marcus wherever you are I wish you luck and hope that there are more like you out there, but not too many.

The rest of the writings this year should contain at least some small amount of humor, sick though it may be. I write according to whim and am eager to discuss or argue with anyone, over a beer, just for the hell of it. I am also quite open to suggestions concerning anything. Welcome back and have fun.

The Way to Tierra Granola

BY NORM LEAHY

It was a cold night, like a lot of other nights in the city. But this one was bone chilling enough to make even Admiral Byrd pack it in.

I was on the street, looking for a story. My editors were threatening my credit rating if I didn't come across with a solid piece fefore Friday. Thus my quest was begun.

At 2 A:M I stumbled into the old St. Mary Smith-Jones flop house. It was warm, but scummy. Bright but bleak. A story was bound to be here. I got in line for the late night espresso and finger sandwiches. That's where I met Spike.

Spike was a haggard old man. His clothes were soiled and frayed, yet showed clearly that at one time they had been exquisite and hand made. His eyes were glazed and his jaw slack, but he was well tanned and had a familiar tone to his voice. Something like a cat blowing up in a microwave, or a Baltimore twang. I couldn't grasp which.

"So Spike," I said, "what did you do before you came here?"

"I built highways to hell and back."

"Ah, that's nice." Just what I needed, a fruitcake about to go bonzo any second. I decided to keep the situation neutral so as not to push him over that thin line between sanity and the midwest.

"How about that Nixon guy? What a dope, huh? You would think he would have the common sense not to have Bebe Rebozo around making an ass out of himself in front of God and Walter Cronkite."

That was it.

Spike went nuts.

He was plunged into the heart of the Iowa flatlands.

"Twenty years of treason!"

"What?"

"Nattering nabobs of negativism!"

"Who"

"Four more years, four more years!"

"Whoa Spike, I didn't mean to . . . "

"Acid, amnesty, abortion . . . McGovern sucks!"

Then it hit me. Spike was actually Spiro, Spiro Agnew. The man who would have been king in '76 but was bushwacked on his way to the coronation. Here, in this flop house, in Colorado Springs, was the pinch-hitter for the big Dick. A broken, weary old man. Without even a little American flag for his lapel.

He told me his story. Every gruesome detail. The kickbacks, the payoffs, the big pot parties in the East Room; it was so vile and disgusting I decided against lining up for the sparkling wind and brie.

He'd blown all the cash, sold everything, just to try and keep up with Dick. He even tried "Let's Make a Deal" but sold his front row seat to a couple from Taos dressed as pueblos for twenty bucks and a case of Valvoline.

After that, he faded from society and wound up here, sipping his third cup of carrot juice and spilling crumbs from his carob chip cookies all over himself.

I left him there, all hunched and mumbling and wondered if he really deserved this treatment. Then I quickly forgot about the whole thing and went home to watch the "Checker's Speach."

The Imaginary Horribles

BY VIC PETERSON

Automobile travel has become much safer in recent ears. The number of fatalities per million vehicle miles less than half what it was in 1966. Even so, more than 0,000 Americans die in auto accidents each year. This umber, despite great progress in auto safety, is onsidered too high.

Strictly speaking, any auto death rate above zero is onsidered too high, since to tolerate even a single auto eath is to implicitly place a finite value on human life, hich nobody likes to do. If we're honest, however, we ust admit that we do tolerate this and other "evils" assuming, as most do, that human life is worthwile and aluable, and, conversely, that loss of human life is ndeed an "evil"). We therefore try to reduce the auto eath rate to a more tolerable level (i.e., closer to zero).

Auto travel is made safer through improvements in:) road quality and traffic-flow patterns; 2) auto onstruction (e.g., bumpers, headlight, seat belts, irbags, etc.); 3) driver behavior (usually effected by peed limits and other traffic laws, driver's license tests, mandatory seat belt laws, drunk driving laws, etc.). At issue here is the limited subject of seat belts and, specifically, whether their use should be mandated by law or a matter of personal choice.

Granted, seat belts save lives. The Department of Transportaion estimates that a national mandatory seat belt law with a 70% compliance rate would prevent 6,000 to 7,500 deaths per year. That's not a bad figure when compared to another well intentioned threat to the civil liberties of individuals, namely the drive to raise the drinking age to 21 nationwide, which would "only" prevent an estimated 730 deaths per year, according to the National Safety Council. Many states (14 as of mid-1985) have passed mandatory seat belt laws. New York became the first such state in early 1985. There, during the first five months after the law took effect, seat belt use rose from 16 to 57% and the auto death rate fell 26%. Other states have experienced similar trends.

This empirical data is impressive: Mandatory seat belt laws have been followed by an increase in the use of seat belts, which has been accompanied by a decrease in auto death rates. If causal inferences are ever justified, there certainly seems to be one here. And if we hold that decreasing auto death rates is desirable, then it would be logical to enact mandatory seat belt laws, unless we value some abstract principle more than a sizeable number of human lives.

If we're really serious about reducing auto deaths, then why settle for a mandatory seat belt law? Why not save more lives by requiring "passive restraints" (like automatic seat belts or airbags?) Why not ban cars altogether or make rubber cars that go 2 m.p.h.? These latter two choices are admittedly impractical and extreme. The problem with passive restraints, even though they are possible, is that they're expensive ($40 for automatic seat belts and $320 for airbags). Besides, it would take 12 years before almost all cars in the nation were so equipped.

Nevertheless, the issue of auto safety is so compelling that many cars already have automatic seat belts and/or airbags and the federal government has been trying since 1969 to decide whether or not to require auto

Continued on page 12

lues from page 10

And so the blues comes to CC, apparently erpetuating an ironic historical pattern. The blues will ome to CC, to us white folks, on a convenient schedule, n a Saturday evening within the boundaries of our omfortable college world, and for just two dollars. We ill not be required to consider critically the irony of the ituation, the historical context of racial discrimination ithin which black folks developed blues music. Indeed, he conveniently disinterested attitude of the white folks ranscends irony to become a subtle but very real form of acism. It denies the integrity of the black folks.

It is hard to decide what this racism means. Should we hite folks stop listening to the blues altogether? Of ourse not, because the blues is simply excellent music. he capacity for the blues to inspire listeners surely ranscends racial boundaries. Indeed, some of the reatest blues musicians have been white folks, Duane llman and Janis Joplin for example. To restrict the lues experience to just black folks would be silly and egregational. In the final analysis, however, the black olks will continue playing and singing the blues egardless of what the white folks may think or do, and o the issue of racism becomes irrelevant. We white folks ay as well go hear the blues this Saturday and enjoy urselves.

Facts for Freshmen

BY CHRIS PROPST

Welcome to Colorado College and Colorado Springs. In order to fit in and survive here you must learn several things. #1—buy a Mountain bike—everyone has one. Don't buy your pizza from Dominos—they are a capitalistic mega—corporation and their pizza sucks. Get it from Pizza Works or Road Runner. Get to know upperclassmen. Be careful of the deadly Freshman 15—most Freshmen gain 15 lbs. their first year in school and it goes straight to your butt. Thus Saga food shall be known as "Buttfood." Go to Vail, Aspen, Steamboat and Lake Powell (8th block break). These are all very hip places to be. Smoke cloves, wear Vaurnets, listen to Bob Marley, hangout at Poor Richards, and don't drink 3.2 beer. Now this is very important—don't go to Saga Sunday morning—it's better to starve. If you are a woman don't get drunk at a Frat party—those brutes will take advantage of you (unless, of course, that's what you want). You should try to buy books for classes at Poor Richards—it's much cheaper than the campus Bookstore. Learn how to use a word processor. Don't shop at College Pharmacy—Walgreen's is much cheaper and you can see a better cross-section of humanity there. Boettcher Health Center has emergency condoms 24 hrs. a day for those unplanned liasons. Don't say "psyched, rage, or deal" instead say "groovy, keen, boss, neato." There are a lot of movies in Tutt Library, some are classics. Grow your hair long—it's back in style. Talk to Professors, they have to have office hours, most welcome students as they can get bored off their ass. Go to the Ice Cream Social and sign up for every organization. That way they send you information and you will be very well informed. Sometime in your four years here try to take an ACM program in Chicago or London, Mexico, France, etc.—expand your horizons. There are counselors in Boettcher for stress or depression or those first month Freshmen blues. And last but not least look out for the campus squirrels they attacked 15 students last year (this was because of the chestnut shortage). Have a good year!

No More Mr. Nice Guy

BY MARK THESING

Seeing one's transcript can be pretty tough on us Super-Over-Achievers. Starting out my senior year with a sense of accomplishment and pride I requested to have a peek at my transcript. Surely I would see the sacred straight "A"s which through hard work and dedication I had earned. Laughing to myself, I thought it wouldn't be long before I start pulling down six figures and enjoying athletic sex with women deep into psychoanalysis. The perfect life is just around the corner. I thought.

Something went wrong, looking down on the transcript I saw the ugliest thing, a piece of paper with hook-like symbols spread in a long impressive column. Apparently my profs had accidentally assigned me a bunch of average grades primarily "C"s and even some "NC"s (Freshmen don't mistake this for something good; NC is just Colorado College's way of saying you ought to contemplate a career in garbage collection). It seems those snobby pseudo-intellectual profs couldn't even venture into the material world long enough to walk into Harrier's office to deliver my hard earned and all-important "A"s.

I profoundly realized something that I had long felt. The system is abusing me. I am grabbing my ankles and powerless to move. I need those grades to live the life I deservedly inherited. This unjust system apparently places those of intelligence and dedication above me. I scream tyranny and would certainly mount a revolutionary assault against this enormous wrong. However, revolution these days seems to mandate the wearing of gaudy clothing and off-beat reptile like dancing, a condition more appalling than bad grades.

I would have to accept these grades and realize that plans to attend Harvard University International Law and Business Administration Doctorate Program would have to be temporarily postponed at least a year. They just don't accept any stupid frat boy who just wants to be rich and pompous like me.

Well this is the year. Yes. Like every year since Junior High, this is the year I will fullfill my manifest destiny and receive the straight "A"s. Graduation, the glory of it all, my parents teeming with pride, a picture of me standing with Greshie.

I am not stupid. I realize that I am going to have to adopt the take-no-prisoners-attitude that has been responsible for my greatest college successes such as highly competitive fraternity drinking contests and all-night procrastination bouts. The energy and tenacity that would have earned the "A"s was in reality being funnelled into these other more gentlemanly endeavors while these amoral materialistic decadent Yuppies have been working their asses off, filling my place in graduate school.

No more Mr. Nice Guy.

Continued from page 11

manufacturers to install passive restraints. Successive Transportation Secretaries have overturned the decisions of their predecessors only to have their decisions overturned by the courts. (Democracy never claimed to be efficient.) The present Secretary of Transportation, Elizabeth Dole, has decreed that front-seat passive restraints will be required in 1989 unless 2/3 of the states have passed mandatory seat belt laws. Auto manufacturers understandably want to avoid installing the expensive devices, since, even though the increased cost would be distributed evenly among all manufacturers and hence passed on to consumers, consumers would be even less able to buy more expensive cars, so auto sales (and profits) would drop. Not surprisingly, then, auto manufacturers are funding the public relations and lobbying blitz in favor of mandatory seat belt laws (in lieu of safer but more expensive passive restraints). The issue is sure to intensify as the 1989 deadline nears.

Thus mandatory seat belt laws are really a ploy by Detroit to cheaply satisfy the public desire to lower auto death rates. Passive restraints are safer than "active" seat belts, since people are more likely to use passive restraints. After all, one must actively choose to use a regular seat belt, while one "uses" a passive restraint unless one actively takes the trouble to dismantle it. But passive restraints, or so the auto industry is busily persuading the American public, are too expensive — the additional lives saved are apparently not worth the money. So, in the name of lower auto death rates we are unwilling to spend some bucks (true, alot of bucks: $320 for an airbag x 130 million cars on the road = $41.6 billion over 12 years), yet we seem to be perfectly willing to discard that "abstract principle" alluded to earlier.

What is this abstract principle? The liberal theory of the individual as an atomistic agent with dignity and rights. Such a theory leads necessarily to a contract theory of government, according to which each citizen (usually tacitly) surrenders his natural license to do whatever he desires in exchange for governmental protection of his individual life, estate, and liberty to do whatever he desires, provided his actions do not deprive others of their lives, liberties, and estates. Thus government has a negative function to keep individuals apart so that each may exercise his own liberty to the utmost without limiting the equal liberty of others. A main argument against liberal theory is that, by its separationist nature, it leads to alienation. This argument is countered by the distinction between government, which rightfully has a negative function, and society, which fulfills the positive function of uniting people into a synergistic whole. People are both individual and social creatures, but it is necesary for government to treat people as individuals or else civil rights are impossible.

Government, then, properly fulfills its negative (i.e., license checking) function by protecting each individual from others, not from himself. Any positive governmental function (e.g., social engineering) is justified only insofar as it does not limit individual liberty. To protect the individual from himself is a positive governmental function which denies the individual's liberty to do whatever he desires, provided his actions do not deprive others of their lives, liberties, and estates. The individual should, therefore, have the right to endanger his own life should he so choose; he should have the liberty to play Russian roulette, go rock climbing, eat fried foods, commit suicide, ride a motorcycle without a helmet, and even refrain from using a seat belt. As James Kilpatrick argues, each individual is entitled to "the freedom to be foolish."

It has been argued that, even accepting that the proper function of government is negative, the individual has no right to consciously endanger his own life, since his death effects the lives, liberties, and estates of others, if only by increasing insurance rates. This argument is specious. If the individual is prohibited (for instance reasons) from one risk, such as choosing to not wear a seat belt, then by the same token he should be prohibited from all other risks (at least above a certain "risk-level"). More fundamentally, such reasoning implies that each individual's life, liberty and property are not really his own but reather belong to society. Again, there can be no human rights without the primacy of the individual, since only individual humans can possess human rights. I don't argue that man is by nature an individual, but instead that man should be treated as an individual by governments, because only then can man enjoy rights and dignity.

A related issue is whether or not to require car seat belts for infants and seat belts in school buses. Minors are not yet full citizens, and, therefore, government has the duty to protect minors from themselves as well as from others. My quarrel is with the government's paternalistic assumption that adult citizens are children who can't decide what is best for themselves.

Perhaps the best argument against my libertarian stance on this issue is that the issue itself is so trivial that to describe the seat belt law as an infringement upon individual liberty is akin to shouting, "The sky is falling?" It is a testimony to the strength of civil rights in this country that the front line of the battle between liberty and tyranny is being fought in relatively trivial issues far from home. Yet, as is seen most clearly with censorship, the threats to freedom, if not opposed, become more insidious. "Eternal vigilance" is required, for, as Burke stated, "All that is necessary for evil to triumph over good is for good men to do nothing." The "March of the Imaginary Horribles" (as my uncle derisively calls trivial threats to liberty) is potentially real. One last cliche: as Goldwater (a favorite of CC students) state, "Extremism in defense of liberty is no vice."

Letters

Dear Editor:

Over the last twenty five years, college campuses throughout the country have undergone some radical changes in structure and idealism. Students have been faced with a wide variety of choices and have provided an important voice into American society and the directions in which we are heading. College campuses have long been the breeding ground of our social consciousness, and we must be sure that this critical role is not lost. Returning to classes this Fall, Colorado students will find that they are no exception to this rule—the decisions you make today will greatly affect the future of our country.

This year's elections serve as a perfect example of the power of the student voice. At stake is control of the United States Senate and a chance to send a clear message to the American people on the direction you want this country to follow. Whether a Democrat, Republican or Independent, there are many important questions which need to be answered. Do we want to continue sending military aid to Central America? At what level should our government finance student loans? How should we attempt to change the present government in South Africa? Can the American farmer survive and what measures are we going to take to ensure that this happens? Will women tomorrow be able to exercise the same freedoms of reproductive choice that they have today, or will the government or the Supreme Court finally succeed in limiting reproductive freedom? These are choices which cannot be taken lightly.

The first step all students must take is to spend five minutes registering to vote. It does not matter how loud your voice or how pervasive your presence, without your vote you are not heard.

In the early 70's, students on campuses throughout Colorado demanded the right to vote and won. Since that time, voting participation among those in the 18-25 age group has been abysmally low. Voting is a privilege that is too often taken for granted and there is simply too much at stake to sit out this year's elections. The time has come for Colorado students to stand up again and vote—with your vote you can make a difference.

In addition to voting, there are many student groups on your campus that will play an important role in this election. Working with groups involved with specific concerns; arms control, womens' rights, Central America or working on this years Senate race, you have the ability to determine your own future. Your voice will be heard, if you give it the chance.

Tim Wirth
Candidate, U.S. Senate

Dear Editor:

In his ambitious quest to grab Gary Hart's soon to be vacant U.S. Senate seat, Ken Kramer came to the State Fair in Pueblo August 23 loudly proclaiming a highly contradictory position.

"I'm sold on SDI (Strategic Defense Initiative or Star Wars)—it will bring jobs to Pueblo and Colorado will become the space capital of the world," Kramer said. At the same time, he bemoaned the ever-growing budget deficit and trade imbalance.

Speaking that same day on C-Span, William Colby described Star Wars as "President Reagan's deceptively lovely dream" connected to reality only through its enormous "estimated price tag of over $800 billion." Kramer, it appears, would bust the busted budget for his strategic defense pipedream.

While Kramer claims he isn't "slick," I think someone near him is slicker than slick for selling SDI to our unthinking Congressman.

I think I'll vote for the other guy, Tim Wirth, a vote for common sense in space and on Earth.

Undecided? Be sure you register before Oct. 10 or someone else will decide your space fate in November.

Jack Reppert

Dear Editor:

The gentlemen of the Colorado Beta chapter of Phi Delta Theta whole heartedly extend an invitation to all non Greek males who are above the level of freshman. The activities will be held at the Phi Delta Theta house this Friday evening from 7 to 9 p.m. as well as at 4:30 to 6:30 Saturday afternoon. As we wish only serious inquiries no alcohol will be served either day. We hope to see you this weekend so we will be able to share with you some of the scholarship, friendship, and fun that we enjoy at Phi Delta Theta.

Rush Chairman,
Devin S. Standard

INTERVIEW

The following interview was conducted by Ted Craig and Blair Sanford on June 1st of this year, a day before Senator Simpson delivered his graduation speech. The ceremony was preceded by a long-running dispute between Senator Simpson and a number of Colorado College students and faculty over the Senator's role in immigration reform.

Before the interview, Senator Simpson met with a small group concerned with the Simpson—Rodino immigration bill. The call for a boycott of the graduation ceremony, however, did little to reduce the oppressive overcrowding at the indoor ceremony.

Q: How would you rate the chance of the Republican party maintaining control of the Senate in 1986?

A: I think they're very good. It's a very diverse group. Some of them, to get re-elected, have chosen to distance themselves from the President—and do that very well—and meet the needs of their constituents. I think we have an excellent chance to maintain control. Their are some tough races. But there are also some races we have never dreamed we would have had a chance in three years ago: Louisiana, Missouri. The other part of it is what the Republican majority in the Senate answered the ad "we do heavy lifting, we do windows, we haul trash—politically very unpopular stuff—but I think people admire that.

Q: On Gramm-Rudmann, do you see the Congress meeting the budget targets for fiscal 1987?

A: I would hope they do because I would sure hate to see us go to sequestering which is a mandatory across the board cut. And even if the Supreme Court throws it out, the minute we come back to the next vote of the debt-limit extension, they are going to cook up Gramm-Rudmann-Hollings II or III.

Q: Do you see the bill getting through the Senate this year?

A: Yes I do—within the next three weeks. And then into conference committee to adjust the differences between the House and Senate versions, and then on to the President's desk in August.

Q: If the Republicans wish to maintain control of the Senate in 1986, do you foresee any leadership changes?

A: You never know. I can't imagine why they would not respond to Bob Dole. [R. Kansas]. Regardless of what his desires or goals are from this point on, he has been a superb leader. He has led us into the tough votes and dealt with the tough issues. I think that they would not change leadership.

Q: Having a daughter and a son who have recently graduated from CC, what are your impressions of the school and what is has to offer?

A: .....I remember when my son was here I came to visit a public forum one night and there were a bunch of protesters that went around the hall, and I thought, "my God, this is a spirited place." And it is. That is what it's all about. It's a superb educational institution. But at any superb institution, I think there is always a critical think which must be preserved: everyone is entitled to his own opinion, but no one is entitled to their own facts.

Sometimes I see you have a young, bright student pressing her point, a girl who had her facts straight, and them from the Professor's side would come some big phrase. But finally, you have to stop bullshitting and answer questions. That was the whole delight of the day for me, to see the interchange of people here who have done their homework. Sometimes you have to start walking the walk instead of talking the talk.

You have to say "I've had a beautiful education from a marvelous school, with a marvelous administration and faculty, but I better get off my ass and start doing some work.

And I think the block break is a great thing, except when you get out into real life your kind of looking for the block break and its not there.

I am very proud that my children went here. And one of the great honors of my life, and I don't care if there is nobody left at the whole commencement, will be receiving an honorary degree from Colorado College, and I'm going to be thrilled about it. And I'll take it, and they'll have a hell of a time gettin' it outa my hands. It's not the first one I've had, but it is the most meaningful.

—1 June 1986

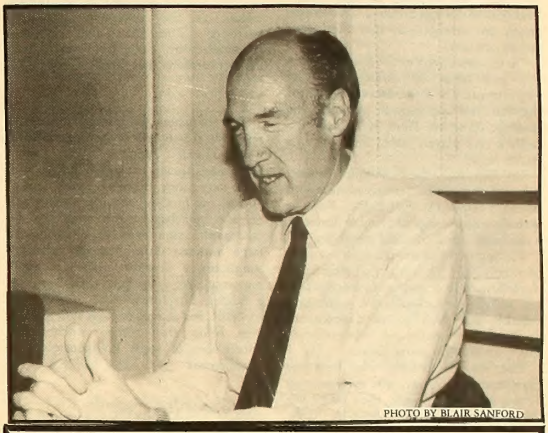


PHOTO BY BLAIR SANFORD

the Colorado College Bookstore

Reference Books
Paperbacks
Film Processing
Magazines
Candy & Snacks
Stationery
T-Shirts

Come In And Browse

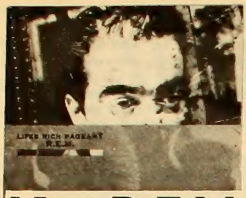
Mugs
Art Supplies
Gifts
Greeting Cards
Free Gift Wrap
Records & Tapes

McGregor Basement
473-2233, ext. 391
Monday - Friday
8:30 - 4:30

COLLEGE PHARMACY

- Fast Friendly Service
- Low Cost Generic Drugs
- CC Check Cashing Service
- CC Student Charge Accts
- 1-Day Film Developing
- Natural & Generic Vitamins
- Emergency Prescription Service
- Free Delivery
- Cards & Gift Items
- School Supplies

833 N. Tejon • Phone 634-4861



New R.E.M.

BY PRU

For the fifth time in a row, R.E.M. has given their fans an album to be proud of owning. LIFES RICH PAGEANT continues the Athens, Georgia band's tradition of the togetherness. The 10 plus songs are arranged so that the whole family can enjoy.

On the new album we are introduced to a few new ideas with which the band experiments. On Swan Swan, R.E.M. for the first time uses acoustic guitars as the main guitar sound. Here, Mike Mills, the brillant bass player, makes his debut as a guitar player.

On Superman, the band's first album-released cover, Mills shares lead vocal with Michael Stipe. On PAGEANT Stipe is actually within range of being understood, a deviation from his usual mumbling.

The rest of the album is a great example of a tight band. Utilizing their abilities to the fullest. Mills on bass and Peter Buck on his acclaimed Rickenbacker guitar get together with Bill Berry on drums to produce a fine tonal sound. Stipe enhances this with his fluctuating vocals.

The fine foursome can best be experienced on songs such as Cuyahoga, Hyena, and the fantastic, Why Don't We Give It Away? On the PAGEANT L.P., R.E.M. can be found walking, swimming, hunting, dancing, and singing. With this album, you can do it with them.

Framed Funnies

BY RICK ADAMS

A life-sized cardboard cut-out photograph of Gary Larsen stands in the entry way of his current exhibit, "The Far Side of Science," at the Denver Museum of Natural History until October 20. Larsen, creator of the syndicated newspaper cartoon, "The Far Side," appears surrounded by characters taken from various cartoons that can be found in the exhibit.

The characters are mostly animals, or people in the context of their relationship with animals. Through them, Larsen scrutinizes human nature, ending up with some very funny, bizzare combinations of animal and human behavior. Buzzards sit on the branches of the tree that the cardboard Larsen leans on, surveying the large museum crowd through mirrored sunglasses, a caveman plumes a wooly mammoth like a poodle, an elk is dressed as a hunter, hip sheep stand around with cocktails, and a smug boy sits with his dog, who bears the strange stitches and appendages of some Frankensteinesque experiments.

Larsen's unique perspective has earned success. Universal Press Syndicate represents him in over 200 newspapers, and this exhibit was by far the biggest draw to the Museum of Natural History on at least one Sunday afternoon. In fact, the show was scheduled to end last Sunday, but has been extended due to popular demand. Organized by the California Academy of Sciences, "The Far Side of Science" brings together "Far Sides" from the last few years that are (sometimes only remotely) related to the theme of science.

The cartoons are funny, sometimes extremely funny, but they seemed out of place. Ten to fifteen cartoons are show in a frame, and everyone crowds around to read them. There was plenty of laughter, and viewers could not resist pointing out their favorites to companions.

The travelling exhibit clearly serves as a fund-raiser for science museums all over the country, which is a wonderful and important thing, but I prefer to read the funnies in private.

Get the Blues

BY KATIE DALSEMER

The summer was too short. The former location of Rastall looks like a war zone. Finding anything in the newly reorganized Tutt Library is a close encounter of the weird kind. Saga: Well, what more can be said? And finally, yes they've let me write again for that entity the Catalyst.

Got the CC blues? No? Well, look out because CC is getting the blues tonight. At 8:15 p.m. in Armstrong Hall, Livesounds (the folks who brought you Reggae great John Bayley last weekend) will present The 43rd St. Blues Band.

The backbone of the group is Dion Payton: founder, lead guitarist and music arranger. Among the highlights of his 15 years in the music business are working with some of the blues greats and even some prominent rock and roll figures such as Eric Clapton and Jimmy Page. One of his latest endeavors is recording a new album with The Firm.

Other members of the group include Sam Goode on drums; Murphy Doss on bass and Tom Heindal on keyboards. Joanna Conners is on guitar and has noted as one of the best female guitaris the country. The final member is actu special guest of the band. He is D Woods, a talented soul singer whose has compared to James Brown's and Redding's.

The 43rd St. Blues band hails Chicago "Home of the Blues" Ill where they got their start about five ago in the Checkerboard Lounge. music can best be described as raw mixed with some smooth sweet soul. tunes!

Remember that the show is toni 8:15 in Armstrong Hall. Tickets are dollars for the public, two dollar students and are available at the stu center (son of Rastall) at 931 North Ne

(Intern Promita Chatterji contribut this story.)

Hair Designers for Men & Women

RAPUNZEL

Style cuts, Cellophanes,
Perms & Color.
Nexus, Redken, and Tri products available for sale.

Stop in or make your appointment:

827 N. Tejon at Cache La Poudre 632-3532

FREE GOURMET BURGER
FREE HOME DELIVERY
BUY ONE GOURMET BURGER - GET A SECOND ONE - QUARTER LB. BURGER FREE!
• ONE PER COUPON

THE
BURGER EXPRESS
ARRIVES IN COLORADO SPRINGS!
FREE HOME DELIVERY
$6.00 MINIMUM ORDER
LTD. DEL. AREA

630-FOOD (630-3663)
Lunch - 11:00-1:30
Evening - 5:30-12:30 am

Please Allow 45 Min. Delivery Time During Peak Hours

Featuring Gourmet Burgers Served on Gourmet Rolls
• Mushroom & Cheese
• Bacon & Cheese
• Guacamole'
• Teriyaki
• Zesty Bar-B-Que
• Deli Sandwiches
• Also Hot Dogs, Chicken Nuggets, Fries, Onion Rings & Drinks

LEVIATHAN

A Journal of Arts and Politics

SUPPORT YOUR WORLD

submit today

essays · photography · art fiction · poetry
Submit at Rastall Desk

What's On Your Turntable?

Keep abreast of what your peers are listening too.

Every week the Catalyst will survey the CC commuinity, so be ready to answer when you're asked: "What's on your turntable (or, of course, in your tape deck) right now?"

Gail Thoms—Sophomore—Undeclared.
"Eric Clapton Live"

Chris Behrens—Junior—Biology
Taj Mahal, "Satisfied and Tickled Too"

John Cook—Senior—Music
Joan Armatrading, "Track Record"

Pat Gorman—Senior—Political Science
Steel Pulse, "Babylon the Bandit"

Sarah Meskin—Junior—Art History
Neil Young, "Harvest"

Nick Sherman—Freshman—Undeclared
The Cure, "Standing on the Beach"

Ricki Spector—Freshman—Undeclared
"The Best of the Doobie Brothers"

Concept Restaurants Welcomes You to the 1986 World Cycling Championships

N·O·R·T·H·P·O·R·T Restaurant

BBQ RIBS AND CHICKEN
FRESH SEAFOOD
PRIME RIB

Char-broiling brings out the flavors of dry-aged USDA choice beef, Danish Baby Back Pork Ribs, Fresh Seafood and Teriyaki. Upstairs, the Blue Parrot Grill features island appetizers, fruit daquiris and beautiful sunsets.

7115 Commerce Center Drive · 593-7678
(Just N.W. of Woodmen & I-25 next to the Hampton Inn.)

Finn's — Fresh Seafood & Prime Rib — Oyster Bar

THE MOST EXTENSIVE LIST OF FRESH DOMESTIC AND EXOTIC SEAFOODS IN SOUTHERN COLORADO

Specials change daily with availability of fresh fish. Beef, poultry and lamb round out dinner; salads and sandwiches at lunch. Light Oyster Bar menu.

RESERVATIONS · PATIO
LUNCH · DINNER · SUNDAY BRUNCH
128 S. Tejon · Downtown · 635-3535

JOSE MULDOON'S

MEXICAN-STYLE AND AMERICAN DISHES IN A CASUAL ATMOSPHERE

Santa Fe style blue corn tortilla specialties; beef, chicken and shrimp fajitas. Salad bar with dinners. Live entertainment W-Sat after 9:30 p.m. in the lounge.

PATIO · MARGARITAS & SANGRIA
LUNCH · DINNER · SUNDAY BRUNCH
222 N. Tejon · Downtown · 636-2311

FRESH OLD CHICAGO PASTA & PIZZA

FRESH PASTA AND SAUCE BAR
DEEP DISH PIZZA

Chalkboard specials, salads, sandwiches and giant, fresh-baked chocolate chip cookies! Something for everyone! Take-out available. Full service tavern with satellite T.V. for sports viewing. Cubs HDQ's!

PATIO · LUNCH · DINNER
118 N. Tejon · Downtown · 634-8812

The Queen is Dead

The evening of September 3 found the CU Events Center crowded with eccentric hairstyles of all types and ages. The event in progress was a performance by the English group the Smiths.

The Smiths first came onto the American music scene in 1984 with their premier album, simply titled The Smiths. With the intriguing combination of lead singer Morrisey's voice and lyrics that explored the intricacies of the rejection of female love and consequent turn to homosexuality, the band gained popularity with their following albums Hateful of Hollow, and Meat is Murder. Their most recent album, The Queen is Dead, is currently number one on Rolling Stone magazine's college chart.

Opening for the Smiths was Phranc, a Jewish Mexican lesbian folk singer. Sporting a flat-top, with an acoustic guitar in hand, she (he?) sang extended ballads addressing such issues as parking in handicap spaces, and the role of the Pope in current world affairs. Phranc was quite a hit with the audience, prompting comments from some of those attending that Phranc was, in fact, a better show than the Smiths themselves.

The Smiths, appearing on stage after a lengthy fanfare, began their show with "Still Ill," from their first album. Morrisey's hypnotizing voice as well as his good looks made him quite a hit with the fourteen year old girls pressed up against the stage. The show lasted well over an hour, featuring such selections as: "Frankly Mr. Shankly," "How Soon is Now?," "Hand in Glove," "Boy with a Thorn in His Side," concluding after two encores with "Big Mouth Strikes Again."

Throughout the performance Morrisey made himself readily available to the audience, allowing anyone who had the lustful courage to join him on stage. The stage-hoppers went generally unnoticed by the band, but garnered random kicks and assorted punches from the bouncers. The fate of his dance partners mattered not to Morrisey. He and his band members spent most of their time trying to prove that they were a better band than the audience deserved. It was obvious to all that the audience loved the band, but the band disliked the audience.

Overall, the Smiths performance was highly entertaining and the music well worth it, but the attitude of the band was stated early in the show when Morrisey sang, "frankly Mr. Shankly, I'm bored."

BY J. REED AND T. GRIEZ

NEXT WEEK IN ARTS

Premiere U.S. Performance at CC

Art Majors Go To N.Y.C.

TAYLOR TRAVEL

Welcomes all C.C. students

Call now and let Taylor Travel arrange your travel needs.

Pick up your 2 free posters and ski bag!!

AMERICAN EXPRESS Vacation Store Representative

"Your Campus Travel Agency"

818 N. Tejon 636-3871

Wishbone Finally Breaks

Charlie Lorimer heaves the pigskin in last Saturday's close but heart-breaking game.

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Two Point Try For Win Falls Short

BY JAMES S. GRANTZ

Saturday, the CC Tigers and the 20th ranked Division II Austin College Kangaroos, proved that football is a game of inches. After leading the Tigers on a spectacular fourth quarter drive, capped by Phil Apodaca's 1 yard run, QB Charlie Lorimer's keeper on the 2 point conversion attempt was stopped just short of the goal line.

The season opener for both teams was a seesaw battle from the outset. CC freshman fullback Rob Seims, 137 yards on 22 carries, scored the games first touchdown on a slashing 6 yard run. Austin came right back on Troy Clark's 4 yard run that was set up by a 60 yard kick off return by Otis Amy. The teams traded touchdowns until the final play of the half. Kangaroo QB Todd Elliot, 14 of 29 with 4 interceptions, hit a streaking Otis Amy for a 48 yard scoring strike, which tied t game at 21. Again the teams traded scor in the third quarter. But mid-way throu the fourth quarter, Lorimer w intercepted by cornerback Gary D Wright who raced 45 yards for t Kangaroos final score of the afternoon.

"The defense played well about 90% the game," said Tiger Defensi Coordinator Dave Grantz. "If you ta away any one of their four big plays, we w the game."

CC Head Coach Jerry Carle praised h team on their attitude and resilience. "Th was one of the finest efforts I've ever be a part of in my years at CC. I can't s enough about the way our kids play today."

The Tigers next home game will b Saturday, September 13 against St. Mar of the Plains. Kick off is scheduled for 1: p.m. at Washburn Field.

Runners Take To The Hills

BY ALEC REKOW

By late August when most CC fall athletes arrive in Loomis Hall for pre-season training on the practice fields and training floors of the CC athletic complex, Varsity Men's Cross-Country Coach Ted Castaneda and volunteer team members leave Colorado Springs and the regimental mentality of two-a-day practices far behind as they journey past the small town of Buena Vista to Cottonwood Lake Campground. Here on the edge of the Collegiate Range they spend five days at a running retreat in the Colorado high country.

This year, varsity team members Erik Browning, Ben harrison, Tor Petersen, Ted Spatn, Seb Suhl, paul Koch, Dave Peters, and Ryan Shaffer joined Coach Castaneda at the retreat in the Colorado Castaneda at the retreat. Ex-CC standouts Scott Wanek and Mike Taber joined the team as counselors.

Begun five years ago, the optional pre-season camp serves not only as a high altitude training session, which is sorely needed for several team members from such lowland climes as New York City and Austin, Texas, but additionally as a meeting place where team members may get to know one another before chaos blows into their lives in the form of registration, first block reading lists, and mile repeats.

"I look at it [the camp] as a chance for a bunch of friends to take a vacation in the Rockies before the pressure of first block sets in. Of course we're all here to run. That's our common interest. But we meet chiefly to get to know one another and have fun in a low-key environment," Castaneda says.

While Coach Castaneda and the team ran twice every day, one half hour run before breakfast and an hour lope during mid afternoon, they definitely found time for an assortment of activities.

Food of course, was of chief concern. Everyone helped cook and clean. Tor Peterson's spaghetti and macaroni mix quickly drew aclaim from one team member as "that starchy mess of milky goo." AS Tor points our however, goo." As Tor points out however, "Everyone ate it."

More popular was Seb Suhl's "Jiffy Pop" popcorn, prepared over the evenin campfire. His was the first successf product in five years of attempts.

The boys were by no means limited running in their athletic exploits. Th spent most afternoons in a field near the campsite participating in their favori running camp tradition, five on fi stickball. While they stuck closely regulation hardball rules, there we several major differences. In this game t ball was made of silver electrician's tap Stickers (batters) alternated between tw sticks: the thin spray stick, and the Kin Kong model. Basic challenges of the gam included making contact with the ba "which loses its round consistance aft several hits."

Continued on page

Kickers Win Two

BY MIKE FRATERELLI

Posting a 2-1 record in the young season, the Colorado College men's soccer team has started with high hopes and a solid squad centered around co-captains Todd Walker and Greg Kazemi and senior netminder Matt Slothower. The return of junior Alec Rekow from a year of traveling will help to strengthen the midfield and forward line also.

"I feel the team's attitude is much better than it has been in the past and that will help us realize our potential," commented Coach Horst Richardson entering his 21st season as head coach for the Tigers.

Important potential lies in Richardson's recruiting of Jim Schuster, Scott Reynolds, Derrick Fehmers, and Nedim Ogleman. These freshmen all should play vital roles in the future of CC soccer. Of course the team's initial goal is to earn a sixth straight berth in the NCAA post-season tournament. Fortunately, their schedule affords them the opportunity to play many top Division III teams with whom they will be competing for four Western Region spots. Strong contenders include Claremont-McKenna College, LaVerne University, UC San Diego, St. Thomas College and St. John's College. The Tigers quest will take them from Philadelphia to Los Angeles.

CC opened the season against a game squad from the College of the Southwest on Wednesday, Sept. 3. Southwest surprised the Tigers by jumping out to 0 halftime lead—scoring on two defens mistakes. The Tigers overcame their game jitters in the second half to carry day, 3-2, on goals by Chip Sagel, A Dorsey, and Derrick Fehmers.

Westminster College from Salt L City was CC's next victim as the team to the Tigers 2-0, last Friday. Paul Schm tallied both goals—the first off a rat pathetic cross that the goalten misplaced, and the second from a pen kick.

The Tigers' first difficult test ca against fourth ranked Wheaton Colle Although both teams had disappoint performances in their previous outing great game was anticipated. Both tea came out with crunching defensive p and conservative attacks. The game even with neither team seriously test their opponent's goalkeeper. In fact scored on themselves with thirt minutes remaining to give Wheaton victory. A meaningless score with fo seconds left iced the game at 2-0 Wheaton. Although disappointed by loss, the Tigers gained confidence for remainder of the season by show themselves they can play with the b teams in the nation.

That confidence will be needed t weekend as CC travels to Pennsylvani play Carnegie-Mellon University and th ranked Elizabethtown. A win and a would certainly help the Tigers chance the playoff race to come.

MOUNTAIN CHALET
CC's Outdoor Connection

equipment for the self-propelled patagonia • kelty • north face walrus • wild country phoenix • vasque • chouinard • fischer karhu • rossignol marmot mountain works wilderness experience • vuarnet • madden

BACKPACKERS • NORDIC SKIERS • CLIMBERS
CROSS COUNTRY SKIING & BACKPACKING EQUIPMENT RENTAL

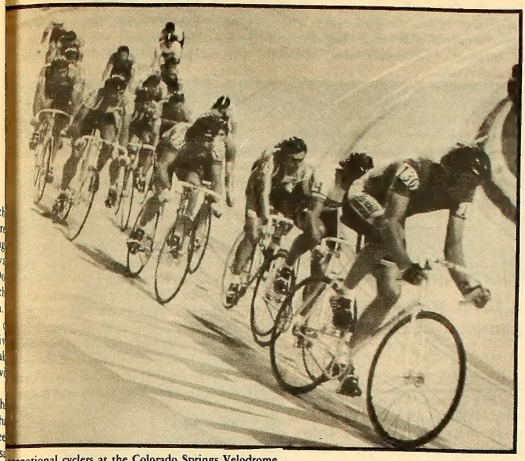
Free BackPacking Frisbee
w/any purchase
$4.00 value
Expires October 12, 1986

Downtown • 226 N. Tejon • 633-0732
Mon.-Fri. 9:30-6:00 Sat 9:00-5:30

The Worlds



ternational cyclers at the Colorado Springs Velodrome PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

ntinued from p. 1

esslich and Michael Huebner captivated e audience by finishing 1st and 2nd spectively in the match sprints (a contest tween two riders to be the first across the e in three laps). Both men have minated this sport and are reputed to be fastest in the world.

The road races held at the Air Force ademy took place on a nine and one half le loop with the professional men riding istance of 10 miles or 17 laps. The day s exceptionally cold for spectators but ost idealistic for the hard worked ers. Gold and Silver medals went spectively to Moreno Argentin of Italy d Charles Mottet of France. American orite, Greg Lemond, finished a spectible 7th, being unable to overcome k of sleep and a flue virus for a possible d medal. The race lasted approximately and a half hours with twenty-three minute laps. The big upset int he Worlds came from two-year veteran Janelle Parks (U.S.A.) who captured the silver medal in the 38 mile womens road race, 10 seconds behind eventual winner Jeannie Longo fo France. The mens amateur road race was 105 miles long.

Despite the home crowd, Americans fell short of their expectations. There have been personal best performances but flukes and miraculous opponents left the U.S. with only 5 medals, none of which are gold. The following U.S. medalists at this years Worlds include: Leanard Harvey Nitz, bronze in points race; Kit Kyle and David Lindsey, silver in tandem event; Janelle Parks, silver in womens road race; and Rebecca Whithead Twigg, silver in individual pursuit. The U.S. has captured a total of 69 metals in the Worlds since 1912.

Hockey Captains

Seniors Rob Doyle, Marty Ketola and rd Whitaker have been named tri-cap- ns of the Colorado College hockey team the 1986-87 season, Coach Mike Bertsch nounced.

The captains were elected this week by ir teammates, with the support of the ching staff.

"I think they made three good choices," rtsch said. "All three players definitely ssess strong leadership qualities. They are ople capable of taking on the responsibility as well as being leaders on and off the ice."

Doyle is a defenseman. Ketola and Whitaker are forwards. All three have lettered for three years.

The Tigers open the '86-87 campaign on Oct. 10 ar home against the University of Minnesota.

Women Start Strong

Freshman forward Keri Tashiro scored on a header with just over 10 minutes to play Sunday, giving the Colorado College women's soccer team a 1-0 victory over Metro State in the Tigers' season opener at Stewart Field.

Tashiro, a product of Seattle, Washington, was stationed perfectly in front of the Roadrunners' goal when sophomore Jennifer Murphree lobbed a centering pass from deep on the left side. Metro State goalkeeper, Dani Denight, who finished with six saves in the defeat, had no chance on the tally.

The match was played in a cold, steady rain that threatened to halt play throughout the second half with the score tied.

"I wasn't really concerned as much about losing as I was with the game being called because of the weather," said CC Coach Dang Pibulvech, who took his squad to the NCAA Division I Final Four last season. "I knew we had a better team. We just weren't doing the things we're capable of doing offensively. Our shooting percentage certainly wasn't what it should be."

The Tigers attempted 29 shots compared to Metro State's 10. All-American goalkeeper Janine Szpara, a sophomore from San Jose, CA, made seven saves in the CC net to record the shutout.

Dang was pleased with his team's opening victory and the outlook for the rest of the season.

"We have a very good group. Talentwise it's the best I've ever had. Now, though, we are looking for someone to provide leadership. All should be able to, but it's a young team with only one senior," said Dang.

Margot Stolte is that senior and co-captain along with Libby Sheldon.

Six freshmen will be essential contributors to the team. Tashiro, who has been called one of the top youth players and a future National Team member, has already shown her ability to put points on the board. Another player from Seattle, defender Shelley Separovich has stepped in to replace Sharon Hoag as sweeperback and is "as great as a sweeper that a freshman can be" according to her coach. An extremely skillful player, Separovich just needs college game time. Dang is also looking for leadership from her.

Two midfielders, Maryclaire Robinson from northern California and Keri Schlobert, another Seattle area player, look very strong for the Tigers. Robinson took over for injured senior Liza Grant and played the whole ninety minutes in the first game. Schlobert played two thirds of the game and "made the difference".

Walk-ons Shannon Male, Illinois, and local kid Sherry Hull, should also be seeing alot of playing time in the future also.

This weekend the team is on the road to Missouri but returns home to play the University of Denver Thursday at 4 p.m.

Continued from page 16

"There are some wicked curves and knucklers thrown," reports ace pitcher Erik Browning. "Hey, and we're not afraid to brush back batters." This aggressive attitude accounts for the high incidence of beanings.

The field gradually slopes upward away from the campground. Outfield positions being particularly precarious due to "clumps of grass, stumps, and gopher holes all looking to trip you and end your season," adds Browning.

One afternoon eight team members climbed Mt. Antero, a 14,000 ft. peak a few miles south of their campground. To escape the afternoon heat, many braved the frigid waters of Cottonwood Creek.

Come darkness, expert fire technician Scott Wanek built cheery blazes around which the team gathered to address a myriad of weighty topics, as one might expect of CC student/athletes. There was Ted Spatn's attempt at the bizarre abstract with "marshmallow cities on flaming logos" where Los Angeles threatened to overrun New York while Florence bubbled in humanistic splendor.

One recalls with glee the famous debate from several year's past between Jeff Moline and Doug Ward—The Rocky Mt. Chipmunk: "Domesticated Mooch or Harrassed Denizen of the Woods."

Remember however, the runners were on vacation. With this in mind, one night they piled into the school van en route to the Comanche Drive-in where they watched Arnold Schwarzennegger swagger through "Raw Deal."

While this year's cross-country team has a long season ahead and much colder weather in store, they've established a team base of high altitude miles and friendship at their high country camp.

Same day racquet restringing

TOTAL TENNIS

For all your tennis, racquetball & squash needs

403 N. Tejon 520-9222

Academy at Maizeland 574-1810

50% OFF ON Reebok

Buy 1 Pair Of Reebok Phase I tennis shoes at Reebok's suggested retail price and receive the second pair at 50% off that price with this ad.

OFFER GOOD THRU 9/19/86

Don't you deserve an original?

$6 off

with coupon

Birkenstock FOOTWEAR

College Shoe Shop

831 N. Tejon 632-6161

Armadillo's Alley

Greetings Catalyst Sports Fanatics!

Welcome to Armadillos Alley. Perhaps Da Dillos Dumpings is a more appropriate title for this column. What do Armadillos and sports have in common? Absolutely nothing! However an Armadillo sure is a dang sight cuter than my ugly kisser.

Speaking of ugly, the Denver Donkeys are winning ugly once again. The Los Angeles Raiders dominated the Donkeys, but came up on the short side of a 38-36 score. Both the Raiders and the Zebras aided the Donks cause. The Raiders chipped in with fumbles at some rather inopportune moments in the game. The Zebras earned their "orangebacks" by giving Denver seven points near the end of the first half on an atrocious interference penalty. Tight End Clarence Kay would have had to have been in the cockpit of a bloody F-15 to reach that ball. Where the heck was Mr. Instant Replay on that play? Taking a leak?

Granted Denver won, but Donkey despisers were heartened by the usual lack of a rushing game; fifty-five total yards, 2.1 yards per carry, (Keep up the good work dudes!) that guarantees them an early checkout time in the playoffs. What's that? The Donkeys didn't make the playoffs last year? Bummer. 11-5 and no dice? What a crying shame. Pardon my ignorance, but I spent last season in Upper Volta in a futile attempt to avoid exposure to the Donkeys. It was sheer bliss, not even a tidbit of news on the Donks for months.

Then one gorgeous morning I returned from wallowing around with the hippos to have my idyllic world shattered, a friend inquired if I had heard of a place called Denver. Shaken, I replied "Pray tell why do you ask?" Passing me a yellowed faded newspaper clipping, he said, "Cause the people there sure are ugly. I mean, is this dude gnarly or what?" Reaching out a shaking claw, I accepted, "Yikes," a page from the Denver Post, notorious Donkey ass-kissers. It was an entire page, a four photo sequence of Elwood trying on a pair of earplugs. "Unbeeeelievable." Pardon the digression.

The Broncos ought to venture seventy-five miles down the road to scout a team with a real rushing game, our own CC Tigers. The Tigers unveiled their new Wishbone offense against Austin College, a highly ranked Div. II school. They rushed for 267 yards, amassing 362 total yards in a heartbreaking 35-34 loss. Great effort guys!

The Broncos ought to...scout a team with a real rushing game...CC Tigers

I feel cheated. This was the year the hated Dallas Cowpukes were going to finish under .500. Watching Dallas was going to make counting sheep seem exciting. Then a couple weeks ago they signed some bloke named Wal Herschel. Tell the Tampa Bay Buccan life is fair. They lose Bo to baseball and Cowboys who already have Tony Dor one of the leading career rushers in N history, sign Herschel. Herschel will bring a championship to Dallas but, will in all probability finish above .500 challenge for the division title once ag Perhaps Dallas will make prime time viewing this fall. Tony D. was rather tic about Walker's hefty contract. Howeve Dallas' Monday night victory over New York Giants, both contribu Dorsett twisted an ankle early on but managed to score a TD before bowing Walker rushed ten times for sixty-f yards, caught six passes for thirty- more and scored two touchdo including the game winner.

Question: Why can't the Giants, a t some experts have picked to win the St Bowl, beat Dallas? —A team wit multitude of weaknesses and a second against whom Aunt Jemiamah could th for three hundred yards. Including Mon night the Giants have lost three straigh the Cowboys. Besides, every good Yan knows there are only steers and queer Texas.

Next week: Why the Boston Red won't pull their customary el foldo in waning months of this season.

QUESTION #1.

WHAT IS THE RIGHT CHOICE FOR MOST COLLEGE STUDENTS?

a) AT&T—for everyday discounts of 40% to over 50% off weekday rates on out-of-state calls.

b) Short bursts of intense study followed by hours of frantic partying.

c) AT&T—for exceptional value and high quality service.

d) AT&T—for collect, third-party and operator-assisted long distance calls.

e) Any class that does not conflict with "The Love Connection."

If you picked A, C and D, you're destined for great things. Like AT&T Long Distance Service. AT&T offers so many terrific values. Like a 40% to over 50% discount off our day rate on night, evening, and weekend out-of-state calls.

Imagine what you'll do with the money you could save. Imagine what your parents would do if they found out.

Of course, you can count on AT&T for clear long distance connections any place you call. And AT&T gives you immediate credit for wrong numbers.

To find out more about why you should choose AT&T, give us a call. And if you picked B and E, call anyway. You could probably use someone to talk to.

Call toll-free today, at 1 800 222-0300.

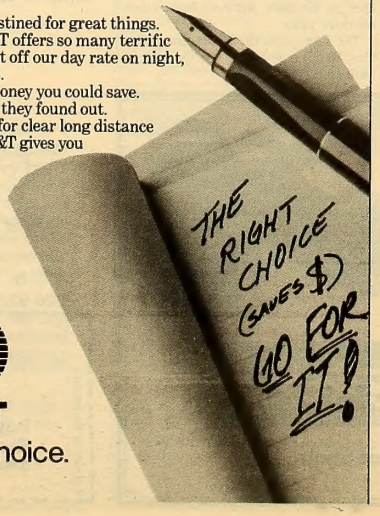
CALL NOW!



AT&T
The right choice.

© 1986 AT&T

Return Of The Canadian

BY DEAN CAMPBELL

Doug Clarke is back, and ready to hockee Colorado College Tigers. spending a year away from CC tou Canada and Europe with the Cana National Hockey Team, the ju defenseman from Toronto return bolster a Tiger team rich in experience strengthened by an especially st recruiting class. Granted two year eligibility by the NCAA, Clarke is loo forward to strong performances in bo his remaining WCHA seasons.

Upon leaving CC after the 198 season, Clarke began training with Canadian National Team. With the Winter Olympic Games scheduled Calgary, Alberta, Canada, the Cana Nationals embarked on a tou exhibitions and international tournam aiming to build support for the around Canada. The approximately eig five game schedule included a tournam victory in Japan, second place in Spengler Cup in Sweden, and a fourth finish at Izvestia, a prelude to the W Championships held in the Soviet Un

With such a rigorous training travelling schedule to maintain, Clarke unable to accumulate any school cr Realizing continued work with National Team would destroy his cha to obtain a degree, Clarke opted to r and graduate from CC. And thou professional deal with the Nat Hockey League's Vancouver Canuck through, Clarke hopes that two succe WCHA seasons will earn him a chan again try out for a professional team. and foremost on his mind, howeve graduating from CC, and of course, pl hockey for the Tigers.

Clarke anticipates no probl readjusting to WCHA play, and is hap be back with many of his fo teammates. Says Doug, "I just want to hockey. It doesn't matter where I p When asked about CC's chances in WCHA this year, Clarke replied, "I w be very surprised if we (CC) don't do well this year." Teaming with 1985-8 scoring leader (along with Rick Boh Doyle in defense, a combination us both the 1983-84 and 1984-85 season defensive line of Clarke and Doyle sh be one of the most formidable and po in the WCHA. With experience motivation for improvement on their watch out for Doug Clarke and Colorado College Hockey Tigers!

1986-87 GMAT Testing Dates Announced

The 1986-87 testing schedule includes administration of the examination on: October 18, January 24, March 21, and June 20.

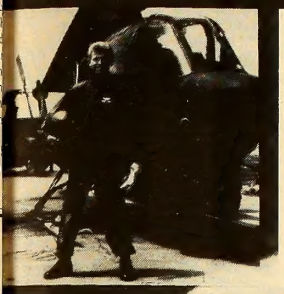
Further information on registration procedures and deadlines, fees, and testing center locations is available in the GMAT Bulletin of Information for 1986-87. Copies are available locally from William E. Barton, Palmer 108.

YOU CAN HELP ON THE CC campus by recycling your newspaper, cardboard, and other (mixed) paper, and aluminum with ENACT.

There are three recycling sheds on campus: on the northeast side of Slocum, southwest of Mathias, and betwen Loomis and Bemis. ENACT accepts newsprint, cardboard, mixed paper (magazines, notebook paper, paper bags, phone books, etc.), and aluminum.

All CC community members are welcome at our meetings, Wednesdays at 7 p.m. in the ENACT office near Mathias desk.

ARMY RESERVE OFFICERS' TRAINING CORPS



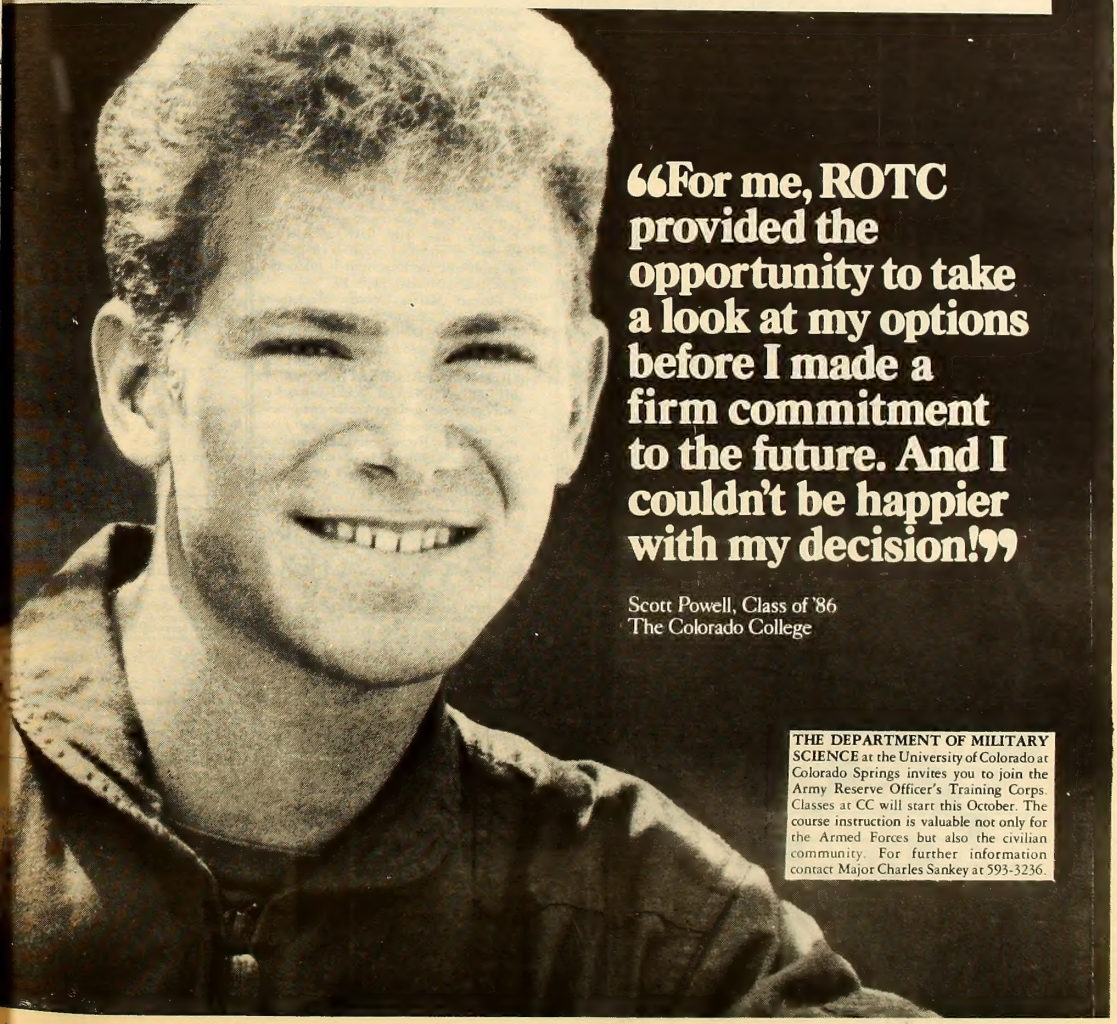
Thanks to his Army ROTC Scholarship, Scott Powell didn't just go to college, he went to the college of his choice and graduated with something extra. An officer's commission in the U.S. Army.

Lieutenant Powell is now attending flight school, competing with other top-notch pilots to fly the most advanced attack helicopters in the world.

As an Army ROTC student, you can graduate with the management and leadership skills needed to turn these credentials into a successful career, civilian or military.

And as a Scholarship winner, you could receive tuition, educational fees and allowances for textbooks plus up to $1,000 a year.

For more information about opportunities available through Army ROTC, call Chuck Sankey at 593-3236.



"For me, ROTC provided the opportunity to take a look at my options before I made a firm commitment to the future. And I couldn't be happier with my decision!"

Scott Powell, Class of '86
The Colorado College

THE DEPARTMENT OF MILITARY SCIENCE at the University of Colorado at Colorado Springs invites you to join the Army Reserve Officer's Training Corps. Classes at CC will start this October. The course instruction is valuable not only for the Armed Forces but also the civilian community. For further information contact Major Charles Sankey at 593-3236.

OPPORTUNITY OF A LIFETIME: The Sullivan Bubernatorial campaign in Wyoming is looking for enthusiastic CC students for next block. Your responsibilities will be varied. This is your chance to see all aspects of a state level campaign and to earn CC credit. "We promise you won't be stuffing envelopes for the duration of your stay." For more info contact Michelle Sullivan (307) 472-6453.

TOTAL TENNIS—part time employment p.m. and Saturdays! Apply at 403 N. Tejon (tel. 520-9222) and ask for Joel.

ATTENTION GERMAN SPEAKERS! Prof. Dr. Helmut de Rudder, Director of Hochschule Luneburg will be speaking on "Hochschule Wesen in Deutschland" at Kaffeeklatch, Wed., Sept. 17 at 3:30 in the German House. In German.

THE FINE ARTS CENTER will begin taking registrations for its Fall session of Adult art classes on September 8, 1986 from 3:30-5:30 p.m. Registration will continue at the Bemis Art School of the Fine Arts Center after September 8 through the beginning of classes, September 23.

GAY RAP GROUP meets Mondays at 7:00. Discussion and community for students who are bisexual, gay or exploring their sexuality. Call x384 for details.

FREE COCAINE PARTY! Now that I have your attention I would like to announce that the 1985-86 yearbooks are on their way. Watch in the following Catalyst for dates, times, and places to pick them up.

WANTED: "Behind the Walls" College student seeking correspondence from people that really care. Good looking Irish/Italian, 5'9", 150 lbs., brown hair and brown eyes. Very lonely and forgotten. Serving four years for burglary/escape, with this being my last. Please write!! All responses welcomed and answered. Write to: Rick Garvey, 83.C.810, Attica Correctional Facility, P.O. Box 149, Attica, N.Y. 14011.

THE GERMAN HOUSE (Max Kade House) will host a "kaffeeklatsch" every Wednesday at 3:30 p.m. This informal coffee break is designed to give students and faculty interested in German language a chance to chat. Kaffee and kuchen will be served.

THE MARCH OF DIMES is now registering runners for the "Autumn Run," Saturday, September 20th. Anyone interested in participating should contact the March of Dimes at 228 N. Cascade Ave., #205 or call 473-9981. You can also register directly at both Gart Bros Sporting Goods locations (5975 N. Academy Blvd. or 737 Citadel Drive East). Information sheets and registration forms may also be picked up at Peak Health Plan, U.S. Swim & Fitness and Runners Roost at 25 E. Kiowa.

PUBLIC REGISTRATION for classes at the Bemis Art School will begin Monday, September 8, from 3:30-5:30 p.m. Registration after that time will be held at Bemis until classes begin September 23.

"BUILT TO LAST," a display of selected photographs of Colorado Springs historic neighborhoods, can be viewed in Armstrong Great Hall through September 17th. A project of the Historic Property Alliance, these Ted Hunt photographs are representative of historic and architecturally significant structures in four neighborhoods: Westside, Shooks Run, Weber/Wahsatch, and the North End.

"NAMES! NAMES! NAMES!" Thursday, September 18, Dr. William Weber, Curator of the Herbarium and Prof. of Botany, University of Colorado, Boulder will speak. All seminars will be held in Olin 100 at 3:30. Refreshments served at 3:15 p.m.

FIVE MILES DOWNHILL. Applications are available for the Spirit of Palmer Run to be held Sunday, September 14. Register at the Runner's Roost, 107 East Bijou, 632-2633.

SEPTEMBER 16 & 18—Meditation—Shove Chapel, 8:00-8:30 a.m. Music, silence, mystical and/or other writings (enter by Northeast door).

SEPTEMBER 17—Shove Chapel, 12:00 noon in the lounge, Shove Council.
SEPTEMBER 19—12:05 (noon)-12:35. All college worship service. Speaker: Kenneth Burton.

THERE WILL BE AN OPEN CCCA meeting on Tuesday at 3:30 in room 259A in Armstrong Hall.

AN EXCITING WAY TO EARN CC CREDIT—The Sullivan gubornatorial campaign in Wyoming is looking for enthusiastic CC students for block 2 of this year. This is your chance to see all aspects involved in one of the most exciting campaigns of the year. For more information contact: Michelle Sullivan (307) 472-6453.

TRAFFIC APPEALS MEETING—A meeting will be helt Thursday the 18th at 6:30 p.m. for students wishing to appeal campus traffic tickets. The meeting will be in Armstrong Hall, Room 257B.

REWARD $100—For any information leading to the arrest and conviction of the person who stole a motorcycle from the Phi Delt parking lot Wed., Sept. 9 between 4:00 and 4:22 p.m. Please call Devin Standard at x337 because I'm going to catch whoever did it and handle him in my special fashion.

FOUND: One bracelet. Found near the library. Contact H. Bryant, 248 Loomis.

SENIORS—bummed out because you can't get any money for your overseas research project next year? Get a free $11,000 to help you out. That's right, the Thomas J. Watson Foundation grants $15,000 for married and $11,000 for single college graduates "of unusual promise" to do an independent study and travel abroad.

Fifty Watson Fellows from over forty participating colleges and universities are chosen each year. On the average, CC sends 2-3 of them.

A project can be anything, as long as the selection committee considers it distinctive and creative. The committee also takes into account the ability of the person to carry out the proposal, the significance of the project to the growth of the individual, and the person's commitment.

Past Watson projects of CC students include studying the Turkish "guest workers" in Germany, working with a South African newspaper, and studying gay sub-cultures in Europe.

To be selected, seniors must submit their proposals to the CC selection committee. They read the proposals and select 4 (from a field usually of a few dozen) to be judged by the national selection committee. Note that the CC committee selects those proposals which have the best chance of meeting the national committees' standards.

For those interested, write your porposal now and have a selection committee member go over it several times before the final draft is submitted. Deadline is Monday, Sept. 29.

Contact Marcia Dobson, Armstrong 131; Margi Duncombe, Palmer 41; or Kieth Kester, Olin 307a for details and application procedures.

OUTDOOR RECREATION COMMITTEE AMNESTY WEEK. Late fees will not be charged on overdue equipment if anyone has any rental equipment from the Outdoor Recreation Center—please return it now! We will be open for returns only, Sept. 15-19th, Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 1-4 p.m.

MEMBERS-AT-LARGE. Cu Publications needs two (2) representat from the student body to sit on the C Board as voting members. If you interested in making decisions about school's publications, submit your n and phone number to the Catalyst bo Rastall by Wed., Sept. 17. Elections wi held Mon., Sept. 22. For more informa contact Steve Schmid 633-4588, C Board President.

LEVIATHAN! A Journal of Arts Politics, needs your submissio photography, poetry, politics, ess fiction, sans science; no creation is obscure, no idea too mainstre Enlighten the campus, submit your w today!!

$ EASY MONEY!! I will pay $25 for phone book. Call Lee Ramsey collec (615) 577-7237 after 6:00 p.m.

IF YOU LIKE PIZZA, the Cosby Sh or the Rolling Stones, the yearbook needs you! Contact Heidi Dowd x28 Suzanne Leahy x278 for more info.

Due to the Rastall Renovation, Student Center will now be reserv classrooms in Armstrong and Palm Halls for meetings after 3:30 p weekdays and all day during block bre and on weekends. Meetings will have occur after 3:30 p.m. since classes will using the rooms during the day. To rese any of these rooms, please call the Stud Center Desk, ext. 606. If you already ha meeting planned for any of these roo please let us know so that we will be sur have you on our schedule book.

Parents Divorced?

Come learn and talk about it.

"Dealing With Your Parents Divorce" workshop

1st Presbyterian Chruch,

219 E. Bijou. Tues. nights

beginning Sept. 23rd, 6:50 p.m.

Call 633-8033 for more information.

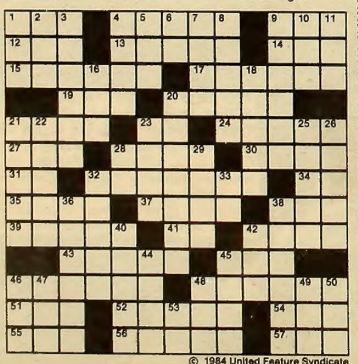
Puzzle

ACROSS

1 Snake
4 Chose
9 High mountain
12 Confederate general
13 Respite
14 Contend
15 Goal
17 Glossy fabric
19 Electrified particle
20 An Apostle
21 Splotch
23 French article
24 Speed
27 Crimson
28 Mold
30 Scorch
31 Babylonian deity
32 Pledge
34 River in Italy
35 Discover
37 River in Africa
38 Footlike part
39 Transactions
41 Symbol for tellurium
42 Otherwise
43 Parts in play
45 Meadow
46 Peaceful
48 More uncanny
51 Lair
52 Talk idly
54 Chinese pagoda
55 River island
56 Sweetening substance
57 Pigpen

DOWN

1 In music, high
2 Ocean
3 Punctuation mark
4 Unlock
5 Stroke
6 Symbol for thulium
7 Actual being
8 Demise
9 Disliking to
10 Falsehood
11 Writing implement
16 Sailor: colloq.
18 Plague
20 Allows
21 Propagate
22 Rent
23 Diving bird
25 Binds
26 Worn away
28 French: abbr.
29 Distance measure
32 Gateway
33 Compass point
36 Father or mother
38 Folds
40 Undergarments
42 Without end: poetic
44 Unbleached
45 Condescending look
46 Mountain on Crete
47 Unit of Portuguese currency
48 Greek letter
49 Dine
50 Beam
53 Symbol for silver



© 1984 United Feature Syndicate

ST. GEORGE'S UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF MEDICINE
GRENADA, WEST INDIES

St. George's University School of Medicine, with more than 1050 graduates licensed in 33 states, offers a rigorous, nine-semester program leading to the degree of Doctor of Medicine.
In January 1985, The Journal of the American Medical Association published a report which ranked St. George's number one of all major foreign medical schools in the initial pass rate on the ECFMG Exam.
70 medical schools in the United States have accepted over 630 St. George's students with advanced standing.
St. George's has received probationary approval to conduct clinical clerkships in New Jersey subject to regulations of the State Board of Examiners.
A Loan Program for Entering Students has been instituted for a limited number of qualified applicants.

For information, please contact the Office of Admissions:
St. George's University School of Medicine
c/o The Foreign Medical School Services Corporation
One East Main Street, Bay Shore, N.Y. 11706, Dept. C-2
(516) 665-8500

SENIORS: INTERVIEWS BEGIN OCT. 10th

Before you may utilize placement services, you must attend the following workshops covering the Use of the Caree Center, Resume Writing, and Interviewing Techniques.

SEMINAR I: MONDAY, SEPT. 15 SEMINAR II: THURSDAY, SEPT. 1
6:30 pm Gates Commo

THE CAREER CENTER
Ticknor Hall, South 473-2233, ext. 426

CATALYST

Volume 20, No. 2 | Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado | 19 September 1986

Theatrical Resurrection

Gertrude Stein brought to life this weekend

BY NEIL T. MCGORRIAN

The Colorado College community is "in for a treat" this weekend when artists-in-residence, Miriam Margolyes and Natasha Morgan, present a production of Win Well's Gertrude Stein and a Companion. The two British actresses will be playing the title roles that they originated in the award-winning production at The Edinburgh Festival in 1984. The actresses will also perform the roles of Pablo Picasso, Ernest Hemingway, and others of the Paris literary scene of the 1920's.

Anyone who has read the works of Gertrude Stein, the famous American poet and playwright, should be aware of the influence of Alice Babette Toklas on her life. The two women were inseparable. The label, "companion," in the play's title, was given to Ms. Toklas by Ernest Hemingway as a way of saying that he did not like her and that he did not recognize her beyond the capacity implied by the label. She was more accurately Gertrude's lover, friend, and colleague. Alice did the domestic chores for the pair, giving Gertrude the time to write. She also insisted that Gertrude publish these writings. In short, it is quite likely that Gertrude Stein would not be known today if Alice had not been her "companion."

PHOTO BY HILARY HOEER

Natasha Morgan and Miriam Margolyes share their excitement.

Ms. Toklas became famous in her own right when Harper's magazine asked her to write a book. She knew she was not a writer, so she collected and compiled recipies from friends to make the Alice B. Toklas Cook Book. The British writer, Brian Gyson, contributed a recipe for hash brownies. She included it in her book, where it was published with the more

Continued Page 14

Capital Campaign Going Strong

But Tax Reform Looms As Potential Threat

BY TED CRAIG

In less than two years of the five-year Colorado College Campaign, the school has taken in over half of the targeted $43.5 million. Evidence of the $23.5 million already raised is abundant on campus. Renovation of Worner Student Center, initiation of the McHugh Leadership Chair, and construction of the Olin annex (soon to begin) are direct products of the campaign.

Still, changes in the tax laws concerning donations, almost certain to pass the Congress this fall, have raised questions for the campaign. Although admitting that it is "too early to tell" what impact tax reform will have, President Riley remains optimistic; "we're certainly not panicking," he stated.

With the successful completion of the campaign, the College will hold an endowment of approximately $100 million. Such a figure rates high among ACM schools, following only heavily endowed Grinnel and Carleton Colleges. Compared with similar small colleges nationwide however, $100 million is rather modest. The money from the current campaign is designed to enhance the College's educational quality and to make it more competitive with other prestigious colleges.

Money from the campaign will serve a variety of purposes. Beyond the major construction projects evident on campus, funds will go toward such projects as library improvements, increased support for student aid, and academic program enhancement. Faculty will benefit from an added $2 million in development money (funds designed to assist faculty in renewing professional contacts and revitalizing knowledge of their academic field) and the establishment of five endowed professorships. A second endowed chair, the Maytag Chair of Comparative Literature, is being created at present.

The capital campaign is also soliciting up to $7 million in contributions to the annual fund. Money from the annual fund plays a large role in covering the College's annual operating costs. Another $3.5 will

Continued Page 4

Football Team Scores on Field

BY JIM GRANTZ

The CC Tigers employed a team effort last Saturday to pick up their first win of the season against St. Mary's of the Plains (Kan.) 17-10. St. Mary's fell to 0-1 on the season while the Tigers evened their mark at 1-1.

The Tigers' offense looked sluggish in the first half turning the ball over twice inside their own 40 yard line. But the defense, led by senior co-captain LB Mark Gorman, sophomore Nose Guard Steve Barbie and sophomore LB Scott Robertson, kept it close. The Tigers went into the locker room trailing 10-3.

In the second half the Tigers offensive line, led by senior Center Bill Young and senior co-captain Jack Foster, dominated the line of scrimmage. The offense moved the ball effectively in the third quarter and set up the first of two Lorimer to Holmes TD passes. QB Charley Lorimer missed the handoff to the left and scrambled right. He found Split End Matt Holmes open in the seam and Holmes made a one handed grab as he scampered 20 yards for the score.

Continued Page 18

Brazilian Ambassador Speaks At Jō vän ō vich Lecture

BY CAROLINE BRYAN

Sergio Correa da Costa, the Brazilian ambassador to the United States, delivered a lecture entitled "Brazil and the United States: Asymmetries and Affinities" Wednesday evening as a part of the annual William Jovanovich lecture series.

The Ambassador, a distinguished writer and scholar, spoke about pertinent issues with regard to U.S.-Brazilian relations, but also expressed his clear understanding of the situations of both countries worldwide.

Da Costa began his lecture with a bit of historical reminiscence about the long standing good relations between our two peoples. Just as Portugal and the United Kingdom have long been steadfast allies, da Costa pointed out, Brazil, a country whose population is largely Portugese in origin, and the United States have shared a similar degree of respect and rapport that has been in force in Europe for centuries.

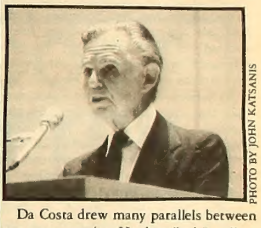


PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Da Costa drew many parallels between our two countries. He described Brazil as a nation that is currently undergoing a period of rapid change and growth. Just as the United States struggled to gain independence from authoritarian rule centuries ago, Brazil has undertaken this challenge only recently.

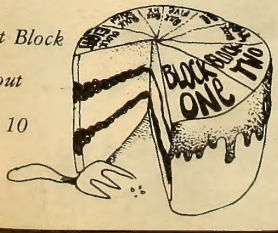
Da Costa stressed the fact that Brazil's transition from authoritarian rule to democracy has grown out of amnesty, and has been a largely non-violent progression that reflects national interests.

Today, brazil is a nation of 140,000,000 people and growing at the rate of "one Uruguay every year, one Paraguay every three years, and one Argentina every ten years." This explosive expansion, da Costa illustrates, has necessarily demanded national economic growth to attempt to strike a balance between the ever increasing demands of the Brazilian people and the demands of the rest of the world.

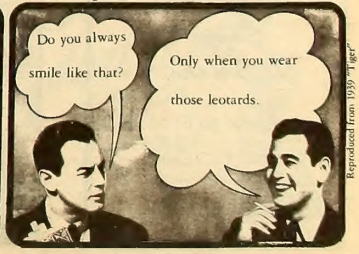
Brazil's development has taken place during a period of great international

Continued Page 2

Eight Block Fallout Page 10



Get Activated Pages 6 and 7



Reproduced from 1939 "Tiger"

Brazil continued from page 1

upheaval. By expanding it's participation in the worldwide economy during this difficult time, Brazil has become the eighth largest economy in the west and the tenth worldwide.

Even with the largest debt in the Third World, Brazil has had more success meeting payments than other nations in the region. Da Costa firmly rejected the idea of a debtor's cartel. Nevertheless, he argued, the current interest payments (equal to about 4.5% of the Brazilian GDP) are draining an unsustainable amount of capital from the nation's economy.

Though da Costa drew many parallels between our two countries with regard to our common democratic transition and subsequent rapid economic growth, he also recognized a certain lack of symmetry with regard to our present national interests.

Da Costa views the United States as a nation that is presently largely concerned with external security as well as global security concepts.

Brazil's concerns, on the other hand, are much more internally oriented. As a nation Brazil is currently concentrating on creating a harmonious economic balance, both within the country and worldwide. It is these internal issues that are of utmost concern to the newly formed and still fragile Brazilian government. While the U.S. endeavors to maintain its position worldwide, Latin American countries are concerned with trying to acquire worldwide recognition.

Da Costa believes that this "lack of symmetry" is the result of necessity. Because Brazil has some thirty million people below the poverty line, economic development, social progress and a better quality of life for the citizens necessarily have become the top priorities of the Brazilian government. Da Costa firmly stressed his hope and belief that this assymetry will not breed antagonism between our two countries.

He believes that the United States, more than any other country, understands that internal stability is the fundamental ingredient for a successful nation. Da Costa believes that our relations can be maintained through a widening of common interests. Because the U.S. has no specific policy with regard to Latin America our relations have grown out of a global consciousness. But as da Costa illustrates, the greatest benefit would be achieved for both countries by developing a sound partnership and specific policy with regard to each other.

Da Costa views Brazil as an extremely viable country and predicts that the nation will soon be one of the top five economies worldwide. His stress on the necessity of strong solidarity between our two countries has grown out of his realization that it is indispensible that we learn to work together for the common good because "geography counts...we are all here to stay."

Michael continues to offer you the finest in Homemade

Sanwiches
Soups &
Salads

Orders to go 633-8588

823 N. Tejon
(3 min. from campus)

And yes we have Roses and Balloons too!

CCCA

Discusses eight block plan

BY KATE WILKINSON

Nearly $1950 was allocated at a September 16 meeting of CCCA, the Colorado College Campus Association, to bring lunchtime performers, Russian dancers, a lecturer on Central America, and a symposium on U.S.-Soviet relations to the CC campus.

The Budget committee approved $600 to help fund a series of lunchtime entertainments, approximately two a week. The newly formed Russian house received $250 to help bring two folk dance groups to Cossitt Quad on October 11.

The Political Union received $240 to bring a lecturer on Central America to campus on October 13. The Union also received $860 to partially fund a week-long symposium on U.S. - Soviet relations, featuring five speakers.

The CCCA, at the September 16 meeting, also held a discussion and question session about the proposed 8 block year plan. Tim Fuller, a professor on the committee for the plan, explained various benefits of switching to an eight block system, as well as stressing the fact that the plan is only a proposal at this stage, not an accepted plan.

Students raised questions concerning the 8 block graduation requirements and the feasibility of increasing the faculty to reduce teaching obligations. Soyoung Park, CCCA member-at-large was concerned about the 32 credit graduation requirement. She noted that under this proposal, any student who fails or misses a block due to illness will not graduate without attending summer school. Professor Fuller noted that the committee on the eight block year is considering varied solutions in the event of a student's illness forcing withdrawal from a block. Other students, who were not on the CCCA, questioned the quality of teaching under the eight block plan due to an increase of teacher to student ration to 15.9 from 14.6. Registrar Al Johnson warned students that the students should caution against comparing institutions' student to teacher ration.

Dr. Jane Day Speaks On Mayan Artifacts

BY MIKE FRATERELLI

Dr. Jane Stevenson Day appeared in Packard Hall for yesterday's Thursday-at-Eleven lecture series to speak about Mayan Archeological exploration. Dr. Day, a 1951 CC graduate in English, is curator of the department of archeology at the Denver Museum. She received her Ph.D. in Meso-American Archeology in 1985.

Dr. Day's presentation focused on giving credit to two obscure Nineteenth Century explorers, John Stevens and Frederick Catherwood. They are just now gaining the recognition that they have long deserved. Later Nineteenth and Twentieth Century archeologists disputed their theories which are now being verified as correct. Dr. Day also credits them for dispelling a popular belief that the ancient Central American cities were built by lost European peoples such as the lost tribes of Isreal. She supplemented her lecture with a slide show consisting of photographs of Mayan ruins and detailed drawings by Catherwood. Stevens and Catherwood, now known as the "Fathers of Central American exploration," published three popular books, Incidents of Travel in Central America, Chiapas, and Yucatan, Incidents of Travel in Yucatan, and Views of Ancient Monuments (a collection of 27 lithographs by Catherwood). Their travels took them all over Central America, including the Classic Mayan cities of Copan, Palenque and Chichen Itza.

Dr. Day explained the archeological significance of Mayan artifacts including temples, pyramids, stellas (totem pole-like memorials to dead leaders) and senotes (limestone sinkholes that provided water for the Yucatan Mayans). She also reiterated that the reason behind the fall of the Mayan empire has never been discovered.

The Thursday-at-Eleven lecture series, organized and hosted by Prof. Owen Cramer through the CC Leisure Program, will present three lectures next block. Father Richard McCormick will speak on the first Thursday of next block about issues in medical ethics.

THIS WEEK

SEPTEMBER 21 - 27, 1986

SUNDAY (21)

2:00 pm - WOMEN'S SOCCER - STEWART FIELD
CC vs Colorado State

*7:00 pm - FILM - ARMSTRONG 300
"Children of Paradise," a great classic of cinema. In French with English subtitles.

MONDAY (22)

*1:00 pm - RUSSIAN FILM SERIES - ARMSTRONG 300
"The Kremlin" sponsored by the Russian House

*7:00 pm - GAY RAP GROUP
Call x-384 for details

*7:00 pm - DISCUSSION - MATHIAS MAIN LOUNGE
Meeting with students to discuss the Eight Block Year proposal. Faculty members of the Eight Block Year Committee will be present to answer questions and listen to comments. All students welcome.

TUESDAY (23)

*8:00 am - MEDITATION - SHOVE CHAPEL
Music, silence, mystical and/or other writings (enter by northeast door)

WEDNESDAY (24)

THURSDAY (25)

BLOCK BREAK!!!!!!!!

FRIDAY (26)

SATURDAY (27)

*7:00 am - LSAT TESTING - ARMSTRONG 300

Photo Of The Week

The Catalyst is now accepting contributions for "Photo of the Week." CC need not be involved in theme.

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSAN

Science Facility Construction To Disrupt Campus

BY DAVID A. FITZGERALD

Despite current construction of the Worner Student Center, Colorado College will begin construction on a new sicence facility next month. Construction of the facility located north of Olin will create new disruptions on the east end of campus. These disruptions will consist mainly of detouring pedestrian traffic and of noise generated by the building process.

The Science Facilities Advisory Committee which has aided in the planning of the new facility has attempted to minimize projected disruptions. The committee represents the six science departments, the math department, the administration, academic computing, the physical plant, and two student representatives. The student representatives will be chosen again this year due to the vacancies created by the graduation of last year's representatives.

According to the chairman of the Science Facilities Advisory Committee, Professor Harold Jones, the greatest nuisance for the faculty and students will be the noise levels generated by general construction and excavating machinery. The well insulated walls in Olin and the location of the classrooms in Palmer will help minimize the noise in classes. The college will consider installing insulated windows in the faculty offices on the northeast corner of Palmer.

The disruption of pedestrian traffic will be another inconvienence to the students and college community. The fences which will be erected around the construction site will eliminate pathways for pedestrian use. The pathway which runs north and south on the east side of Palmer will be blocked by fences starting at the east door to Palmer. The door will not be fenced off completely due to the fire safety regulations which prohibit obstructing fire exits.

Students living in Mathias or Arthur House and taking classes in Palmer will be forced to enter through the west door. The easiest access for those students living in Mathias or Arthur House and taking classes in Olin will be through the east door via the sidewalk along Nevada. Arthur House head resident Steve Shaw stated "Looks like we'll be pretty isolated, but the noise will be the major inconvenience."

Due to the location of the construction site, Phi Delta Theta residents will be forced to park in the Jackson House parking lot along with the Olin faculty and staff. According to Professor Jones, there is plenty of available room. Marcia Bloemendal, head resident of Jackson House, believes that the space will be insufficient to accomodate the relocated cars. Jon Marker, the house manager of the Phi Delta Theta house, expressed his frustration with the projected inconveniences, "We wanted them to extend Olin right over our house."

Construction of the new facility is not intended to disrupt campus, but is a response to the teaching needs of the sciences faculty. In the thirty years since Olin was planned science has changed along with the methods of teaching undergraduate science. According to Professor Jones the undergraduate student performs more research than thirty years ago and the need for lab space is reflected in the plans for the science addition. The new building will have 70,000 gross square feet compared to Olin's existing 66,000.

Ed Meese Speaks At Air Force Academy

BY MICHAEL S. MEHAN

Last night, Attorney General Edwin Meese 3d spoke at the United States Air Force Academy. He was the first "distinguished" speaker of the year for the Cadets' Foreign Club. His topic of discussion was "America's future." A number of CC students, organized through the Political Union, attended the speech.

He opened his speech by stating that America has become a great nation and world power due to our "continued national dedication to establishing human values and our unprecidented technological development." He then addressed the topic of America's future by listing what he considered to be the five most important issues we will face in the coming years.

"Fiscal responsibility, curbing drugs, rebuilding our military, harnessing space and persuing the rule of law under the constitution," were the five areas on which Mr. Meese spoke last night.

Speaking about fiscal responsibility he called for a balanced budget, labeling the Gramm-Rudman law "an abdication of leadership." He said we need a budget program that reduces congressional red tape, has "single consideration of the total budget," is "timely," has a balanced budget amendment, and most important, a line item veto.

Mr. Meese called drugs "the number one social problem" in America. He outlined a program of strict law enforcement and international cooperation, which he hoped would help make America drug free in the work place and at schools, saying, "I think this is a goal we can achieve."

He also stressed the importance of America's military deterent, both strategically and conventionally. He called for the production of the MX missle, the B-1b bomber, the D-5 submarine ballistic missle and the Strategic Defense Innitiative anti-missle defense system.

"The time has come to make America number one in space," he said, outlining an expanded space program which would combine NASA and the private sector to push the US ahead in space exploration and exploitation.

Briefly he praised the Constitution, which is 199 years old this year. He called it a "remarkable achievement" and called for a strengthening of the checks and balances system between the branches of the Federal government and also between the states and the federal government.

Hungarian To Teach

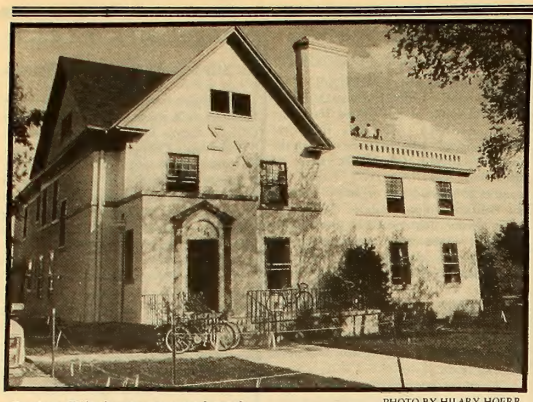
BY SHANNON WHEELER & CHRIS PROPST

J.C. Nyeri, a leading philosopher in Hungary, will teach a course at Colorado College during Block Two. The course, "Traditional Change in Contemporary European Philosophy," offers CC students a unique opportunity to learn from this prominant eastern block professor. Nyeri has played an important role in leading Hungary towards modernization while trying to maintain aspects of the traditional culture.

Professor Nyeri speaks exceptional English, teaches at Karl Marx University in Budapest, and is the author of several volumes on Contemporary European Philosophy. He was asked to come to CC due to his friendship with Harvey Rabbin and because the philosophy department was interested in having a distinguished visitor from such an intriguingly historical country as Hungary.

Much of the class will deal with the balancing of tradition and change. There are still openings.

DOMINO'S PIZZA
CAMPUS COST CUTTER
This welcome back offer ends this Sunday
Limited Delivery Area
Our drivers carry less than $20
30 minute guarantee
If your pizza does not arrive within 30 minutes, present this coupon to the driver for $3.00 off your order
One coupon per pizza
Fast. Free Delivery
Good at listed locations.
635-1511
One call does it all!™
DOMINO'S PIZZA DELIVERS® FREE.
©1986 Domino's Pizza, Inc.



Gresham Riley's new summer home? PHOTO BY HILARY HOERR

CC Nears Sigma Chi Purchase

BY JEFF BLAIR

Negotiations between the College and the owners of the Sigma Chi fraternity house have culminated in a "commoness of purpose" and "gentlemen's agreements" according to Vice President Wenzlau, and a contract is currently being drafted which should finalize the terms for purchase of the house by the College. Both Wenzlau and President Riley expressed optimism that the deal would be closed within a month.

The purchase would consumate a negotiation process initiated last May by the owners of the Sigma Chi house following informal discussions with the College. President Riley explained that the venture was attractive to the college because of the location of the property. Negotiations proceeded into the summer and involved the National Sigma Chi organization and the Housing Corporation, a group of Sigma Chi alums who are the legal owners of the property, with input from CC undergrad Sigma Chi's.

No agreement was reached over the summer due to disagreements between the two sides on such issues as selling price (College Administrators declined to divulge any figures). A preliminary agreement did allow the College to begin a massive $130,000 refurbishing and structural upgrading project this summer. The project, still in the final stages, included repainting the interior and exterior of the house, remodeling the kitchen, and relandscaping the property.

Wenzlau also pointed out that the purchase will eliminate a double standard between the conditions placed on the other campus fraternities and the Sigma Chi's. This year the Sigma Chi residents will pay rent (room fees) to the College and have SAGA served from their kitchen. The burden of upkeep—maid service, maintenance work, and garbage disposal—will be assumed by the college and in turn the Sigma Chi's will have a House Manager who is responsible to CC Housing (the other four fraternities already have such a position) and CC Housing policies and rules will be implemented. The Sigma Chi's have been CC's only off-campus fraternity.

Please recycle this paper.

FREE
FLAVORED CORN
Bring this coupon with you the next time you buy a 30 oz. bag of Vic's popcorn. You'll get a FREE medium bag of the flavored corn of your choice.
- buttery caramel
- zesty cheese
- spicy cinnamon

Good at Uintah location only. Limit one per coupon.
CORN VIC'S POPPER
1864 W. Uintah 520-9129
Mon-Sat 10-7 Sun 12-6

Make Fun Of The Road.
With the Honda Spree®, you never have to settle for just getting there. You can have a good time along the way.
This is our most affordable scooter. Push-button starting and no shifting make it easy to use. And it's almost maintenance-free.
So come see the Spree yourself. Because the road never ends. Neither should the fun.
HONDA
SCOOTERS
don's cycles
HONDA MOTORCYCLES · ATC'S
739 E. Pikes Peak Ave.
475-2437
Spree
Designed for operator use only.
Always wear a helmet & eye protection.

Campaign continued from page 1

be earmarked as unrestricted endowment, allowing the College important flexibility in applying the money.

According to Dean Chamberlain, the Chief Development Officer for the campaign, the pattern of donations has followed that of any sort of capital drive, drawing significantly from a few big contributors. Initial campaign targets aimed at gaining $23 million from only 12 donors. So far there have been 7 contributors of over $1 million. Still, the number of smaller scale donors over the past year reached a record level, with over 6,000 alumni contributing to the annual fund alone. Overall contributions also reached record levels for the College.

To keep the current momentum going, a series of area campaigns are currently being initiated. These efforts concentrate on the alumni in particular metropolitan areas. With the Colorado front range already covered, new campaigns are targeted on such cities as Chicago, Minneapolis-St. Paul, Boston, New York, and Los Angeles.

At present, the possible impact of tax reform legislation raises the biggest questions for the campaign. "My main concern," states Dean Chamberlain, "is the uncertainty that comes with any tax law change." Regardless of tax reform's real effect, donors are unsure as to what the legislation will entail. To counteract this uncertainty, Dean Chamberlain states the College intends to offer clear advi prospective donors: contribute now, be the legislation is enacted.

President Riley also sees the legislation's impact as uncertain. W the elimination of various deduc might curtail donations, the lowerin rates in the upper tax brackets could individuals with more money contribute. According to Riley the rea for donating to a college are numer extending far beyond simple finan considerations. A desire to encourage liberal arts, to reward the school for financial aid, or to contribute in fa rememberance can all guide don Concludes President Riley, "Th motives don't change, though tax c come and go."

Despite the shadow of uncert raised by tax reforms, the capital camp seems to be moving ahead strongly. quick start has been encouraging and tangible evidence of the campaign, ran from the Rastall renovation to establishment of the McHugh C should provide additional momentum a student body displaced by the can construction, calmness in the face inconvenience will have to suffice as capital contribution.

Students Campaign For Cutler Boar

An election will be held on Monday the 22nd to fill two vacant member-at-la positions on the Cutler Board. The Board is the student-faculty committee charged w overseeing campus publications. Vote during lunch or dinner at Bemis-Taylor.

NORM LEAHY

In the course of a year, the Cutler Board will spend around $50,000 to provide the CC campus with the various student publications. Are we getting our monies worth? Is some of this cash spent on rabid Vegas weekends? Maybe. The only way you'll know for sure is if you vote for me for the position of Cutler Board Member-At-Large. I'll keep you informed from my suite at the Sands.

LELIA DEYKIN

I am running for Member-At-Large for the Cutler Board because I would like to help make decisions concerning Colorado College's publications. Working for the Disparaging Eye, I have seen the Board's decisions in action. I would like to add to debates on editorship positions, financial issues, and anything else that comes before the Board. I am interested in the CC community, and through the Member-At-Large position, I hope to become more involved with the work of other CC students, as well as contribute my ideas and suggestions to improve campus-wide publications.

SAMUEL JOHNSTON

The Cutler Publications offer Color College students an opportunity to v their opinions and utilize creative intellectual talents. They are the tes grounds for the Liberal Education w the C.C. community fosters. Having to two other institutions of hi education (one a major univeristy and other a small liberal arts college), "high" on CC because of quality of education. Because my interest in the college I have take the presidency of Sigma Chi in orde better serve the fraternity system and relationship it has with the administra As president of my chapter, I am curre overseeing a yearly budget of n $80,000. The other area of my interest been centered on being an ambassado CC. I have the time and interest to bec more active in the affairs of the community and I find the Cutler B most interesting.

TACO JOHN'S welcomes CC students with a Tacorrific Burrito Sale
TACO JOHN'S It's Tacorrific!

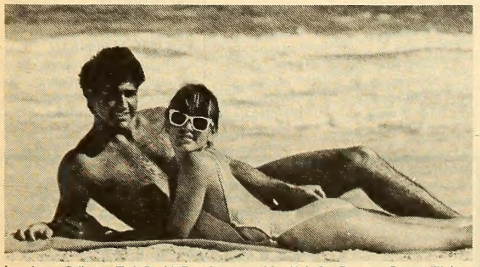
Buy one burrito, get another one fre
With so many things to eat at Taco John's, we know it often not easy to decide. That's why we're offering this mouth-watering deal on our regular burritos. Just take thi coupon to any participating Taco John's. And tell them if y want your burritos mild, hot or superhot.
TACO JOHN'S
More than just tacos.
Good at all Colorado Springs locations.
Limit one coupon per customer per visit Expires 10/1

FINALLY A FREE FLIGHT PLAN JUST FOR STUDENTS.

YOU WON'T GET A BREAK LIKE THIS ONCE YOU'RE OUT IN THE REAL WORLD.

INTRODUCING COLLEGIATE FLIGHTBANK, FROM CONTINENTAL AND NEW YORK AIR.

If you're a full-time student at an accredited college or university you can join our Collegiate FlightBank.℠ You'll receive a membership card and number that will allow you to get 10% off Continental and New York Air's already low fares. In addition, you'll get a one-time certificate good for $25 off any domestic roundtrip flight. Plus, you'll be able to earn trips to places like Florida, Denver, Los Angeles, even London and the South Pacific. Because every time you fly you'll earn mileage towards a free trip. And if you sign up now you'll also receive 3 free issues of BusinessWeek Careers magazine.



Introducing Collegiate FlightBank.℠ Earn free trips to New York, San Francisco, Boston, Washington, D.C., Miami, Chicago, or Denver. Plus, Australia, Honolulu, London, and Mexico. All told, 74 cities worldwide.

SIGN UP YOUR FRIENDS AND EARN A PORSCHE.

But what's more, for the 10 students on every campus who enroll the most active student flyers from their college there are some great rewards: 1 free trip wherever Continental or New York Air flies in the mainland U.S., Mexico or Canada. Or the grand prize, for the number one student referral champion in the nation: a Porsche and one year of unlimited coach air travel.

And how do you get to be the referral champion? Just sign up as many friends as possible, and make sure your membership number is on their application. In order to be eligible for any prize you and your referrals must sign up before 12/31/86 and each referral must fly 3 segments on Continental or New York Air before 6/15/87. And you'll not only get credit for the enrollment, you'll also get 500 bonus miles.

So cut the coupon, and send it in now. Be sure to include your current full time student ID number. That way it'll only cost you $10 for one year ($15 after 12/31/86) and $40 for four years ($60 after 12/31/86). Your membership kit, including referral forms, will arrive in 3 to 4 weeks. If you have a credit card, you can call us at 1-800-255-4321 and enroll even faster.

Now more than ever it pays to stay in school.

SIGN ME UP NOW! (Please print or type) ☐ 1 Year ($10) ☐ 2 Years ($20) ☐ 3 Years ($30) ☐ 4 Years ($40)
Must be submitted by 12/31/86.

Name_____ Date of Birth_____

College_____ Address_____

_____ Zip_____

Permanent Address_____ Zip_____

Full time student ID #_____ Year of Graduation_____

$_____ ☐ Check/Money Order Enclosed PLEASE DON'T SEND CASH
☐ American Express ☐ Visa ☐ MasterCard ☐ Diner's Club

Account Number_____ Expiration Date_____

Signature X_____

FOR MEMBERSHIP APPLICANTS UNDER THE AGE OF 18: The undersigned is the parent/guardian of the membership applicant named hereon, and I consent to his/her participation in the Collegiate FlightBank program.

Signature X_____

Send this coupon to: Collegiate FlightBank
P.O. Box 297847
Houston, TX 77297

168

Complete terms and conditions of program will accompany membership kit.

CONTINENTAL NEW YORK AIR

Some blackout periods apply for discount travel and reward redemption. Complete terms and conditions of program will accompany membership kit. Certain restrictions apply. Current full time student status required for each year of membership. To earn any prize a minimum of 12 referrals is required. All referral award winners will be announced by 8/1/87. 10% Discount applies to mainland U.S. travel only. ®1986 Continental Air Lines, Inc. Students must be between ages 16 and 23. Registration and taxes are the responsibility of the award recipient.

The Cure for Cluelessness

A Guide to the CC Activity Scene

BY CHRIS ANDRESEN, PROMITA CHATTERJI, AND BILL PORTER

So you don't like ice cream, you didn't go to the ice cream social, and now you are totally clueless about the CC "activity scene." How unfortunate; but then, life's like that.

Well, luckily for you, the Catalyst is quite fond of Pralines 'n Cream, and did attend the annual CC Ice Cream Social Activity Night held September 16 in Armstrong Great Hall. Better yet, between mouthfuls we found time to diligently take notes. So here it is: the catalystic, cataclysmic result of our efforts.

Read and be enlightened.

THE LIVE SOUNDS COMMITTEE

The Live Sounds Committee sponsors musical performers coming to CC. If you join Live Sounds, you can help decide who plays here. Meetings are held every Tuesday at noon in the Student Center.

THE THEATER WORKSHOP

The Theater Workshop also has an open format. Students interested in all aspects of theater, regardless of experience, are invited to join. For information call Nina Essman at ext. 325.

THE VIDEO WORKSHOP

If you want to learn to use vidoe equipment, the video workshop is for you. The workshop also helps get equipment from the college and will sometimes finance independent projects.

THE DANCE WORKSHOP

The Dance Workshop is open to any students interested in dance. They utilize all styles of dance and on every level. Specifically, the workshop aims to teach students choreography.

CIRCLE K

Circle K is a college level community service organization. The club serves to improve the college environment as well as the community through various service projects. Conferences and conventions also are an integral part of this club.

CCCA

The Colorado College Campus Association is CC's student government. Elections for the CCCA Council will be held in December. By acting now, students can get information on how to run for office.

THE OUTDOOR RECREATION COMMITTEE

The ORC organizes many types of outdoor activities, usually held during block breaks. In addition, ORC trains interested students to become leaders of Outward Bound and FOOT trips. Meetings are Mondays at noon in Cossit "C".

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT NETWORK

The ODN is a national organization which addresses problems of world hunger and poverty by funding overseas projects in Africa, Asia, and Latin America. Anyone interested is encouraged to join.

FILM SERIES COMMITTEE

The Film Series Committee sponsors two weekly film showings. Members help choose these films from various categories, including foreign, contemporary, classics, cult, etc. What's more, films are free for film-workers.

A.S.I.A.

A.S.I.A. (Association of Students Interested in Asia) brings together students and faculty to learn about Asian culture and politics. Chartered by the CCCA, this new group sponsors events throughout the year including a Chinese New Year party. Meetings start October first, and will be held the first and third Wednesday of each block at Wood House.

STAR

STAR combines the Campus Tour Guide, Overnight Host, and High School Ambassador programs into one. Working with the Admissions Office, STAR acts as a student and community liason. Their meetings began Wednesday. Contact Admissions for details.

GREAT PERFORMERS AND IDEAS

Great Performers and Ideas bring high caliber musical and acting talent to CC, sponsors the Great Performance series, funds Thursday-at-Eleven, and supports other creative efforts. It is open to anyone interested in music and acting.

VOLUNTEER ACTION

Started by a CC student, Volunteer Action is a successful group formed around the big brother/big sister idea. Students are chosen through an application and an interview. Volunteer Action provides a service that benefits both elementary school children and CC students.

S/AA

S/AA, the Student/Alumni Association, gets students and alumni involved in the college and with each other. This group organizes Homecoming activities, the Adopt-A-Student program, and various other events. Their first meeting is at noon on Friday, September 19 in Tutt House.

FALL SORORITY RUSH

A CC tradition since 1932, sororities and the Panhellenic Council are introduced to students during second block break. Rush is a week of sorority parties and activities. Membership is by invitation, and the selection is a mutual process. The Greeks at CC include the Kappa Alpha Theta, Kappa Kappa Gamma, Delta Gamma, and Gamma Phi Beta sororities.

FEMINIST COLLECTIVE

Contrary to the images its name conjures up, the Feminist Collective is an organization open to both sexes. It serves to discuss sexism and its effects on both women and men; they study various forms of media, sponsor speakers, and hold discussions. Meetings will begin the first week of the second block.

HONOR COUNCIL

The Honor Council is one of the few CC organizations whose members are elected. The student-run Council conducts hearings regarding the Honor Code.

SILVER KEY

Silver Key is a volunteer organization concerning the needs of the elderly. Students visit with elderly people, and work within the constraints of their own free time. Weekly visits are preferred, and dependability is a must.

ROMANCE LANGUAGE PROGR

The Romance Language Progr sponsors study abroad trips in France Mexico. The Program will hold meeti to inform interested students.

ENACT

ENACT is an organization dealing environmental issues. They spon speakers at CC, start campus community environmental projects, promote recycling. Meetings are Wedensdays at 7 p.m.

THE CAREER CENTER

The Career Center helps stude prepare for life after CC. Their serv include career counseling, internsh career library resources, and much m To receive a career bulletin or m information call the center at ext. 426

EXTRA CURRICULAR COMMITT

The Extra Curricular Committee se to enhance the social scene on camp Their agenda includes film festiv parties, and other entertainme Membership is determined by consecu attendance at three meetings which oc on the first three Wednesdays of e month in the Exile room (Bemis) at 12 pm.

FREEZE

Freeze (Students for Nucle Disarmament) is a new organizat presently looking for interested peop Their agenda includes speakers a discussions.

RUSSIAN HOUSE

Encouraging anyone who is interested any aspect of Russian culture to cont them, the Russian House spons activities dealing with all aspects of So lifestyle. Call the house at x316 or x31

LATIN AMERICAN AWARENES

The Latin American Awaren organization is for those interested Latin America. They explore the cult events, and arts of the region. Speakers also brought in.

POLITICAL UNION

The Political Union is the organizat for issue-minded students. They bring speakers, organize discussions, and h symposiums on topics like U.S.-So relations.

DOWNTOWN 226 N. TEJON — 633-0732

Mountain Chalet

HELP US KICK OFF OUR ANNUAL FALL SALE AND SAVE

10% to 50%

ROCK CLIMBING SHOES, CARABINERS, SHORTS, T-SHIRTS, JACKETS, SUNGLASSES, SKIS, PACKS, TENTS, TELEMARK BOOTS RAINWEAR, SOCKS, HIKING BOOTS, AND MUCH, MUCH MORE !!!

WALRUS DANNER WINDY PASS NORTH FACE ASOLO

ANNUAL FALL SALE!

SIERRA WEST KELTY MARMOT MOUNTAIN WORKS PATAGONIA

WE'LL DO YOUR LAUNDRY!!!

WASHED
DRIED FOLDED

Suds 'um
Laundry & Cleaners

1931 W. Uintah (across from Uintah Gardens)
473-3756 Special student offer w/CC ID

DISPARAGING

A Journal of Social and Political Thought

VOLUME 2 NUMBER 1 SEPTEMBER 19, 1986

What's Up In Guatemala?

Guest Commentary

BY PETER HUDSON

It seems emminent that in the near future, each American voter or youth of military age will have to make a very personal decision on how the United States should intervene in the governments of Central America. Shall military aid be sent to Central American governments? Shall the United States government be the "big brother" to Central American militia and lend aid to stop the spread of "communism" that threatens the extremities of our North American hemisphere? These questions may already spur seemingly educated answers from the masses here in the United States, but how many people can relate their answers to the history of U.S. intervention in these countries back to the turn of the century? How many know what each government in Central America is doing with U.S. aid? The issue of sending military aid is not just that of communism vs. aid. An in depth look at the histories and present realities of these countries should be examined and understood before any moral or personal decision is made.

GUATEMALA: GENOCIDE OVER COMMUNISM?

Guatemala might sound like a far-off place to you. Somewhere down there by South America, right? Well, I'd advise each and every American to find out where it is, because the U.S. controls it, cheats it, and has supported a continual massacre of its indigenous population since at least 1954. Now that's a guilt trip, America. Maybe that is why you are not too familiar with Guatemala. Let's look a little closer:

The Mayan Indians, Guatemala's original inhabitants, who still compose over two-thirds of the population, have been the subjects of Spanish persecution since their conquest in 1524. The history of U.S. involvement in Guatemala begins in the late nineteenth century with capitalistic investment. This was a fairly innocent beginning for the U.S.

Around 1900 plantations began to dominate Guatemala's economy as corporations exporting their products grew larger. With their eyes on Guatemala, three American entrepreneurs started the United Fruit Company at the turn of the century. After acquiring a land grant from the Guatemalan government and completing a needed section of the new Guatemalan railroad, the United Fruit Company grew quickly. By the 1930's the company was the largest landowner in Guatemala. It controlled the railways, the Atlantic port, and owned the communication corporation of Guatemala and many other companies. To many it was known as "the Octopus" for its stranglehold on the economy, exploitation of Indian labor and influence on the government. (McClintock p. 25) Guatemala's first experience with American investment later proved to be the stepping stone for U.S. political and military intervention.

Up to this point few could accuse the U.S. of immoral or unjust action in Guatemala. Besides the capitalistic exploitation by the private United Fruit Company, the U.S. government only served as military advisors and suppliers of aid for the establishment of the Guatemalan army and national police. Although Guatemala's dictators were often corrupt and used the army to quell occational Indian rebellions, military aid from the U.S. before 1954 was important for Guatemala's national security. At that time it only indirectly supported the social inequality retained by each dictatorial government. Most dictators were of military origin and thus satisfied U.S. policy for security against communism in the Central American zone.

In 1944, after a revolution, Guatemala elected its first president, Juan Jose Arevalo, inaugurating a ten year departure from military rule. Arevalo's government was in many ways modeled after the Roosevelt New Deal. Politically leftist groups were not suppressed, a labor code was established with emphasis on a balance between employer-employee relations (harming United Fruit Company's stability and profit margin), and a land reform was initiated shaving land from large private holdings and distributing it to the Guatemalans. The Mayan Indians had their first taste of democracy and equality, unions and land ownership.

Arevalo, however, with his new commitment to democratic values, encountered U.S. hostility. The State Department advised against the new policies, calling them crimes.

In 1951, Col. Jacobo Arbenz was elected as Arevalo's successor and continued to advocate democratic ideals. By 1954, the land reforms were well-established, giving the Mayan farmers their own land, food and even some cash from sales. The reforms also involved the Mayans in the political system for the first time in over 400 years. Land was taken from the United Fruit Company and strikes were issued against its unfair labor policies. For the United States this was the final straw. "Exploiting the pretext of a Communist takeover, with the U.S. press loyally playing its part, the CIA engineered a coup in 1954, restoring military rule and turning the country into a literal hell-on-earth, which has been maintained by regular U.S. intervention until today. The land reform was repealed and its beneficiaries dispossessed, peasant cooperatives were dissolved, the literacy program was halted, the economy collapsed, the labor unions were destroyed, and the killings began."

Guatemalans discovered that policies good for the American people would never continue as their own; Mayan Indians would never be allowed a chance at freedom because of the greed of the gringo empire to the north.

After the coup, the C.I.A. flew in a military dictator from the borders of Honduras and helped establish the new government it formed to protect America's interests in Guatemala.

After its ten year taste of democracy and human rights, the Mayan population began forming groups of guerilla resistance to recover the previous reforms. As soon as these forces were realized, the U.S. proclaimed them to be "Communists." Adding to its development of death squads, the U.S. began to aid the Guatemalan government with a counter-insurgency program to instill counter-terror and subdue the Indian guerillas.

The Indian guerillas did not have anything to do with communism. Most were so uneducated that they did not even know the names of the Guatemalan or U.S. presidents, let alone the theories or philosophies of communism. All that the guerillas wanted were their human rights restored. The U.S., hiding its desire to control its interests in Guatemala called these forces communist to justify its programs to subdue them.

Since the 1950's, the United States has been supporting each military rule with money, education and arms to continue the counter-insurgency doctrines established in 1954. The human injustice created by this program is not realized by the American public. Many of the methods employed by the Guatemalan army in the Mayan highlands were developed in Vietnam by the U.S.; they are accurately described as a genocide of the Indian race.

Guatemalan Nationals do not just fight the guerilla troops. For many years Indian villages have been destroyed, inhabitants massacred and houses burned. Indians are not just shot to death, but are cruelly hacked to death by machetes, gang raped by soldiers, burned to death and executed in front of loved ones. Women and babies are not spared but gruesomely butchered. Babies are decapitated, swung by their feet and smashed into walls or disembowled in front of their parents. These are not the realities of an internal war, these horrors are methods to destroy the Mayan spirit and each community's support of the guerillas. The Guatemalan army is fighting the guerillas with torture, destruction and sickening murder of innocent Mayan communities. These are methods originally taught by the C.I.A. to help each dictator retain rule and are maintained with U.S. aid even today. Over 50,000 Indians have been killed since 1980. Genocide over communism!

Now Are You Mad ?

Let us know the answer to that question. Did anything in this issue make you stop, scowl, or hopefully think. We hope so. The goal of The Disparaging Eye is to give you alternative opinions on different issues. If you find something you don't think is right, tell us about it. We welcome those of all political persuasions to write us letters, or articles. Tell us your point of view on the issues addressed here, or on any political topic on your mind. We are always looking for people who have a sincere interest in writing for us. Come to our next meeting (signs will be posted) with ideas and be ready to contribute. Or if you can't deal with that type of commitment, submit a letter to our box in Rastall Student Center, on Nevada. Don't just sit and be pissed off, do something about it; and let us hear your opinion. Happy now?

We focus mainly on the recent Supreme Court nominations (turn to page 4). We have also done a three article series on the changing face of communism, found on page 7. Religion in politics, analyzed in terms of Pat Robertson and Jesse Jackson, is brought up on page 2. Two local, and important, environmental issues are addressed on page 3. Read these articles, learn something, and get mad!

— Ed.

Jackson Alienates and Appeals

BY STACY STANFORD

Jesse Jackson's campaign for the Democratic nomination was characterized by his race, his financial affiliations, and his religion. Each appealed to a certain group and simultaneously alienated himself from another.

Jackson was supported by a majority of blacks, hispanics, and Asians. One of his major political themes was the rainbow coalition. This was in the populist tradition, and was a movement that began a century ago which emphasized and attempted to unite minorities together to gain collective power. Jackson wanted to give these people a voice in a country largely run by white males. Another issue that his campaign emphasized was voter registration. He stressed that voter registrars needed to be available to the entire public, including minorities. He said, "Compliance with and enforcement of the Voting Rights Act is the primary issue of 1984 because it is the key to empowerment."

Although Jackson wanted to appeal to all minorities, it is evident that he was mainly concerned with gaining the black vote. Lucid as ever, he said, "We picked their cotton. We cooked their food. We nursed their babies. Now we can run their cities. Now we can run their states. Now we will run their country." This speech would certainly alienate him further from the white anglo-saxon male population. But, he also damaged what usually was a bond between liberal Jews and blacks. This came about because he received financial support from the Nation of Islam, which has an obvious anti-Semitic viewpoint. As if that wasn't enough, the black Muslims also hold conservative positions on many political issues. For example, Nation of Islam leader Salim Muwwakel is against abortion, Darwinism, homosexuality, forced integration, and feminism. He advocated school discipline and entrepreneurship. Those extreme views weren't necessarily those of Jackson's, although he made the mistake of confirming the anti-Semitic connection when the press was there to jump on it. A story was published in the Washington Post by Milton Coleman about Jackson's reference to Jewish people as "Hymies." He later apologized for the slur. However, his friendship to Louis Farrakhan worsened matters. This black Muslim leader threatened Coleman by saying, "One day soon, we will punish you with death." Despite the negative aspect of this affiliation, he needed it to unite all blacks behind him, which included black Muslims and Methodists, who were also a financial support.

Jesse Jackson's black Muslim ties had an unsurprising effect on the liberal Jews. However, his opinions stemming from the Methodist teachings, ironically, gave him both liberal and conservative appeal. His radical views concerned nuclear weapons, social issues, and foreign affairs. He campaigned to cut nuclear weapons spending by 20% and to take risks in arms negotiations. Socially, Jackson planned to spend that money on providing people with jobs that would rebuild America; for instance, constructing a mass-transit system and rebuilding bridges and houses. Another goal was to retrain youth and to wipe out the slums. His foreign policy discouraged United States involvement in Central America and Lebanon. It also called for steps toward ending Apartheid in South Africa. These strategies were influenced in part by his Christian beliefs in social justice and preserving peace.

However, some of his views aligned with the more moralistic right-wing. Jackson held traditional values, such as the family unit and discipline in school. His concerns were teenage pregnancy and the lack of ambition in youth minorities. He encouraged self-reliance instead of depending on government welfare. This conservative element in Jackson's liberal ideals can be contributed to the Christian doctrine of marital commitment and helping other people by relying on each other for support instead of welfare.

Jackson's religion managed to push him into mainstream American politics with those few conservative issues that his Christianity influenced. It is interesting to compare him to Rebpulican nominee Pat Robertson whose fundamentalist christian beliefs are unsavory to most Americans, but his political views coincide with the person who won most of the votes in 1984—Ronald Reagan.

Robertson—Last Chance For New Right?

BY DAVE MAKERECHIAN

He speaks in tongues, heals cancer patients and talks to God on a regular basis. He takes credit for saving the city of Virginia Beach from Hurricane Gloria. He expels demons with shouts of "Satan be gone!" And, he is running for President. He is Pat Robertson.

The Robertson campaign has moved fast to establish itself as a real contender for the Republican nomination in 1988. Robertson has doubtlessly influenced other GOP candidates, and will try to influence delegates at the convention. But in the end, all indicators show that the Robertson campaign is a last ditch effort for New Right conservatives to establish themselves in the Republican Party apparatus, and to the relief of moderates, an effort doomed to fail.

But the Robertson campaign cannot be overlooked in the short run. "This guy is no slouch. He knows what he's doing and could produce some more surprises," says Jeffrey Haden, author of Prime Time Preachers. Robertson surprised Republicans this August with an impressive show of strength in the first stage of Michigan's delegate selection process. Analysts attribute the results to Robertson's Freedom Council, a "nonpartisan" tax exempt educational foundation with a budget of $5.5 million. Council workers registered Michigan fundamentalists to run for delegate spots. The Council has also been active in New Hampshire, where it has established a donor base twice the size of the state Republican party. (US N & WR, Jul. 14, 1986)

Robertson also bases claims of legitimacy on viewer support for his television program, "The 700 Club." The show reaches 28 million viewers every month. This "constituency" built Freedom Council membership to 200,000 dues payers, and an even larger volunteer staff. Robertson hopes to raise $2 million for Republican candidates in 1986. (Nat. Rev. M. 23, 1986)

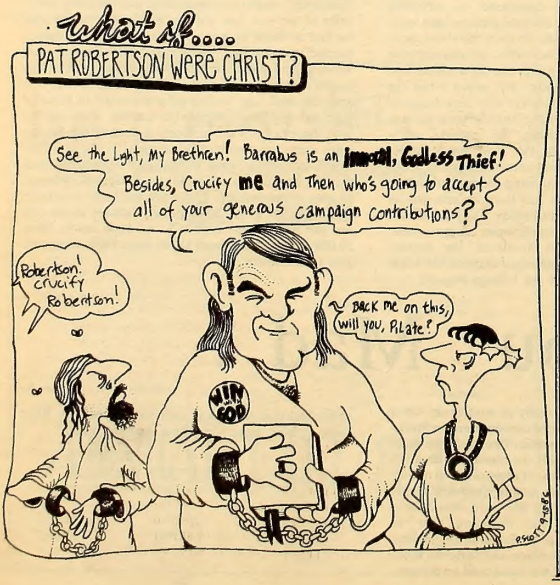
Robertson comes from a political family, and claims he is a product of his environment. His father, A. Willis Robertson, was a U.S. Senator from Virginia, and Chairman of the Senate Finance Committee. One of his ancestors signed the Declaration of Independence. Robertson holds a law degree from Yale.

But Robertson is a preacher through and through. He and other fundamentalists; such as Jerry Falwell and the Liberty Council (formerly the Moral Majority) have translated their fervant theology into an equally fervant political theology. They have claimed a biblical basis for everything from a hard line Soviet policy to the AIDS epidemic. (Common W., Jul. 11, 1986)

Other Robertson positions include a militant anti-choice stance on abortion, school prayer, and freedom from big government. Democrats claim that Robertson wants to abolish the public education system. Robertson translates Christian frugality into support for a balanced budget amendment. He supports Star Wars and Contra aid. Robertson also detests the Supreme Court. He has called the Justices "despots," who have been rewriting the Constitution for decades. Robertson has aimed more rhetoric at international terrorists. He said that the only way to stop demons such as Muamar Qadhafi is to kill them. (USN & WR., July, 1986)

The roots of the Robertson campaign can be traced to the early 1980s, when fundamentalists began

Continued on page



What if....
PAT ROBERTSON WERE CHRIST?
See the Light, My Brethren! Barrabus is an Immoral, Godless Thief!
Besides, Crucify me and Then who's going to accept all of your generous campaign contributions?
Robertson! crucify Robertson!
Back me on this, will you, Pilate?
IN GOD

STAFF

Munir Meghjee ..... Editor In Chief

Art Editor: Peter Scott

Associate Editors: Rob Lynch, Brian Smith, Lelia Deykin, Jean Maxfield

Contributing Editors: Dave Lazerwitz, Michael S. Mehan

Layout Editor: Nina Farquhar

Copy Editors: Dean Cambell, Stacy Stanford

Staff: Elizabeth L. Cheney, James R. Hall, Peter Hudson, Suzanne Leahy, Norm Leahy, Christine Dowell, Greg Ewald, Ann Abing, Dave Makerechian

Special thanks to our unofficial advisor and typesetter: Linda Shireman

The opinions expressed herein do not necessarily reflect those of the Disparaging Eye staff. The Disparaging Eye reserves the right to edit letters to the editor and guest commentaries.

Two Forks Dam Revisited

BY DAVE LAZERWITZ

Water, water, water...

What happens when a booming metropolis in the semi-arid Southwest, Denver, cries out for more water to keep up with its growing developments? They build dams.

The latest water project undertaken in Colorado to acquire more water on the Eastern slope is the Two Forks Dam and Resevoir project. The location of this proposed dam would be within the Pike National Forest, about 30 miles southwest of Denver and about 30 miles northwest of Colorado Springs. The Two Forks dam and resevoir, named for the South Platte's confluence with its north fork, would flood an area 25 miles north of the dam, completely filling up Cheesman Canyon.

The reason behind the creation of the dam lies with the Denver metropolitan area, which feels it needs more water to keep up with its current growth rate. Developers in surburban Denver have been acquiring vast fortunes and wish to continue their profits by assuring future growth through the year 2010. So the developers, who hold great political influence, have gotten together 43 suburbs which last fall petitioned the Denver Water Board to approve the Two Forks project.

The city of Denver, having no desire for the water, has given in to the suburbs in a political battle that has been going on for years. On March 4 of this year, the Denver Water Board voted unanimously in favor of the Two Forks Project and is applying for the necessary Federal permits to build it. One might wonder why Denver would go to all the trouble to build a dam for its bickering suburban neighbors.

The fact is that in doing this favor for the suburbs, Denver is demanding that they contribute to the poorly budgeted urban cultural and social institutions—namely the museums and hospitals that the metropolitan area has been using, but for which they have not been paying. Denver is also demanding that the suburbs institute a program of water conservation, something it has long called for, but has been unable to coerce the suburbs into doing.

In giving its consent to build the dam, the Denver Water Board has also instituted another criterion which is making the suburbs blow their top. The Denver Water Board has reserved the right to build the two Forks Dam in stages. So, instead of building one large dam, they want to get the permits to build a small one first and then a large one later. The smaller dam would create a 400,000 acre foot resevoir upon which Denver would have the option to expand the resevoir to a 1.1 million acre foot capacity (an acre foot is 326,000 gallons, about the amount a family of four uses in one year). Denver feels that by doing this it can minimize environmental damage and cut back on waste.

But the suburbs, who will fork out 80% (Denver will cover the other 20%) of the growing $387 million project, are not happy. They want to stake their claim to that water now. Virgil Hill, chairman of the council representing the 43 suburbs, states: "While we approve the decision to build a large dam, we oppose it being built in stages. We must adamantly oppose expenditure of our constituents money for the concept of construction of...two stages." Hill sites the higher cost of building two dams, the extended time and also has a report by the engineering firm of Harza in Chicago that states that a thin arch dam built in two stages could develop "severe stress" where old concrete meets new concrete.

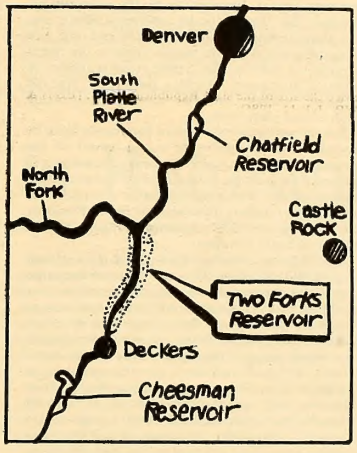
So, while Denver and its Metro neighbors fight out this battle, we can look at what is going on with the actual project.

Of the projected $387 million designated for this project, $35 million has already been spent on the Environmental Impact Statement, the most ever spent on any study of this type, which will be published sometime in 1987. (Note that the Denver Water Board went ahead and approved the project without even considering the final version of the environmental study.)

This area of the South Platte, known as Cheesman Canyon is a remarkably beautiful area, which is home to Big Horn sheep, elk, the rare Pawnee Montane Skipper butterfly and one of the best trout fishing areas in the U.S. The proposed resevoir which would fill up the area north of the dam for 25 miles would create a graveyard for all wildlife and plantlife in or around the river basin. This would disrupt the migration and breeding of the Big Horn and elk, probably eliminate the Montane butterfly and wash out a "Gold Medal" trout stream, which incidently supports a $300 million a year South Platte trout industry.

The Two Forks resevoir would flood 11,000 acres of Pike National Forest. The Forest Service plans to create capacity for 850 pleasure boats, 700 campsites, 765 parking spaces and 325 picnic areas.

The area is also a favorite recreation area for rafters, kayakers and fly-fishermen, all of whom are protesting the Two Forks Project. But, Chuck DeMoulin, Vice-President for the Water for Metro Denver lobby says "Lake Two Forks would provide recreation for the entire family, not just the kayaker or fly-fishermen."



Rocky Smith, of the Colorado Environmental Coalition, answers, "Bullshit. Lake Two Forks will never be full except during a flood. The water will fluctuate greatly, causing ugly mud flats and making construction of recreational facilities on the steep canyon walls difficult if not impossible...Lake Two Forks will become just another giant slime pit..." Mr. Smith goes on to state that a similar project, the Foothills Project, is not used for recreation and it also cut down the number of Big Horn from 91 to 16 since its building.

The Colorado Environmental Coalition as well as the Sierra Club stress that this environmentally harmful project is not necessary. Denver will never use all the water, this excess water will remove any incentive for water conservation in this arid region, and will cause the financers (water consumers in the Denver area) to have to pay the burden of having a large dam with excess storage. This will just create a vast open body vunerable to great evaporation, an excess of 80,000 acre feet is projected by Water Board critics.

The environmentalists suggest stringent water conservation, water reuse, purchase of excess water from other projects, and the construction of a smaller project at Eastbrook, which would have a much less devastating impact on the environment. "Water conservation should be the first step towards meeting our water needs, not the last step," says Donald Thompson of the Sierra Club. By forcing Denver to install water meters where there are none presently, putting stricter regulations on watering methods, using recycled water for industry and lawn care, and promoting natural trees and plants for landscaping, conservation could alleviate as much as 120,000 acre feet. Conservationists feel that these methods should be given a chance before we go ahead and destroy more of our precious environment.

The facts are there and the option is ours. The Two Forks Project is not needed to meet future water demand, it would be very damaging to the environment and would be extremely expensive. Reasonable, cost-effective and implementable alternatives exist.

As we wait for the final 300 page summarized Environmental Impact Statement, to be published sometime in 1987 and the Federal Permits to be issued for the building of the $387 million dam, maybe we should all take a trip up to Cheesman Canyon to see how magnificent nature can be before man destroys it to grow Kentucky Bluegrass in the semi-arid Southwest.

WHAT YOU CAN DO:

To make your opinion known, write to the following organizations stressing your feelings about the project, the reasons behind it and possible alternatives:

The Colorado Environmental Coalition
2239 E. Colfax
Denver, CO

Denver Water Department
1600 West 12th Avenue
Denver, CO 80254

Need For A Stronger Superfund

BY SUZANNE LEAHY

Rocky Flats, owned by the U.S. Dept. of Energy, and Lowry Landfill, are just two of dozens of dangerous waste dumps threatening the health and lives of thousands of Coloradans; nine of which have made the EPA's worst contamination list. Between the 70's and the 80's, over 100 million gallons of toxic waste have been dumped at the Lowry Landfill—that's over 4,000 railroad cars filled with hazardous waste! Companies such as Martin Marietta Aerospace have been asked to monitor chemical toxins leaking into water supplies. Martin Marietta may be responsible for the shutdown of Denver's Kassler Water treatment plant located adjacent and downhill from the Waterton plant. Although Martin Marietta has demonstrated its willingness to cooperate with the Colorado Department of Health, other industries are less willing to be burdened with such costly endeavors. South Adams County water districts, serving 30,000 residents of Commerce City, Adams City, Irondale, and DuPont, have been contaminated by Rocky Mountain Arsenal's asphalt basin since, at least, the 60's. Built in the mid-1950's after the Army found toxins flowing off the contaminated Arsenal, the basin accounts for a third of its serious pollution; experts have called it the most contaminated square mile in the nation. The contaminants leaking from the Arsenal into S. Adams water supplies have been linked to cancer and sterility in men.

Although Colorado's Senator Pat Schroeder and Representative Tim Wirth were campaigning for a Superfund bill in Colorado, the trouble passing a toxic cleaning plan was found in the state legislature. Approving matching funds of federal "Superfund" money, Colorado would be able to clean up the state's worst dump areas. After the bill's defeat in August of 1984, being strongly opposed by industry, cleaning up hazardous waste sites with limited state funds was not seriously considered.

However, out of the defeat arose some important allies to the Superfund program, such as Browning Ferris Industries (BFI), a major state trash hauler, and Colorado's Public Interest Research Group's legislative directors, Briggs Gamblin and Geoffrey Wilson. State Republican Senator Martha Ezzard and Republican Representative Don Mielke cooperated with these groups and the Dept. of Health to gain the support of the Colorado Municipal League, City and County of Denver, City of Aurora, and Colorado Mining Association as well as other activist organizations for 1985's proposal of the new Superfund bill.

Hindering the 1985 bill, again, was the inability to find a funding mechanism for the proposal. BFI proved its instrumental value, suggesting a statewide solid waste fee similar to what BFI was using in Boulder County to clean up the Marshall Landfill. "The attraction of this suggestion was that it involved a minimal individual and corporate burden distributed over a broad tax base," said CoPIRG's Wilson.

The newly created state Superfund would provide the ten percent match money to the federal Superfund required for receiving hazardous waste cleanup money. It would also provide for the essential post-cleanup maintenance of these sites, in addition to an inventory of hazardous substance contamination sites within the state. Wilson elaborated, "The federal Superfund makes it possible for Colorado to avoid paying the bulk of the cleanup costs at some of its most dangerous hazardous waste dumps." The establishment of the Superfund would see that hazardous waste cleanup was no longer a low priority issue, eliminated until birth defects, leukemia or

Continued on page 8

Presidential Nominations To The Court

Tom Cronin, a professor at Colorado College, wrote an article on the history of Supreme Court nominations in 1985. He has graciously permitted us to print exerpts from this unpublished work in The Disparaging Eye.

BY TOM CRONIN

Most presidents seek to nominate to the bench persons who share their policy preferences. In effect, presidents make predictions about the likely future performance and policy opinions of their potential nominees. In many instances this has led presidents to nominate close friends, advisers, and loyal partisans.

Presidents have been influenced by a variety of factors when they search for potential nominees for the Supreme Court. First, of course, is someone who shares their ideological and philosophical view. Second, presidents are politicians and they naturally want praise and political credit for their appointments. Reagan's nomination of Sandra Day O'Conner conveniently satisfied both these standards. She was a strong Reagan supporter and her appointment won enormous praise for the President—especially from women's groups.

Still other factors are at work. Nominees have to be confirmed by a majority of the U.S. Senate. Presidents or their aides consult leading senators, especially those from a prospective nominee's home state. They often consult with members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, the committee responsible for confirmation hearings and initial screening. And presidents generally take into account the wishes of public and private sector leaders who have a known interest in the nomination.

Presidents sometimes confer with or at least obtain the views of some of the sitting members of the Supreme Court. The justices, and especially some of the chief justices have an obviously keen interest in any nomination. Chief Justices Howard Taft, Warren E. Burger and Associate Justice Felix Frankfurter often expressed themselves and even lobbied for preferred candidates.

...the Senate has rejected twenty-six presidential nominees to the court. This amounts to about 20 percent of those nominated.

Who gets nominated and confirmed? They have all been lawyers, and in recent years most have been graduates of distinguished law schools such as Harvard, Yale, Stanford, Chicago, and Northwestern. Almost all have been active in politics in some way or another. Some have served in local or state elective office. Some have been party leaders. Some were actively involved in presidential campaigns. A few even ran for the presidency themselves (Taft, Hughes, and Earl Warren). About 30 percent served as executive branch officials in the national government before their appointment to the court. Nine were Attorney Generals, three were Solicitor Generals, at least eighteen held cabinet-level posts and about ten held various other Department of Justice positions. Three justices (White, Rehnquist and Stevens) were law clerks to Supreme Court justices.

Perhaps the most common background in the recent past has been some experience serving as a state or federal judge prior to their nomination to the Supreme Court. Justices Burger, Blackmun, Stevens, Brennan, Marshall and O'Conner all had such service. Dwight Eisenhower and Richard Nixon wanted candidates for the court to have had judicial experience. Why? They held this view in part because they believed this was ideal training for service on the nation's highest court. They held this view in part because they believed this was ideal training for service on the nation's highest court. They also believed it was easier to discern the predictable future responses of a potential court member if their decisions could be read and studied to see if they conformed to a president's policy views.

CONFIRMATION BATTLES

Our Constitution does not vest the process of Supreme Court appointments solely in the president. Article II, Section 2 provides the president shall have power, "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," to appoint Supreme Court justices. If a president decides simply to assert his power to pack the court with good friends or unqualified or extremist persons, senators from the opposition party, or even from the president's own party, can try to use their constitutional power to defeat him. This they have sometimes done. Over the history of the Republic the Senate has rejected twenty-six presidential nominees to the Court. This amounts to about 20 percent of those nominated. More important, this check on presidential power has doubtless forced many a president not to appoint persons who would fail to will Senate approval. In yet other instances some potential nominees may have taken themselves out of consideration precisely because they feared grueling confirmation hearings.

Most of these derailments or rejections occurred before 1900. This Century has witnessed only a handful of rejections and virtually none of these was based on a candidates political views.

On occassion a practice known as "senatorial courtesy" contributes to the rejection of a nominee. This occurs when the senators or a senator from a nominee's home state indicate to the White House that they strongly oppose the proposed Court appointment. This practice is far more common in cases of federal district judge appointments, yet it has in times past undercut a presidential Supreme Court appointment.

The political and philosophical view of a nominee can sometimes stir up the opposition of major interest groups and the opposition party. This can especially doom a candidacy when the opposition party controls the U.S. Senate—as it did when Nixon, for example, tried to appoint Clement Haynsworth in 1969. Many senators viewed Haynsworth as too conservative. Further, the Democratically controlled Senate was not above testing Richard Nixon, who had only won about 43 percent of the popular vote in the recent presidential election. The Senate rejected another of Nixon's nominees, Florida Judge G. Harrold Carswell, mainly on the basis of inadequate professional competence.

Sometimes the Senate rejects a nominee to signal its opposition to the policy or recent record of the incumbent Supreme Court. Sometimes senators are unsure of the political reliability of the nominee. And sometimes the Senate merely makes a mistake, as some obervers believe it did when it rejected President Herbert Hoover's 1930 nomination of Judge John J. Parker of North Carolina.

The Senate usually takes its constitutional responsibility seriously. They view an appointee to the court as more consequential than most members of a president's cabinet. Court nominees are seen as more important because of their longer tenure, their independence from the White House and their impact on a whole range of important public policy issues. Usually the Senate Judiciary Committee and then the Senate itself scrutinize these nominees closely. Poor selections such as Madison's choice of Harrold Carswell, have been rejected often enough to set reasonable standards. Although the Senate has rejected only five nominees in the last 100 years, presidents and White House advisors with any sense of history are aware the Senate jealously prizes this shared power of appointment.

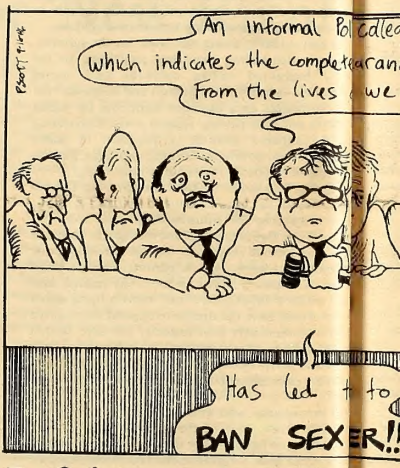
The Nom

BY BRIAN SMITH

William Rehnquist, aged 61, is the son of a first-generation Swedish-American salesman. Rehnquist grew up in suburban Milwaukee and served in the Army Air Corps in W.W. II. After the war, he used his veteran's benefits and part-time jobs to work his way through Stanford Law School, where he graduated first in his class.

From Stanford Rehnquist clerked for Supreme Court justice Robert H. Jackson and later set up his own law practice in Phoenix, Arizona. During the reign of the Nixon Administration however, he left Phoenix for Washington D.C., where he worked as an assistant attorney general. After two of Nixon's previous nominees to the Supreme Court were turned down by the Senate, Rehnquist was chosen for the high court by Nixon. The Senate approved Rehnquist's nomination and he became a member of the Supreme Court at age 47.

Antonin Scalia, age 50, is the son of an Italian-born teacher at Brooklyn College. He graduated first in his class at Georgetown and went on to attend harvard Law School, where he edited the Harvard Law Review. After graduating from Harvard, Scalia went to work for a Cleveland law firm before moving to Washington D.C., where he worked in the office of Legal Council under the Ford Administration. When Jimmy Carter became president Scalia moved to Chicago and taught at the University of Chicago Law School. Scalia returned to Washington D.C. in 1982 when President Reagan named him to the D.C. branch of the federal appeals court.



Infringement Orva

BY CHRISTINE DOWELL & LELIA DEYKIN

Is an individual's right to privacy guaranteed in the Constitution? Past Supreme Court decisions indicate that this right is protected by the United State's Constitution. However, the recent Supreme Court decision upholding the Georgia law which makes sodomy a felony offense has placed the enduring value of an individual's privacy under the law in serious doubt.

Sodomy laws, laws which prohibit anal and oral sex still exist in twenty-three states. In Arkansas, Kansas, Montana, Nevada, and Texas sodomy laws apply for homosexuals only, not for heterosexuals. The Georgia case was a perfect test for the Constitutional validity of the sodomy law. The Supreme Court had to decide if a state had the power to regulate the sexual behavior of consenting adults. The court's ruling in favor of Georgia means that the law makers in each state can legislate the sexual behavior between adults.

The conditions for the Georgia case could not have been more ideal. A warranted Georgian officer entered Michael Hardwick's home and inadvertently found him engaged in oral sex with another man. Sodomy charges were not pressed, but Hardwick decided to push his case through the justice system to the Supreme Court. There was no other "crime" involved but that of sodomy. The high court, in essence, had to decide if it was constitutionally in the state's power to outlaw being a homosexual.

The sodomy laws, in their very conception, are es Are...

Both Scalia and Rehnquist consider themselves onservatives. Both men are also said to be ambitious orkaholics and driven by success and power. Scalia nd Rehnquist have reputations of possessing utstanding intellectual qualities and brilliant legal inds. Scalia, for example, writes many of his own ecisions without preliminary rough drafts from his lerks. Rehnquist often engages in debates with his lerks and then writes "quick, articulately effective pinions."

At the same time, Rehnquist has been accused of ometimes twisting facts. One of his clerks once ologized for participating in a writing in which ehnquist refused to revise in order to reflect the true istory of the federal welfare program. Furthermore, hen Rehnquist clerked for Robert Jackson, he wrote everal memos to Jackson arguing for the onstitutionality of segregation laws. Rehnquist has onsistently voted against expanded rights for blacks, omen and criminals.

Antonin Scalia has been known to take a ypocritical stand on his call for judicial restraint hen he posesses a certain amount of zeal for a rticular cause. When Scalia participated in the erturning of the Gramm-Rudman balanced budget w, critics accused his decision of personifying dicial activism to the extreme. Scalia also opposes firmative action. He feels that quotas put a damper the achievements of truly gifted minorities. In a 79 article pertaining to his views on affirmative tion, Scalia sarcastically wrote that a "restorative stice handicapping system" should be put in use.

Continued on page 6

acy Rights

remely biased against the homosexual, whether it is cifically stated in the law or not. Sodomy is the n homosexual sexual outlet, where as with the erosexual sodomy is more of an alternative. By olding the Georgia law the Supreme Court has lared the entire homosexual community illegal, has endangered all of the homosexual rights ancements made during the past ten years. he sodomy laws are, in practice, impossible to rce. The laws are on the books only as a cession to the right wing. Because the laws are ossible to enforce, it may be, at first, difficult to erstand why they could be so harmful. The laws anger the individual's place in the community by wing heterosexuals to vent anger and to rimination against homosexuals. The sodomy s, whose legality have just been declared by the reme Court, attach a sense of decency to the rgence of the unjustified homophobia sparked by DS.

erhaps the true place of law in society is involved in ruling. Ideally; laws should enforce that which will will not allow a society to survive while not icting those inherent rights which make one an. A law which makes only ethical judgments, ch enforces principles which make a society safe everyone is a law reaching for truth. By this nition can the sodomy laws really be sound? The purpose it serves is to legalize a hate and prejudice has been enforced for generations.

Continued on page 6

A President's Right

BY JAMES R. HALL & ELIZABETH L. CHENEY

President Reagan took another large step in remaking the federal courts in his own conservative image this summer of 1986. In nominating William Rehnquist for the job of Chief Justice, and Antonin Scalia to fill Rehnquist's vacant spot on the Supreme Court, Reagan has given the federal court system another injection of his own conservative blood. Both men mirror Reagan's views on abortion, affirmative action, and certain women's rights. As expected, both nominees have been met by staunch criticism due to their strong conservative stances.

Justice William Rehnquist, especially, has been met with opposition by Senate Democrats led by the moralist Teddy Kennedy. One charge against Rehnquist is that he harassed minority voters at polling places in Arizona. Like most liberal dogma these claims are backed up with very few facts. Rehnquist himself admits being at the polling places, but only in order to "give legal advice to Republicans assigned the task of challenging voters credentials" (literacy was a pre-requisite to voting in some states during the 1960's). (Time, Aug. 11, p. 14) Rehnquist never recalls challenging anyone personally. "Vincent Maggiore, then chairman of the Phoenix area Democratic Party, said he had never heard any negative reports about Rehnquist's Election Day activities. 'All of these things,' he said, 'would have come through me.'" (Time, Aug. 11, p. 14)

Another charge made by the Democrats concerned two houses Rehnquist owned that were subject to discriminatory deed restrictions. (Time, Aug. 11, p. 14) Granted, such charges could be substantial if Rehnquist had drawn up the documents, but the facts show that he never signed nor saw either of the deeds. (Time, Aug. 11, p. 14) Rehnquist had hired attorneys to handle these deed transactions. (U.S. News World Report, Aug. 11, p. 19)

Ironically, it was Teddy Kennedy who spoke out most ardently against the deeds; claiming they proved Rehnquist to be a racist. Interestingly, U.S. News and World Report found that a house bought by Senator John Kennedy (Teddy's brother) in 1957 was covered by a convenant that excluded resale to "persons of the Negro race."

In 1984, President Reagan carried 49 of 50 states to win a landslide re-election. This was an affirmation, if not a mandate, that the American voters believe in his policies and programs and expect them continued. President Reagan, thus, has not only the right but the responsibility to nominate individuals who share his beliefs, and harbor a willingness to support his programs. The Senate committee is completely out-of-bounds in its attempts to squelch this nomination on the basis of ideological differences. The thinly-veiled attempts, by some Senators, to cover this up by discussing housing deeds, etc. are a disgrace to the institution of the U.S. Senate and an insult to the intelligence of the American people.

Section II; Article 2 of the United States Constitution gives the President the power to "nominate, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, judges of the Supreme Court." This gives the president the power of choice. It is his right and responsibility to choose a qualified candidate, and any president who wishes to be effective will nominate men and women who share his beliefs.

The Senate, conversly, does not have the power to nominate, the power of choice. This body's primary function, as defined in the Constitution and by historical precedent, is to review a presidential nominee on the basis of his/her fitness to serve. That the Senators involved in the Scalia-Rehnquist trials understand this, is evidenced by the dredging up of issues that appear to be non-partisan commentaries on the nominee's character.

"Appear" is the key word here. To hear Ted Kennedy, for example, blast Rehnquist for his "insensitivity" to women and women's issues can only be attributed to partisan politics. It seems, Mr. Kennedy, caught up in the heat of the battle, has forgotten an event in his own life which far outdistances any "insensitivities" Mr. Rehnquist might harbor toward women.

The charges against Rehnquist have been listed and answered previously in this article, and in the national media. Close investigation has shown Justice Rehnquist to be a sharp, fit, and able man—an obvious and effective choice to lead the nation's highest court.

Is Rehnquist Suitable?

BY MICHAEL S. MEHAN

On June 18, 1986, Chief Justice Warren E. Burger announced his retirement from the United States Supreme Court. Nominated to replace him was Associate Justice William H. Rehnquist. Rehnquist's nomination infuriated many civil rights and women's rights groups around the country and began the debate over whether or not the Supreme Court was becoming too conservative.

Rehnquist was appointed to the Supreme Court in 1971 by President Nixon, as a conservative counter weight to tip the Court from the liberal side to which the Nixon Administration believed it was leaning. Over his 15 years on the court he has been the most conservative member of the nine justices, often dissenting against civil rights and other "liberal" issues.

When he was first nominated for the position of Chief Justice, Republicans in Congress hailed the choice. "I can't think of a finer choice," said Senate Majority Leader, Robert Dole. As to whether or not his conservative views would change the court, Republicans seemed confident it would make no difference, and Senator Strom Thurmond, head of the Senate Judiciary Committee stated, "I don't think the balance of the court will be changed."

However, Democrats were not so confident in the nomination. "His record is appalling on race, he is too extreme to be Chief Justice," said Democratic Senator Edward Kennedy. Many felt that his ultra conservative views would have a profound impact on many of the important issues facing the court, such as: legality of Comfirmative Action in schools and business, the rights of states to control access to abortions, permissible types of state support for religious institutions, and the right to use illegally siezed evidence in criminal cases. Joining the Democrats were a variety of civil liberties and womens' rights groups, who, pointing to Rehnquists poor record on civil rights, and his conservative interpretation of the law, believed that he was not the right choice for Chief Justice.

Rehnquist's style of interpreting the law is seen by many law experts, professors and lawyers, as being too narrow. A study of his positions shows that he is directed by three beliefs: one, that conflicts between the government and an individual should be ruled against the individual; two, that cases involving the federal government and a state government should be ruled in favor of the state; and three, that the right of federal courts to exercise power should be limited.

Accusations that he is a racist and against civil rights seem to be bolstered by his judicial record. He has voted against orders issued by lower courts that helped prevent mistreatment of institutionalized retarded people, abuse of civilians by Philadelphia police, and overcrowding in the federal prison in Manhattan. He has consistantly been the Supreme Court's sole voice against the rights of the accused, and in 1984 he wrote the first acception to the 1966 Miranda rules, which allowed police to question suspects without the prerequisite warnings in the "public's interest." He has dissented on most of the Court's decisions on remedies for racial discrimination, busing and Affirmative Action. "The Constitution does not require school boards to follow a policy of 'integration uber alles,'" he said in 1976, in relation to a case upholding desegregation of schools by busing in Columbus, Ohio. In 1983, he was the only dissenting voice in a case which upheld government refusal to grant tax deductions to Bob Jones University, which adhered to racial policies.

In regard to the issue of church and state his record seems equally incriminating. He stated that the Constitution does not require strict separation of church and state, and prevailed in upholding a Minnesota law providing tax deductions for parochial schools. In 1982, he was the only dissenter in a case which barred the state of Massechusettes from giving churches veto power over local liquor licenses, stating, "The state can constitutionaly protect churches from liquor for the same reason it protects them from fire." He said that the idea that the Constitution requires "a wall of separation" between church and state "should be frankly and explicitly abandoned," in a case that ruled unconstitutional a law in Alabama which required a "moment of silence" in schools.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the Leading Conference on Civil

Continued on page 6

A Note From Political Union

BY MICHAEL FINE

Since I was a Freshman, I have been hearing criticisms about the apathetic student body at Colorado College, and the fact of the matter is that most of the criticisms are true. CC students are in general apathetic, however this is not to say that all CC students are apathetic. In fact there are two types of students at Colorado College. The first type who make up the majority are uninvolved. The second type are those who are over-involved.

I have also heard the complaint that there is a lack of extra-curricular activities on campus in which students can become involved. This is absolutely not true. Any casual look at the "This Week" will show even the most apathetic of students that there is an abundance of things to do.

More specifically, I have heard the complaint that The Colorado College has no forum for political discussion, and at this I take personal offense. For as long as I have been here there has existed the Political Union. I am not saying that this organization has always been run efficiently, but the fact remains that it has existed, and has been a forum for discussion and debate.

The problems with the Political Union have normally resulted from a lack of student interest. Last year, for example, the Co-Chairmen (Mark Herrick and David Pollack) did a pretty good job on organizing weekly topical discussions, but few students would show-up. Yet, the complaints still existed that no forum for discussion existed, and these same students who were making the complaints never attended the Political Union meetings.

This year the Political Union is being chaired by Hugh Morrison and myself. We are currently arranging for several speaker-oriented events, including a symposium on U.S.-Soviet relations in December. But more than this, we are planning to continue the tradition of weekly topical discussions. Our next Political Union meeting and discussion will be Wednesday, Oct. 1 (place T.B.A.). The topic will most likely be terrorism, and several Air Force Academy Cadets will also be involved in the discussion.

If you are at all interested in debating current political issues, the place to be is the Political Union. We are open to any suggested topics and ideas. Hugh Morrison and I would also like to find new ways of incorporating as many students as actively as possible into the Political Union. All suggestions are welcome. Please look forward to up-coming events. I hope to see you at our next meeting.

Michael S. Mehan Continued from page 5

Rights have alleged that, as a young Republican activist in the sixties, Rehnquist harassed black and hispanic voters, questioning their qualifications as voters and was against laws which required businesses in his then home of Phoenix, Arizona, to serve blacks.

Another large controversy hanging in his past is the 1972 case of Laird vs. Tatum. The case involved whether or not it was constitutional for the U.S. Army to spy on young college radicals. Rehnquist, having worked for the Federal Government in the Justice Department as head of the legal counsel, was asked to step down from the case, but instead he cast the deciding vote and the case lost 5-4. He allegedly remained on the case in order to protect the government's interest, thereby violating his duty to judicial impartiality.

The Senate Judiciary Committee has already voted 13-5 in Rehnquist's favor. The vote was divided strictly along party lines, Republicans "for" and Democrats "against." However, this does not insure that Rehnquist will gain the position, though his approval is expected. The full Senate is to vote in September. In 1970, G. Harrold Carswell, was approved 13-4 by the Committee, but was rejected by the full Senate.

What would Rehnquist's appointment mean? Many fear that the court would shift dramatically to the right, giving the Reagan Administration and conservatives on Capital Hill an ally on issues important to them, like, school desegregation, abortion, Affirmative Action, sex discrimination separation of church and state, and press access to the courts. True, the Chief Justice is limited to only one vote, but he can exercise a very subtle control over the court. He presides at the Court's private conferences and can assign opinions when he is in the majority. This means he can frame the issue and dictate the terms of the debate. He controls the Federal court system and is the most prominant justice in the media. Whether or not his conservative ideas and interpretation of the law will have a profound impact on the court remains to be seen.

sodomy– Continued from page 5

The Supreme Court ruling has come as a slap in the face to the homosexual community, and may set the homosexual rights movement back a decade. Interpreted in a broad sense the sodomy law ruling implies that a state can legislate sexual acts between two consenting adults, and in effect declares an entire segment of society unprotected by the law.

In the statement issued at the time of the ruling, Chief Justice Warren Burger claimed "To hold that the act of homosexual sodomy is somehow protected as a fundamental right would be to cast aside a millennia of moral teaching." What the justice seems to forget is that laws prohibiting interracial marriage, and laws legalizing slavery and racial discrimination have come down as "moral wisdom" from our forefathers, yet they have been struck down as being unethical. Tradition is often a fine thing, but not when it systematically violates the inherent right of the individual to privacy.

Finally, many experts think the sodomy ruling indicates a conservative swing to the courts decisions, and may signal reversals on many privacy related issues, such as abortion. As President Reagan closes out his term, and many of the judges reach retirement age and are being replaced with conservative judges, perhaps the rulings in favor of the right wing position are only beginning to take place. If so, the effects will be far reaching and long lasting and set many of the civil rights advancements made in the past two decades back for a generation.

It is not the justice system's duty to follow the newspapers and determine the law by swing in public opinion—it must determine what is ethically correct according to the ideals embodied in the United States Constitution. In other words, the justice system must protect humans from their own inhumanity, and protect the minority from the majority by being immune to current issues and popular opinion, such as the fear of AIDS. The justice system's duty is to enforce the laws which allow a society to survive, not to legislate what goes on in the bedroom.

Brian – Continued from page 5

U.S. citizens would be awarded 'penalty points' in proportion to their ancestors' date of arrival and "their own consequent feelings of racial guilt." (Newsweek magazine quote)

Trying to predict how Scalia will vote and the degree of clout Rehnquist will have is hazy at best. Justices can and do change while they are on the Court. When Rehnquist became a member of the Court in 1972, he felt that his job was to counter-balance the liberal direction of the Court as he saw it. But he recently stated in a New York Times article that "...there are probably things to be said on both sides of issues that I perhaps didn't think there were." Nevertheless, both judges will likely have an impact. "Rehnquist and Scalia write very well, are very likable and are bright as hell. The impact will be considerable," says Stanford law professor Gerald Gunther.

The Burger Court was often a divided one. Many felt that Warren Burger had little influence among his colleagues. But the other justices have a lot of respect for Rehnquist. He could certainly exert more influence than Burger. And, with Antonin Scalia bringing his well-respected knowledge and intellect to the Court, the scales could very well be tipped in the balance of more conservative rulings.

As the Court now stands, the ideological breakdown (esp. on social issues) goes something like this: tending the liberal flame are William Brennan and Thurgood Marshall, ages 80 and 77, respectively. The centrists or moderates on the Court (all representing political swing votes on different issues) include John Paul Stevens, Harry Blackmun, Byron White and Lewis Powell. Differences exist among these justices on certain issues. They approach each issue unto itself. On the issue of abortion, for example, Harry Blackmun is vehemently 'pro-choice,' while Byron White completely opposes the 1973 Roe vs. Wade ruling. Tending the conservative flame are William Rehnquist and the 1981 Reagan-appointee, Sandra Day O'Connor. Antonin Scalia would most likely fit into this category.

One need only look at the nomination of Earl Warren by Dwight Eisenhower as proof that Supreme Court justices don't always vote as their appointees had hoped. One possibly substantial difference between Scalia and Rehnquist lies in their opinion of judicial activism. As a Univ. of Chicago law professor recently mentioned: "To Scalia, the most important question often is 'who shall decide?'", whereas "Rehnquist sometimes seems willing to go to the merits of the case and exercise judicial authority when he is more interested in the substance." In other words, Scalia's judicial views may pertain more to 'classic' conservatism while Rehnquist may be more of a conservative activist.

Looking at a few specific issues, let's see exactly where Scalia and Rehnquist stand, cautiously predicting how they would vote. Starting with the issue of abortion, Rehnquist (as mentioned earlier) would like to completely overturn the Roe vs. Wade decision. Scalia has never written about, nor publicly stated his views on abortion. He has said that the courts have "no business" deciding the issue. He is, however, a strict Roman Catholic with nine children. Legal experts conclude that Scalia would most likely side with the justices who would oppose abortion (Rehnquist, White, O'Connor). Whether or not he would vote to completely overturn Roe vs. Wade, or vote for more restrictions, is unclear.

Focusing in on the issue of affirmative action, Scalia has been on record as opposing affirmative action per se. He feels that selecting or rejecting job applicants solely on the basis of their race is an "unacceptable vice." Rehnquist has consistently opposed affirmative action.

On the issue of crime and punishment, Scalia would be unlikely to oppose the Supreme Court's allowances for states to carry out capital punishment. Furthermore, Scalia may, like Rehnquist, call for further limiting the rights of criminal defendants.

BILLY and AL in... OBSCENITY
7-11
SEE GOD
IM IN THE MOOD FOR A GOOD BOOK
BOW WOW!
FEAR
Let me have a Penthouse
You ask the impossible 7-11 not sell pornography
DOS
7-11
You know, AL, when the system fails and us Anarchists take control, Then when everyone'll be free
To do whatever they want... without
This oppression
BULLSH
BUT LATER THAT NIGHT...
PLAY HARD CORE
HIPPY FREAKS

Yugoslavia's Uneasy Middle Ground

BY NORM LEAHY

For most Americans, Yugoslavia is the place where the '84 Winter Olympics were held. Or where those rather inexpensive Yugo cars come from. But for the economic and political worlds, this nation is a symbol of the first rift to shake the Eastern Bloc after World War II.

In the late forties, Marshal Tito, the nation's leader and partisan war hero, was faced with a sluggish economy and no real way to revitalize it under the constraints of the Soviet model at that time. After a period of experimentation, a new brand of socialism was decided upon, one in which the government would cease its direct action in economic affairs and also let the workers run the means of production.

For its time, these were radical notions indeed, although some of the ultimate goals of Marx's evolution included just these points. Yugoslavia's punishment for taking this course was economic isolation from the Eastern Bloc as well as a concerted effort to destabilize Tito's government. In a way, this was a beneficial break, in that Tito now had free rein to implement his plans.

The most important of his changes was worker control. Under this arrangement, worker councils determined what procedures were to be adopted for the individual factory. These are then presented to management who sees that they are implemented.

In the early years of the system, production went up, incomes rose and the economy achieved a modicum of success. When the economy began to slow in the sixties, decentralization of the economy was pushed. Essential planning was put in the hands of the provinces with a joint body setting national policy. Again, the economy picked up and the Yugoslavs began to have a more western oriented, service economy.

Today, six years after Tito's death, the health and direction of the Yugoslav economy is in grave doubt. Milovan Djlas, at one time Tito's apparent successor and now a dissident, has said that "Yugoslavia must either transform its economy into a modern one and reform itself into a genuine democratic federation, or risk descent into backwardness, dictatorship and debilitating violence." Currently, Yugoslavia has an outstanding foreign debt of $20 billion. They have the highest rate of unemployment in Europe—17%. Inflation races ahead at a rate of 85% a year while the national standard of living declines at a rate of 30% a year. What happened?

> ...a recent survey showed Ronald Reagan to be the most popular person among Yugoslav youth and Lenin to be the least popular.

Worker control and decentralization failed to deliver the results Tito and his advisors had hoped they would. Worker control is currently plagued by apathy and bureaucracy. The worker councils, instead of formulating policy, tend to accept what is set down by management. Managers themselves are chosen more on the purity of their ideology than on their business sense. The government created jobs to absorb the growing ranks of the unemployed, thus saddling the councils with more paperwork and further muddled their operations.

Decentralization was doomed from the start. Between the individual provinces there exists an economic gap of substantial proportions. The northern provinces are heavily industrialized while the southern provinces are essentially agrarian. There are distinct nationalistic and religious differences between the provinces. Whenever changes are attempted, these differences come to the surface and reform bogs down in partisan squabbling. Only 1% of each provinces' available capital is transferred across the internal borders.

So where do they turn for recovery? Criticism of the government usually brings swift retribution. Hardline Titoists believe that the problems are caused by foreign banks, oil price fluctuations and sunspots, not their economic program. The youth of the country believe that only a full turn towards capitalism can shake the economy out of its doldrums. A recent survey showed Ronald Reagan to be the most popular person among Yugoslav youth and Lenin to be the least popular. They want change, not the continued failed policies of the present regime.

Yugoslavia represents an important strategic and economic buffer to the Soviet Bloc. It is militarily independent and at one time economically independent as well. Under its current situation, Yugoslavia is more prone now than ever to the designs of the Eastern Bloc. Currently 50% of its exports are absorbed by the Comecon nations. Its leadership, faced with growing internal strife and violence may be forced to look to the Russians as a means of returning the country to prosperity. Internal dissent is growing more vocal and forceful-Yugoslavia has the largest number of political prisoners in Europe, outside of the Soviet Union.

Continued on page 8

China's Experiment With Capitalism

BY GREG EWALD

Since the death of Mao Zedong in 1976 and the overthrow of the Gang of Four in 1977, China has adopted many strikingly anti-Marxist ideals. Deng Xiaoping, the Chinese Communist Party leader, was the first major communist leader to turn away from Marx and towards the free market. This drastic deviation does not however mean that China is moving away from communism. A system referred to as "democratic centralism"—the orders still will come down from the top and they will be obeyed—appears to be the trend in China. A recent call for greater "democracy" in China means the party will interfere less in economics, but not in politics. It is very difficult to separate politics and economics in a traditionally Marxist society. Although the recent move has been away from Marxism, politics and economics will continue to strongly influence one another.

China is eight years into a vast economic experiment. Deng has brought many capitalistic ideas to China. Terms such as productivity, efficiency, private ownership, incentive and competitive market are now familiar to Chinese officials. Although the state retains ownership of all large businesses, small businesses can be under private ownership. Party leaders and bureaucrats were told by Deng to back down to trained managers so that the nation's factories could become profit making enterprises. Canton experienced an 87% increase in total output between 1978 and 1984. The number of private businesses grew from 0 to 35,000 in the same time period. This trend has definitely hurt state owned stores. One Chinese official was quoted as saying "The state stores were too lazy. With the competition they're getting better day by day."

> "...if this is Marxism, I must reread Marx."
>
> —a Soviet official

The general improvement in the standard of living is not restricted to Canton. The nation as a whole has experienced vast economic improvements. The annual per capita income for China's 800 million rural residents tripled between 1978 and 1985. Urban incomes rose by 50% during the same time period. The average annual growth rate between 1981 and 1985 was 10%. The consumption of pork doubled in the past seven years while the grain consumption increased by 25%. There are now 17 million self employed people in China (100 times more than there were in 1976). China's new open door policy allowed 36,000 Chinese to study abroad between 1978 and 1985. Last year 3 million foreigners were allowed to visit China.

The new open door policy is one of Deng's most important contributions towards the modernization and general improvement of the Chinese economy. Deng reaffirmed his desire to make China an active member in the world economy when he said; "Isolation landed China in poverty, backwardness and ignorance." Deng has opened up many coastal cities to entice foreign investment and technology. The open door policy has recently sparked unbelievable growth in the Chinese economy. During the first six months of 1985 the economy grew at an annual rate of 23%. Deng

Continued on page 8

G.D.R.—The Ideal ?

BY ROB LYNCH

East Germany is a country caught between 2 worlds. It is a solid Russian satellite while at the same time it tries to compete economically with the Western European democracies. Nevertheless, the country is a model Soviet client state, but one that is reaching for an identity. It does not want to be stereotyped with the more backward Soviet-controlled Eastern European countrys like Bulgaria and Albania. Rather it aspires to be a modern industrial state that can compete with Western capitalism while maintaining its strong relationship with the Soviet Union.

In many ways modern East Germany is the perfect Soviet client state. All facets of the economy are totally controlled by the government. The industrial structure is composed of central planning, ministries and direct administration of the various industries.

Erich Honecker, the current head of the East German government, is embarking on his fourth five year plan that emphasizes growth and greater efficiency. Much like the Soviets, Honecker realizes that workers and managers of E. German industry need incentives to be more productive and efficient. Within the Socialist model, Honecker stresses reform. Direct material incentives have been worked into the system to push people to be more productive.

Although E. Germany has had greater economic growth in the last decade than it had achieved in the previous 20 years, it still has a long way to go. Housing is still bad, as 50% of the homes and apartment buildings were built before 1919. Further, most industries lag well behind their western counterparts. To counter these problems, the planners have put forth more realistic economic targets and have given the direct administration of companies more flexibility in management decisions.

Continued on page 8

Continued from page 2

migrating toward Reagan Republicanism. According to Colorado College political expert Robert Loevy, Reagan reached out to fundamentalists in 1980 and 1984 by stressing traditional family values. Given the Reagan administration as a base, the Right to Life movement, the School Prayer movement, and the anti-pornography movement took off. Robertson is the personification of these new, small, and vocal groups that make up the New Right.

But the Republican party—like the Democratic party—is a conglomerate of factions, of which the New Right is only one. Republicans still claim support from the "Eastern Establishment," which remains silent on New Right issues. According to Loevy, the strongest faction in the GOP is the "Nixon-Ford-Bush" bloc.

The "Nixon-Ford-Bush" mainstream first flexed its muscles in 1976. Nixon and Ford presided over one of the most tumultous periods in American history. Loevy asserts that despite Vietnam atrocities, Watergate, and Ford's pardon of Nixon, the "Nixon-Ford-Bush" bloc rallied sufficient support to challenge Carter in what should have been a landslide for the Democrats.

In 1980 Reagan could not capture the nomination on his own. He courted Bush and the Nixon-Ford establishment, says Loevy, and "brought all those old people back to Washington." These Republicans have enjoyed increasing power in the last four years, and they clearly control the party apparatus.

Faced with Bush as the Republican standard-bearer, and with the Kemp campaign stalling in the early going, New Rightists were disenfranchised. By running Robertson in 1988, "the New Right is launching a last ditch effort to maintain power in Washington after Reagan leaves." They hope to vocalize their positions, and to drag some of the other candidates over to their side. A Kemp spokesman said that Robertson has forced the Kemp campaign to have a new focus on social issues. One GOP lobbyists said that Robertson is forcing the "Bushes, Doles, and Kemps to say, 'I'm a Conservative, too.'" (USN & W, July 14, 1986)

But moderates' fears of a possible Robertson victory for his strong organization, or fears that Robertson could influence the convention and the nominating process, are unfounded, according to Loevy, because "the name of the game is primaries." In this game, Bush is unstoppable.

The chief reason for the impending Robertson defeat is the strength of Bush moderates in the GOP. According to Loevy, Bush offers a continuation of Reagan policies, while Robertson offers a rightward shift. Robertson cannot match the ease Bush will have soliciting support for policies that Republicans see as highly successful.

Loevy also sees no chance for a political outsider to make a serious run for the White House in 1988. Circumstances to allow outsiders to challenge the establishment for the nomination have rarely existed. In 1964, a Republican outsider might have successfully challenged Lyndon Johnson, says Loevy. The Republicans were the out party, there was no established party machinery, and the United States was beginning to feel the turbulence of the 1960s. In 1988, the Republicans will be the incumbent party, maintaining a party establishment with 16 years of experience and power. The United States has experienced some of the most stable—and politically complacent—years under the Reagan administration.

Robertson's grass roots support may have also been overstated. Loevy believes that "watching someone on TV and going out to vote for him are totally different things." In addition, one should not assume that all fundamentalists, or religious activists, will automatically side with Robertson. Janet Scot Barlow of Commonweal warns of the Ferarro syndrome, in which Democrats assumed that women would flock to vote for "one of their own kind." (July 11, 1986) But in 1984 women voted as citizens—not as a gender.

Most religious leaders in Colorado Springs spurn Robertson. In an interdenominational sample, support for Robertson ran at less than 5%. Some worried that the candidacy would split the Conservative movement. Rev. Greg Coal of Vista Grande Baptist said that he would support Kemp because Robertson cannot reach as broad a base of voters. Even though most clerics rejected the Robertson campaign, only 20% said that they opposed him because of his status as a minister. Rev. Lemanuel Perry said that he supports Robertson's beliefs, but not his candidacy. "The calling for the ministry is the highest...higher than the calling for the Presidency." Most ministers believe that their congregations would similarly support other Republicans. Only the ministry at A Church Alive! thought Robertson support would run high in their congregation.

The final strike against Robertson is termed "the whacko factor" by Washington insiders. Janet Barlow points out that fundamentalists are only a faction of Christians, and that Christianity is only part of society. Don't look for Robertson to attract much support from YUPPIES or Jews.

According to Loevy, early hoopla for Robertson results from his position as the "Rumpus Room Vehicle." During presidential primaries, party regulars go down into the rumpus room with their mistresses and mess around. Republicans are messing around with Robertson, giving him 30% support here and a lead in the polls there. But later in the season, the members come up to the living room with their wives. Republicans will forget about Robertson and bring Bush up in 1988—provided that the Reagan administration and the Vice President maintain their current course.

A Bush victory could signal the beginning of the end for the New Right in Washington. Leovy is sure that Bush will not swing any farther right. The best that the New Right can hope for is a continuation of Reagan policies. They cannot consider this an ideal situation, given the failure of the school prayer amendment, and stalling on the abortion issue. With Bush as the new Republican standard bearer the New Right is on the way out in Washington.

E. Germany continued from page 7

In foreign affairs, the GDR wants to become more of a powerful force in the world economic community. As of late the government is pushing for stronger economic ties with West Germany. The GDR is trying to break down the trade barriers between the two countries. This special relationship with Bonn has been advantageous economically but its been problematical politically for the GDR. Although loans with W. Germany have provided a greater capital base for E. German industry, many observers feel that this debt gives the West the upper hand in their relationship. The Soviets express concern that this could eventually draw the German countries closer to unification.

In regards to their relationship with the rest of the Soviet block, the East German government is trying to walk a fine line between East and West. While calling for closer ties with the rest of the Eastern European Soviet block, they still want to distinguish themselves from their more backward Eastern Allies. The GDR wants desperately to challenge the rest of the world economically, but they realize that their very existence depends on the Soviet Union. Since they are dependent on foreign countries for their entire supply of oil, and much of their high tech equipment, they understand that they must be open to world trade for imports and exports.

Although the GDR comes into occasional conflict with the USSR, it is still the Soviet's model satellite state. It serves as the gateway for Soviet influence throughout the region from deploying nuclear missiles to having a foothold economically in the area. When looking at the GDR's economic reforms, there is a strong correlation between Soviet and E. German policy. Honecker's programs have a very similar tone to those of Gorbachev's. Reform within the Socialistic system has been the new Russian leader's passion ever since taking office. Honecker is imitating this policy with his newest five year plan. This should be a good test of the effectiveness of reform within the Communist structure.

What does the future hold for the German Democratic Republic? Will their programs for reform be successful in solving the deep problems in the East German economy? These questions can only be answered with the test of time.

China continued from page 7

continues to push the economy with very lofty expectations. He hopes to push the G.N.P. of China to $1 billion by the year 2000.

Very recently the Chinese leader has recognized the need to slow economic growth down to a reasonable rate. Hard currency reserves for materials needed to fuel the economic boom are being drained too quickly. The strong demand for consumer goods is raising prices. These two free market phenomenons lead to inflation, but more importantly they show the Chinese a new side of free market economics in their own country.

This current trend is very important because until now China's experience with free market principles has been very beneficial. The more conservative members of the Chinese Communist Party are questioning the adaptation of free market principles. Some leaders of the military are worried about the concentrated effort on the civilian economy and the minimal efforts to assure military growth. Deng responds to these new challenges positively, "There is no need for concern, since the basic means of production will remain in the state hands and there will be no new bourgeoisie." He tells the military that China can gain power through economic growth rather than through arms build up.

The rather drastic economic changes which China has experienced were bound to lead to some type of political shake up. The question arises—Just how many ideological sacrifices should be made in order to better a nation's economy? Deng Xiaoping seems to have decided that quite a few "outdated" Marxist ideals should be sacrificed in order to advance China's economy. After visiting Canton recently, a Soviet diplomat was quoted as saying, "If this is Marxism, I must re-read Marx." Not only is the Soviet Union critical of Deng's changes, but so are some members of the party in his own country. The facts and statistics support Deng's efforts. However, the real test of his success will be whether or not he can some how successfully mix free market economic principles with communist ideology and convince the other Chinese Communist Party officials that the combination is not only possible, but beneficial!

Yugoslavia continued from page 7

As a nation who dared to experiment with some of the elements of capitalism and pure Marxism, Yugoslavia is now paying the price for mixing the two and finding them incompatible. All they have left if they are to maintain their economic and political integrity is to change the way they think about economics again and hope that the results bring prosperity and unity to the nation.

Get ready for the next Disparaging Eye coming to CC Newstands October 17. Interested in contributing? Call the office at x675 and leave your name and number.

Continued from page 1

It is true that if the guerillas overthrow a Guatemalan government, foreign influence may stimulate a communistic approach for the new government. How can we continue to intervene in Guatemala, promoting such cruelty? Why does the U.S. have the right to support this genocide to secure the extremities of our democratic hemisphere? Why can't the U.S. use its money and influence to educate the people and set up a working democracy instead of creating dictatorships and advocating inhumanity? Clearly, the issue is not just aid vs. communism.

As American intellectuals debate the fine shades of freedom in the U.S., this foreign hypocrisy continues: the true Guatemalans perish in their struggle to right 450 years of injustice. Are you proud Americans?

Continued from page 3

cancer rates were drastically increased.

Priorly opposing the bill, the Colorado Association of Commerce and Industry was unable to prevent Coors and Hewlett-Packard from backing the bill, and soon its position was reversed as well. However, there were still other adversaries: State Rep. Vickie Armstrong of Grand Junction argued that the tax was "unfair to trash haulers;" while, Rep. JoAnn Groff warned that large trash hauling firms would use the fee "to undercut the small trash haulers by not passing it through to their customers." Additionally, two of BFI's major competitors, Waste Management Inc. and the Independent Trash Haulers Association stated that they didn't want to collect the fee, even if it was passed on to the customers.

Regardless of the opposition, the Superfund was finally passed with a strong vote and then signed by Governor Richard Lamm. House sponsor Rep. Don Mielke was pleased with "the ability of the legislature's Democratic and Republican leadership to unite in a bipartisan manner to support a truly worthwhile peice of legislation." Although the Superfund program has been in effect since May 23, 1985, the cleanup project is slow, and few results have been seen.

Some of the presented Superfund limitations result from the lack of state authority; for example, the Colorado's State Dept. of Health's standards for waste sites is much higher than that of the EPA. Also, the investigation and monitoring process, necessary to discover the most feasible methods to get rid of contaminants, is a slow process. Conditions of these hazardous waste sites have also slowed the cleaning project. For instance, thousands of tires in Lowry Landfill interrupt the infrared signals illustrating the worst deposits of hazardous waste. Although the institutionalized Superfund was a major victory over special interest groups, its consumption of time and lack of local power may not prevent disastrous toxic waste from penetrating into Coloradans' lives.

ACK STUDENT UNION

CC's Black Student Union (BSU) "Tries promote a better understanding of black ture and people - not just the American ck culture, but Third World nations, as ll," says BSU President Sindi Medar-uld. This year's activities will center ound helping South African refugees in nzania.

SIDENTIAL LIFE

Although not an extra-curricular anization in itself, the Office of sidential Life (931 Nevada) sponsors h activities as self-defense classes, a mpus escort service, and the Resident istant program, among others.

TERNATIONAL STUDENT GANIZATION

SO's main function is to encourage ernational understanding and tolerance ong all members of the CC community sponsoring cultural exchanges, cross-ural events and presentations by dents and professors. Meetings are held the first three Mondays of each block.

RITING CENTER

tressing that "we're friendly," CC's iting Center in 103 Cossitt Hall aims to p students improve their writing skills, well as provide specific assistance with ers. Office hours are 10:30-4:30, nday through Friday, but tutors are also ilable evenings and weekends. Call 2 to make an appointment or ask any stions.

MY ROTC

Reserve Officers' Training Corps is a gram which offers college students the portunity to graduate as officers and ve in the U.S. Army, the Army National rd, and the U.S. Army Reserve. mbining leadership training and itary education, ROTC classes are ght primarily at the University of orado, Colorado Springs. Contact Major rles D. Sankey at 593-3236 for more rmation.

OVIMENTO ESTUDIANTIL ICANO DE AZTLAN

MEChA is the College's Chicano student vement. Vice-President Marisas ayo says "MEChA is concerned with moting Hispanic culture and educating campus about it," through various vities, including speakers, dances, and rtainers.

LORADO COLLEGE COMMUN- AGAINST APARTHEID

hrough demonstrations, marches, el discussions, protests, and speakers, CCAA hopes to convince the Board of stees to withdraw CC's investments in panies doing business in South Africa. get involved, contact the CCCAA ugh its mailbox in the new Student ter.

SEEKERS

A youth group sponsored by First Presbyterian Church (219 E. Bijou St.), Seekers meets every Sunday morning and Wednesday evening in the main church building. Activities include outdoor retreats, conventions, small group Bible studies, a mime troupe, and a group that deals with divorce.

ASSOCIATION OF STUDENTS INTERESTED IN ASIA

ASIA is a group of students, professors, and administrators that explores the culture, politics, and lifestyle of the Asian people. Meetings are held at 6:30 on the first and third Wednesday (starting October 1) of each block at the East Asian House (Wood House, located behind Loomis).

CHAVERIM

Including both Jewish and non-Jewish members, Chaverim (meaning "friends") is "a group to understand and celebrate the Jewish Culture," explains Co-President Amy Weiss. Contact Chaverim's other president, Becky Derby at x234 for more information.

NATIVE AMERICAN STUDENT ASSOCIATION

"We want to make the campus aware of what's going on with North Americans both locally and across the nation," says NASA Secretary/Treasurer Lucinda Lewis.

AIKIDO CLUB

Aikido is a martial art that aims to blend the powers of both mind and body together. More than self-defense, it is a way to learn flexibility and to relax. The club meets three nights a week (Sun-Tues-Thurs) in McGregor basement at 7:00, and focuses on Japanese culture, as well as Aikido.

INTER-VARSITY CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP

Every Wednesday night at 7:00, Palmer 117 serves as the meeting place of IVCF, a non-denominational student ministry which believes the message of Jesus Christ is relevant to today's college students. An upcoming activity will be the fall conference held at Bear Trap Ranch, just outside of Colorado Springs.

BACCHUS

Recognizing that college life is a mixture of educational and social experiences, Bacchus promotes responsible decision-making with the use of alcoholic beverages.

Wie Geht's?

Thoughts of a CC German

BY PAT CHISHOLM

"Just look at her!—A German girl would never do that!" exclaims Connie Forster-Gress from Germany as a friend playfully "attacks" her.

The scene beautifully illustrated Connie's comment that Americans are less reserved than Germans.

Connie, an exchange-student from Regensburg, is the head-resident of the German house. I asked her about her first impressions at CC:

PC: What's been the hardest to get used to so far?

Connie: The words people use. When people say "How are you?" it doesn't mean that people want you to explain how you really are, unlike in German (Wie geht's?). At first, I thought I should explain it to them and then I realized people wouldn't listen and kept walking.

I think that's one of the reasons why Germans think Americans are superficial. I don't think its a bad thing, but a thing you have to know. This friendliness, whether its superficial or not, made me feel at home. It doesn't necessarily mean that its because the person likes you—they are friendly to everyone.

In Germany, people are reserved in the beginning, and then when they're nice you know its because they like you.

PC: Do the professors here seem different?

Connie: Yes—they seem pretty relaxed and will see you even if its not office hours, when in Germany you feel like a nothing and that the professor is the big authority. You're so dependent on him (for grades, etc.) and he always gives you that feeling, too.

PC: What's been the best part so far?

Connie: I think its a lot easier to start college here than in a German university because people seem to care more about freshmen and students in general.

In Germany, students go home on weekends to their friends and don't care about meeting new friends. So if you live in the town you study, its hard. It took me much longer to get settled there than here. That's one thing I really like here.

PC: What other things do you find different about German students?

Connie: They don't seem to have as many appointments and sports events to go to like here. People there just have more time to sit. Very often you have coffee in the afternoon and sit and talk.

PC: What about our attitudes toward drinking?

Connie: Although we have the reputation, I have a feeling that people here get drunk more often and heavier than in Germany because in Germany its not a taboo or a special occasion.

PC: Tell us other differences you've noticed between Americans and Germans.

Connie: There's a lot of patriotism compared to in Germany—there's a flag everywhere and the national anthem is played a lot. I'm sure its because of Germany's past, and that we've learned so much about the negative aspects of Germany.

Concerning other issues, I think people in Germany are more aware of environmental problems than here—they're more willing to recycle, for instance.

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

"Although we have the reputation..."

PC: Why did you want to go abroad?

Connie: I just think its a good experience to go abroad in general. You get to know yourself better. Sometimes at home you become narrow-minded and its hard to adapt to certain things. Its easier to learn when your in a foreign country—your forced to get to know people. And at home, people know you and its hard to try to change because its hard for them to accept it.

PC: Why the States?

Connie: There are so many different things going on here and its so big!

From Russia With Love

An Interview with Mariamna Soudakoff

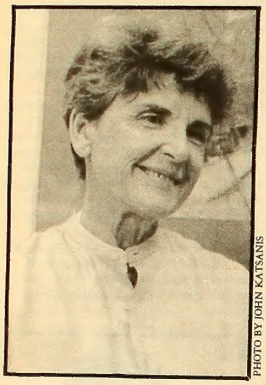

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

BY ALEC REKOW

"I find myself extremely fortunate to be able to associate myself with young people," exclaims Russian professor Mariamna Soudakoff. "With the CC Block Plan, each student may dive into a variety of experiences, and take the responsibility for his actions in order to become a success. While CC provides the time, guidance and opportunity that helps these students find their way, it's the diversity of the students in their different stages of development that makes it marvelous."

Professor Soudakoff found her way to CC in 1967 as a temporary replacement for Professor Malyshev when he left for a two year sabbatical. After his return, the college put Soudakoff on the tenure track. During the past nineteen years she's taught a variety of Russian courses: language, literature, and culture, along with some art and theater.

As a teacher, Soudakoff stresses a humanistic approach in her classes. She believes her responsibility lies in the introduction of some of the universal themes shared by all human beings. Birth, childhood, marriage, death and afterlife, for example, touch all people, whether Coloradians or Siberians, and through the ideas and works of great Russian authors and artists, "We are able to learn how much all people share."

"I find many students take my courses in order to learn something about the Russian culture, the consciousness of its people as they learn about the grammar and pronunciation of the language," she explains.

"And it's extremely important to learn about the beauty in past Russian art and culture because the Soviet Union, unfortunately, caters to mediocrity just now," she adds.

The greatest Russian novelists, such as Tolstoy and Dostoyevsky, addressed a tremendous variety of themes. "They really took on the whole piece of live," states Soudakoff. "And in my classes I don't want to dwell on who is right or wrong or from which country they came, but help the students to realize what a unique view of life these masters presented."

Soudakoff learned about 19th century Russia's 'Golden Age of Literature' while growing up outside Russia's borders in the Northern Chinese Province of Manchuria. Her family fled Russia with many others when the Bolsheviks took power after the civil war. "The old White intellectuals associated their lost youth with the lost motherland," Soudakoff remembers. "They passed on their ideals and dreams of pre-war Russia to the children in this early twentieth century society."

All of Soudakoff's childhood was spent living in exile, much of it under Japanese occupation. In 1932 the Japanese took over Manchuria. Seven years later Soudakoff's family was able to move to Shanghai, which was then unoccupied. Here during World War II's early stages she continued her education, graduating from the Dostoyevsky Gymnasium the same day Germany invaded Russia. The Japanese soon took over Shanghai but Soudakoff was allowed to enter "The Commercial Institute." Here she majored in Russian History with an emphasis on literature, religion, and philosophy.

After WWII ended, Soudakoff met a Lieutenant in the American army and married him when he returned two years later to study Oriental languages in Peking. In 1949 they crossed the Pacific to the United States. Eventually, her family was able to join her in California, where she learned English and studied U.S. History and Sociology at the University of California, Berkeley. Later she took graduate courses in method teaching, both language and literature, at Indiana University and completed her master's degree in Russian Literature and Language through Middlebury's summer program from 1970-1973.

After living in the United States for 37 years, Professor Soudakoff is extremely thankful to be here. "I feel so fortunate to be able to live in a city so close to nature and to be surrounded by young people with so much talent and curiousity for learning," she explains.

"Students arrive here with high school interests and past successes which influence their first choice of courses. But later they are given the chance to explore and both succeed and fail...and they can learn to survive by analysis and application. The stamina, responsibility, the work ethic learned here strengthens the student for post-graduate life ahead."

In her second story-apartment with th view of Pike's Peak and its surroundin from every room, Soudakoff find relaxation in art and music. "It is mo important that I may be exposed to th excellence in art and music. They are g expression of the human soul. Oh, an then of course there are m grandchildren," she laughs. "It i wonderful, the unconditional love th give and receive."

Similarily, students will reap gre rewards through unconditional efforts. Professor Soudakoff has one hope, it is th no matter at what level or capacit students will always continue to search.

East Meets West

BY CAROLINE BRYAN

Korean, Japanese and Chinese culture have found their niche at The Colorado College. The East Asia House, Wood House theme for this year, will host a variety of activities aimed at increasing student awareness of these cultures. Eleven students make up the House, all members of A.S.I.A. (Associated Students Interested in Asia).

As a theme house, the A.S.I.A.ns plan to sponsor at least one event each block. This block the American Olympic Taekwondo team is to perform during half time at a CC football game.

To expand the musical horizons of the campus, the House plans to arrange the performance of a Taiko group which will feature Japanese percussion.

Long range plans include a Chinese New Year celebration with Chinese Lion dancers, an origami festival in the form of a seminar, and a Japanese film festival.

The house itself offers some goo resources. The A.S.I.A. group meets at th house on the first and third Wednesdays o each block at 6:30, and encourages an student interested in learning more abou East Asian culture to join them, or to sto by the house and take a look at the nic collection of Asian books there.

Soon the house will host weekly movie Anyone interested in viewing them i welcome to come.

The stress at the House is mainly to hav fun in learning about other cultures. Th students there invite anyone interested t join them on their excursions to Chines and Japanese restaurants around th Colorado Springs area, and to take part i their weekly study breaks.

They are also looking for any tw women interested in living in the Eas Asian House this year.

If you would like any further information about the East Asian House contact Ray Clark at x330.

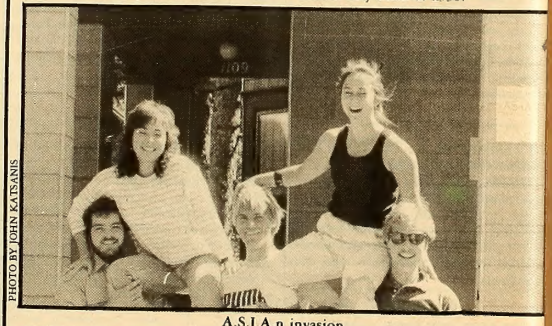

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

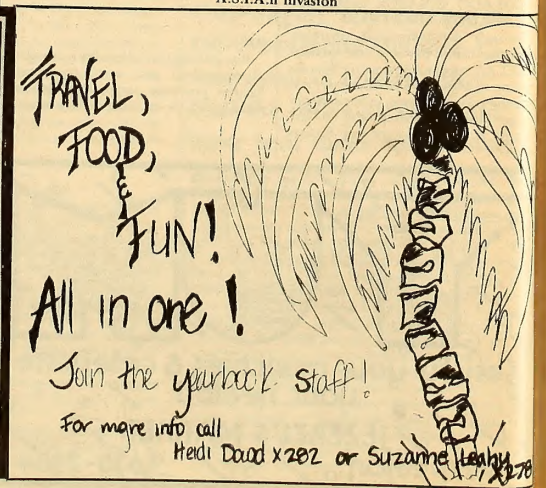
A.S.I.A.n invasion



Back in the Saddle Again

BY KATIE DALSEMER

Did you know that if you stare at a blank piece of notebook paper for too long the lines start to do strange things like move and change color? Anyway, the reason for this startling revelation was the fear of embarking on a strange column writing adventure again. Yes, I wrote for the Opinion's Section last year too. Does anyone remember the "Excuse Me?" column? Will anyone admit they read it?

So, here we are in our third week at ol' CC and still all I can think is "Man, it is just so strange to be back." Isn't it great, though, to see all the friends you haven't seen all summer. Everyone's on such good terms now. Who cares if so and so got drunk and threw up all over your car at the end of last year. What are friends for anyway?

Gotta love all the huggin and downright friendliness going on. But has anyone encountered a fellow student who runs up hugs you and says it's great to see you and all the while you're wondering "Who the hell is this person?" Most people, however, are genuinely interested in how you are and what you've been doing but hey give it a few weeks. (Okay, so I'm getting cynical in my old age.)

Aside from the students one of the weirdest things about returning to CC has to be the rearrangement of the campus. In this case I think the freshmen have an advantage because they've never known the campus any other way. I keep expecting something to be where it was last year and find myself wallowing in utter cluelessness. (Yes, something new and completely different.) Sure I understand that the former Rastall facilities had to be moved but what is the deal with Tutt? Every time I come back it is totally reorganized. Is this a test? Believe you me I felt just a tad silly searching all over for the card catalogue the other day and finally realizing it was right by the front door. Well, they told me college would be a challenge.

Speaking of fried brain cells, I've also found it difficult to get back in the swing of classes. Actually my excuse for not being too keen on academics yet is that I spent most of the summer studying my butt off (well, maybe I shouldn't go that far) in the London Writing Program. So no, my brain wasn't totally out of commission for three months. Shocking isn't it?

But back to the harsh present. For some reason I have this fantasy that the professors will take pity on us and slowly try to ease us back into studying but that just doesn't happen with the glorious block plan. They say first impressions are important so I guess it isn't too wise to make all sorts of coughing and gagging noises when your professor hands you a 50 page syllibus on the first day of class. It's also nice to find out right away that the 20 required books are going to give your budget a major beating. Then comes the mind-boggling question: What's more important beer or books?

And on those last words of wisdom I'll be signing off for now. Here's to the weekend!

The Trivial and Insignificant

BY CHRIS PROPST & SHANNON WHEELER

It is the trivial things in life that mean the most. Those things we take for granted are those that should be investigated. The unobvious things make up daily life, the obvious only provide excitement.

For instance most chairs still have four legs. In the library there are eighteen books by Hemmingway and fifty about him. On Tuesday night two ping-pong paddles were checked out from Loomis but nobody was playing ping-pong, ooooooohhh!

Why is a "Bengal Burger" called that? What is a bengal? and why nineteen cents per once of salad? is that the national going rate arrived at after years of intensive research? What is "pure almond extract" doing in a Mathias trash can? surely not the backstroke. Slobber Glits and Gloob.

Those ratty grey steel chairs all say Colorado College on them, who would steal them and why doesn't the good furniture have any identification. There are 21 notices on the library bulletin board, five are outdated. Did you know all the pianos on campus have eighty-eight keys, say who's in control here? Excuse us whilst we jiggle the handle. After seventy years they still can't build a toilet right, why don't they use microchips.

From our sources forty-eight freshmen lost their virginity last week, oddly so did six seniors and one professor, oh and our neighbors' cat. None were found. Is this leading anywhere, but wait there's more...

There are funny red lights in the library, why are they painted this way, is it "color therapy?" How often does it rain when you open your 7-up can? There are eleven skinny useless windows on the west side of the library. None of the library's windows open. This is very clever. Damn that architect!

Should off campus students be allowed to play pool and ping-pong in the dorms? Do you know Mary-from-Loomis? Happy now?

Golly there's something happening at Rastall. We went there to watch T.V. and we had to climb over this fence and then boy that first step is a doosie. We laid in the bottom of this hole spouting blood until a construction worker came in the morning. Damn! We missed the Disney special. Our only company was three rats, we ate one. Pardon us we digress.

What the hell from?

Anyway there are two Xerox machines in Tutt but only one works. Tutt is not named after the famed, dead, Egyptian king, Tutenkahmen. Loomis is named after Ruth Loomis who streaked across Colorado in 1916, it took her twenty-seven days and she was badly sunburnt.

At eleven-fifty there were ten doughnuts, two pastries, and one danish at the Hub, a week later there were ten doughnuts, two pastries and one danish still at the Hub. Who gets the job of splattering paint on the ends and sides of dictionaries. There was also a Colorado Springs Medical Center Receipt in the Mathias trash can.

In closing we hope that our shallow observations have shed some light.

Where?

In those dark places.

Ooh, we just love those dark places.

Dear Editor:

I am writing to warn the CC community of what appear to be non-student vandals tearing down informational posters on our campus. Posters such as those for the gay students' organization meetings or political protest activities are being torn down as fast as they can be put up.

Since of course CC students have chosen to be here because of the variety of people and views on this campus, and since only reasonable bright and open-minded men and women are accepted to CC, it does seem unlikely that a student would be tearing down these posters.

So be on the watch for sleazy, furtive types with dull, narrow minds, who look like they might be easily threatened by anyone or anything different from them; if you see someone fitting such a description, throw your body in front of any nearby posters to protect them. Remember—you could be next!

Robin Root, Director
The Writing Center

No More Mr. Nice Guy

BY MARK THESING

The Kappas and the Thetas are the biggest bitches on campus.

At the beginning of every year the Thetas and the Kappas throw a party, the Bee Bop, in honor of the pretty and popular. This party is absolutely essential for anyone with any kind of social ambition. Cool people attend this party with an absolute vengence. As we all know, the start of the year is when one must establish oneself in the social hierarchy. If you don't get "in" now, you may find yourself ragged and used after social climbing all year, simply to arrive at the level the Cool achieved in the second week by being invited to the Bee Bop.

Every year I have looked forward to attending and receiving the social certification that the party brings.

I have been disappointed every year. I am a senior. I am 0-4.

Fool me one time, the jokes on me. Fool me four times, the jokes on you. It's time for revenge.

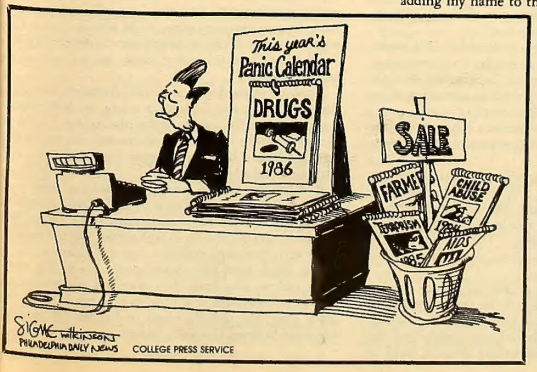
The past three years I figured that there were so many chicks hot for me, they thought not to waste their ink by adding my name to the list for the hundredth time.

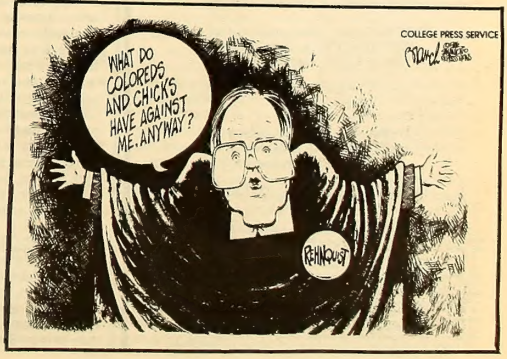
I may be slow but after four years I start to realize trends; thoses bitches have been intentionally sabotaging my social reputation for years.

I am tired of putting up with those who put out. The social deceit and cunning of these seemingly cute innocent sorority ladies is unbelievable. They befriend me, use my social influence for their personal ambitions, then throw me away like rubbish. They have been merciless with me.

In college I have made great personal sacrifices, attempting to become popular: 1) My wardrobe is painfully chic and meticulously in synch with the trendiest dressers on campus, 2) I religiously pay flirtacious homage to Dana and Emma (undoubtedly two of the biggest social King Pins on campus, each representing their respective sororities Kappa/ Theta) in the mecca of social occurrences, the 2nd floor of Tutt, 3) With complete disregard for my school work and "hard earned money," I have nightly arrived at Murphy's at the uniform hour of 11:30. My enormous personal sacrificies have brought me nothing. I am no more popular now than I was my first day of school freshman year, all because of these exploiters of men.

No more Mr. Nice Guy.





Understanding the Adversary

This week, American reporter, Nicholas Daniloff, and Soviet spy, Gennady Zakharov, were both released into the cutody of their respective embassies in the United States and Soviet Union. The similarities of the charges against them, and the timing of their release may inspire some to see non-existent parallels in the two cases.

Newsweek magazine correctly describes the Soviet spy, Zakharov, as being "caught red-handed" and points out that Daniloff is the victim of "trumped-up charges." The facts surrounding the cases not only support these descriptions, but also point to larger differences in our societies—differences that must remain uppermost in the minds of our leaders as we prepare to begin a series of meetings and discussions with the Soviets.

The events of the last few weeks have once again affirmed that we are not dealing with a government that regards our beliefs and ideals with a non-aggressive ambivalence. Rather, this is a society that has shown a constant and repeated lack of respect for freedom, liberty, and basic human rights. Examples of this abound, from the slaughter of hundreds of thousands in Afghanistan, to the violent persecution of Soviet Jewry, to the oppression of sovereign peoples in Poland and Nicaragua.

The events of the last few weeks have caused many Americans to question the feasability of our continued dealings with Moscow. Because we can't afford not to deal with them, our energies must be focused on how to deal effectively with the Soviets. The foremost rule of negotiation is to know one's opponent, and the Soviets have given us more than ample insights into the character of their empire.

U.S. negotiators must keep this in mind when they go to the bargaining table. They must never forget that not only do the Soviets lack our basic understanding of the value of human life and liberty, they constantly and consistently fight for its demise. We, as Americans, have the responsibility to fight with as much fervor and perserverance for the survival of these noble ideals.

—Opinions Editor

CATALYST
Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado

DAVID KLEIN
BLAIR SANFORD
Editors

LIZ CHENEY, Opinions Editor
TED CRAIG & DAVID FITZGERALD, News Editors
PATRICK CHISHOLM & KATIE DALSEMER, Features Editors
KATHY MAHONEY & ALEC REKOW, Sports Editors
ERIC BREITBARD, Arts Editor
SUSAN GRIAK, Associate Arts Editor

•

JOHN KATSANIS, Photography Editor
MIKE FRATERELLI, Copy Editor
JACK KLEIN, Layout Editor

•

JEAN BOYER
Business Manager

LINDA SHIREMAN, Typesetter
JANE NEWBERRY, Typesetter
LINDA IMHOFF, Typesetter

The Catalyst logo by JANE PATERSON

The Catalyst is published by Cutler Publications, Inc., Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado 80903. Phone (303) 473-2233 extension 675. The Catalyst is printed tri-monthly from September to May, except during holiday periods.
Cutler Publications, Inc. does not discriminate on the basis of race, color, age, religion, sex, national origin, or physical handicap in its education programs, activities or employment policies in accordance with federal, state and local laws.
Editorials appearing in the Catalyst are the opinions of the designated author and not necessarily those of any other Catalyst staff member.
The Catalyst encourages the letters to the editor. Letters should be no more than 400 words in length and be typed or neatly printed. Address letters to the Catalyst, Rastall Center, Colorado College, Colorado Springs, 80903. Unsigned letters will not be printed.
A work of considerable length may be submitted as a guest commentary. Persons interested in submitting commentary should contact the Catalyst at 632-4999 or 473-2233 ext. 675.
The Catalyst reserves the right to edit or cut letters to the editor and guest commentaries.

Reflections and Reactions

BY ELIZABETH LOCKNER

Last week's Catalyst article, "Chopping the Ninth Block," elicited the good ol' "Marcus Hartmann Spirit" in me. My apathetic attitude toward student affairs melted away in light of the nearly inevitable shortening of the academic year. The reasons cited for this claim were, and I quote:

—A shortening of the academic year.
—A decrease of the teaching load.
—An upgrading of the value of the CC unit.
—A lightening of B.A. requirements.
—An extension of winter and summer breaks.

Let's approach these individually.

1) "A shortening of the academic year." Yes indeed, this is one goal the plan would accomplish, but to what end? One argument put forth by faculty is that it would 'help students obtain better summer jobs.' This is at best a short term goal. Hopefully, the superior education offered by Colorado College better prepares the student in the long run for career opportunities. Yes, summer job experience is important, but will extending the summer actually improve the quality of the job experience? If the faculty really wants to give CC students an advantage in the summer job market, they should shift the calendar year back two weeks! Students could then seek jobs in May, when other schools end their school year.

This was the only advantage to the student put forth by the faculty. However, the advantages to the faculty are numerous, which brings us to the next point:

2) "A decrease of the teaching load." This seems to be the crux of the matter. CC faculty members claim that they spend almost twice as much time in class as their counterparts at other universities. Let us assume that this is true. If so, it is undoubtedly a consequence of the demands of the block plan. There is an obvious solution—hire more faculty! "But," you say, "this is expensive." Of course it is expensive, but according to faculty statements, it also appears to be necessary. If professors at other colleges are working half the time and making comparable salaries, it appears that CC needs to double the faculties and cut the present teaching time of each professor in half! Obviously, this is not an entirely viable solution, but neither is cutting an entire class to lighten the teaching load. I for one do not wish to see this error rectified at the expense of the student.

3) "An upgrading of the value of the CC unit." If Reagan knew this trick regarding the dollar, we'd have no deficit! If the CC unit is worth 4.0 semester credits, fine, please, upgrade it! However, don't take away ninth block in order to do so.

4) "A lightening of B.A. requirements." This primarily entails changing the units required for graduation from 34 to 32. This would inevitably put more pressure on the CC student, to say nothing of making us less competitive regarding graduate schools. "What difference can four blocks make?" you say. Four blocks of independent research can get you into medical school, or just help you get out of CC!

5) "An extension of winter and summer breaks." This is obvious bait. How many students are going to turn down longer vacations? On the other hand, I would like CC to be a respected institution. I have a feeling this will not help the country club image. Be honest. We have as much or more vacation time than most colleges. Do we need additional time at the expense of the college's reputation?

Obviously, there exists a need for faculty research time and lighter class loads. However, it is not right to meet these needs by sacrificing student classroom time. Perhaps next, the faculty will suggest a plan even more appealing to their needs—the two block plan, otherwise known as the semester system.

An Eig-

BY MICHAEL S. MEHAN

The wisened, old professor, carrying a mountain of books in his frail arms, shuffled slowly up the aisle between the rows of anxious students. He smiled slightly and hummed an old song, pausing occasionally to mumble something to himself.

He dropped his books on his large desk at the front of the class and looked up at the tense, weary faces in front of him.

"Good morning," he said cheerfully, in his husky, scholarly voice.

"Oh lord, oh lord!" screamed a student, grasping his head and rolling in the aisle, "it's getting to my head!" he screamed again, rolling on the floor in convulsions.

"Oh my," gasped the professor. But suddenly another of his pupils flung himself to the ground.

"My life's so hard!" he wailed agonizingly as he flailed about on the floor.

The rest of the class was panic stricken. They shifted nervously in their seats, staring wide-eyed at the venerable old professor who was arranging his notes on the podium.

"Now then," he began, "who would like to explain Locke's theory of Liberalism to me?"

Suddenly yet another student grasped his skull, sweat pouring down his face, and ran for the door screaming, "It's got to stop, it's got to stop," he smashed through the closed door and ran down the hall screaming as he ran, "It's got to stop, it's got to stop!"

The professor looked about the class. His gaze fell on a student in the first row, "Well, Johnson, can you explain this nonsense to me?"

The student stood up, trembling, sweat streaming down his face, his eyes wide with fright, he approached the professor, glaring at him like a cornered beast. Suddenly, he grabbed the old man by his tweed lapels and began shaking him furiously. "IT'S TOO MUCH PRESSURE!!!" he screamed at him, then crumpled into a twitching heap at his feet.

Thus begins another day on the nine block system, only it seems now that it is not the students who are frazzled and about to lose all control, but the faculty. However, being the scholarly and wise people they are, they have proposed to do something about it, make an eight block year. That's right cut off poor, old ninth block. It seems like a rather good idea, but there are some problems with it.

It just seems strange that a school like Colorado College, which prides itself on its high academic standards and achievement, would seek to make things easier and lower our standards. The main argument against the current plan is, "CC faculty members teach more courses than faculty at any other comparable liberal arts institution; we have the longest school year of any comparable institution; we offer substantially more courses than other ACM schools; we undervalue our credit hours at 3.5 units instead of 4.0 and we ask students to take more courses a year—9—than are being requested at other comparable colleges, 8." Now, there is the argument, where is the problem? I see, CC asks its students to work hard, offers them a broad variety of courses, and gives them a chance to take as many of the offered courses as possible. Yes, it is time to change the system. That sounds like college!

In cutting a block many departments would be forced to reduce "its courses judiciously," something that some departments do not have the luxury to afford. This would eliminate the fact that "we offer substantially more courses than any other ACM school," but is that what we want? To be medoicre like the others? To say, "well, I could have taken that course, but we cut it out to be like you guys?"

I believe in its desire to be like Amherst, Bowdoin, Brown, Connecticut College, et cetera, we will only be compromising the quality of the education at CC. How can we improve it by dropping courses, shortening the year, adding substantially more vacation time, and making us take fewer classes?

It would be nice to have more vacation time, it is always fun to go away or stay at home, but that is not why we are here. Do you run a college around vacations? We had four years of vacation in high school. I do not want to pay twelve thousand dollars a year for vacation.

The block plan has always meant work. We work hard, and we play hard. Any system is not perfect, of course, and perhaps it is time to experiment with the block plan. The only drawback is that we risk making Colorado College, Colorado "kindergarten."

-Block Year

BY AUGUST J. RANDA II

From the discussions at the Loomis Hall "Eight Block Plan" meeting, it seemed clear that the proposed plan would improve the already high quality of teaching here and thus the quality of education.

However, it also seemed clear that many students at the discussion were concerned that the new plan would eliminate the flexibility of the block plan, an advantage which many consider in deciding to attend The Colorado College. Now, students are able to miss two blocks and still fulfill their thirty-four block requirement. A student may need these two extra blocks and a flexible year in order to:

1. make up an incomplete due to illness, death in the family or poor performance;
2. take an extra course to meet later graduate school requirements;
3. make up credits lost in transferring here from another school;
4. take off a block at the end of a semester to facilitate finding an internship or employment;
5. take off an extra block in the middle of the year to prepare a thesis or senior project;
6. simply take a block off for a break from academic pressure.

If this eight block year plan were adopted, this treasured flexibility would be eliminated.

I would therefore like to suggest an alternative plan which would still give the faculty their needed second block off, but at the same time would guarantee the continued flexibility of the current block plan. The "Flexibility Plan" would still operate using the nine block calendar year. The faculty, however, would only be required to teach seven out of the nine blocks. They could take one of these two free blocks at the beginning or end of a semester; the continuity of the school year would, therefore, be guaranteed. Students, under this plan, would attend CC for eight out of the nine annual blocks and thus graduate with thirty-two course credits. Students would retain flexibility by choosing when to take off their yearly block. The hiring of additional faculty would be unnecessary as only a small number of students, those lacking credit due to extenuating circumstances, would be allowed to attend a ninth block in any given year. In fact, money might be saved as the college would have one ninth fewer students on campus at a time. Of course, guidelines would have to be set up in order to insure an even flow of students throughout the year (perhaps a system of early registration).

I encourage the Board of Trustees, the faculty and the student body to consider this plan which would compromise neither the faculty's need for reading and research time nor the flexibility of the block plan so highly valued by its students.

BY NORM LEAHY

Squeak, squeak
Hear the plan lumber,
Onward through our Darkest night.

Peep, peep
Hear the sounds
Of opposition

We will make learning
A better thing;
We will study and learn
For your benefit
Hah, hah!
That's what we'll do!
Choke, choke
Hear the sound of Students trying to Swallow that Crap.

We teach too much
(Is that not your job?)
We have low morale
(Don't we all)
We need to research
(We need to be taught)

Rumble, rumble
Hear the sounds
Of opposition

Ring, ring
Hear the sound
Of the cash register,
Stuffed with bills
From a lost block's
Windfall

Roar, roar
Hear the opposition
Disgusted at the attempt
By the few
To pick the pockets
Of the many

This is our trojan horse
An eight block year
That looks good on top
But squirms with vile
Intentions just below
Its painted facade

Take the First Step

BY LAURIE STONE

The nuclear arms race is a very controversial issue. Although no one (I hope) is for a full scale nuclear war, some people believe the way to prevent one is through arms control, while others believe the answer lies in nuclear superiority. As long as nuclear weapons are in existance, the threat of nuclear war will hang over us. Living with this threat is not easy. Many people choose to put it out of their minds. However, out of mind is not out of sight.

Although not every human being would be killed by bombs directly, a nuclear holocaust would destroy the global ecosphere on which human and other life depends. It is not certain whether a nuclear war would completely destroy the human race, but it would be amazing if people lived through the initial blast, the fallout radiation, and the following nuclear winter.

In a full scale nuclear war, the United States would be covered by lethal fallout for the first forty-eight hours. The consequences would be so devestating that within thirty days up to ninety percent of the population could be dead. That is an optimistic estimate. There is no telling how many more would die after that. Even if there were survivors, it is questionable whether life would be worth living. Nikita Krushchev once said that after a nuclear war, "the living will envy the dead."

There are already enough nuclear weapons in existence to destroy the world. Why make more? Last year over $216 billion went toward military spending, when money is badly needed in other areas. $216 billion, think of how many people that could house and feed. Although the answer is not as simple as that, it seems childish to keep building more weapons when the existing ones could already wipe us off the face of the earth.

Why worry about something you have no control over, right? Wrong! Too many people feel they can do nothing about it; they assume that preventing nuclear war is in the hands of people in higher places. That is a scary thought. It is up to our generation, each and every one of us, to make sure there are generations after us.

We can do something about it. The first step is facing the issue. Nobody wins in a nuclear war. No matter what your political views are, the arms race is an issue that affects you. A nuclear holocause would make all political differences meaningless. Take a step now to ensure your future.

Views of a Visitor

BY HELEN BRYANT

Eager to meet people, I like many others attended the stream of parties around the campus in the first two weeks of term. What I found made a mockery of the drinking laws in the United States.

As an English exchange student, the U.S. drinking laws had been much commented upon at home; particularly as in England one can freely purchase alcohol at the age of eighteen. Indeed, the social activities of our university center upon the bars and pubs of Manchester. Thus, at face value one would expect American students to be alcohol free, and British students to be alcoholic degenerates. Yet, it was here that I witnessed the greatest number of people very drunk at one time, that I had ever seen; and it was the same night after night.

As no alcohol is sold on campus, fraternities have the system of giving 3.2 beer away — an idea utterly alien to us as British people. The result is that everybody drinks as if there were no tomorrow. (Which in many cases, I suspect, there is not!)

In Britain, we drink until the money runs out, which does not take very long. Also, I feel that we drink socially rather than just to get drunk. I am not saying that British students are paragons of virtue, far from it: it is simply alcohol is no big deal in Britain, and thus I believe a much more mature attitude is held by the population by the age of 19 or 20. If legislation were passed to make all alcohol illegal until the age of 21 nationwide, as has been passed in most states, the consumption of alcohol will not stop in age groups below 21. Indeed, it holds novelty value, it becomes a dare. If, however, alcohol were freely available from, say, the age of eighteen, the novelty quickly dies. Drinking alcohol becomes a thing that one can take or leave. After all, as your twenty-first birthday dawns, you do not instantly realize the perils of alcohol and thus act responsibly.

The issue of drinking and driving has been a major influence upon the passage of such legislation, yet as reported in The Catalyst last week, only seven hundred and thirty lives will be saved (National Safety Council figures). Surely, a much more effective solution would be to educate the dangers of drunk driving and penalise the crime severely. In my home town on a Friday or Saturday evening, it is virtually impossible to drive home after one has been drinking. The police spot check on nearly every road leaving the city. If caught, the penalties are tough: loss of ones driving license for a year or more, and, if one were involved in an accident, prison would be the more than likely result. The growth of non-alcoholic drinks, for example "drivers gin and tonic" (tastes like gin and tonic but contains no alcohol) and alcohol-less wine, lager and beer have helped promulgate the idea that it is not in the least 'cool' to drink and drive. People do drink these and are quick to criticize anyone who does drink and drive. The results for Lincolnshire have been very good, as reported by our local media, people no longer drink and drive and accidents, as a result of alcohol are down. Of course, some do but, with the chances greater that one would be caught than not, it is a pathetic alternative.

Thus, I believe if such lines were as severely followed in the United States, a maturity towards this issue would quickly develop and more lives would be saved. Most of the people I have talked to here believe they have very little chance of being caught — until they believe they will be caught, they will not stop drinking and driving.

Making alcohol illegal to minors, even to dividing it into 3.2 and plus 3.2 percent alcohol content merely gives alcohol novelty value: take away that novelty value, I believe you will find the responsibility and maturity in young adults that surely exists.

After all, if one can drive a car (and what a lethal contraption that can be), vote, fight for ones country and marry, all at the age of eighteen, yet one is treated as a child on this issue, does not somewhat of a paradox exist? I believe so — yet it is you who have the vote and the voice.

Anyway, until the public realize that eighteen to twenty-one year olds can be responsible adults, if permitted to be, I will await April of next year when I hit that magic day, when I can enjoy a long, cool gin and tonic in peace!

$1 Movie Review

BY NINA DE GRAMONT

The advertisement for the movie Nothing in Common claims "It's a comedy and a drama: just like life." Pretty corny, right? And long ago, when you were dragged to movies like Splash and Volunteers, you came to the understandable conclusion that Tom Hanks is an idiot. But it's dollar night, there aren't many movies around that interest you, and there's not much to lose. You decide to see how Jackie Gleason's held up over the years, and you're in for a pleasant surprise.

The movie starts out being silly in the typical Tom Hanks style. Hanks plays David Basner, a "very capable" creative director at a prestigous Chicago ad agency. Predictably, he's a womanizer and an obnoxious joke cracker. It's all pretty laughable until we run into the older version. Jackie Gleason plays Hanks' father, a worn out sales executive who's wife has just left him. The older Basners' jokes and charm have gone stale, his prowess with women has been lost, and he's alone. The only person Gleason has to turn to is the son with whom he's never been close. The reluctant Hanks is forced to get to know his father, and as a result he gets to know himself.

There are a few other relationships that serve to transform Hanks into a human being. His friendship with an old high school flame, Bess Armstrong, provides a nice parallel to the basically non-emotional encounters he has with other women throughout the film. Also, the compassionate, tender way Hanks deals with his mother is very appealing, as is the sympathy he expresses towards her when speaking with his father.

Nothing in Common is no masterpiece. It's a pretty slick, very American movie, complete with a couple of slow motion scenes set to corny modern music. But despite a few stupid jokes it's very entertaining, and at times quite touching. The characters start out one way, and by the end of the movie have grown. You may want to wait until dollar night to see Nothing in Common, but definately do see it.

What's On Your Turntable?

Chris Dunne—Senior—History
Husker Du, "New Day Rising"

Patti McLaughlin—Sophomore—English
Joni Mitchell, "Ladies of the Canyon"

Jewel Stroup—Sophomore—English/Psychology. The Smiths, "The Queen is Dead"

Dave Edwards—Senior—English
John Coltrain, "Live at Birdland"

Tim Wirth—Junior—Political Science
Ry Cooder, "Bop 'Til You Drop"

Valerie Feder—Senior—Philosophy/History. Vivaldi, "The Four Seasons"

CAUTION!

SOME PEOPLE CONSIDER THESE BOOKS DANGEROUS

AMERICAN HERITAGE DICTIONARY • THE BIBLE • ARE YOU THERE, GOD? IT'S ME, MARGARET • OUR BODIES, OURSELVES • TARZAN ALICE'S ADVENTURES IN WONDERLAND • THE EXORCIST • THE CHOCOLATE WAR • CATCH-22 • LORD OF THE FLIES • ORDINARY PEOPLE • SOUL ON ICE • RAISIN IN THE SUN • OLIVER TWIST • A FAREWELL TO ARMS • THE BEST SHORT STORIES OF NEGRO WRITERS • FLOWERS FOR ALGERNON • ULYSSES • TO KILL A MOCKINGBIRD • ROSEMARY'S BABY • THE FIXER • DEATH OF A SALESMAN • MOTHER GOOSE • CATCHER IN THE RYE • THE MERCHANT OF VENICE • ONE DAY IN THE LIFE OF IVAN DENISOVICH • GRAPES OF WRATH • THE ADVENTURES OF HUCKLEBERRY FINN • SLAUGHTERHOUSE-FIVE • GO ASK ALICE

BANNED BOOKS WEEK—CELEBRATING THE FREEDOM TO READ
SEPTEMBER 20-27, 1986

ENTER THE BANNED BOOKS WEEK CROSSWORD PUZZLE CONTEST
PRIZE - $25.00 GIFT CERTIFICATE
ENTRY BLANKS AVAILABLE AT

THE COLORADO COLLEGE BOOKSTORE
McGregor Basement

1000 Miles from Chicag

Dion and the Blues Goddess Rock Armstrong

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSA

BY JEFF BURNARD

For one hour, last Saturday night, Dion Payton and his 43rd Street Blues Band kept the critics at bay. Non-stop music combined with plenty of volume made it impossible to pass verbal judgment. But came intermission, with its tempting silent air, the hounds began to howl.

"These days I'm convinced the guitar makes the player as much as the player makes the guitar."

"I wouldn't go that far. It's more player. 65-35 maybe."

"Pretty conservative...Say, you catch that Gatemouth run there? Had cowboy blues all over it. Reminded me of Nebraska."

"Really? I guess I was keying on those Buddy Guy sounds."

"Buddy Guy?! It was too clean to be Buddy. Albert King was sure there, though. Him and Bobby Bland."

"What's this guy's name again?"

"Payton. Dion Payton."

"That's right. Hey, take a look at my new picks. Got 'em this morning."

Next came word from the Dancer's Pit:

"How tall do you think he is? I can't tell if it's because we're down here or what, but he's got to be six foot six."

"I don't know. Probably, I guess. How many calories are we burning down here?"

"What?"

"I said how many calories do we burn dancing like this? I didn't have time to run this morning."

Left Flanks:

"Isn't she hot. She's gonna be big some day. Those solos, and her voice is pretty good, too."

"She bugs me. Maybe it's those leopard skin pants or something."

"She's got a strong image. I think you feel threatened. Some people aren't ready for androgeny yet."

"That's not it."

"Bowie and Jagger used to shake people up like that."

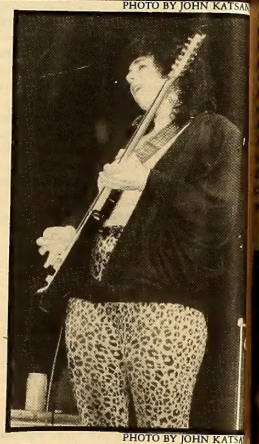

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSA

Front and Center:

"Did you notice that strange gap wh he wasn't playing. It was so obvious t something was missing. God is he coo

"I just want to make love with him. H hands. Can you imagine those hands?"

"I'll bet you're not alone in here. H got that star pull. Invisible eyes, confid grin. He's ten feet tall!"

"I wonder if he's for sale?"

Lights cut into the second set. Noth but whistles and cheers. John Littlej gets his guest stint. A five hundred w voice. Bring on Dion for round numb two. The critics get one last shot.

In the soft shadows, Back Row:

"Too much isn't it?"

"He stings that guitar, all right. O problem is we're not down on 43rd sit in that corner booth at the Checkerbo Smoke in our eyes, whiskey in hand, fo gettin' crazy. That's the blues."

"Chicago's a thousand miles to the e You're a long way from home."

"So's he, you know. So's he."

Hair Designers for Men & Women

RAPUNZEL

Style cuts, Cellophanes,
Perms & Color.

Nexus, Redken, and Tri products available for sale.

Stop in or make your appointment:

827 N. Tejon at Cache La Poudre 632-3532

Records

A Solid Step for Madonna

BY E.J. BERNACKI

As a follow up to her first album and Like a Virgin, Madonna's True Blue has received mixed reviews. This is an accessible album and aside from her mellow ballad Live to Tell, it remains faithful to her soul/disco roots. It is all pretty danceable, the more exceptional tracks being Papa Don't Preach, Where's the Party, and White Heat, along with teeny-bopping, Jimmy Jimmy, Open Your Heart, and Love Makes the World Go Round. An exceptional tune and something new for Madonna is La Isla Bonita. It is not only crisp and beautiful but carries an authentic Spanish beat and sound.

Electra Asylum

Although nothing on this album is comparable to Into the Groove, or Lucky Star, True Blue is a dependable and lovable album which has a firm grip on all positive aspects of Madonna's past while at the same time surpassing it to create a new, honest woman out of the starlet turned superslut that Madonna has so often been critized for. In terms of sales, it will be tough to beat gold Madonna and platinum Like a Virgin but True Blue is truly a healthy and solid step for Madonna. She is intelligent and talented and her singing is better than ever, so look forward to plenty of exciting material from Madonna in the future.

Records

Tasty Cuts from the Butcher

BY CHRISTOPHER DUNN

The Jazz Butcher Group is among the truly original bands to come over from England this year. This Northamptonshire group first appeared in London in 1983, and have finally made it over to the United States to promote their latest album "Bloody Nonsense." It includes a diverse assortment of twelve cuts, compiled expressly for use Americans, from various albums and 45s previously released in England. The Butcher and his group mix elements of soul, country, jazz, and that raw, dirty rock sound that obscured the Velvet Underground from popular recognition. At their rawest the Jazz Butcher Group is remeniscent of Bauhaus (though not so dark and "intense") as in "Caroline Wheeler's Birthday Present," which features a loud, distorted guitar and the Butcher's ranting vocals. The more polished, melodic tunes, like "The Human Jungle" and "Big Saturday," may remind you of Roxy Music or Elvis Costello. To be sure, they are not afraid to utilize their more refined talents, like those of Max Eider, who generally prefers a clean, picked sound to the recently celebrated "chainsaw" craze.

The Jazz Butcher...sings and sputters about how he loves to groove in the bus lane, how he fears the "Death Dentist"...and how the devil and Frank Sinatra are his friends.

In their lyrics, the Jazz Butcher Group stays clear of this new reverence for "sincerity," which has made some "post-punk" bands so syrupy and tiresome. The Jazz Butcher, with forked tongue and alcohol breath, sings and sputters about how he loves to groove in the bus lane, how he fears the "Death Dentist" (armed with electrical spikes and Novocain), and how the devil and Frank Sinatra are his friends. Of course, "Bloody Nonsense" includes two jazzy tunes, "Partytime" and "Drink," which describe the group's favorite pastime. They satirize everything from the heroes of modern rock to the absurdities of world politics, as in "President Reagan's Birthday Present." For the Jazz Butcher Group, nothing is sacred.

Records

How refreshing it is to hear a band that doesn't take themselves, nor anything around them, too seriously. So I pass along the Jazz Butcher's message to America as it appears on the album cover: "Hey America, I slept with your wife."

Screaming Blue Messiahs May Save Pop

Sire Records

BY NICK SHERMAN

Bill Carter's band is great. The "hit" Wild Blue Yonder will definately get the recognition it deserves. This song is probably the one you'll hear on the radio, but only because it's the first on the album; it's impossible to pick a favorite on this album. Kenny Harris (drums), Chris Thompson (bass), and B. Carter (guitar-vocals) are not individually innovative, yet together they form an album you better tape before you wear it out. The lyrics are pretty interesting and very listenable. Slightly reminiscent of the Fall, this band will grow on you.

Classical Calendar

September 18-20 8:00 p.m.
September 21 3:00 p.m.
Conductor Charles A. Ansbacher and the Colorado Springs Symphony will open their 1986-87 classical season with guest soloist, Michael Houstoun. New Zealand pianist, Houstoun will perform Beethoven's "Piano Concerto No. 3 in C minor, Op. 37." The orchestra will also play "Roman Carnival Overture" by Hector Berlioz and Antonin Dvorak's "Symphony No. 8 in G, Op. 88." Tickets can be purchased at the Symphony Box Office, the Pikes Peak Center, Ft. Carson Recreation Center, Arnold Hall at the USAFA, or Peterson Field Recreation Center, for $8, $12 and $15. A $3 discount is available to students 21 and under, senior citizens over 55, and active military.

September 28 3:00 p.m.
Da Vinci Quarter in Packard Hall. Free admission.

Next Issue in Arts

More Record Reviews

Da Vinci Quartet at CC

What's On Your Turntable?

Albums Furnished By Budget Records
& Tapes

Flowers for any occasion!

Skodack
& Turner

Corsages & Boutonnieres
For Formal Dance

Plants And Flower
Arrangements
For Your Dorm

FTD Deliveries For Folks
& Friends Back Home

508 N. Tejon 632-3194

CAFE BIJOU
DINING & SPIRITS

• serving • lunch & light dinners
exquisite desserts & coffees
• first floor •
jazz, cocktails & hors d'oeuvres
• second floor •
Happy Hour Mon-Fri 4-6
Trip the night fantastic in a turn of the century home
411 East Bijou
632-9640

Bring in this ad for a free speciality drink with your lunch or dessert.

SILK STOCKINGS
Bring in ad for 10% OFF!
ANTIQUE COSTUME JEWELRY
EXQUISITE CLOTHING
ACCESSORIES
126 N. NEVADA AVE
636-2924
A NOSTALGIC BOUTIQUE

Art Majors to be Inspired by N.Y.C.

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Soho's version of the Flying Nun.

BY T. GRIEZ

Yes, it's true, as you read this very article, all the senior art studio and art history majors are in New York City, wandering the streets, going on museum tours, spending money at Blooomingdales, riding the subway, dancing at the Paladium, and finding little time to sleep...

This week-long trip is a new program offered to CC art students, partially funded by the Getty grant. In some cases, very partial; typically, the only costs covered are those of the bus to and from the airport, amd most of the museum fees. Yet those who needed the cash to afford the trip were readily given whatever they needed. Only one student isn't participating in the vacation, even though the school offered to pay his way (?). The art faculty is hoping for a promising outcome so that it will continue as an annual trip for students interested in the arts.

The faculty has come up with a schedule of morning art gallery tours, trying to leave most afternoons open for the group to "discover" on their own. Jim Trissel, Gail Murray, and Edith Kirsh feel that the exposure to enough art will inspire their students to produce a unique art history thesis, or a memorable art show. How couldn't they?

It was hard to get much of a statement out of those eagerly packing for the festivity. "I can't wait to leave," "I don't know what to bring," "How much money should I take?" were about the only words heard from most, who at the present time are spending that unknown sum on a new outfit (girls out number the guys by a longshot), or trying to pay for cab-fare home.

There you have it, a run-down of what your fellow classmates are up to as you ponder block break plans. By the way, these art majors may stay in New York through the 24th with no extra plane fare, so long as they can cover hotel and other expenses. You will find out next week just exactly how much they got out of the visit, and whether or not Jim Trissel really can jog to the Brooklyn bridge and back...stay tuned!

Premiere Play

Stein continued from page 1

traditional entries. It was not until publishing of the second edition that the illicit recipe was noticed, and removed.

Gertrude Stein will be played by Miriam Margolyes. Ms. Margolyes does film and television in England, and is renowned for her voice work. In fact, her voice is so familiar on British commercials that she is called "the queen of the voice-overs." She has appeared, in her entirety, in the films "Reds" and "Yentl," among others.

The label, "companion," in the play's title, was given to Ms. Toklas by Ernest Hemingway.

Natasha Morgan, who plays Alice, works mainly in the theatre. She is the director of a London-based experimental theatre company called "That's Not It." Her company does more visually-oriented and "art-based" work than is found in traditional theatre. Miriam and Natasha have worked together for the last two years, largely on the "Gertrude Stein" production.

"Gertrude Stein and a Companion" made its award-winning debut in Scotland at the Edinburgh Festival in 1984. The show then travelled to London, where Jim Malcolm, chairman of the Colorado College Drama and Dance Departme saw a performance—and was enthral He asked Ms. Morgan and Ms. Margolye they would like to teach here and perf the play, and it is our good fortune they accepted. The play was performed at The Festival of Sydne Australia, and after its engagement will play in San Francisco; Portl Oregon; Santa Cruz; at Pomo University, and at McMaster Universi Ontario.

The play is about the love betw Gertrude Stein and her "companio Alice B. Toklas. It is guaranteed to m you laugh, think, and feel good. So get tickets now for Friday and/or Saturd night and pass a "delicious" "scrumptious" evening at the theatre.

Editor's note: Gertrude Stein and Companion will be performed Friday Saturday nights at 8:15 at Armstr Theatre. Tickets available at the Stu Center, 931 N. Nevada. Free with C

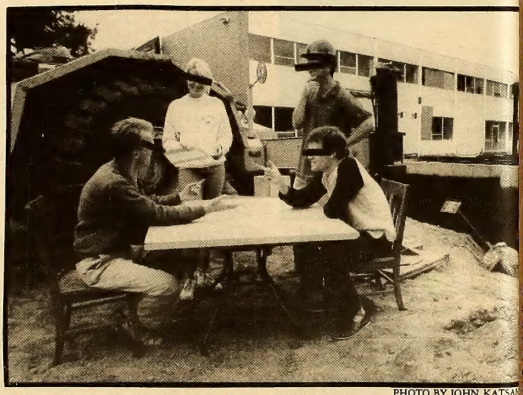

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSA

Adamant students dine at Rastall.

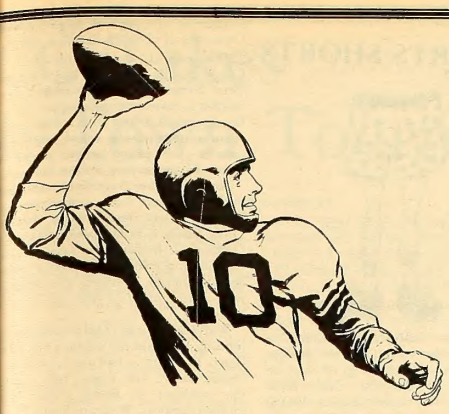
Your Washing done for 2c a Week

(But We Don't Know Where)

FIREFLY ANTIQUES

727 Manitou Avenue
Manitou Springs
685-5509

Nostalgia, Deco, Modern, and More!



NFL Pigskin Picks

BY JOHN KLEEMAN

Well, football fans its pigskin season once again, which means that everybody is running about claiming how great their favorite football team will do this season. The one problem with this atmosphere is that there are about 28 different opinions about who this years's NFL champ will be. Well folks its time to stop fretting because I am the expert of all experts. Yes that's right this is THE FEARLESS FORECASTER!

So without further adieu this is the forecast for this season. Due to limited writing space, only the top contenders will be considered. I apologize if I have not mentioned your favorite team.

The AFC East shapes up as a 3 way dog fight for the divisional title. The favorite has to be the Miami Dolphins eventhough the offensive line and the linebacking corps are questionable. Somehow Don Shula always puts his team in a position to win it all. Dan Marino and his two pass catching phenoms, Mark Duper and Mark Clayton will wreak havoc on NFL defenses. The New York Jets once again will make the playoffs. Look for an even better season from QB Ken O'Brien. The defense led by Mark (the Sack Master) Gastineau should be tough. A weak defensive secondary keeps the Jets from pulling off the divisional title. Last year the New England Patriots relied on a gambling defense and sheer luck to go to the Super Bowl, don't count on the same scenario this season.

The AFC Central finally has a legitimate contender in the Cleveland Browns. Bernie Kosar and a stingy defense led by linebackers Chip Banks and Clay Mathews should lead the Browns to a second straight divisional title. The Bengals could make it tough on the Browns if the defense can improve its performance from a year ago. The offense should be exciting with Boomer Esiason firing to wideouts Cris Collingsworth and Eddie Brown.

The AFC West should be real interesting. I pick the L.A. Raiders to win it. Like always the defense led by all-pros Howie Long and Mike Haynes, should be the best in football. The offense is going to have to rely on someone other than Marcus Allen if the Raiders intend to get to the Super Bowl. The Denver Broncos also have a real shot at going to the Super Bowl. Rulon Jones, Karl Mecklenburg and Co. lead the D. If the offense has to rely too much on the arm of Elway, the Broncos will make an early exit from the playoffs. The Seattle Seahawks remain an enigma to most experts including myself. Two years ago the defense was one of the best in football and QB Dave Krieg was on the verge of becoming a superstar. Last season all went awry for the Hawks as they did not even come close to making the playoffs. This year's edition could be solid if the injuries are kept to a minimum. All Pro Kenny (the biter) Easley continues to lead the Defense from his safety position. The Offense should light up the scoreboard with Krieg passing to Steve Largent and Daryl Turner.

Moving on to the toughest divisions in football, the NFC East, we find three quality teams. The New York Giants will win this division by the skin of their teeth with the Redskins a close second. The Giants showed last year that they are a well balanced team, the only weakness may be the defensive secondary. The Redskins have really improved their personnel from a year ago. Joe Theismann and John Riggins have finally checked into the geriatric ward and the team brought in a bumper crop of young and healthy ballplayers, not to mention former USFL'ers Kelvin Bryant and Doug Williams. This club is hungry and very tenacious which will more than make up for its lack of experience. The Dallas Cowboys, the team everybody loves to hate, are still hanging in there. The infamous Flex defense led by Randy White can still stop most teams from running the football, the pass however could be crippling to the Cowboys hopes. The offense should be strong with Danny White tossing spirals to Tony Hill and Rookie Mike Sherrard. The running of Tony Dorsett will provide a strong rushing attack and the acquisition of Herschel Walker will not hurt this team.

In the NFC Central only two words need to be said: 'Chicago' 'Bears.' The Bears are going to cruise to the divisional title. However they will have a difficult time duplicating last years 15-1 record. The defense has a new look; gone is Buddy Ryan and his 46 defense, but the Fridge, Singletary, Fencik and co. are still there.

The NFC West shapes up as a battle between two California teams, the 49ers and the Rams. The 49ers will win this contest because they have a team that simply does not have any weaknesses. Joe Montana is the best quarterback in football and Roger Craig can do everything. The defense is going to surprise a lot of people. The Rams should finish a distant second. One wonders just how much more punishment Eric Dickerson can take, but it looks as if he'll be carrying the offense again this year, because the passing game is as anemic as ever. My picks for the Super Bowl are the Raiders and 49ers with the 49ers winning.

Well thats it for picks '86'. Enjoy the season and by the way if my Super Bowl predictions turn out to be wrong, which is highly unlikely, all of you are invited to a party at my house courtesy of THE FEARLESS FORECASTER.

PHOTO BY BLAIR SANFORD

The Outdoor Classroom

BY ALEC REKOW

Since the first Colorado Outward Bound Leadership Program was offered to ORC (Outdoor Recreation Club) leaders in spring of 1984, many students have benefited from CC's affiliation with the wilderness school.

The Cossitt Hall basement houses Colorado Outward Bound School's (COBS) representative Brad Web and his office. This makes CC the only college in the United States to have an Outward Bound chapter on campus as well as being one of the few having the option to use its facilities and leadership programs to train college students.

So how did this unique relationship come to fruition? In 1983 when David Ives, Assistant Dean of Students and Student Center Director came to CC, the Outing Club leadership program was in sad disaray.

"We had students leading groups on block break wilderness trips who had no real outdoor or leadership experience," says Ives. If there had been a serious emergency the student leaders might have lacked the experience and skills to properly handle the situation. Enter Colorado Outward Bound.

It happens the now defunct CC Mountain Club had empty office space in Cossitt basement when Outward Bound was in search of a Colorado Springs' office. So Outward Bound moved onto campus and during eighth block break of 1984 a group of CC ORC leaders received individual and leadership skills at the outdoor school's Leadville base camp. Since that successful trip many other CC groups have participated in Outward Bound trips such as CCCA members and resident hall advisors. Last spring three weekend courses were offered to various campus leaders. During the 2½ day trips the students moved through an intensive series of tests and situations designed to promote individual decision-making skills and confidence as well as group compatability. Participant Jean Boyer comments: "It was great getting to know students from other campus organizations with whom I had had no previous contact and become close to these people outside the campus environment.

While at this time Outward Bound has no direct academic tie to CC, several classes have run specific programs through Outward Bound. Tom Cronin's "Leadership" class took the Leadville course. If an organization wants outdoor training through the school they may propose their idea to a committee headed by David Ives. This committee has annual budget of $20,000.

Colorado Outward Bound runs courses specially designed for businesses, youth and other special interest groups. Using the wilderness as classroom, their attitude toward education is experimental. As Brad Web emphasizes:

We're not out there just to teach people how to climb a rock. We will teach the basic skills but our goal is to build individual confidence and decision-making skills through the rock climb. It's a hands-on high impact chance to learn."

Cheryl Bartels moves in for a tackle. PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

SPORTS SHORTS

Women's Volleyball—Coach Sue Bethanis' spikers captured six straight matches without losing a game to claim first place at the Fort Hays State Invitational. The Tigers defeated Doane College, host Fort Hays State, Bethel and Washburn on Friday then colled past Marymount and Air Force on Saturday to up their season record to a glittering 7-0. Elissa Breitbard and Lisa Korte won All-Tournament honors. Earlier in the week, Colorado College opened its season with a straight-sets triumph at home over t University of Colorado-Colorado Spring

Women's Cross-Country—Led Coach Bonnie Everhart and freshm Terri Grzyeowski, the Colorado Colle women's cross-country team placed 3rd last weekend's Adams State Invitational Alamosa. Grzyeowski, whose 5000 me time of 19:59 placed her 4th among t meet's 32 competitors, is from Aurora, C

Since each team's top five runners figu in the team score totals, sophomore Ca Shaffer's 20:49, junior Mary Armij 21:06, Senior Ann McLuckie's 22:04, a Littleton, Co. freshman Liz Tayson's 22: were all important in the Tiger's succe Senior Theresa Ellbogen also finishe with a time of 22:22 over the 3.1 m course.

With a sturdy core of six runners alrea running well after the season's first me Coach Everhart is looking forward to strong season. The Tigers' next meet this weekend in Pueblo, where th compete against Western State, UC Fort Lewis, Adam's State, Mines, and ho USC in the USC Invitational. CC's on home meet this season is the Colora College Invitational on Saturday, Octob 11th at North Monument Park. The ra begins at 10:00 a.m.

Men's Cross-Country—Alumni fro Adams State College led the field of runners as they captured both th individual title (Pat Porter—24:35) a the team title (Vigilante—24 points) at th Adams State Invitational on Saturda September 13, 1986.

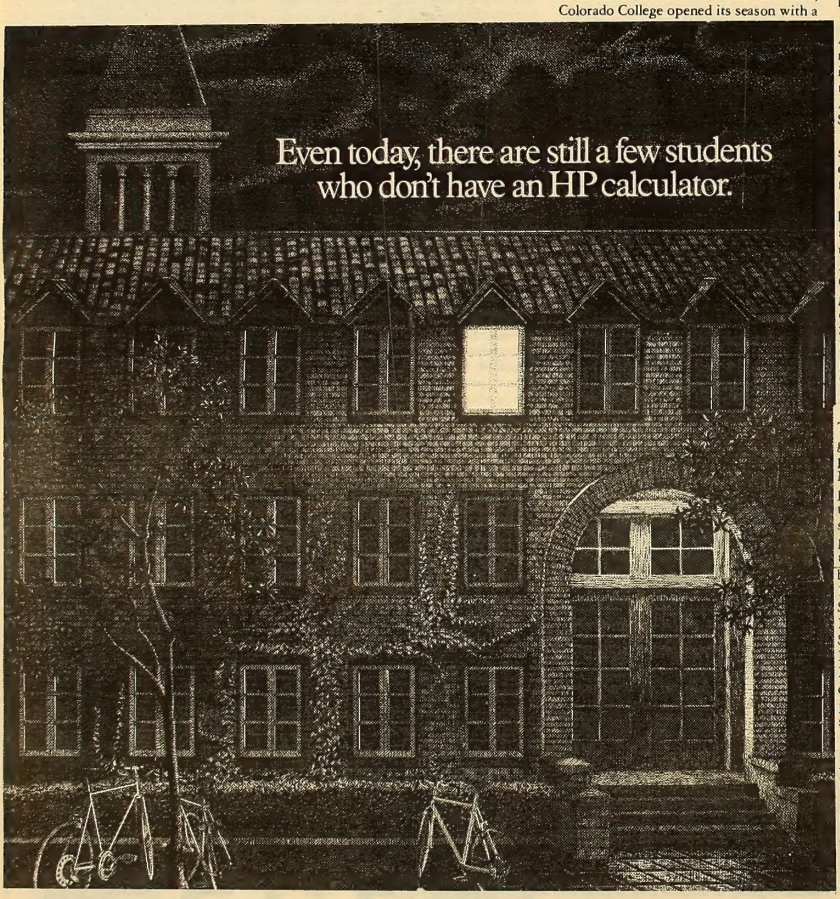
However, junior, Scott Kang led t start of the season for the CC men's cros country team as he ran in impressive 25: for 5 miles and a personal best time f 16th place at this meet. "Scott is runnin better than any CC runner has ever do this early in the season and it's all leadi up to a shot at Nationals and possibly ALL-AMERICAN placing!" (Coa Castaneda) The rest of the CC team looke good also but, being young, they're slow developing as they prepare for Octob Some bright spost include freshman, Pa Kock—who ran a 28:26 for 49th place a personal best times by CC runners Sc Gorthy, Ted Perkins and Tor Petersen w ran 29:27, 29:42 and 33:16 for 5 miles

Women's Soccer—Freshman Ker Tashiro had a big weekend, scoring fo goals to lead the fourth-ranked Tigers t pair of victories over Missouri-Rolla a Missouri-St. Louis. Tashiro's hat tri paced Saturday's 8-0 romp over Rolla, team that boasted seven players from th summer's National Youth Cup's fourt place squad. She notched the only tally the match on Sunday as Colorado Colle beat Missouri-St. Louis, 1-0, to bump 1986 record to 3-0. Other scorers Saturday's victory were Maryclai Robinson, Margot Stolte, Shell Separovich, Ann Cernicek and Jennif Hickman. Janine Szpara and Kat Hutchings shared the goalkeeping dut on Saturday while All-American Szp posted the team's third consecuti shutout on Sunday.

Coach Dang Pibulvech's team thrash the Denver University Pioneers yesterday afternoon on Stewart Fie Freshman Kerry Tashiro led the CC attac with her second hat trick of the seas bringing her season total to 8 goals i games. Jennifer Hickman and Jennif Murphree added to the tally and Kat Willoughby and Keri Schloredt were e credited with an assist.

CC dominated play throughout t game. By the second half Denver ra crossed midfield while the Tigers w most of the loose balls and created ma dangerous opportunities around the D goal.

This weekend the Tigers scrimmage t Colorado Club teams. Western St college on Saturday and Colorado St University on Sunday. Both scrimmag are at 2:00 p.m. During block break t team travels to Chapel Hill, No Carolina to play Radford University a national soccer power University of No Carolina.



Burning the midnight oil may be necessary.

Burning the 2:00 or 3:00 or 4:00 AM oil is absurd.

Especially when an HP calculator can get the answers you want—in time to get a good night's sleep.

For instance, our HP-15C Professional Scientific Calculator has more built-in advanced math and statistical power than any other calculator. Our HP-41 Advanced Scientific Calculators have even more potential.

That's because there are better than 2500 software packages available for them—more than for any other calculator.

There's even a special plug-in software package (we call it the Advantage Module) that's designed to handle the specific problems an engineering student has to solve in his, or her, course work.

No wonder professionals in engineering and the physical sciences widely regard HP calculators as the best you can get.

So check one out. Then, when your mother calls to ask if you're getting enough sleep, you won't have to lie.

By the way, if you want more information, just give us a call at 800-FOR-HPPC. Ask for Dept. 658C.

hp HEWLETT PACKARD

PG12602

CC Takes E-Town Tourney

BY MIKE FRATERELLI

The CC men's soccer team took its show on the road last weekend to Elizabethtown College in Pennsylvania for the Blue Jay Classic tournament. The team knew a good performance would be a big step towards a NCAA post-season tournament berth. Also participating in the single elimination format were Elizabethtown, Carnegie-Mellon University, and Kutztown State University, all hailing from Pennsylvania.

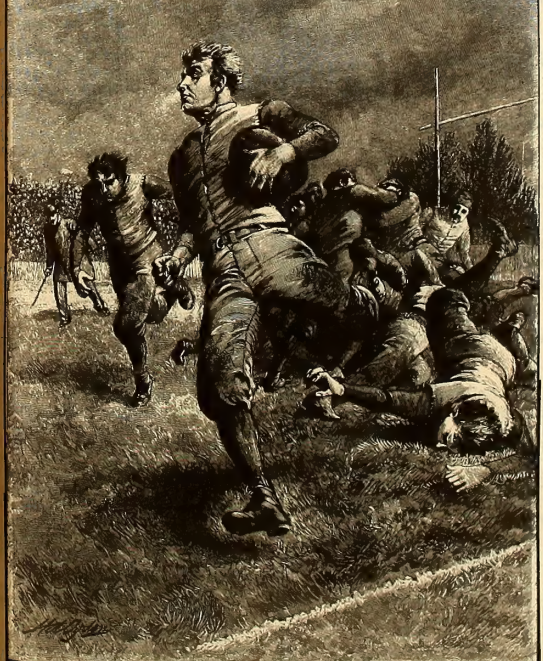
CC first took on a hard-working, but physically inferior squad from Carnegie-Mellon. Although the Tigers eventually triumphed 2-0, Coach Richardson could not have been pleased with the performance. The Melons outplayed and outhustled CC for virtually the entire 90 minutes. Although they bounced two shots off the post, they could never find the net. A 35 yard shot that beat the Carnegie keeper on a bad bounce by Greg Kazemi proved to be the winner. Paul Schmidt tallied his third goal of the season to ice the contest with one minute remaining. In the other game Elizabethtown overcame a 1-0 halftime deficit to defeat Kutztown State 3-1 to set the stage for Saturday's championship.

Realizing the importance of the game, both teams came out with conservative approaches emphasizing tough defense and quick counterattacks. They also both displayed strong ball possession tactics that looked to capitalize on any defensive mistakes. Andy Henderson found himself at the right spot at the right time 30 minutes into the first half and put in a loose ball that had bounced across the Elizabethtown goal mouth to give the Tigers a 1-0 lead. The game remained very close with neither team creating offensive opportunities (except for Mike Blaxill's rip that bounced off the E-town post). With only 10 minutes remaining, the Blue Jays forced the tempo by throwing nine men forward. CC appeared to be handling the pressure until with 3 minutes remaining, Shannon Perry, the E-town All-American midfielder punched in a loose ball in front of the CC net. 2 overtimes proved fruitless and the game entered penalty kicks.

Although the NCAA would recognize the game as a tie, both squads wanted to win to secure the tournament trophy. CC goalie Matt Slothower rose to the occassion and guessed correctly all six times which direction the E-town penalty shooter would shoot—saving 4 shots. Freshman Scott McReynolds calmy booted in his shot to win the tournament for CC. Todd Walker and Andy Dorsey also scored.

This weekend the Tigers travel to Albuquerque to take on tough Division I foe New Mexico University. The Lobos will be looking to avenge a 2-0 upset by CC last year that knocked them out of NCAA tournament contention. Over block break the team will travel to Minnesota to confront St. Olaf's and St. Thomas' Colleges in two key NCAA Division 3 Western region contests.

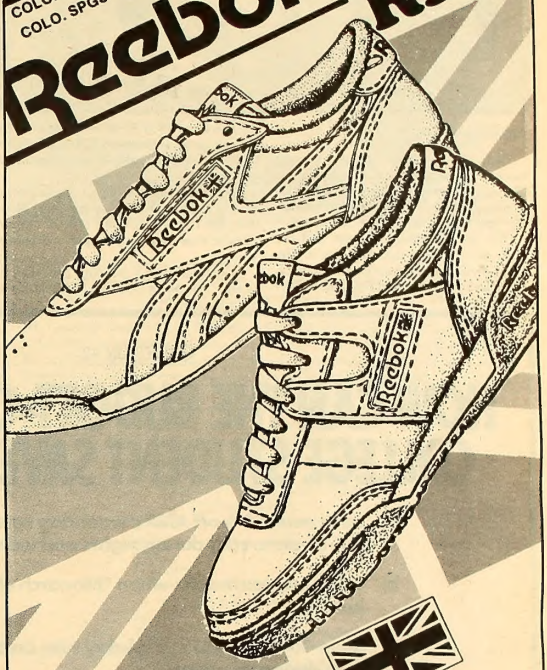
TAYLOR TRAVEL is proud to support CC football.
Come by and pick up the team's season schedule.
We're looking forward to seeing you.



"Your Campus Travel Agency"
818 N. Tejon 636-3871

Daily Til 6 p.m.
Friday Til 9 p.m.
Downtown Store Closed Sunday
DAVE COOK
COLO. SPGS. DOWNTOWN 473-3143
COLO. SPGS. RUSTIC HILLS 574-1400

Reebok® SHOE RIOT



Reebok®
Because life is not a spectator sport.™

Dave Cooks and Reebok team up to bring you the shoes of your life with the Largest Selection of Reeboks in Colorado!

Reebok® LADIES "FREESTYLE"
An aerobic shoe made with Reebok's exclusive garment leather. Remarkably comfortable and lightweight, perfect for aerobics.
Last Price $42.95
SAVE $9.00
33.95

Reebok® MENS "WORKOUT"
An exercise shoe with durable leather H strap design for outstanding lateral support & fit. Hi-abrasion gum rubber outsole is perfect for court and fitness. Black or white.
Last Price $49.95
SAVE $11.00
38.95

Prices valid through September 30th, 1986.

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Football continued from page 1

Later in the third quarter Holmes blocked a punt to set up the game winning TD. Again Lorimer had to scramble to his right and threw a 26 yard strike to Holmes who had beaten the Cavalier secondary.

Once the CC offense got the lead the Tiger defense made sure they kept it. The Cavs only mounted one serious threat but it ended on a 28 yard missed field goal by Dan Gemmill.

The victory was sealed when, at 2:24 left in the game, sophomore Tigerback Brian Ash collected his second interception of the game.

The win broke the Tigers losing streak dating back to October of last year. Now that the Tigers have had a taste of victory they're expecting only bigger and better things.

"CC hasn't had a winning season in 5 years," said Mark Gorman, "This year we turn it around!"

Armadillo's Alley

"Drug Testing"

BY ARMADILLO

Welcome CC athletes, to the ha reality of drug testing. How do y'all f bout the stance taken by the NC regarding the tests? The bottom line is be able to participate in NCAA post sea play this year, one must waiver th constitutional rights regarding privacy consent to drug testing. Every street d and many legal over the counter substan are included in the NCAA's 1986 Ban Drug List. Seriously, no more ganja, c greenies, vitamin A (acid), or shrooms a combination of all of the above will outwit the testing procedure) within month to six weeks of Nationals or you be running a serious risk of testi positive. The NCAA is playing hardba an individual tests positive for any of banned substances, he, she or it will banned from competition for a minim of ninety days and the team will disqualified from further competiti Course I ain't worried. We Armadi don't do drugs! Cept a little peyote now then.

I would be very interested to hear h y'all feel about the drug testing is Please address any responses to Armadillo, c/o The Catalyst, and drop the Catalyst office in Cossitt (If locked, opinion under door).

I don't know bout you guys (qu Yankee term) but I still can't cope w Monday Night Football without How Cosell. It just ain't the same without shots of Howard drooling all over him in the booth. Even if the game wa yawner, ya stayed tuned cause of memorable glimpses of Howie, Giff Dandy Don treading, ummm, saliva in booth during the fourth quarter.

This major league season has been ful suprises, but the biggest shock is the that the Boston Red Sox lead the Ameri League East by nine games with only remaining. Everyone except grandmother expected them to pull th patented August swoon. Every team in division beside Milwaukee made a ru them, but it never happened. W Pitching! For the first time since the 1970's the BoSox have some dudes who "toss the tater." Roger Clemens 23-4, ERA (best among AL starters), Ca Schiraldi, their first stopper since the ice age, called up at the beginning August, is 4-1 with 8 saves an phenomenal 1.10 ERA. Bruce Hurst 1 3.15 and Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd 14-9, add depth. The addition of Don Ba brought 29 HR's, and 85 RBI's in additi to a positive attitude. Baylor along Wade Bogg's major league leading batting average (BA) and .451 on p percentage, Jim Rice .332 BA, 20 HR's, RBI's, Bill Buckner 18 HR's, 100 RBI's Dwight Evan's 23 HR's, 90 R contribute to a formidable line up hitters. A few BoSox tidbits: Boston hit have by far the fewest strikeouts in the The pitching staff leads the league strikeouts and has the fourth best E Boston is 23-9 in one-run-differe games. However, the Red Sox have st only 37 bases in 145 games — An Achi heel that may haunt them in the playo

Welcome to CC, Keri Tashiro! Ke freshman from beautiful Seat Washington, has scored 5 goals for the CC women's soccer team, including lone goals in 1-0 victories over Metro S and U of Missouri (St. Louis). We be lu it!

In case y'all have been too preoccup tossing cow chips to notice, the women's volleyball team has picked where they left off last year. They kicking some serious booty! Last week they won the Fort Hays State tournam beating the Div I Air Force Amazons in process. Git down to El Pomar and ch them out!!!

QUESTION #2.

HOW CAN THE BUDGET-CONSCIOUS COLLEGE STUDENT SAVE MONEY?

a) Save over 50% off AT&T's weekday rates on out-of-state calls during nights and weekends.

b) Don't buy textbooks when "Monarch Notes" will do just fine.

c) Save 40% off AT&T's weekday rate on out-of-state calls during evenings.

d) Count on AT&T for exceptional value and high quality service.

e) Hang around with the richest kids in school; let them pick up the tab whenever possible.

If you're like most college students in the western hemisphere, you try to make your money go a long way. That's why you should know that AT&T Long Distance Service is the right choice for you. AT&T offers so many terrific values. For example, you can save over 50% off AT&T's day rate on calls during weekends until 5 pm Sunday, and from 11 pm to 8 am, Sunday through Friday.

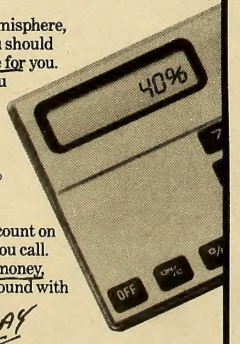
Call between 5 pm and 11 pm, Sunday through Friday, and you'll save 40% off our day rate.

Ever dial a wrong number? AT&T gives you immediate credit if you do. And of course, you can count on AT&T for clear long distance connections any place you call.

To find out more about how AT&T can help save you money, give us a call. With a little luck, you won't have to hang around with the rich kids. Call toll-free today, at 1 800 222-0300.

GREAT DEAL!

CALL TODAY



AT&T
The right choice.

© 1986 AT&T

Ellipses and Hyperbole

A Shure Thing

BY AARON SHURE

To be brief in explaining the premise of these articles, I only say that the Catalyst staff was looking for a lampoonist. They found me. It is my belief that most everything is so ridiculous that it is beyond ridicule, therefore, I merely present interviews and portraits of characters as I see them.

Cliff Westwood is a psychology major somewhere in the United States; he doesn't attend CC because, rumor has it, he is afraid of being skinnered alive. Cliff wears "top siders" and a poncho. He limps from a wound he sustained in a "Trust fall." He makes a grand entrance, stopping his stride to squint his eyes, widen his stance, and suck menacingly on a florescent marker. The following interview took place in the eve of his senior year:

Cliff: Yeah, I'm a psyche major.

A: Why do you guys call yourselves psyche majors, why not a Psy or psycho majors.

Cliff: That's just the way people are. You want to know why, punk. Then go on, dare you, read my thesis.

A: Uhh, maybe we should start with a different question. I've always heard lay people use the term, "Reverse Psychology" what exactly does—

Cliff: It's simple, really simple. There was this guy who had a reoccurring dream about phalluses that marched around his bed.

A: Gad! What does that signify?

Cliff: He had intensely suppressed desires to eat carrots and other oblong foods. But the way you ask that makes me think you were not breast fed.

A: I was too breast fed.

Cliff: Yeah, maybe, but not by your father!

A: Its all so clear now. But what about your thesis.

Cliff: Listen up punk. It's like this. All lasting male/female relationships are held together by something strong, and that something is neurosis. Nail biting, thumb sucking craziness; that's just the way people are. It is amazing how one person's neurosis will fit exactly into another's, just like little puzzle pieces. Take the case of Peter and Lilly. Peter's father would always refuse to play air hockey with him. So, Peter has a hang up about trying to force people to play games with him. Lilly was dropped on her head as a child. She refuses to let anyone near her cranium.

A: And these two have compatible neurosises.

Cliff: When they first met, Peter invited Lilly to play his favorite game: Headstand monopoly. Now it'd take CLYDESDALES to pull them apart.

A: Well what about the recent trend to describe mental states as a pure result of physiological conditions. That is to say even our very emotions are nothing more than a concatenation of chemicals—chemicals that can be changed.

Cliff: Yeah, well, me and my partner are working on what we like to call, "Personality in a syringe."

A: I know some people that could use a big inject—

Cliff: But what you don't see is how the brain really works. Why, most people still believe that hogwash about us using only 10% of our brain cells. That's just what they tell you to give you hope of improvement, but Dee Baker and I have proven that mankind has no room to improve. We need every single brain cell in our head just to live. Every one of our subjects died, and we only scrapped away a handful of their brain cells.

A: How unfortunate.

Cliff: Yeah, but it was a lot of fun. Once you remove a portion of the skull there are no pain nerves in the brain. Plastic wrap can be placed over the opening in the skull, and the patient can fiddle with his brain all he wants. It can be great fun at parties to start poking around in your speech centers.

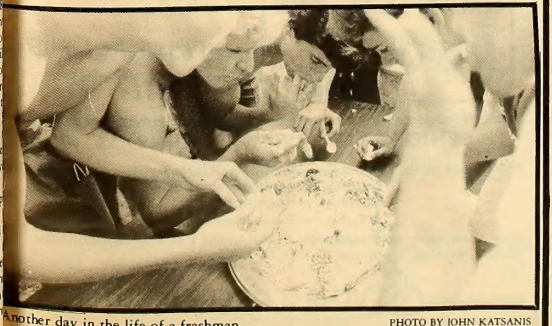
A: That sounds barbaric.

Cliff: Well, we hope to update the technology. See, we are going to use tupperwear lids.

A: Interesting. Tell me, what do you say to Philip Dijon's hypothesis that the brain is not really the seat of consciousness.

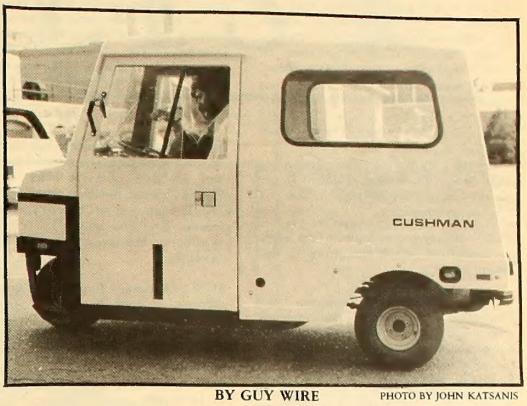
Cliff: Dijon is interesting. He says that the brain is too large to house post modern intellect. He says the brain is actually a blood filtering organ specialized to remove alcohol and Twinkie matter. And it is the kidneys that hold the mind. One of the way Dijon proved this was to strike subjects in their kidneys and see how they had trouble thinking straight. Personally I think Dijon's a punk...

With the ellipses, I conclude this interview noting that the conversation continued but was excruciatingly boring from this point on.



Another day in the life of a freshman PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Cushy Cushman



BY GUY WIRE PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Wondering where your tuition money really goes? The Catalyst's own special reconaissance expert has discovered the above gross misappropriation of school financial assets that would be better spent towards scientia y disciplina.

This may look like an innocent Cushman utilitarian cart but nooooooo! This is the Cushman Exterminator XT9000. This sleek unit is sougnt after by (and better suited for) snobby country clubs. There is no cargo space in this evil sidewalk burner; instead Cushman has borrowed Jaguar's refined 5.3 liter V-12 barnburning powerhouse. For your enquiring mind and in the name of justice, we have managed to compile the following statistics on the Exterminator:

Base price: $12,500
Test price: $67,923
(Test price includes comprehensive diamond-tuck velour, fuzzy dice, chain steering wheel, "chocks," magnesium wheels, radar detector, and beverage holder.)
0-30 .....1.1 (sec.)
0-50 .....3.7
0-70 .....3.9
Top speed .....Not yet attained
Fuel economy 310mpg
(excluding nitro injection)
Brakes.....Yes
Tires.....Fisher Price
child safe #23 (3)
Vertical hop .....23" (US), 67" (with special cucaracha package)
Special equipment ...SAGA alert sensor

Look for fun-loving physical plant workers with this machine on Nevada Avenue on Saturday nights.

House of
YAKITORI
Japanese Restaurants
Every Tuesday
5 pm - 9 pm
ALL THE YAK
YOU CAN ATTACK
$6.30
on the #17 dinner
*not available on to go or delivery orders
YAKITORI
Also try our Sushi Bar
DOWNTOWN ONLY
Downtown
16 E. Bijou
578-0915
M-Thurs 11 am-3 pm 5-9 pm
Fri & Sat 11 am-3 pm 5-10pm

ANNOUNCEMENTS

SENIORS—bummed out because you can't get any money for your overseas research project next year? Get a free $11,000 to help you out. That's right, the Thomas J. Watson Foundation grants $15,000 for married and $11,000 for single college graduates "of unusual promise" to do an independent study and travel abroad.

For those interested, write your porposal now and have a selection committee member go over it several times before the final draft is submitted. Deadline is Monday, Sept. 29.

Contact Marcia Dobson, Armstrong 131; Margi Duncombe, Palmer 41; or Kieth Kester, Olin 307a for details and application procedures.

LOST: Boomerang at football field on 9-16. Call Brad, x287. Dangerous in the wrong hands.

Gay Rap Group meets Mondays at 7:00. Discussion and community for students who are gay, bisexual, or exploring their sexuality. Call x384 for details.

Colorado Springs Dance Theatre will offer a masterclass with the Houston Ballet at Colorado College from 3:30 to 5:00 p.m. on Oct. 2, 1986. This intermediate level ballet technique class will be taught by a member of the company.

The class is offered in connection with the residency of Houston Ballet for performances of "The Sleeping Beauty" on Oct. 1 & 2 at 8:00 p.m. at Pikes Peak Center. CC students need to sign up for master classes at the Dance Department Slom Lomossan, Peggy Berg.

For additional information regarding the Houston class or dates and times of the Wiener classes, please call the Dance Theatre office at 630-7434.

ACM Arts of London-Florence Program: Study theatre and art history in London, Renaissance art and Italian literature and film in Florence spring semester. Final application deadline for this spring's program is October 6th. See Susan Ashley, Palmer 205 for information and application forms.

Don't miss the first meeting of the Nihilist Collective—Confirm your own priorities in the openness of the eternal now of becomming. We will be planning for the hermeneutic circus and we will be listening to Ravel's piece for piano: "Le Tombeau De Couperin." Bring suggestions! Bring a dish! We meet each week in Group-Listening Room #5, located in the Albert Seay Library of Music and Art, which is located in Packard Hall.

The International Student Organization meets for lunch programs at noon the first three Mondays of every block in the Political Science Seminar room, Palmer 22-C. The group is not limited to foreign students. Everyone who is interested in envouraging international outreach at CC is welcome.

ACM Florence Program: Anyone interested in applying early to study art history, Italian language, and history for the fall, 1987 semester in Florence, Italy, should see Susan Ashley, Palmer 205 for information and application forms. Deadline for early applications, October 6th, for regular applications, early March, 1987.

MEDITATION—Shove Chapel: 8:00-8:30 a.m., Tues., Sept. 23rd. Music, silence, mystical and/or other writings (enter by northeast door).

LOST: The best bike in the whole wide world. If found call Pee Wee, ext 666.

AN EXCITING WAY TO EARN CC CREDIT—The Sullivan gubornatorial campaign in Wyoming is looking for enthusiastic CC students for block 2 of this year. This is your chance to see all aspects involved in one of the most exciting campaigns of the year. For more information contact: Michelle Sullivan (307) 472-6453.

Collegium Musicum Auditions—Interested in the Middle Ages or the Renaissance? The Collegium Musicum, a campus organization dedicated to studying and performing early music, will hold

STUDENTS: "Only through art can we get outside of ourselves and know another's view of the universe..." —Marcel Proust. ESCAPE YOUR SELF, contribute to LEVIATHAN. Submit at Bemis Desk or the Student Center.

"DRUGS OF THE EIGHTIES: Coke, Crack and Ecstasy." Plan to attend an important campus talk given by C.U. professor Bill Olson. Held at 3 p.m., Thursday, Oct. 2 in Loomis Lounge, the program should provide useful information for students looking for the real story. Remember, the first Thursday of Block Two.

LACROSSE MEETING Sept. 29, 6:30 p.m. in El Palmar Class Room. Meeting is for anyone interested in playing male or female. Please come.

OR PERHAPS A RAISON?
Students: The Catalyst welcomes writers, columnist, photographers, lampoonists and bearded poets. Meetings are Sundays at 7:00 (except first week of the block when they are Monday at 7:00). Free raisins too!
—The Editors

Parents Divorced?

Come learn and talk about it

"Dealing With Your Parents Divorce" workshop

1st Presbyterian Chruch,

219 E. Bijou. Tues. night

beginning Sept. 23rd, 6:50 p.m.

Call 633-8033 for more information

Are you considering professional school?

HARVARD UNIVERSITY

JOHN F. KENNEDY
SCHOOL OF GOVERNMENT

Is Looking for Future Leaders in Public Affairs.

Come Learn About Harvard's Two-Year Master's Program in Public Policy, Leading to either the Master in Public Policy or City and Regional Planning Degree.

Joint Degree Options and Cross-Registration Opportunities with Other Schools

Meet with a Kennedy School Representative

DATE: Tuesday, October 7

TIME: 1:00-3:00 group

LOCATION: Please contact your Career Placement Office for this information.

All Students, All Majors, All Years Welcome!

Puzzle

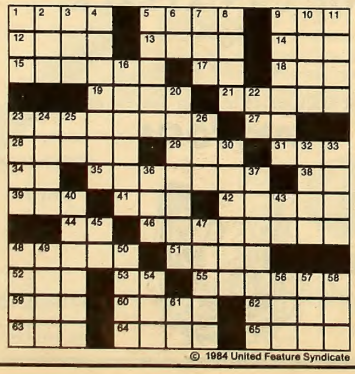
ACROSS

1 Highway
5 Bucket
9 Novelty
12 One opposed
13 Small island
14 Anger
15 Funeral car
17 The soul
18 Moray
19 — homo
21 Out of date
23 Instructors
27 Marching cadence: abbr.
28 Angry
29 Edge
31 In music, high
34 Symbol for nickel
35 Besmirched
38 Faeroe Islands whirlwind
39 Sodium chloride
41 Dine
42 Brief
44 Babylonian deity
46 Cruel
48 Box
51 Debatable
52 That woman
53 French article
55 Worships
59 Hostelry
60 Dry
62 A state
63 Dance step
64 Promontory
65 Act

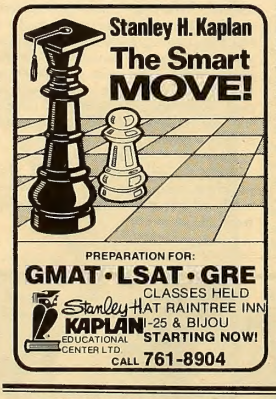
DOWN

1 Cheer
2 Individual
3 Indonesian
4 Leads
5 Fragment
6 For instance
7 Kind
8 Jump
9 Religious festival
10 War god
11 Erase: printing
16 Plot
20 Printer's error
22 Paid notice
23 Containers
24 Silkworm
25 Cooled lava
26 Title of respect
30 Manner
32 Defeat
33 Golf mounds
36 Organ of hearing
37 Triangular
40 Becomes aware
43 Concerning
45 Near
47 Frogs
48 Chisel
49 Rockfish
50 Verve
54 Before
56 Fish eggs
57 Female sheep
58 Mournful
61 Land mass: abbr.

S	P	A	T		S	P	I	N		K	E	Y
H	E	R	O		T	O	L	A		O	N	E
E	R		W	A	R	D		P	A	R
	O	T		B	A	I	T		M	E	S	S
S	U	I	T		P	U	S	H		A	T	T
P	I	L	E	D		M	A	I	D		R	O
A	S	T	E	R	N		R	E	A	S	O	N
T	I		M	O	O	T		D	R	O	N	E
E	T	A		P	R	A	M		T	A	G	S
S	E	L	L		M	I	E	N		P	H
		T	O	D		L	A	O	S		O	N
T	E	A		E	T	O	N		A	L	L	Y
E	A	R		W	A	R	S		W	I	D	E



© 1984 United Feature Syndicate



$$$

CATALYST

Volume 20, No. 3 | Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado | 3 October 1986

The Governor and the Priest

Lamm, McCormick Discuss Medical Ethics

BY MICHAEL S. MEHAN

How do ethics relate to the system of health care in the United States? This was the topic of a discussion yesterday in Packard Hall between Governor Richard Lamm and Catholic theologian, Father Richard A. McCormick.

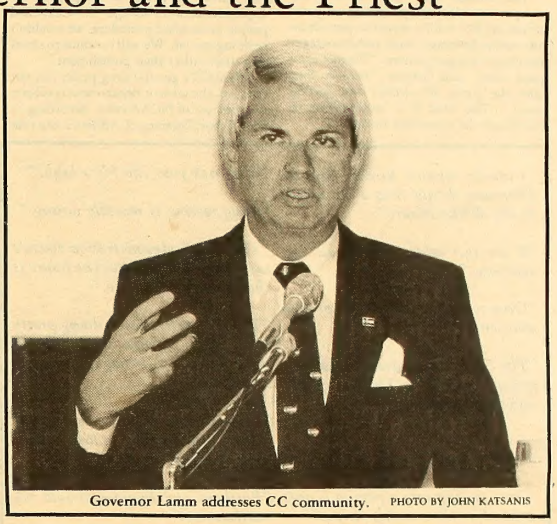
The discussion, entitled, "Ethics of Health Care Policy," was sponsored by the Colorado College and the Penrose Hospital Department of Pastoral Care.

Governer Lamm and Father McCormick spoke individually, then together, discussing several sides of the health care policy issue including the costs of health care in America, the effectiveness of our preventive health programs, technology and medicine, and ways to get more health care for our money.

Governor Lamm has long been involved with health care policy in the United States.

with health care policy in the United States. In 1967, as a state representative, he sponsored a bill to help legalize therapeutic abortions in the state of Colorado and to help abused children. He

Continued pg. 4



Governor Lamm addresses CC community. PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

An Eight Block Update

Faculty Decides To Hold On Vote

BY DAVID KLEIN

"We have made it [The Block Plan] work, and we have a right to place confidence in ourselves. We will make it [the eight Block Plan] work," said Professor Dennis Showalter to the applause of his peers at the September 22 faculty meeting.

Professor Judy Genova, a member of the Committee for an Eight Block year, cited flexibility as the key issue. A problem areises when there are only 32 possible blocks and 32 blocks required for graduation. With an upgrading of the adjunct program and the creation of other options, students can compensate for missing blocks.

She also hoped for two votes at the October meeting, one on the proposal itself and one on the date of implementation.

Professor James Yaffe then rose to suggest an alternative to the 8-7 idea. He propounded the 9-7 (nine clases per year propounded the 9-7 plan (nine clases per year with professors teaching seven blocks) with only 32 blocks required for graduation. He asked for a vote by December.

However Professor Gale Murray rejected this proposal saving the calander Committee had found the 9-7 plan unsuitable on two grounds: 1) potential pressures on class size 2) discontinuity of a schedule where faculty would be out of the classroom more but still be obliged to advise students and serve on committees.

Students Jon Marc Patterson and Steve Franklin expressed concern that the plan would decrease flexibility and not allow students time off. Registrar Al Johnson countered that a decrease in the flexibility would help ease the five block senior problem. Professor Berg took another approach claiming the increased adjunct proposal will augment flexibility by integrating disciplines.

Professors feared the impact on the class size under both the 8-7 and 9-7 plans. Professor Werner Heim figured a statistical projection of a 1.77 student increase per class under the 9-7 program with 32 credits required for graduation.

The faculty then discussed the purpose of an 8-7 plan. "The 8-7 proposal is" according to Professor Carol Neel "a call for greater commitment to the teaching and learning situation."

Professor Boderman took a more cautious approach stating, "We must demonstrate that we can produce a better, nobler education . . . We must make the case." He was supported by Professor Pickle who pointed out that the proposals details needed to be spelled out.

The faculty split on the need for immediate action, with a group of professors expressing a need to approve and implement immediately while the opposition emphasized the need for further research and careful consideration.

The status of the Eight Block year is unclear. At the end of the faculty meeting a motion was passed calling for the Eight Block Committee and the Academic Program Committee to do an intensive study of the eight block year and other proposals. There are no guarantees that there will be a vote at the October faculty meeting.

A random sampling of CC students produced the following results.

As the proposal stands are you for or against the eight block plan?

35% For 62% Against 3% Undecided

Do you consider yourself well informed on the proposal?

77% Yes 23% No

Ingredients of CC Drug Attitudes

Dealers Scared, Administration Maintains Same Policy, Usage Continues

BY LIZ CHENEY

"We seek to create a massive change in national attitudes which ultimately will separate the drugs from the customer, to take the user away from the supply. I believe, quite simply, that we can help them quit." These were the words of President Reagan as he announced his nationwide war on drugs. His televised speech sparked classroom discussion and mealtime debate, but did it change anyone's behavior? Are CC students doing less drugs? Is the college administration cracking down on drug use?

Interviews conducted this week, with randomly selected students at meals and in the residence halls, yielded mixed results. Many students agreed that the availability of certain drugs, especially marijuana, has declined. "Pot used to cost $35-$45 per bag," reported one student, "Now you have to pay around $70.00. This is because Reagan has really clamped down on US trade." Other explanations offered for this phenomenon included: "It was a really dry summer," and "The demand for cocaine has gotten so high that it's a much more profitable drug for dealers to sell. Everybody has stopped selling pot." Students still list marijuana among the most heavily used drugs on campus. Others on this list include alcohol, cocaine, and mushrooms.

There also seems to be an element of fear involved. Dealers don't want to get caught. Said one student, "The number of people selling drugs is way down because they're afraid the administation is cracking down and they don't want to get busted." An interesting result of this, students reported, is that local residents are filling the gaps as CC student dealers pull out of the market. "They don't usually come on campus," one student reported, "We go to them."

This fear that the administration is practicing a stricter enforcement of drug policies is partially unfounded. Dean Laurel McLeod explained, "The college has always included a strong statement on drug use in the Pathfinder, and we will continue to do so. If we have any solid evidence (i.e. eyewitnesses) of drug use the college will not look the other way. We will bring charges against the accused students."

"Our focus, however," McLeod continued, "is education and not the policing of student behavior." McLeod made it clear that the college is not a

Continued pg. 2

In Defense of the Eight Block Plan

See Pages 8 and 9

The Inside Stories of Five CC Alums,

See Pages 12 and 13

Reproduced from 1959 "Tiger"

Drugs continued from pg. 1

sanctuary and the police need no permission to come on campus. "The Administration does, however, recognize that students have to make decisions about the use of drugs," McLeod said, "They need to be educated about the effects and consequences of drug use in order to make those decisions. Students also need to be alert and aware about the behavior of their friends, in order to help out those who might be in trouble."

Doug Gertner, CC's Alcohol and Drug Educator, explained, "It's not as though President Reagan said 'jump' and we're 'jumping.' While his involvement has brought media attention to the issue, thus making my job easier, I see it basically as an election year ploy." He emphasized that the administration continues to hold the same view of their role in the drug issue.

"When you come to college," said Gertner, "drugs are an elective subject you can choose to take. Each student has an academic advisor to help them make the right choices about other subjects. The Residential Life staff is here to help you make the right choices outside the classroom."

Gertner stressed that this is a position in which the college makes no moral judgment about the use of drugs. The school is, however, bound by law to enforce the illegality of certain substances, and Gertner emphasized that if there is evidence of the sale or use of any illegal substance, the college will initiate judicial proceedings.

The college is, Gertner believes, "getting back to the basics of the drug policy." This was made especially clear to the Residential Advisors at their training session before classes started this fall. They were told, Gertner said, that they are responsible for making it clear to students that alcohol consumption (3.2 beer consumption if you're under 21) is allowed only in student rooms, on residence hallways, in lounges at the end of the halls, and in other designated areas away from public thoroughfares. In addition, if it comes to the attention of an RA that students are illegally using alcohol or drugs they must intervene. According to Gertner, this intervention may take the form of a verbal warning, and need not involve any higher authority unless the RA deems this necessary.

The college also now requires any campus organization sponsoring an event where alcohol will be served to provide an alternative beverage, food, and encourages the choice of a party theme. "Themes are a good idea," said Gertner, "because they take the focus off alcohol and getting drunk." The food is a requirement to counteract the consumed alcohol.

During the second week of third block CC will be involved in National Alcohol Awareness Week. Two of the featured events will be a driving simulator on which students can test the effects of beer on their driving ability, and breathalizer tests to be taken by the Deans of the College after the consumption of alcohol.

Programs such as this and the "Drugs of the Eighties" discussion this week are, Gertner Believes, one of the main tools of his job. While the administration is bound by law to take action in student drug cases, that action need not be suspension or expulsion from the college. "If we expelled people as standard procedure, we wouldn't be doing our job. We will continue to stress education rather than punishment."

While CC's general drug policy has not changed, the athletic department is subject to a new set of NCAA rules. According to Dick Tabor, Director of Athletics, the rule "applies only to championship events and states that athletes who participate can be tested for a wide range of drugs." These drugs include performance-enhancing substances such as caffeine and amphetamines, as well as "street drugs." If the test results are positive, the entire team will forfeit the competition, and the individual testing positive will be ineligible for further competition for 90 days. If a second test is positive the individual will be eligible to compete for one year.

CC athletes were required to sign a release stating that they would submit to testing if the situation arose. Tabor reported that reaction to this was, for the most part, positive. "A number of people felt it violated their constitutional rights," Tabor said, "However, the NCAA is a private organization and participation in championship event is entirely voluntary. If a student chooses to participate, they must abide by the rules set down by the organization." Todd Meisinger, a sophomore member of the football team agreed. "This is a good rule," he said, "because people shouldn't be using drugs and testing is a definite deterrent."

Most students surveyed (see accompanying quotes) were resounding against mandatory testing. Dean McLeod assured us that across-the-board testing is not being considered.

The most obvious effect of the Reagan speech is that it has encouraged increased awareness of the problem of drugs in our community. While the college administration has not altered its policies, CC students are aware of the increasing concern about drug use. The administration most likely will continue to stress education and rehabilitation, while at the same time reserving moral judgment, and vowing not to "look the other way." CC students will, no doubt, continue to party and partake of substances which they feel enhance this experience.

"I totally support Ronald Reagan. Everyone should send a can of pee to the White House."

"If we test athletes we must test everyone."

"Drug testing is guilty until proven innocent."

"The Reagan Administration's policy is laughable. There are much higher priorities."

"Nancy Reagan's on valium."

"Drug testing says a person is only as good as their bodily waste."

"People experiment and that's not necessarily wrong."

"Why risk your life for a high?"

"Drug testing is morally wrong."

"The school administration doesn't care. Everybody knows the house is the center of drug use."

"The administration is doing pretty well. They enforce the policy if infractions are brought to their attention."

"What people do with their bodies is their own business as long as they keep it out of my face."

"Portland and Boulder should tax mushrooms."

"The grossest, most ridiculous thing in the world is twenty people on ecstasy."

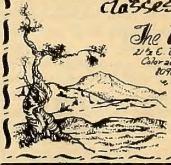
FREE
FLAVORED CORN
Bring this coupon with you the next time you buy a 30 oz. bag of Vic's popcorn. You'll get a FREE medium bag of the flavored corn of your choice.
- buttery caramel
- zesty cheese
- spicy cinnamon

Good at Uintah location only. Limit one per coupon.
CORN Vic's POPPER
1864 W. Uintah 520-9129
Mon-Sat 10-7 Sun 12-6

A NOSTALGIC BOUTIQUE
Antique Costume Jewelry
Equisite Clothing
Unique & Fun Accessories
126 N. Nevada Ave.
636-9640
Use this for 10% off

patagonia®
Synchilla®

Mountain Chalet
CC's Outdoor Connection
226 N. Tejon
Downtown • 633-0732

for Handknitters, Handweavers & Fiber Artists
We carry a large selection of high fashion yarns & pattern books — French, British & domestic — also available: excellent quality economy yarns from $8.00/lb
• weaving & knitting classes •


The Unique
215 E. Bijou
Colorado Springs Colorado 80903
(303) 473-9496

Homemade
Sandwiches
Soups &
Salads
Orders to go 633-8588
823 N. Tejon
(3 min. from campus)
And yes
we have Roses and
Baloons too!

Olson Talks About Drugs of the Eighties

BY CAROLINE BRYAN

On Thursday afternoon at three o'clock, Bill Olson delivered a lecture on the "drugs of the eighties," coke, crack and ecstasy. His lecture, a part of the drug education program at the Colorado College, was aimed mainly at providing straightforward, non-biased information on these drugs.

Mr. Olson began his lecture with a recapitulation of the events of the 1960's time, or a momentary high. Drugs had made their move from the ghettos into the homes of many people.

Today, drugs are not at all an uncommon thing. Society has begun to address drug issues, and drug related problems with a much more realistic attitude. Because of the vast variety of synthetic drugs available today, the problem has become infinitely more complex.

Greek Update

BY SCOTT HOLSTEIN

The Interfraternity Council and The Panhellenic Council are sponsoring an all campus Tricycle Relay Race this weekend during halftime of the football game. All proceeds from the team entry fees ($5 per team) will be donated to The Bijou House Soup Kitchen to help feed the needy. There will be awards given to the winners of the

CC Participates in South African Symposium

BY DAVID A. FITZGERALD

On October 8 at 8:00 p.m. eastern time, American Public Radio will broadcast a national collegiate symposium focusing on Africa. The symposium which will oadcast from Middlebury college in ont, will feature a panel discussion on omic sanctions as well as estment. At 6 p.m. in Armstrong C students will gather to listen to the roadcast and formulate questions for scussion period in the second hour of rogram. The questions raised by CC nts will be posed to the panel if they t repeat previous questions.

e Honorable Malcolm Fraser, former alian Prime Minister, will lead the cast. Other guests will include John ham, former Associate Chancellor of niversity of California at Santa Cruz, moderater Bob Potter who is an ienced Minnesota Public Radio Host.

Honorable Malcolm Fraser is ntly the co-chairman of the nonwealth Eminent Persons Group recently called for international ons against South Africa. Professor ham is currently on the political e faculty at Santa Cruz, and chairman University of California Committee lucational Programs for Black South in Students. He opposes college estment.

arrive within 30 minutes, present this coupon to the driver for $3.00 off your order. One coupon per pizza.

Fast, Free Delivery. Good at listed locations.

large!
And, hot to your door in 30 minute or less, GUARANTEED!

Offer expires Nov. 1, 1986.

635-1511

DOMINO'S PIZZA DELIVERS® FREE.

All Pizzas Include Our Special Blend of Sauce and 100% Real Cheese.

Our Superb Cheese Pizza
12" Cheese $5.65
16" Cheese $7.95

Additional Items
Pepperoni, Mushrooms, Ham, Onions, Green Peppers, Black Olives, Pineapple, Sausage, Ground Beef, Jalapeno Peppers,
Extra Cheese (1 item)
Double Cheese (2 items)
Thick Crust, Extra Sauce
Each Item
12" item $ .79
16" item $1.19

Ask about our Group Discount (on 5 or more pizza orders).

We accept checks.

Prices do not include tax. Our drivers carry less than $20.00

Open for Lunch Every Day
11 am - 12 am Sun.-Thurs.
11 am - 1 am Fri.-Sat.

Drugs continued from pg. 1

sanctuary and the police need no permission to come on campus. "The Administration does, however, recognize that students have to make decisions about the use of drugs," McLeod said, "They need to be educated about the effects and consequences of drug use in order to make those decisions. Students also need to be alert and aware about the behavior of their friends, in order to help out those who might be in trouble."

Doug Gertner, CC's Alcohol and Drug Educator, explained, "It's not as t President Reagan said 'jump' and 'jumping.' While his involvemen brought media attention to the issue making my job easier, I see it basicall election year ploy." He emphasize the administration continues to ho same view of their role in the drug

"When you come to college," Gertner, "drugs are an elective subje can choose to take. Each student h academic advisor to help them mak right choices about other subjects Residential Life staff is here to hel make the right choices outside classroom."

Gertner stressed that this is a posit which the college makes no judgment about the use of drugs school is, however, bound by law to e the illegality of certain substances Gertner emphasized that if the evidence of the sale or use of any substance, the college will initiate ju proceedings.

The college is, Gertner bel "getting back to the basics of the policy." This was made especially cl the Residential Advisors at their tr session before classes started this fall were told, Gertner said, that the responsible for making it clear to stu that alcohol consumption (3.2 beer consumption if you're under 21) is allowed only in student rooms, on residence hallways, in lounges at the end of the halls, and in other designated areas away from public thoroughfares. In addition, if it comes to the attention of an RA that students are illegally using alcohol or drugs they must intervene. According to Gertner, this intervention may take the form of a verbal warning, and need not involve any higher authority unless the RA deems this necessary.

During the second week of third block CC will be involved in National Alcohol Awareness Week. Two of the featured events will be a driving simulator on which students can test the effects of beer on their driving ability, and breathalizer tests to be taken by the Deans of the College after the consumption of alcohol.

Programs such as this and the "Drugs of the Eighties" discussion this week are, Gertner Believes, one of the main tools of his job. While the administration is bound by law to take action in student drug cases, "applies only to championship events a states that athletes who participate can tested for a wide range of drugs." The drugs include performance-enhancin substances such as caffeine an amphetamines, as well as "street drugs." the test results are positive, the entire tea will forfeit the competition, and th individual testing positive will be ineligib for further competition for 90 days. If second test is positive the individual will eligible to compete for one year.

CC athletes were required to sign

FREE
FLAVORED CORN
Bring this coupon with you the next time you buy bag of Vic's popcorn. You'll get a FREE mediur the flavored corn of your choice.
- buttery caramel
- zesty cheese
- spicy cinnamon

Good at Uintah location only. Limit one per coupon.
CORN Vic's POPPER
1864 W. Uintah 520-9129
Mon-Sat 10-7 Sun

Colorado College
TAYLOR TRAVEL is "Catty—Corner" from C. C. Campus
and . . . .
---- has assisted CC Students with their travel needs since 1969
---- has seats for Christmas with chartered bus to Denver Airport
---- specializes in all your block breaks
---- has expertise in Student I.D.'s, Eurail passes, youth Hostel cards, etc.
---- will bill your parents
---- friendly travel agents willing to search for the LOWEST FARE
AMERICAN EXPRESS Vacation Store Representative
818 N. Tejon St. 636-3871
Your Campus Travel Agency

SILK STOCKIN
A NOSTALGIC BOUTIQUE
Antique Costume Jewelry
Equisite Clothing
Unique & Fun Accessories
126 N. Nevada Ave.
636-9640
Use this for 10% off

Mountain Chalet
CC's Outdoor Connection
226 N. Tejon
Downtown • 633-0732

Orders to go 633-8588
823 N. Tejon
(3 min. from campus)
And yes we have Roses and Baloons too!

Olson Talks About Drugs of the Eighties

BY CAROLINE BRYAN

On Thursday afternoon at three o'clock, Bill Olson delivered a lecture on the "drugs of the eighties," coke, crack and ecstasy. His lecture, a part of the drug education program at the Colorado College, was aimed mainly at providing straightforward, non-biased information on these drugs.

Mr. Olson began his lecture with a recapitulation of the events of the 1960's which, he believes, are the major events that led to the popularization of recreational drugs. Referring to the sixties as a time of experimentation, he acknowledged that many of the experiments were a product of the naivete of society. Nevertheless, the experiments of the 1960's set a precedent for the rapid increase in the use of recreational rugs. For the first time, the drug users were predominantly white, middle class Americans who were searching for a good time, or a momentary high. Drugs had made their move from the ghettos into the homes of many people.

Today, drugs are not at all an uncommon thing. Society has begun to address drug issues, and drug related problems with a much more realistic attitude. Because of the vast variety of synthetic drugs available today, the problem has become infinitely more complex.

In the 60's, the common drugs were marajuana and LSD. Today, the wide variety of available drugs has caused many problems. Drugs are mixed or "cut" with other drugs, and are sometimes substituted for one another while the user is totally unaware of these occurrences. Mr. Olson views this as a danger, and consequently cause enough for better and more straightforward education with regard to drugs.

Mr. Olson addressed the topic of cocaine by showing a purely informational film entitled "The Haight-Ashbury Cocaine Film." The film focused mainly on the physiological effects of using cocaine, although it did feature a few short interview sections that dealt with the psychological and social implications. His discussion of crack, the prepared freebase form of cocaine, and ecstasy, a drug that was originally used for psychotherapy, was much more informal. The lecture was opened up to a question and answer session which gave students the chance to clarify their conceptions about these drugs.

Bill Olson is a trained clinical psychologist who has been practicing for twenty years. He is currently the director of the alcohol and drug program at CU Boulder. He will be delivering periodic lectures to the CC community on related topics.

Planetary Wisdom

- Philosophy
- Psychology
- Metaphysics
- Eastern & Western Religion
- Children's Creativity
- Women's Subjects

The Lighthouse
713 Manitou Avenue, Manitou Springs
685-5290
Open seven days a week

Greek Update

BY SCOTT HOLSTEIN

The Interfraternity Council and The Panhellenic Council are sponsoring an all campus Tricycle Relay Race this weekend during halftime of the football game. All proceeds from the team entry fees ($5 per team) will be donated to The Bijou House Soup Kitchen to help feed the needy. There will be awards given to the winners of the race as well as to the team with the most creative costume. The race will be held around the running track and all teams should be on the field two minutes before halftime starts. If you have not signed up yet look for a booth at lunch and dinner on Friday night at Bemis/Taylor.

Other upcoming GREEK events include:

- An all campus Blue Key and IFC/PANHEL sponsored Homecoming party this Saturday afternoon.
- Sorority Rush, which will be held during second block break.
- Alcohol Awareness Week activities which will be held during Alcohol Awareness Week in the first week of third block.

Individual Fraternity News:

- The Fijis have initiated a driving service provided for CC students who have drunk too much at Murph's (details at Murph's).
- The Phi Delts are pleased with the results of their fall rush (upperclass only)
- The School has almost completed the renovations on the Sigma Chi house.
- The Beta house collected over six hundred cans of food at their Cavemar. party to help feed the needy.
- The Kappa Sigs are having a Homecoming Bar-B-Que this Friday night for parents and alumni of the fraternity.

CC Participates in South African Symposium

BY DAVID A. FITZGERALD

On October 8 at 8:00 p.m. eastern time, American Public Radio will broadcast a national collegiate symposium focusing on South Africa. The symposium which will be broadcast from Middlebury college in Vermont, will feature a panel discussion on economic sanctions as well as disinvestment. At 6 p.m. in Armstrong hall, CC students will gather to listen to the live broadcast and formulate questions for the discussion period in the second hour of the program. The questions raised by CC students will be posed to the panel if they do not repeat previous questions.

The Honorable Malcolm Fraser, former Australian Prime Minister, will lead the broadcast. Other guests will include John Markham, former Associate Chancellor of the University of California at Santa Cruz, and moderater Bob Potter who is an experienced Minnesota Public Radio Host. The Honorable Malcolm Fraser is currently the co-chairman of the Commonwealth Eminent Persons Group which recently called for international sanctions against South Africa. Professor Markham is currently on the political science faculty at Santa Cruz, and chairman of the University of California Committee on Educational Programs for Black South African Students. He opposes college disinvestment.

DOMINO'S PIZZA®

TWO 12" ONE TOPPING PIZZAS FOR $9.14

(TAX NOT INCLUDED)
Please see below for other selections.

Limited Delivery Area
Our drivers carry less than $20

AVOID THE NOID
CALL DOMINO'S PIZZA

30 minute guarantee

If your pizza does not arrive within 30 minutes, present this coupon to the driver for $3.00 off your order.
One coupon per pizza.

Fast, Free Delivery
Good at listed locations.

One of the greatest offers ever from Domino's Pizza—two 12" pizzas for the price of a large! Twice the pizza for one low price!

For a limited time, order any two 12" pizzas (they don't have to be the same), and you'll get them for the price of one 16". The price will be determined by the pizza with the most toppings.

Two 12" pizzas will only cost you:

Superb cheese	$7.95
1 topping	$9.14
2 toppings	$10.33
3 toppings	$11.52
4 toppings	$12.71
5 toppings	$13.90
6 toppings	$15.09

Twice the pizza for one low price—two 12" pizzas for the price of a large!
And, hot to your door in 30 minute or less, GUARANTEED!

Offer expires Nov. 1, 1986.

635-1511

DOMINO'S PIZZA DELIVERS® FREE.

All Pizzas Include Our Special Blend of Sauce and 100% Real Cheese.

Our Superb Cheese Pizza
12" Cheese $5.65
16" Cheese $7.95

Additional Items
Pepperoni, Mushrooms, Ham, Onions, Green Peppers, Black Olives, Pineapple, Sausage, Ground Beef, Jalapeno Peppers,
Extra Cheese (1 item)
Double Cheese (2 items)
Thick Crust, Extra Sauce
Each Item
12" item $ .79
16" item $1.19

Ask about our Group Discount (on 5 or more pizza orders).

We accept checks.

Prices do not include tax. Our drivers carry less than $20.00

Open for Lunch Every Day
11 am - 12 am Sun.-Thurs.
11 am - 1 am Fri.-Sat.

Lamm continued from pg. 1

Father McCormick.

has also written and spoken extensively on the subject.

Father McCormick has a long and distinguished history in the area of health care policy and how ethics relate to it. He has written two books on the subject, How Brave a New World?: Dilemas in Bioethics, and Persons, Patients and Problems. He has served as a director of the Church's Center for Theology and Public Policy and on the ethical advisory board of the United States Department of Health, Education and Welfare. He was formerly a Rose F. Kennedy Professor of Christian Ethics at the Kennedy Institute of Ethics at Georgetown University, and is now a profesor of Moral Theology at Notre Dame University.

LAMM'S TEN COMMANDMENTS

In an attempt to understand the issue of health care policy in the United States, Governor Lamm spoke about his ten "commandments" of health care, though he had to confess that he had only nine commandments.

"Society cannot live by health care alone" was the first commandment. According to Lamm, our country has placed too high a priority on health care spending. "One value seems to be replacing all others, health care," said Lamm. He stated that our concern with health care was hindering our ability to invest in other areas, such as education and rebuilding our infrastructure. The heavy burden of health care costs are "part solution and part problem," according to Lamm.

"Thou shalt honor thy doctors and hospitals and also the sewage disposal operator." Doctors alone do not mean better national health, believes Lamm. Better health could be obtained if we attacked the problems of smoking, drinking, eating too much and not wearing seat belts, instead of spending more money on health care. In the US we spend $2,000 per capita on health care, in England they spend $500 per capita, and in Singapor, they spend only $200, yet we all have the same health statistics, cited Lamm.

Commandments three and four dealt particularly with spending: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor, but we cannot give him all the health care available and bankrupt the country," and "we must put our money where we get the most health care for the billion dollars a day we are spending." "We have to recognize that the miracles of medicine are not pacing our economic resources," said Governor Lamm. What we need, according to Lamm is "cost appropriate medicine."

In responding to a question as to how we may decide what is "appropriate" spending, Lamm answered that this must be decided mostly by the physicians themselves, they must decide when they are wasting money. According to the Governor, people in the medical profession are researching all the areas of medicine and trying to decide what is necessary and what is waste.

Thou shalt not "over doctor" our society, was Lamm's fifth commandment. He sighted the excesses in our medical system: over testing, over diagnosing, and the fact that we are training, in his opinion, too many doctors. By the year 2000, we will have 145,000 extra doctors, he said.

Commandment six, "Thou shalt not will or strive in vain to live," posed the question, where does one draw the line on keeping comatose people alive? "We treat death as if it were optional," said Lamm. According to Lamm, we spend hundreds of thousands of dollars just to die.

Commandment seven: "We shall honor our mothers and fathers, but also our children." In Lamm's opinion, we must find a way to take care of our elderly and our children. He sited spending on each group, saying that we spent twice as much on the elderly than on our children. When asked about his feelings toward medicare, he said he believed it had to be reformed and based not on age necessarily, but on need.

Commandments eight and nine dealt with technology and health care. "Thou shalt not covet they neighbor's wife's artificial heart," and "Thou shalt not worship graven images of medical technology." "I admire the miracles of medicine," he said, "but would we have cured polio if we had put our money into artificial lungs? So too we shall not cure heart disease by putting money into artificial hearts." He believes that simple medical research in more common fields of medicine would yield greater health benefits than research in such exotic fields as artificial hearts.

"ETHICS AT A MACRO LEVEL"

Father McCormick described Lamm's views as "ethics at a macro level." Father McCormick agreed with much of what Lamm said, "The fact that there is an ethical problem leads to his (Governer Lamm's) commandments."

Father McCormick addressed the ethical questions at a more personal, micro level. He described the relationship between medicine and ethics in five ways.

Ethics as threat, ethics as answers, ethics in the difference between medicine and ethics in five ways.

Father McCormick addressed the ethical questions at a more personal, micro level. He described the relationship between medicine and ethics in five ways.

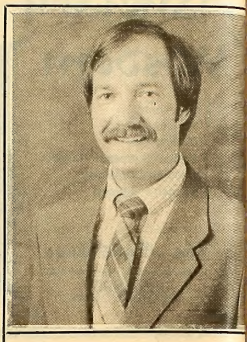
Ethics as threat, ethics as answers, ethics in the difference between the role and the person, ethics as dilemna and ethics as medical decision making, were the five areas discussed by Father McCormick.

He believes that most doctors see ethics as an outside intruder into their business. Yet he believes that many doctors seek answers in ethics. He cited instances wh doctors came to him for answers and could not provide them. "Beware th prophet bearing certainty," he said, stati the difficulty of many medical decision

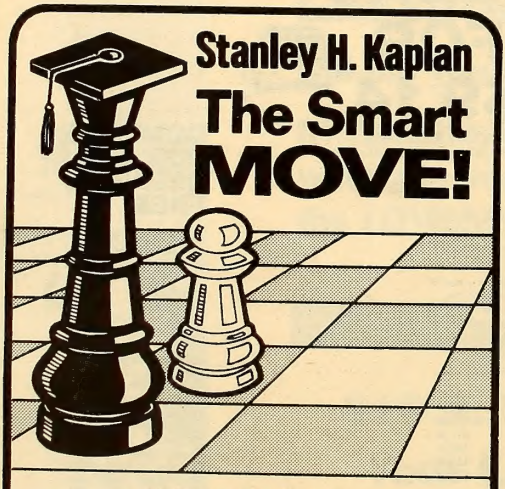
Doctors, he believed, could use ethic try and close the gap between their role doctors and their personalities. "One of great challenges is that the role grows the person does not." Doctors, he s must bring themselves closer to th patients and become "healers" not "body menders."

He concluded by saying that ethics m play a greater role in medical decis making. We must realize our limitati how much medical science can and can do, "whether a life is meaningful or cannot be judged by medical criteria."

According to Father McCorm medical decisions do not rest solely the doctors; the patients must participate in the decision making proc



Jay Beeton has been appointed direc of public relations for the University Colorado at Colorado Springs, it has b announced by Chancellor Dwayne Nuzum.



Stanley H. Kaplan
The Smart MOVE!

PREPARATION FOR:
GMAT • LSAT • GRE

Stanley H. KAPLAN Educational Center LTD.

CLASSES HELD AT DOWNTOWN RAINTREE INN I-25 & BIJOU
STARTING NOW!
(LSAT & GRE start Oct. 25)
Call 761-8904 Now!

ARE YOU SMART ENOUGH TO SAVE YOUR PARENTS THE COST OF COLLEGE?

You are, if you win an Army ROTC scholarship. When you win one of our scholarships, we pay your tuition, books, lab fees and other academic expenses. We'll also give you up to $1,000 a year extra. And when you graduate, we'll make you an Army officer.

But you have to be more than smart to win. We'll consider your extracurricular, leadership and athletic activities. And if you reach the finals, we'll meet with you for a personal interview.

For more information about how to avoid overburdening your parents for the next four years, contact the Army ROTC Professor of Military Science on your campus.

FOR SCHOLARSHIP INFORMATION, CONTACT MAJOR SANKEY, 593-3236

Focus on Japan

Growth, Stability Seen for Pacific Rim

BY TED CRAIG

Speaking Monday at a symposium on pan and the United States, businessman okutaro Kawai predicted continued onomic growth and political stability for e nations of the Pacific Rim. Echoing the ords of American ambassador Mike ansfield, he predicted that the Pacific ll be the ascendant region of the future. he panel discussion also included panese journalist Naotake Nobuhara and Professors David Finley and Walt ecox.

Mr. Kawai pointed to the economic rality of the Newly Industrialized ountries (NICs) in the region such as uth Korea, Taiwan, and Singapore, as ell as to the growth in the ASEAN tions and the People's Republic as idence of the Pacific Rim's bright future. S. trade with east Asia, he pointed out, w exceeds its trade with western Europe. Despite his optimism, Mr. Kawai did entify a number of potential threats to gional prosperity. A failure by Japan to en up its domestic market, an increase in merican protectionism, or a shrinkage of e Chinese economy could derail growth. While Mr. Nobuhara focused his marks on the existent interdependence the Japanese and American economies, rofessor Hecox raised the possibility of en greater linkage between the nations, cluding the possibility of joint rotectionism by the U.S. and Japan ainst the emerging economies of the gion. Hecox also cast doubt on the ability the Japanese economy to maintain its st success rates into the future. The lack basic science research in Japan, he gues, could lead to a drying up of new eas for technological exploitation, and e reduced innovation in turn to more fficult competition with the emrging IC economies.

Responding to a series of questions ised by Professor Finley, Mr. Kawai redicted little chance for rapprochement etween Japan and the Soviet Union. The ntinued Soviet occupation of the orthern Territories (four small islands lf of Hokkaido) precludes any real operation between the nations. The oviet Union's large military buildup in e region, he contended, as well as the earby North Korean military forces, pose gnificant security threats to Japan. In light of these threats, Kawai perceived little chance of a fallout with the United States over security issues. He also predicted an easing of the Japanese people's sentiments against strengthening the country's armed forces.

Japanese Women Still Bound by Tradition

BY LESLIE A. SCOTT

To the average American, thoughts of Japan connote samurai, shogun and tightly bound women walking three steps behind their husbands. There is no doubt that today, from a Western viewpoint, Japan still appears archaic where women's rights are concerned.

On September 29th, in an effort to inform a group of interested Westerners at Colorado College, Mrs. Yoriko Meguro, a sociology professor from Tokyo's Sophia University spoke on women in Japan. CC Professors Margi Duncombe and Jane Cauvel also took part in the discussion.

The majority of Professor Meguro's time was spent outlining the social standing of Japanese women today. Currently the work force in Japan is 1/3 female, with their average salary being 52% of their male counterparts. As for higher education, 34% of the young women in Japan attend college, the majority being enrolled in junior colleges where education is geared toward making "good wives."

Statistics like these go on and on. Professor Meguro did not defend them but instead provided a larger picture of Japan from a societal perspective. She gently reminded the audience that a country with more than a thousand years of history isn't going to suddenly veer off to the left and slip into a Western concept of women's rights.

Compared to Japan's pre-World War II conditions the state of women has changed substantially. The 1948 Amended Civil Code eliminated women's traditional subservience to father, husband and son as well as eliminating all voting limitations.

Unfortunately, Professor Meguro's time was limited and she was soon whisked away to a Colorado Springs press conference. She managed to shed some light on the rather dark picture held by Westerners of women's rights in Japan as well as give some hints of the inevitable changes to come.

Ex-President Questions CCCA Compliance

BY PAT CHISHOLM

"The administration is standing up for student's rights more than the student government is. I think that's obnoxious," says '85 grad Marc Greidinger who organized the Student Fee Reform Referendum passed by the student body during the 1985 senior elections. Greidinger claims the CCCA (CC's student government) has since ignored it. Current CCCA president Garth Fitzgerald, however, argues that the resolution was designed to apply to fee increases: since 1985, student fees have remained the same.

In 1985, Greidinger reasoned "If (the CCCA) gives the students a little more power, they would be more interested how their money is spent." He therefore petitioned 450 students to initiate the referendum. The CCCA approved voting on it by a 7-1 margin and the student body passed it by 150 votes to 26.

Each student pays approx. $50 per year in student activity fees. At CCCA election-time, a committee made up of the CCCA financial vice-president and CC administration decides on how much to raise or lower these fees. It then gets final approval from the Board of Trustees.

Under this referendum, the CCCA is to publish the fee change in by the end of block 3, and in December the student body is to approve it by a vote. If the students do not approve it, the fees stay the same.

"Then I left and things got bleary on the issue. The CCCA looked at this the next year and decided it would be a pain in the ass." says Greidinger. According to rumors he heard. "If they're going to ignore the Student Referendum, it essentially means student opinion doesn't matter at all."

Greidinger claims that the CCCA is using illegal methods by disregarding the referendum. He suggests that the CCCA submit another petition and vote it off the by-laws if they oppose it.

Greidinger says that primarily conservative students signed the petition on grounds that their activity fee-money went to fund radical student organizations. Through the student-body vote, they allegedly would have more control in deciding charters for new organizations on campus. "It's the most democratic, majoritarian proposal you can get."

"The CCCA just isn't standing up for students. Those guys should either get with it or get the hell out of office and make room for people who do the job." He adds, "The trick to make this a hot issue is to get these folks to start pointing fingers at each other."

. . . but CCCA finds flaws in referendum

CCCA president Garth Fitzgerald says the referendum is untimely and ill-suited. "The time-frame that this is supposed to is backwards in the sense that October is a time when we don't know what our budgetary needs will be for the following year."

He also noted that since it was passed, the CCCA has not requested a budget increase or decrease. The referendum has therefore not yet applied. "I think the underlying reason for not doing anything is that we haven't raised the student activity fee, and this is about raising the student activity fee."

In addition, the CCCA considers the referendum detrimental to the student-body. "The CCCA has so much more of a proper view of what might happen (concerning activities). The student body in general does not. What we fear is they (the students) don't know what that money is used for." He adds that it takes away from the role of the student government. "It would be wierd for the students to do what we represent."

Only a minority of the student-body participated in the referedum vote two years ago, and most of those students have graduated. "It's not to say that their votes don't count - they do - but you wonder if it's something that should be re-exposed to the campus and looked at again."

"I think that if someone wants to, they can re-do this referendum and make it more timely. Right now we're looking at something that isn't very viable." Fitzgerald says that the CCCA currently has more important matters to attend such as the 8 block proposal.

"We have upheld everything, but have not come to a final decision about whether it's worth doing. If we did that now, I think our decision would be not to do this, or to restructure it so that it's timely ." He concludes, "I think it's worth doing, but it would be harmful to the student body now."

Model United Nations Offers Opportunities

BY CAREY L. EWING

Last year, eight CC students participated the National Model United Nations nference held in New York City March -29. While there, the students presenting Kuwait) were able to mulate the committees and assemblies of actual United Nations. Two of the egates received awards in their mmittees for their performance. After conference the delegates returned to and shared their experiences with the mpus through articles in the Catalyst, a ursday-at-Eleven debate and an ormal reception for students interested participating the next year.

The 1987 National Model United tions will be held in New York City ril 14-18. As in the past, the NMUN mulates the committees of the General sembly, Security Council, the Economic d Social Council, UNICEF and the ernational Atomic Energy Agency. ected inter-governmental groups are also represented: NATO, the European Economic Community, the Non-Aligned Conference, the League of Arab States and others. During the conference delegates are able to sponsor and write resolutions and work to get those resolutions passed. Delegations also have the opportunity to discuss current issues with a representative from their country's U.N. Mission and a chance to see the General Assembly Hall during the opening ceremonies.

Students of any major with an interest in world affairs are encouraged to apply for the delegation. Selection is based on the individual's application and interview. Applications will be available November 1, and will be advertised prior to that date in the Catalyst. Please direct any questions to this year's organizers Jeff Strain x230 or Carey Ewing x323.

The PSAC hopes to send eight delegates, but the size of the delegation will depend upon the amount of funding granted.

Please Recycle This Paper.

Colorado College

TAYLOR TRAVEL is "Catty—Corner" from C. C. Campus

and . . . .

- has assisted CC Students with their travel needs since 1969
- has seats for Christmas with chartered bus to Denver Airport
- specializes in all your block breaks
- has expertise in Student I.D.'s, Eurail passes, youth Hostel cards, etc.
- will bill your parents
- friendly travel agents willing to search for the LOWEST FARE

AMERICAN EXPRESS Vacation Store Representative

818 N. Tejon St. 636-3871

Your Campus Travel Agency

FINALLY A FREE FLIGHT PLAN JUST FOR STUDENTS.

YOU WON'T GET A BREAK LIKE THIS ONCE YOU'RE OUT IN THE REAL WORLD.

INTRODUCING COLLEGIATE FLIGHTBANK, FROM CONTINENTAL AND NEW YORK AIR.

If you're a full-time student at an accredited college or university you can join our Collegiate FlightBank.℠ You'll receive a membership card and number that will allow you to get 10% off Continental and New York Air's already low fares. In addition, you'll get a one-time certificate good for $25 off any domestic roundtrip flight. Plus, you'll be able to earn trips to places like Florida, Denver, Los Angeles, even London and the South Pacific. Because every time you fly you'll earn mileage towards a free trip. And if you sign up now you'll also receive 3 free issues of BusinessWeek Careers magazine.

Introducing Collegiate FlightBank.℠ Earn free trips to New York, San Francisco, Boston, Washington, D.C., Miami, Chicago, or Denver. Plus, Australia, Honolulu, London, and Mexico. All told, 74 cities worldwide.

SIGN UP YOUR FRIENDS AND EARN A PORSCHE.

But what's more, for the 10 students on every campus who enroll the most active student flyers from their college there are some great rewards: 1 free trip wherever Continental or New York Air flies in the mainland U.S., Mexico or Canada. Or the grand prize, for the number one student referral champion in the nation: a Porsche and one year of unlimited coach air travel.

And how do you get to be the referral champion? Just sign up as many friends as possible, and make sure your membership number is on their application. In order to be eligible for any prize you and your referrals must sign up before 12/31/86 and each referral must fly 3 segments on Continental or New York Air before 6/15/87. And you'll not only get credit for the enrollment, you'll also get 500 bonus miles.

So cut the coupon, and send it in now. Be sure to include your current full time student ID number. That way it'll only cost you $10 for one year ($15 after 12/31/86) and $40 for four years ($60 after 12/31/86). Your membership kit, including referral forms, will arrive in 3 to 4 weeks. If you have a credit card, you can call us at 1-800-255-4321 and enroll even faster.

Now more than ever it pays to stay in school.

SIGN ME UP NOW! (Please print or type) ☐ 1 Year ($10) ☐ 2 Years ($20) ☐ 3 Years ($30) ☐ 4 Years ($40)
Must be submitted by 12/31/86.

Name_____ Date of Birth_____

College_____ Address_____

_____ Zip_____

Permanent Address_____ Zip_____

Full time student ID #_____ Year of Graduation_____

$_____ ☐ Check/Money Order Enclosed PLEASE DON'T SEND CASH
☐ American Express ☐ Visa ☐ MasterCard ☐ Diner's Club

Account Number_____ Expiration Date_____

Signature X_____

FOR MEMBERSHIP APPLICANTS UNDER THE AGE OF 18: The undersigned is the parent/guardian of the membership applicant named hereon, and I consent to his/her participation in the Collegiate FlightBank program.

Signature X_____

Send this coupon to: Collegiate FlightBank
P.O. Box 297847
Houston, TX 77297

168

Complete terms and conditions of program will accompany membership kit.

CONTINENTAL NEW YORK AIR

Some blackout periods apply for discount travel and reward redemption. Complete terms and conditions of program will accompany membership kit. Certain restrictions apply. Current full time student status required for each year of membership. To earn any prize a minimum of 12 referrals is required. All referral award winners will be announced by 8/1/87. 1699. Discount applies to mainland U.S. travel only. ©1986 Continental Air Lines, Inc. Students must be between ages 16 and 23. Registration and taxes are the responsibility of the award recipient.

LETTERS

Editor:

I have often wondered what "establishment" meant. I'd assumed it stood for people who had something important to lose by changing, radically or otherwise, the status quo of a society. But that's not true, at least not for me anymore.

The Opinions Editor of the Catalyst states vociferously the "adversary" (Satan?), that is, Russia, lacks "our basic understanding of the value of human life and liberty," that "they constantly fight for its demise." I could see these words pouring forth gloriously from the twisted mouth of an Ed Meese—while also telling me what I can read in the matter of pornography. I could also see these words dripping from the sordid mouth of a Reed Irvine (current tyrant of the ludicrous Accuracy in Media)—while calling his rightwing censorship a plea for fairness. And I could see it spring forth regally from the awshucks grin of a Ronald Reagan. But from a liberal arts student?

First I must ask what is "our basic understanding" of human life? Is it blind anti-communism? Vietnam, our 1960's version of Afghanistan? Nicaraguan intervention, support of the so-called "Contras" which entail as many atrocities as the burning villages of Vietnam ever did? What is our basic understanding of liberty? Are there clauses in our love of liberty which state that we can interfere (because of our power, influence, ideological conceit) because a state attempts (horrors!) a different form of government than ours in our own hemisphere? Intervention in the internal politics of a sovereign state?

Perhaps what we need more to "understand" is ourselves in the light of the world. No, Ms. Cheney, I do not believe we as Americans have a basic understanding of human life and liberty. I think we have the capability, the intellect and all the possibilities which go with our wealth and power to understand these terms better than any other nation has ever before.

But do we have the humility, the ability to look humingly in the mirror at ourselves, in our eyes, and believe and live the ideology we spout? Is it not about time we welcomed the rest of the world into the great and magnificent private world of greed and mammon we have created for ourselves? Is it not about time, so long into the cold war, now long after the fiasco of Vietnam, to accept the fact that we are capable of making mistakes, and that our capitalistic dogma is just that, dogma?

I think to understand human nature, human life, liberty, and all those other beautiful high-sounding words which cause so much pain and human life, we must humbly look at our own faults and foibles. And I am not talking about the blatant hypocrisy of Reagan's policies in South Africa, Nicaragua and Star Wars. I'm thinking more in the line of an awareness that we are human and swayed by emotion—an emotion which [illegible] easily twist a great idea [illegible] of us, Ms. Che[illegible]

Editor:

What do people gain by venturing out into the Wild Lands of America? There are always camping freaks who will camp every single Block Break.

When you ask them how it was when they come back it's like "totally awesome, had a great time, you should have seen the trees, mountains etc." They never tell you about the cold or the wind or the blisters.

There seems to be some kind of ritual or commune with nature that takes place. It's like "Hey, I was sitting in the pasture with all these cows and suddenly I felt just like a cow, I made a lot of friends that day."

But seriously I'm sure that most of us have had some special feeling that came from experiences in the wilderness: perhaps a view of our ancient heritage, the cyclical nature of the world becomes clear, or simply the beauty of a flower enraptures us.

It's just hard to imagine the intensity of a person who camps all the time. There is the possibility that you can be just as bored in nature as sitting at home. I guess that's why we have pseudo-campers.

Last year some friends and I were camping at some hot springs in Northern New Mexico. We were quietly and pleasantly sitting in the Springs when all of a sudden we heard some very loud music booming from the valley below (where our campsite was). When we went down after a couple of hours, we witnessed something I hadn't seen before.

These 8 college students from Albuquerque had a huge Army tent, two 5 foot high speakers, a generator, and a keg of beer between them. Repeatedly my friend had to tell them to turn the music down and by 2 a.m. he finally said if they didn't turn it off and shut up he was going to kick butt.

Anyway it is a stupid way to enjoy the woods. You go there to have peace and quiet not Led Zepplin and John Cougar Mellencamp. Also you don't go there to get totally blitzed and vomit in the bushes, although the ants might like puke and it probably makes great fertilizer.

My basic point is a simple one, I just think it is a good idea to get away from warm showers, music, and pillows every now and then to explore what remains of our rapidly disappearing wilderness (although most of us will probably have to wait until the warmer weather of the later block breaks.

Chris Propst

Editor:

One million dairy cows are scheduled for slaughter under the U.S. Dairy Termination program—while in many areas of the world, children grow up without milk because there are no dairy cows in those areas.

Heifer Project International (HPI), a nonprofit, private, interfaith organiza[illegible] 3000 of [illegible]

Editor:

The proposed reduction of the CC academic year to eight blocks is nothing more than a glazed-over decrease in the value of a CC education. The College should provide the student body with the maximum quality of education and institutional reputation possible. Students receive not only knowledge but a marketable degree based on the College's image. The block reduction plan is a nominal move toward improving the image of our faculty by promoting research, but the harm inflicted on students will overshadow any faculty benefits.

What the plan really offers us is less educational classroom opportunities for the same credits. The idea goes that we will get a better institutional reputation because instructors will have more time to research. Remember, this is the same staff that avoids the library (if not the state) like the plague over summer break.

CC has never placed the big university emphasis on publication. The fact that we see our professors and not their assistants is a major factor in the College's favor. Why change this?

How can an outsider look at what may happen here and be expected to maintain the same image of CC. Sure, we may not lose accreditation, but so what? What is this, a contest to see how low we can push our standards and get away with it?

I sensed a logical fallacy the first time I heard the plan. How stupid/gullible do the proponents think the CC students are? Why would students give up what amounts to a semester of instruction over four years (with no tuition reduction) just for longer breaks. Is returning home early and the hitting the Christmas sales, staying around a few more days eating New Year's turkey, and putting in those extra weeks on the summer job assumed to be that valuable ($5,000) to us? I hope the persons responsible for CC's future don't feel we're so easily deceived. WAKE UP, WE'RE NOT SWALLOWING THIS ONE!

Steve Gurr

drive to raise these funds. Each large dorm, the small dorms together, and the Greeks are asked to raise $350, the slaughter price for a cow. Collection boxes will be at the main desks of Loomis, Slocum, Mathais, and Bemis as well as at lunch in Taylor and at the homecoming game. Help us in an effort to help people in Mexico, Jamaica, Bolivia, Jordan, and Egypt (recipient countries) by giving two or three dollars toward a gift of lasting value—a cow and training for those who so desperately need it.

Founded in 1944, HPI currently supports projects in 34 countries, including the U.S.A. HPI is a member of the American Council of Voluntary Agencies for International Action and is listed with and meets the [illegible]ndards of the National Charities Information Bureau, [illegible]ax deductible. It is one of the [illegible]nports.

[illegible] meeting at

Eight Block Plan Revisited: An Elegant Proposal

Dear Editor:

The current debate on the eight-block proposal is sometimes seen as a struggle between faculty and students that allows only two available options: the eight-block proposal as it stands or the status quo. However, a closer look at the situation reveals the two important positions involved and how they should be reconciled.

The first position is that generally held by the faculty: they have too little time for independent work and too little flexibility under the present system. This seems to be a valid point. The observation should be made that this position stands by itself, and agreement with it does not necessarily mean agreement with the eight-block proposal. The eight-block proposal is a reaction to this situation, but it is not the only solution.

The second position is that of much of the student body. While current Colorado College students were accepted at a variety of schools, they chose CC because of its unique nature. The eight-block proposal as it stands would restrict course selection and availability and would reduce the flexibility of students in meeting their personal academic agenda—damaging this unique nature. It is important to note that the negative reaction to the eight-block plan is just that: a negative reaction to the plan itself. It is not a rejection of the faculty position that produced this "solution" we are debating.

Colorado College prides itself on being one of the premier liberal-arts institutions in the nation. It understands that it must preserve and enhance this position. The Capital Campaign is an example of this resolve to maintain this position into the future. With the campaign, the College has made the necessary financial commitment to back up this resolve.

We must face the fact that the same commitment is needed now. Meeting faculty and student needs is as important as erecting shiny new buildings and planting plush intramural fields. If we meet the needs of one group at the expense of the other, we will reduce our quality and attractiveness. If we spend the money necessary for new faculty to both relieve the burden on current faculty and continue to offer students choice and flexibility, we are getting the balance right.

I would suggest that the College keep the nine-block year, that it reduce the teaching load to seven blocks/year, and that it add the necessary additional faculty to make this possible. This is not just a compromise; it is a course for preserving the reasons we are proud to be students and faculty at CC and for fulfilling our resulting responsibilities to it.

Jon-Marc Patterson

BY THE EIGHT BLOCK YEAR COMMITTEE

Over the past three years, different faculty groups have considered a variety of proposals to improve the educational program of the College, especially in matters having to do with strengthening the quality of the educational experience for students; adjusting the exceptionally heavy teaching load to provide a better balance between formal teaching, other forms of student-faculty collaboration, faculty scholarship and long term development; developing strong co-curricular programs in light of the demands of the nine block year; and the overall problem of an academic year that is longer than most in the nation. With minimal cost and without changing the fundamental character of the Block Plan, the Eight Block Year Proposal addresses these issues in the simplest and most efficient manner. As they say in mathematics, it is an elegant solution.

Let us detail some of these gains. First the package of ideas being considered to ensure flexibility for students will create more educational flexibility than students have had under the Block Plan for many years. A winter symposium would be introduced during the extended winter break. Colorado College used to have such a symposium before the Block Plan and it is remembered by all as being one of the most exciting events on campus.

It would be voluntary for students and faculty but students who attend can earn 1/4 unit of credit. Over a period of four years, this is a source for an extra unit of credit. In addition, we are also thinking of instituting an Arts Festival during the spring break. While this will not earn credit, it is space in the calendar.

New course formats are being proposed that would emphasize independent study and provide more continuity than the segmented experience of the Block Plan usually does. For example, year-long seminars earning one unit of credit could serve as a replacement for the ninth block. Semester-long independent study courses earning 1/2 unit of credit (limit of two units) would also be available.

Lastly, free summer reading courses or a free summer school course would be available for those students with excused grades or who miss a course due to illness or family emergency. Thus, the opportunities for making up failed courses, excused courses and for taking extra credits will be there.

Everyone, students and faculty, will benefit from shorter calendar year. Students will be able to get bet summer jobs and internships and faculty will hav longer period of uninterrupted time for their o indpendent study. Perhaps with a shorter overall y and a longer winter break, we will all have energy more student/faculty collaboration and an extended curricular program where students are learning even does not take place for credit.

Indeed all the changes suggested by the Eight Bl Year proposal would bring us in line with what happening at other comparable educational institutio As appendix A of the report sh ws, most other scho already have a shorter calenda year, their faculty teaching no more than 4-6 cou es yearly, they alre evaluate their courses at 4.0 cre hours and require o 30-32 units for graduation. In t, CC before the bl plan only required 32 units for raduation. Surely, absurd to argue that pre-Bloc Plan CC was or Harvard, Brown, Swarthmore ryn Mawr, Prince Amherst, etc., are "mediocre."

The point is that things have changed since inaugurated the Block Plan and it is time for CC to m some needed adjustments. It is not that standards h been lowered elsewhere, but that an education canno measured on an economic model. A quality educatio not a function of the number of courses taken, nor the goal of any educational institution to teach stude everything about everything. These are misconcepti of the educational process under any plan. So is the b that classes here are good enough and we can just sit b and rest on our laurels.

Primarily, our goal is to teach students how to lear set them on a path of self-knowledge so that they become their own teachers in later life as well as teachers of others. And, faculty need to cont learning as much as the students. Thirty-two cou providing they are quality experiences, will do this as well as thirty-four, thirty, or whatever magic num one selects.

The Eight Block Year proposal has many merits; worthy of your serious consideration. We believe there are few risks and that everyone stands to gain a step towards excellence.

CATALYST
Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado

DAVID KLEIN
BLAIR SANFORD
Editors

LIZ CHENEY, Opinions Editor
TED CRAIG & DAVID FITZGERALD, News Editors
PATRICK CHISHOLM & KATIE DALSEMER, Features Editors
KATHY MAHONEY & ALEC REKOW, Sports Editors
ERIC BREITBARD, Arts Editor
SUSAN GRIAK, Associate Arts Editor

•

JOHN KATSANIS, Photography Editor
MIKE FRATERELLI, Copy Editor
JACK KLEIN, Layout Editor

•

JEAN BOYER
Business Manager

LINDA SHIREMAN, Typesetter
JANE NEWBERRY, Typesetter
LINDA IMHOFF, Typesetter

The Catalyst logo by JANE PATERSON

The Catalyst is published by Cutler Publications, Inc., Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado 80903. Phone (303) 473-2233 extension 675. The Catalyst is printed tri-monthly from September to May, except during holiday periods.
Cutler Publications, Inc. does not discriminate on the basis of race, color, age, religion, sex, national origin or physical handicap in its education programs, activities or employment policies in accordance with federal and state laws.
[illegible] expressed in the Catalyst are the opinions of the Catalyst staff members.
The Catalyst encourages letters to the editor. Letters should be typed or neatly printed and must be signed. Letters may be edited for length and libel. Letters should be brought to the Catalyst office in the basement of Cutler Hall, Colorado College, Colorado Springs.
A work of [illegible]

The Benefit To Students

BY TIMOTHY FULLER
POLITICAL SCIENCE DEPARTMENT

Above all, students will profit greatly from the enhanced opportunities faculty will gain for research and reflection in their disciplines. Most people do not realize that faculty must spend a far larger amount of time preparing outside the classroom than they will ever spend in the classroom transmitting what they have learned. A consicientious professor will easily spend ten or more hours outside of class preparing for every hour spent with students in the classroom.

The block plan is a teaching-intensive system which gives students on the average as much as 50-60% more formal contact time with faculty than under any of the standard alternatives at other colleges. The percentage would remain significantly higher even under the propsed 8-7 system. Over a period of time, therefore, it is very likely that the combination of conscientiousness and teaching intensity will exact a toll on the faculty which will be to the long-run disadvantage of the student who comes to Colorado College expecting to be taught his or her discipline in its most sophisticated and current form.

Moreover, a faculty member who is conscientious and dedicated to teaching is also one who has an equally intense personal interest in his or her discipline and wants to pursue it for its own sake. This attitude is [illegible]orbusiasm [illegible] insuring the continued reputation for excellence of t alma mater. The faculty must be prepared not onl teach the current students, but those to come in future, including the children of the current stu generation. There is a reciprocal interest bet students and faculty that can only be served if students of today, who came to Colorado College be of the education they knew to be possible for prev generations of students, have assurance that it is possible; and the condition of its still being possib that it shall continue to be possible in the future.

Each generation of students comes into and gradu from a living institution that existed long before and hope, will exist longer still. It is the totality of what College has meant that goes into making what it m today. That totality must be preserved, improved carried forward. The most central element in the pr is the continuity of teaching and learning whi created by, indeed can only be created by, a faculty th in a permanent state of intellectual vitality.

The proponents of the 8-7 system are convinced it is a revision of the current block-plan system that preserves the spirit of the block-plan education which Colorado College has become famous, and improves the chances of maintaining the intelle vitality of the faculty into the 1990s. It cannot be stre[illegible]ent this should be to [illegible]xcellence in

In Defense...

Quality Not Quantity

BY JIM LASKO

By shortening the academic year, as well as lowering the number of blocks a professor is required to teach (from eight to seven), the eight-block year enables the faculty to pursue more diligently the other requirements of the profession. This is an obvious benefit to the faculty; they have less requirements.

The benefits to the student are more subtle, but should not be forgotten. As Dean Glen Brooks (Dean of the Faculty) has made clear that the acceptability of the proposal will be based soley on its merits to the students.

While at first approach a student might conclude that he/she is getting "more for the money" with a nine block year, a further inspection might conclude otherwise. The more contact hours the better is not a valid "rule of thumb." I think everybody would agree that contact hours with a trained, tenured chimpanzee are not as valuable as contact hours with a qualified, energetic professor. Now I am not insinuating that the faculty belongs in the zoo, but the analogy illustrates an important point - contact hours are only as valuable as the professor.

A professor's value depends on his/her understanding of the material and his/her ability to communicate it. An adequate understanding of a subject requires constant research. In a dynamic world, keeping abreast of changes and advances, or at least perceived changes and advances, is almost a full time job in itself. This is the job of the professor, to know a subject fully - including the latest theories and developments.

A professor here at Colorado College is also required, however informally, to publish. This promotes better communicative skills as well as a better reputation. Both of which are immediate benefits to the student.

Assuming that the faculty makes good use of their newly acquired time, an eight-block year may be a tangible benefit to the students. The eight-block year proposal may really be a legitimate trade of quantity for quality. There is a general consensus among the faculty that they work too long at actual teaching and that it effects their ultimate output as professors. This is important, whether it is true or not.

Many professors feel that with less strain on their time they would be more able to offer "extra" time to students. This extra time would not only take the form of more formal availability to students. It would also be seen in an increase of independent studies (a main goal of the institution according to Gresham Riley's "Five Year Report"), informal student/teacher gatherings, and an all-around healthier attitude towards the students. All of these are definite qualitative benefits to a liberal arts institution seeking to revitalize a flailing academic environment.

As a part of the eight-block year proposal, there could be a complete overhaul of the adjunct program, a reinstitution of the symposium, and the formal introduction of year-long, or semester-long, courses. Adjuncts would be given more value (½ a credit) and more of them would be offered. The symposium would be held for a week during winter break in which a current topic would be discussed and debated.

The symposium existed when Colorado College was under the semester program and received nothing but rave reviews from both faculty and students. Year-long and semester-long courses have the obvious benefit of enabling new courses, which had to be dropped under the block system, to be added to the curriculum. Each of these additions bring many benefits to the current system, without necessarily adopting the eight-block year. Some can only be facilitated by the institution of a shorter academic calendar.

Requiring 32 units and offering only 32 units inevitably will cut down on the "five block senior problem," but it is also the most problematic of the proposal's changes. This change is inherently concerned with the issue of "flexibility" which is dealt with in another article, but I will say a few things. It is not the function of an institution to offer a two class buffer zone for its students, especially not an institution which wants to consider itself as highly as Colorado College does.

There may be unforeseeable circumstances which force a student to miss a block, but missing a block for skiing, studying for the GMATS, MCATS, or LSATS, or vacationing is another story. Such luxuries should not be offered by the institution, but, rather, earned by the students. There are ways to acquire extra credits and thereby afford the luxury of taking a block off.

I should add that despite the fact that I have not made a decision either in favor of or against the eight-block year, I have continually been impressed with the sincere sensitivity of the faculty towards the students concerns. The two faculty discussions (debates?) which I attended have centered the discussion around the impact of the proposal on the students and not on their own selfish concerns.

The central issue has been how they can best serve the students and build a better institution. Rather than relieve students of their duty to let their opinions be heard, this increases the importance of it. The faculty wants to do what is best for us. We should respect that, become informed on the choices, make a decision, and let our feelings be heard.

Out of the Closet

BY NAN WAINWRIGHT & MIKE TREVITHICK

Have you been hiding in the closet recently? Are you afraid to publicly acknowledge that the eight block plan may have some merit? Do you shudder in fear at the thought of hearing some of your friends denounce you for defending the evil eight block plan? If you answered yes to any of these questions then fear not—your time is coming!

Ever since the eight block proposal went public, a vocal minority of students has dominated discussion of the subject. That is about to change. Those who hope that cooler heads will prevail are in luck. The following list of questions is designed for clear-thinkers who wish to contribute to the development of a sound proposal for change. The questions should be posed to the radical opponents of the eighth block proposal.

Question #1: Have you read the proposal?

This question is surprisingly straightforward. The answer will generally be equally straightforward—no. Most opponents of the plan have only seen or heard an outline of ideas and they, therefore, don't have a very sound understanding of the proposal.

Question #2: Have you taken or do you plan to take a full 36 unit load under the current nine block plan?

This is another good question. The answer will again be no because, as available data clearly indicates, the average student is taking only 33 units under the nine block system.

Question #3: How long is the year at other comparable institutions? (Comparable institutions refers to Harvard, Princeton, Amherst, etc.)

This is an important question because CC students and faculty have one of the longest calendar years in the country. Students at this school are in session longer than students at most, if not all, Ivy League schools.

Question #4: Do you really believe that the faculty is acting against the students?

Most of the radicals will say yes, but their answer is unfounded. One might wonder why a faculty that is out to get students would even bother to conduct meetings in which the students are free to express their concerns. In fact, the faculty itself is by no means united behind this proposal. There is considerable concern among proponents of the eight block plan that the faculty will not vote in favor of the proposal.

Now, those of you who are liberally educated and open minded should take these questions and pose them to your narrow minded acquaintances. Once that is done perhaps people could stop making unfounded accusations and start thinking clearly about the advantages and disadvantages of the eight block year. The faculty wants and needs student input. So why don't we try to work together to hammer out a feasible proposal for enhancing this school's academic reputation.

Factors For Eight Blocks

BY JAMES B. LASKO

For the last two weeks, I have become integrally involved in the eight-block year proposal. I am not a proponent or an opponent, simply an interested student. After reading last week's Catalyst and the negative opinions posed therein, I felt it necessary to implore those students who have taken an ignorant emotional reaction against the eight-block year to look at it again. Here is what I have learned from two faculty meetings and discussions.:

An Overworked Staff: According to the statistical analysis by Bill Hochman, the faculty of Colorado College works 60% more now, under the block system, than they did previously under the semester system. Another study shows that under the block system, teachers at Colorado College teach over 90% of the classes that students take. At other institutions professors teach an average of 60%, and never over 75%. That is, at other institutions where a student may take five courses a semester, a professor only teaches three courses (60% of what the student takes), whereas at Colorado College an average student takes 8½ blocks and an average professor teaches 8 blocks(94% of what the student takes).

In summary, under no other system, or at any other institution, is the faculty required to spend so much of the academic calendar actually teaching. In addition, Colorado College has the longest academic calendar (almost nine full months). The result of this is that our faculty has limited time to fulfill the occupation's other demands: research, publicating, and offering bonus time to inspred and confused students.

A Deficient Academic Environment: Since I have been in attendance at Colorado College I have heard complaints of an inadequate intellectual environment. A school that wants to compare itself in reputation to the Ivy League has to compare itself in academic environment. While we may have more contact hours with professors than those prestigious institutions, non-contact hours are generally not spent in a manner worthy of such high regard. Intellectual activity outside of class is minimal, at best. Intellectual activity outside of the classroom at Ivy League schools is encouraged by the students, not shunned. If Colorado College wants to be considered with the "big boys" it will have to start acting like one.

The Five Block Senior: This block system phenomena is another deceiving idea, which is intimately related to the above. While it may appear to be great that an accomplished student is able to take only five blocks during his or her senior year, it is detrimental to the overall academic environment. The faculty has noted that the best students, that is the students most capable of contributing to a strong academic environment, are the ones that leave early. Senior year is a year of leadership. The college has invested three years in you, and it expects some return. The senior should be an integral part of a healthy institution, not extraneous to it.

So Hip It Hurts

BY KATIE DALSEMER

Like so many CCers I too decided to escape to the mountains for block break. I didn't camp out and chomp on tree bark but hey, I roughed it. I mean, the condo didn't even have maid service and the hot tub was broken. It was sheer hell!

Well, I know some of you out there are gagging on your granola after reading that, but for the rest let's take a quick glance at that yuppie wasteland, Vail, Colorado! Where men are men and the women carry Mastercards.

I hate to admit to it, but I'd never actually been to Vail before last weekend. Yes, I know it's shamefully uncool. So this year I decided the time had come to explore the Mecca.

My adventure began in the underground parking garage. MY conclusion? The Vailites don't want any hopelessly unhip vehicles detracting from the splendor of the city. After pulling up by a Ford Escort I jumped out, donned the cool shades and proceeded to the heart of the Vail business district with my two cool companions who incidentally prefer to remain nameless. I can't imagine why can you?

This was it. Oh what excitement lay in store for me? Robin Leach and his Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous crew perhaps? God I hoped so. It would make mom so proud to see me on TV.

One of the main feature sof Vail is all the nifty stores. First stop: a trendy sportswear store. Then it happened: my pleasure turned to repulsion as I spotted a Jerry Ford golf shirt and exclaimed "Oh, how gross!" in front of a rather annoyed shopkeeper. Other highlights of this particular store included one of my friends trying on a huge fur hat and jumping around shouting "Look, I'm Raisa Gorbachev!" Guess you had to be there.

Time to move on. As we rambled down the streets I suddenly found myself near the Ralph Lauren Polo Shop. "No, not that!" I screamed as my friends pushed me through the door. Here it was: the core of the city, wall to wall yuppies. They had to be yuppies who else would wear loafers with no socks when it was that chilly outside? As one of my travelling companions embarrassingly tried on a pair of Polo sneakers, the other friend and I tried to act casual and make bets on whether the salesclerk's name was "Bif" or "Skip."

Yes, the people are just downright fascinating in Vail. First, you have tourists looking for anyone whose anyone. Second, there are the people trying to pretend they're someone. (Gotta love all those middle ag women in leather pants.) And lastly, once in a blue mo there are famous people there. I'm sure the reason didn't see any movie stars was that it wasn't ski seas My friends were just heartbroken that they didn't bu into Farah Fawcett. Guess we'll just have to come b when we're in the mood to pay some major bucks fo lift ticket.

Besides all the shops where it pays to carry pla there are also some charming restaurants. But wanting to appear too trendy we passed up the chic ja cafes and made a beeline for the local B.K. lou (Burger King). There we feasted on an array of fast fo delights at very trendy Vail prices.

Wow! that ol' familiar place suddenly snapped back to reality. Millions of questions raced through mind: Is this the highlight of life after college? materialistic yuppiness inevitable? Is it possible to allergic to Cucci leather?

I took my cue: time to leave Vail, go back to lodgings in Dillon and reflect on the simple pleasures life. "Whew, I thought as I flicked on M.TV, it ain't te being liberal!"

An Alternative To Abortion

BY ANNABEL LERMER & DEBI TURNER

The appointment of Judge Reinquist to the head of the Supreme Court has implications that stretch further than Civil Rights legislation. The Supreme Court may well become an institution to be manipulated by the largely male rightwing to eliminate recent Women's Rights victories. A major tenant of these rights is the issue of abortion. Abortion is opposed by both religous fundamentalists—the so called "Moral Majority"—and those on the Right of the political spectrum, for a number of reasons other than the moral belief in the injustice of terminating life. These reasons range from a fear of the loss of male dominance or patriarchy when women gain control over their own bodies—thus over family structure—to a simple chauvanistic backlash against feminism. Yet this opposition to abortion is continually claimed to be based upon a moral, pro-life concept and a constant aim is to reverse the legal constitutional right to abortion.

We dispute the moral underpinnings to this desire to reverse the right to abortion. It necessarily implies a forcification of moral beliefs founded in religious fundamentalism on an entire population regardless of whether these beliefs are shared or not. This can hardly fit the American ideal of freedom of the individual. Primarily it denies women the right to control their own bodies, thus denying freedom of choice. By banning legal abortion women are forced into "back-street" abortion, and the dangers and health risks that must incur. One is reminded of the recent Victoria Gillock case in Great Britain. Gillock is staunch Catholic, fought through to the high courts for the legalized right for parents to be informed when children under the age of consent asked their doctors for contraceptives. Until the case was smashed by the high courts, children unable to talk to their parents concerning their sexual habits, were thus unable to be responsible for their sexual activity, unable to take responsible precautions, thus resluting in untold unwanted pregnancies—and two known suicides.

Banning abortion is no way to prevent abortion. We suggest that if the 'moral-majority' has any true dedication to fighting the termination of pregnancies, it should look to the causes of abortion and the choices facing pregnant women—wed or unwed. A primal concern should be sex education from an early age—an act which will not increase promiscuity, but will surely increase a responsible attitude, due to a gre understanding. Special attention should be paid contraception and how conception occurs. F contraception is a must if unwanted pregnancies ar be decreased. Opportunities must exist for pregn women if the decision to maintain a pregnancy is to realistic—Social Security provisions must be raised realistic level, creche and nursery facilities must mandatory at institutions of education and in workplace. Discrimination against mothers in workplace must be combated and society must pla more equal responsibility of childcare on the father

In this way a true alternative to abortion is created realistic option is available other than abortion, so t mothers may independantly continue their li without the discrimination and restriction that curren exists.

The "Reaganite/moral majorities" approach dealing with abortion is both pigheaded, selfdefeat and cruel—not to mention a male orientated backl against independent women in society. If oppositio abortion is truly based on the moral belief that life beg at conception, then surely illegalising abortion is sim turning the clock back...positive action is a step forwa

2-8x10 Color Enlargements

ONLY $3.99 FOR TWO

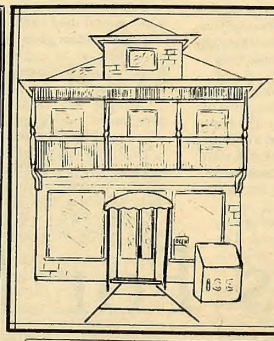
(Additional 8x10s only $1.79 each)

Available from the same 110, 126, Disc or 35mm color negative or 126 and 35 mm color slide. (Not available from 110 slide.) Not valid with any other coupon. Offer expires 1-31-87.

COLLEGE PHARMACY

833 N. TEJON

PHONE 634-4861



The Egg House

So close...
So good...
Anything you could want

Come by and see us

1216 N. Nevada

trax skateboard shop

downtownDOWNTOWNdowntownDOWNTOWNdowntownDOWNTOWNdowntownDOWNTOWNdowntown

POWELL	MADRID	JODY FOSTERS ARMY
SIMS	SANTA MONICA AIRLINES	SUREGRIP
VISION	SANTA CRUZ	MOTOBUILT
SCHMITT STIX	UNCLE WIGGLEY	Z-PRODUCTS
SKULL SKATES	ALVA	RECTOR
GORDON & SMITH	DOGTOWN SKATES	INDEPENDENT
TRACKER	FOGTOWN	GULLWINGS
KRYPTONICS	SEAFLEX	VENTURES
ZORLAC	LOSI	THUNDERS
BRAND-X	BLOCKHEAD	OJ II

...Obviously, the only place for all your skateboard needs.

TRAX SKATEBOARD SHOP
125 North Tejon - across from Michelle's and Old Chicago's 475-TRAX

Who Blinked?

BY MICHAEL S. MEHAN

The thorn in the side of U.S.-Soviet relations has finally been removed. U.S. News and World Report correspondent, Nicholas Daniloff is back in the United States and accused Soviet spy, Gennadi Zakharov, is back in the Soviet Union. What could have been a tense situation, possibly throwing super power relations back into the coldness of the early eighties, has been avoided.

Reagan's score card looks like this: We got our man back, and under reasonable circumstances. Daniloff was able to leave the Soviet Union without having to answer to the charges of espionage against him, while Mr. Zakharov pleaded no contest in a Brooklyn court, practically confirming his guilt. Along with Daniloff, Yuri F. Orlov and his wife, Irina L. Valitova, two prominent Soviet dissidents, were allowed to leave the USSR. Thus Reagan can say he did not trade their spy for our innocent hostage, because it was not a straight forward agreement.

However, the United States may have just broken even. Looking at similar past incidents, we gained very little from our deal with the Soviets. In 1963, the US arrested a Soviet driver with diplomatic immunity. Immediately after this, and in direct retaliation, the Soviets arrested an American professor in Moscow. After President Kennedy sent a letter of assurance to the Soviets that the professor was not a spy, they released him. The Soviet driver was not allowed to return to the USSR until 1971.

Again, in 1978, when two Soviet employees were arrested on espionage charges at the United Nations, an American was arrested in Moscow in retaliation. The American was tried and expelled from the Soviet Union, the Soviet Union employees received 50 year sentences, but were traded a few months later for five Soviet dissidents.

Two things can be noted from this. One, that the US abandoned its principle of not trading innocent American hostages for spies, and two, that the FBI failed to check the record, bungled the case, jeapordizing the summit and unnecessarily straining US-Soviet relations. The FBI acted blindly, with no consideration as to the result of its actions, thus causing the misery and suffering of Nicholas Daniloff.

Gorbachev's score card also has its pluses and minuses. He forced the US to negotiate with the Soviet Union as an equal, Zakharov was returned to the Soviet Union, and in such a way as to make other nations think twice before arresting Soviet spies, and he confirmed the Soviets' reputation as hard nosed bargainers. However, he also reminded the world of the ruthlessness of the Soviet leadership, showing everyone, that the Russians still play a rough kind of ball.

Thanks to the hard work of both US and Soviet negotiators, there exists the chance for concrete results at the upcoming summit meeting in Iceland between President Reagan and Secretary Gorbachev.

We have reached agreements at the negotiation level regarding the reduction of the possibility of surprise attack in Europe by opening up better communications between the eastern and western forces there.

The Soviets have softened their position regarding medium range missles in Europe, dropping several requirements for a reduction of missles. The Soviets have dropped their demand that no US missles be deployed in Europe, they have instead suggested that each side limit their forces to 100 missles. The Soviets have also dropped demands for a limit on French and British nuclear forces, and, they have even proposed an agreement on limiting medium range missles in Asia.

Whether or not a framework for an agreement will be worked out is still unknown. The possibility is there, if the will is.

The hard part, now, for Mr. Reagan and his Administration is whether they really want arms control. So far it has been hard to get an answer to this question. Some Administration officials say yes, others say no, and still others say maybe. It is time to unite an administration torn between hard liners and arms control supporters under one policy, especially if Reagan wants to leave some kind of "peaceful" legacy behind on his record.

Secretary Gorbachev, for many reasons, has expressed a desire for results, and will be trying to take command of the meeting to move it in the right direction. The outcome of the summit will depend largely on Reagan and his team. If they flounder on the issues it may turn out to be another "fireside" summit. If so, Mr. Gorbachev will undoubtedly call the meeting a failure and will be forced to reconsider his position, once again leaving super power relations right where they were.

No More Mr. Nice Guy

BY MARK THESING

I have come to college to become wise and understanding. I have studied the great thinkers, such as Plato, Hegel, and R. Baker. My professors have told me that I have misinterpreted everything they intended to say.

So what. Big shit. It's more important to know the question than the answer.

Most people don't even know the great question that has plagued our society since the invention of college. The great question that we confront is the question of whether or not we are in our most natural state while under the intoxication of six or more beers.

In order to answer this question I must ask myself: Who am I when I am drunk?

Is it the real me who without inhibitions is able to act in my most natural and free state? Giving glory to God?

Freshman year, at a fraternity party, I drank eight beers. I asked a heavy girl to dance. She said very sincerely that she was just about to leave and since it was 2:00 a.m. in the Phi Delt basement she had every reason to leave. I was initially disappointed by this rejection but she was tactful so I shrunk back to the bar.

Ten beers later, I was really ready to dance. Fatty was still there. I asked her again if she would dance with me. She repeated that she was about to leave.

I had turned and taken four steps before I threw a beer in her face.

That night as well as the next day, I knew I had acted honorably. What I had done was right, yet it troubled me. It troubled me to know that unless I was smashed I would have never risen to this higher plane where action and passion confront wrong. It was only through this intoxication that I was able to act in the most natural and correct way. I felt the only way for me to live responsibly and righteously would be to go through life drunk.

Earlier this year I was in a situation very similar to the above example. Perhaps I was in a more natural (drunken) state on account of the fact that I mixed drugs I was on both beer and Contac™.

I was in the same wretched basement at the same wretched hour when I started to give sexy glances to a girl across the bar. My little head raced ahead with fantasy as I nonchalantly noticed the herpe lesion on her lower lip. Fortunately she had a boyfriend with poor eyesight.

Being the gentleman that I am, I dediced to let her boyfriend (6-4, 250 lbs.) take her home. Needless to say in the sober light of day I found her considerably less sexy.

This situation leads me to believe that intoxication is not the panacea that we intellectual college students have been lead to believe. The intoxication made me wreckless and unnatural.

Perhaps there is no simple answer to the meaning of life. However, it's not the answer that matters rather the question.

Fuller from pg. 8

Nevertheless, we cannot have everything. Usually, to get something good or even better, it is necessary to stop doing some other things. The 8-7 proposal does reduce the number of blocks taught by faculty by one per faculty member. The reduction to 8 blocks per year looks to a student like a loss of four blocks of potential classroom learning and may mean a tighter, less flexible schedule that leaves less room for maneuver than we have been used to at CC.

My earlier remarks suggest what I think to ge the great gain that, in my opinion, far outweighs the loss measured simply in blocks. But there are other potential gains as well. They are not as immediately obvious on the surface as is the loss of blocks, and so some have reacted to this proposal initially with hostility, not stopping to weigh the immediate and obvious costs against the less immediate, not so easily measurable gains.

For example, some of the flexibility that will be taken away by reducing from 9 blocks to 8, will be restored by the increased use of independent study and tutorial programs taught over a semester or year across the blocks. This will be an overload for faculty which they would; under the present conditions be quite reluctant to take on. But in return for a shorter year and fewer courses taught in the block system, there will be something of a shift away from total focus on the block course towards increased chances for independent, non-classroom based academic work. Many faculty have believed for some time that we do too little of this sort of work at Colorado College. But we cannot simply tack such a program on top of everything else that is now being done. Many faculty are very excited by the possibility of shifting their teaching time to a better balance between classroom and independent study. The quality of the student body and of the faculty suggests that we ought to be moving in this direction. There is the prospect of greater collaborative efforts between faculty and students, and a chance for increasing the opportunities to do advanced work. Also, if students would, under the 8-7, begin to take one or two longer-term independent study courses during their four years, they would get back some of the courses lost in the reduction from 9 to 8. They would get it back in a different way, and for good pedagogical reasons. On top of that, if we were to reintroduce the symposium between the semesters (which would be just about impossible on the 9-block schedule), in such a way that, by faithful participation and some sort of writing assignment, students could acquire additional credit from a college-wide program; and if we enhanced the summer readings program and revamped the conduct of our adjunct program; students might find that they had at least as many learning opportunities under the 8-7 as they ever had under the 9-block program.

What I see in the 8-7 is a shorter, somewhat more intense academic year with longer Christmas and summer vacations, and a wider variety of ways to learn. The faculty will certainly not be working less hard than they now do. But they will have longer periods outside the formal academic year to do their necessary research and class preparation, and occasionally to write and publish articles and books for the critical comment of their peers in their fields. It has never been the intention of any self-respecting faculty member to work less hard. Rather, the aim is to reallocate the intellectual sources of the faculty in ways that will also rebound to the benefit of students. Students will no doubt have to plan a bit more carefully how they schedule courses, and they will find themselves having to redistribute their own academic efforts in some new ways. They will still be able to save blocks by doing independent study now in order to take a block off later; they will still be able to take more than 32 units of work. There will probably be fewer opportunities just to take off for the sake of taking off. However, since most students are here because they want to be here, they will find compensation in the longer vacations, and in the variation in the scheme of learning they would, under the 8-7, be able to explore.

Are you considering professional school?

HARVARD UNIVERSITY

JOHN F. KENNEDY
SCHOOL OF GOVERNMENT

Is Looking for Future Leaders in Public Affairs.

Come Learn About Harvard's Two-Year Master's Program in Public Policy, Leading to either the Master in Public Policy or City and Regional Planning Degree.

Joint Degree Options and Cross-Registration Opportunities with Other Schools

Meet with a Kennedy School Representative

DATE: Tuesday, October 7

TIME: 1:00-3:00 group

LOCATION: Please contact your Career Placement Office for this information.

All Students, All Majors, All Years Welcome!

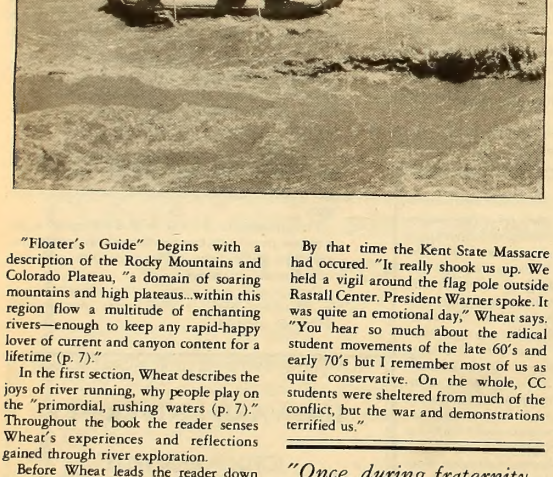
Alums: Proof of

White Waterer

BY ALEC REKOW

In 1983 Falcon Press published CC grad Doug Wheat's book, The Floater's Guide to Colorado. The book introduces Colorado and Southern Rocky Mountain waterways to all types of river enthusiasts ranging from hardcore river rats with sights set on tumbling headwaters to the novice canoer in search of tranquil paddles through the Southwest's deepest canyons. River enthusiasts from all over the western states have bought the book.

Based on twenty years of river exploration, Wheat provides complete guide-information on major Colorado rivers such as the Colorado, Dolores, Rio Grande, and Arkansas, and other torrents like the Green and North Platte that plunge out of southern Wyoming mountains. The book follows these rivers as they trail into eastern Utah and northern New Mexico.



"Floater's Guide" begins with a description of the Rocky Mountains and Colorado Plateau, "a domain of soaring mountains and high plateaus...within this region flow a multitude of enchanting rivers—enough to keep any rapid-happy lover of current and canyon content for a lifetime (p. 7)."

In the first section, Wheat describes the joys of river running, why people play on the "primordial, rushing waters (p. 7)." Throughout the book the reader senses Wheat's experiences and reflections gained through river exploration.

Before Wheat leads the reader down stream, he explains how rivers are born. His interest and knowledge of Rocky Mountain geology, encouraged years ago in CC geology classes, shows how rivers sculpt the earth. "They wrought the landscape we know today as the Southern Rocky Mountains. They are still digging downward, uncovering the planet's hidden structures. Their canyons are open windows into the earth's crust—showcases of lost mountain ranges, vanished Sahara-like deserts, and vast seabeds of dim ages past."

Wheat divides the book into sections of east and west. First he drops the reader down the snow-swollen torrents that run off the western slope. Then he introduces the eastern slope rivers that trail onto the Great Plains.

In both sections he covers the major river basins, beginning with an historical description of early river runners and their journeys in each basin. Wheat shows how rivers affected past Colorado cultures. His depiction of the Indians, fur trappers, and railroad explorers, adds a taste of Colorado's diverse history to the book.

Within each basin, Wheat describes individual river trips: physical data, maps, and private land regulations. Based on past experiences, he informs the reader of potential hazards, points of interest, and general information.

So how does a CC graduate come to write a book on river running? Past Cc students might remember a head shaven Doug Wheat adorning a 1970 spring Catalyst issue. "That was during the Vietnam War, when the armed forces issued their first draft lottery," Doug recalls. "All of the seniors were crowded around campus TV's waiting for the birthday list,...and mine came up first! So he headed down to the local National Guard office and signed up.

By that time the Kent State Massacre had occured. "It really shook us up. We held a vigil around the flag pole outside Rastall Center. President Warner spoke. It was quite an emotional day," Wheat says. "You hear so much about the radical student movements of the late 60's and early 70's but I remember most of us as quite conservative. On the whole, CC students were sheltered from much of the conflict, but the war and demonstrations terrified us."

"Once, during fraternity initiation, we had to stick fish down our pants and keep them there for the entire day."

Early in his college career, Doug became interested in the Rocky Mountains' diversity. He majored in geology. In fact, "many of my favorite memories are those down in the Geology lab with my buddies. We were a tight group, pretty wild," he recalls. "The professors were fantastic." At that time, John Lewis, Dr. Richard Pearl and Dr. Fischer headed the geology department.

Doug also remembers his Phi Gamma Delta days with a laugh. "Once, during fraternity initiation, we [the freshman] had to stick fish down our pants and keep them there for the entire day."

Doug was active in drama. He also played four years of varsity tennis, and helped his fraternity hockey team become "the team to beat" in the intramural leagues.

Colorado Springs was a much smaller town in the late sixties. Doug and his friends used to follow a dirt road past Templeton Gap where North Academy now cuts between shopping centers and office complexes. "Back then you couldn't see a house in the whole basin. We used to go out there to drink beer and relax," Doug says.

After his college days, Doug has kept up on CC affairs. He regrets not being part of the block plan. "The administration voted on it when I was there. They approved it my senior year for the upcoming fall," Doug recalls. While writing "The Floater's Guide to Colorado," he spent hundreds of research hours in Tutt Library.

Doug Wheat now lives in Woodland Park with his wife Annetta and their young daughters, Victoria, age four, and Anna, age two. He drives daily to Colorado Springs where he teaches science at Emerson Junior High School. Before teaching, he owned a rafting company and kayak shop.

Since graduation Doug has explored western rivers and mountains. "In the early days we used to run rivers from the Grand Canyon [Arizona] up to the Salmon [Idaho]. We'd leave the rivers to buy groceries but then move on to new waters...We hit 'em all," he remembers.

While not willing to spend as much time on longer trips as he did in the past, Doug treasures the chance to live near and explore the wilderness.

"Even the commute. I don't think there's a nicer twenty minute commute in the country," he adds.

"I love the mountains and rivers the most. Colorado has such diversity, the sand dunes, the highest peaks, deep chasms and tumbling rivers," exclaims Doug. "I've spent twenty years exploring Colorado. I'll spend the rest of my life exploring."

Also in the near future, he plans to write another book. While not willing to describe specifics at this time, he hints it will also be about colorado wilderness.

While we wait, Doug Wheat's current book, The Floater's Guide to Colorado, is available in the CC Bookstore.

Shut Up and Skate

BY FLETCHER NEELEY

Why "TRAX?" Why skateboards? Why the movie? Why the big suit? Is skating still alive as an inherent American art form? Well, I'll tell ya'...

CC grad Pete Nelson ('85) was one of America's first real punks. Many was the time that Pete and his criminal compadres motored out from New Jersey (surfing capitol of the world) to N.Y.C. to see the Ramones or maybe the Velvet Underground. Man, he was the meanest kid at Deerfield. Then he came to CC, admitted on the basis of several existential essays he had written.

"But what is he up to now, Fletch?", you may ask yourself, which, incidentally, is a funny thing to ask yourself. Well, I'll tell ya'...

When I ambulated into his skateboard shop "Trax," on Tejon, with all of its four-wheeled vehicles of punk socio-political viewpoints and its medieval looking kid-skinhead disciples, I thought to myself "What kind of gnarly, grand funk kind of a nutty torture chamber is this?" Shortly thereafter, the grand inquisitor of Skate, Pete "Tocamata" Nelson, made his presence known. "Can I help you?"

Quoth Pete, "Punk is not dead. It has merely assimilated itself into a wide cross-section of American culture. I think that it has given the U.S. a distinctive new virility, especially as far as capitalistic militancy and teenage fashion are concerned."

"The 'Skate Punk' movement was kept alive in the late seventies/early eighties by the L.A. Underground. This latest movement in 'Skate' history is mainly made up of surferboy hipster types, whippersnappers, like me. Yeah, I've mellowed out some. I'm really into the Dead now."

"He either plays basketball or broods in the back room. I don't know what he does back there. I don't want to know."

"I majored in economics because of my existential convictions, and I minored in tropical agriculture for a variety of reasons. I got out of school, looked around for a minute, and decided what a better thing to do than open up a skateboard shop—in Tejon—and get married." Yes folks, on

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Shut up and skate

punk Pete consented to holy matrimony with a girl named Judy, (I hope you can figure out what her new last name is) CC sweetheart,—sort of giving a "Sid and Nancy" quality to this story.

It is interesting to note for historic reasons that the "Bolweevils" played their weeding for six hours. Intimate

Continued top of next page.

Life After CC

ete, "It was zany."

When he was about to show me his rest shipment of skateboards in his shop, n Tejon, I noticed that his partner and loodbrother, Jeff Marcus (CC '85), was bsent. Knowingly did Pete reflect that He either plays basketball or broods in he back room. I don't know what he does ack there. I don't want to know.

Anyway, we took the initiative and oped his wares. Voiced Pete, "This is a F.A. (Jody Foster's Army) AK-69. It omes complete with a Martin-Marietta nfra-red sensor grid, a Fairchild novement detection parameter, a set of two General Electric Pershing II ground to air capability ICBM's, and a Lockheed bottle opener, which is the most expensive component on the board. Over here we have the scooters, which should prove very boss this academic year. We're going to have a real big skate competition real soon. Trax has 'Team Skate and Destroy' in the field. We would have some snowboards coming in any minute. That ought to get us through the winter. If not, I think I'll open a bar."

This is Fletch Neeley signing off from the Home Office in Milwaukee, adios and viva la Revolucion.

A CC Grad Comes Back

BY JULIE INGWERSEN

Economics professor and Colorado ollege alumnus Walter Hecox cites his asons for choosing CC as an ndergraduate: "The typical mundane fluences; I had a big brother already tending, and I'd grown up in the Denver ea . . . Graduating from East High School Denver with a senior class of about one ousand students, I was looking for a all liberal arts college."

As an undergraduate, Hecox was volved with a number of organizations campus. He devoted two years to ROTC hich was a graduation requirement for all le-bodied male students.

He served as Board Table Manager for ma Chi and organized all food eparation (since the campus food service s not affiliated with the fraternity uses). Hecox was also Head of the stall Student Board, and a Head sident of a house which is since torn wn. In addition, Hecox worked at The lage Inn "with all the hockey players - hough I didn't play myself; I was just a rving student."

"Today's students don't ave such immediately ressing issues such as he draft to persuade hem into activism."

lecox graduated from CC in June of 4 and spent the following year as a bright Fellow in Pakastan. Upon his rn, he began graduate studies at cuse University and earned a master's ee in 1967. Hecox returned to Pakistan mplete his dissertation research, and cuse awarded him his Ph.D in 1969.

e spent the next two years as an nomist in the Office of Research at t Point as compensation to the U.S. ernment for Hecox's time in the rve Officer's Training Corps back at month after leaving West Point, CC red Hecox a ten-year professorship. It 'a welcome return to the West after s abroad and in New York." Hecox inued to travel and research, returning akistan as a Senior Fulbright Lecturer he University of Islamabad in 1976, ng the Colorado Department of ural Resources in 1979, and taking a year leave of absence in 1982 to work advisor to the Ministry of Finance in Bank of Kenya. Recently, Hecox has t time in Sudan working with the ld Bank. Back on campus, he serves as rman of the Economics Department. though travel has played a significant in his career, all roads lead back to rado Springs and CC. "The College changes and never changes. The student body has grown, and the physical plant has varied, but it is never a strange place. It's still a small community."

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Hecox notes that the major changes within the College over the past twenty years have involved the school's method of financial management. Because of increasing federal pressure on small schools, "the College operates more like a business. More endowment and financing is necessary."

As for the student body, Hecox observes that although the average student's socio-economic background has remained the same, "statistics have shown a national trend, which is erosion of the high schools." Asked if this trend implied a lowering of the College's standards, he replied "No, our admissions process is still selective, but students today require different class situations. There is a deficiency we didn't assume existed twenty years ago. Today, through such programs as Writing Emphasis classes and the like, the College offers a 'catch-up' process."

Political sentiments on campus illustate another example of changing student character. "CC students have made a complete swing of the pendulum [since the early sixties], passing through all the activism of the late sixties and seventies, and then returning to concerns of individual accomplishment in the eighties. Of course, today's students don't have such immediately pressing issues as the Draft to persuade them into [the same type of] activism."

Hecox feels a strong commitment to CC which he believes is shared by many alums; he points out that in addition to himself, there are two other CC alumni within the Economics department alone. "One of the interesting facets of being a CC graduate is that you hold unique expectations of the College," remarks Hecox. "You're working with colleagues who used to be mentors, and that experience colors the way you look at the school . . . It's not quite nostalgia, but you're aware of the way things used to be and your perspective spans a longer period. That often means higher expectations."

Channel 11 Celeb'

BY CHRIS ANDRESEN

Peter Aubrey graduated from CC in 1978 complete with a Studio Art major. Three unemployed months later he took a job at a day care center to bring in money. Aubrey found himself with some spare time so he approached Channel 11; they gave him a job as an unpaid intern. This internship turned into an unexpected career for Aubrey, presently one of Channel 11's photographer/field reporters.

Aubrey is quick to admit his almost accidental association with the profession. "I was pretty lucky with the route I got into the business and I think I've done pretty well." Progressing from an intern, to a photographer, and then to a reporter, Aubrey says, "Right now I report and write my own copy, gather the facts, and sometimes shoot my own stories. I edit my own stories and on weekends I have to be my own assignment editor." Aubrey enjoys his job, although he adds, "I've already been in it probably longer than I thought I was going to be initially, but I still like getting behind the camera."

Having lived through CC's block plan and liberal arts curriculum, Aubrey looks back on CC as a positive experience. "I think overall I can stand in there with any of my colleagues who went through structured journalism programs. The liberal arts instruction here really did pay off in my job too. It stimulated more of an interest in me in a variety of subjects, and I have to cover a variety of things all the time." He goes on to add that "It's good to have had an education that urged you to become more broadly versed in things that are going on in our society. You can look at college as just a stepping stone to a career, or as a chance to broaden your scope. I never looked at college particularly as a career preparation. I think in that way it met my expectations."

Channel 11 allows Aubrey to explore his own interests. "If I've got a story idea that I really want to pursue I generally can do that provided my assignment editor and news director think it's a worthwhile story." Reporting also provides a unique challenge. "You get to structure the story and you get to determine the format of how a story will be told. I think I've gotten better at telling a story over the years. I've seen progress in my own work in the way I convey a story. It's my hope I can tell a story on kind of a personal level."

The next logical step for Aubrey would be an anchor position, but he's not so sure. "As far as anchoring goes I think it's an attractive position to most people. I think I've had less desire to get an anchor than most people." After doing some substitute sports anchoring, "I found I liked it less than I thought I would. I guess I found that it really didn't intrigue me, but then again if the opportunity were to arise in the future I'd probably give it another try. I was kind of out of my field in sports—I think I would have felt more comfortable in a news format."

"There's a lot I like about reporting—actually going out and covering the stories and dealing with the different people." Reporting also has its down side. "It's tiring having to meet the deadlines every day, and the unpredictability, although it's one of the xciting aspects of the job, can also be really wearing and tiring. You have to be an expert on stories with just a few hours to work on them. That can be real taxing."

Would he ever leave reporting? "One of the best aspects of reporting is going out and having the opportunity to meet all kinds of people—national and international figures sometimes. It's going to be hard for another job to live up to those kinds of things. I wouldn't mind not having to cover another auto accident, or a house fire, or another snow storm, but I'd miss the unique stories—the really intriguing stories. You get the immediacy of it all being a reporter."

I Scream

BY PAT CHISHOLM

Josh was a math major, while John studied psych. Then it occurred to them: "Sell ice cream."

Josh Paris (Middelbury '85) and John Krakauer (CC '85) grew up in Weston, Mass. just outside of Boston. The old-fashioned ice cream stores in Boston were multitudionous. Thus met the inevitable: John and Ice Cream.

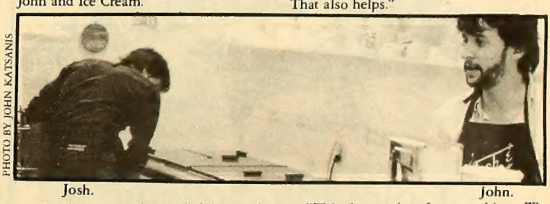

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Josh. John.

An "ice cream fanatic," John used to "...wait in line to get this home-made ice cream...with the big scoops...quality ice cream...made the old-fashioned way...made in the window..."

After his junior year, John decided they needed something like that out in Colorado. He was gonna do it. Then he said, "Hey Josh, this is what I'm planning on doing." Then he explained. Josh replied, "Well hell, let's do it together." Josh and John's was born. Downtown on Kiowa btwn Tejon & Nevada.

They went through a bunch of legal stuff which would be too boring to print here, and broke the champagne bottle on June 26th, 1986. "The Day That Will Live In Infamy."

When asked what math and psych have to do with ice cream, quoth John, "He [Josh] can count the number of people who come to the store, and I can tell you why they were here." He almost forgot to mention one other major component of his prerequisites: "I also was a singer at CC. That also helps."

"This is starting from nothing. We didn't know how to make ice cream...we used to be worried about how to make ice cream." Today, however, they have no such worries. "All you have to do is start walking in the right direction and you'll get there." Apparently they took some philosophy courses.

The two didn't even take any business courses in college. So there, business majors.

The discussion ended on a sweet and creamy note (no pun intended): "We meet a lot of people—people are happy when they come in...it's a nice feeling you're making them happy kind of."

Editor's note: Damn good ice cream.

Indian Relocation and B.M.S.G

BY CHRIS WEAVER & GREG GALE

Last week as I wandered around campus to put up posters about the potato gleaning for the Navajo and Hopi people of Big Mountain, I struck up conversations with people who were interested in the issue but who were uninformed about the current situation at Big Mountain. The following article is merely an introduction to the complex and desperate situation the Hopi and Navajo traditionals face today.

After reading this article it will be hour choice to act. Strong action is taking place here at CC and in the city these fall months. as the Pikes Peak area Big Mountain Support Group gathers food and raises money for the Indian people. We need your help. If you have an interest in this please call Greg Gale or Chris Weaver at 635-4429.

Who are we?

We are a group of Pikes Peak area residents, varied in age and background, both non-Indian and Indian, who come together in support of the Dineh and Hopi people resisting relocation from their homelands on Black Mesa at the heart of the Navajo reservation. Several of us have travelled to this area in recent months for gatherings, to deliver food, to experience the situation first-hand, and to share in the hospitality of the traditional people. Those of us who have been there have returned with a renewed sense of dedication to our support work in the Pikes Peak area.

What is Relocation?

In 1974, Congress passed the Relocation Act (Public Law 93-531), which ordered the removal of over 10,000 Navajo people from their ancestral homes by July 7 of this year. This is the largest peacetime forcible removal of a people in U.S. history. The land, at the remote heart of the Navajo reservation, supports one of the more intact indigenous cultures left on the continent. Many of the Elders speak only Dineh and know only a life of sheep herding. Home and work, food and waer, family and religion - all are inextricable from the land, its ancient springs, graxss and juniper trees.

Most of the relocatees are placed in track housing in border towns like Gallup and Flagstaff. In a Presidentially commissioned report from 1985, Richard C. Morris reports that "A significant number of Navajo who voluntarily accepted relocation to off-reservation, urban areas have suffered severely. Particularly the older - or traditional - families have been unable to cope in an urban or even suburban environment. Some could speak only in their native tongue and had no marketable skills. They soon were in debt and became victims of unscrupulous lenders. Many lost their homes . . . many suffered severe emotional traumas when placed in an environment in which they could not cope, and now regret their decision to move." A more recent investigation discovered that over 25 percent of the relocated adults have died.

The Relocation Act was passed to "settle" a so-called "land dispute" between the Navajo and Hopi tribes. The law ordered a 50-50 split of the Joint Use area, an area that has supported Navajos and Hopis as neighbors for centuries. A 300-mile barbed wire fence was constructed through an area that had never been fenced, and all Navajos and Hopis on the "wrong" side of the fence were ordered to move. The law also ordered a 90 percent reduction of livestock herds, "to protect future Hopi property from Navajo overgrazing." The Navajos see the seizure of their animals as a provocation and an attempt to starve them off their land.

It is important to realize that livestock confiscation, economic blockade, fencing and harassment ARE relocation. People often ask: "When will the Indians be relocated?" The fact is that forced removal is happening now.

None of the massacres and Indian removals of the 17 and 1800s that we know about now were reported as such at the time. For instance, the Long Walk, the forced 400-mile march and imprisonment of the entire Navajo population in the 1860's, was described as an "experiment" to "teach the Navajos farming." Thousands died during the "experiment," which was made possible because Kit Carson, on contract to the U.S., slaughtered the peoples' livestock and burned their crops. Today the confiscation of livestock is referred to by the B.I.A. as "range management." In truth it is part of the final forced removal unfolding at this moment.

What is support work?

Our support group has been active in several different kinds of work in recent months. All of the work is done in support of the traditional people resisting relocation, and we take our direction from the Elders themselves through our contacts in Flagstaff and through the nationwide (and even international) community of Big Mountain Support groups. We have been active in the letter-writing campaign to repeal the Relocation Act; we have held educational events, and we have coordinated a material aid drive and transported almost 4,000 pounds of food from Colorado Springs to the Big Mountain area.

Our members who helped distribute the food to the Dineh families in August returned with a powerful sense of the need for more food, building materials and money. They were impressed and encouraged by the work of a group called Support For Future Generations in Flagstaff. The people there coordinate distribution of material aid to families in need, as well as the placement of volunteers on the land for sheep herding and witness. Support For Future Generations is itself in dire need of financila support as it responds to the needs of the families on the land.

The fall food drive

In response to these needs, we are working on a fall material aid drive, which will include one or more trips to Big Mountain to deliver and to help distribute the food, materials, and money that Pikes Peak area residents are willing to give.

In the coming weeks, we will be giving presentations for church and community groups and organizing a fundraising dinner in order to educate the community further and to gather material support. We are also coordinating a number of groups to travel to Alamosa and work a day in the fields gathering the potatoes that the harvesting machine leaves behind. With enough volunteers, we have the opportunity to collect five or more tons of potatoes that would otherwise go to waste.

How can I lend a hand?

We welcome your support in any way you feel you can offer. We need VOLUNTEERS to glean potatoes in October and to help with the fundraising dinner and other events.

We need MONEY donated to Support For Future Generations (tax-deductible) or to the Pikes Peak Area BMSG to help cover our operating costs, including gas money for transporting food.

We need non-perishable FOOD items: flour, coffee, tea, oatmeal, canned goods, cooking oil, rice, beans, and honey. Donations can be dropped off at any time at Jerry's Market on north Tejon.

We need people willing to do LETTER WRITING in the effort to repeal PL 93-531 and to stop the ongoing harassment.

And we welcome anyone to our MEETINGS, held every Tuesday evening at 7:30 pm in the Justice and Peace Commission office, 2021 W. Pikes Peak Ave., room 5.

Finally, it is our hope that we can find among us in this community the same prayer that runs through the Dineh: that is a spirit of prayer, non-violence and respect for all their relations that has unified the traditional people and given them the strength to endure the terrible violence directed against them. As we work in their support, this spirit is their gift to us.

CAFÉ BIJOU
DINING & SPIRITS
• serving • lunch & light dinners, exquisite desserts & coffees
• first floor •
jazz, cocktails & hors d'oeuvres
• second floor •
Trip the night fantastic in a turn of the century home
411 East Bijou 632-9640
Bring in this ad for a free specialty drink with your lunch or dinner

HOMECOMING
Colorado College Bookstore
—HOMECOMING WEEK-END HOURS—
Hours - Fri. & Sat. 8:30-5:00
—COLORADO COLLEGE IMPRINTED—
• Shirts • Ties • Jewelry
• Mugs and Glassware • Stationery • Baseball Caps
• Books By Colorado College Authors

Sunday Brunch
10am-2pm
Café La Différence
Mon-Fri
6am • 2:30pm
578-9218
109 E. Pikes Peak

Words to the Wise

A Homecoming Guide for Lame Ducks

BY DAVID KLEIN

For those who have never experienced e Colorado College homecoming dance, is article will point out some ideas of hat its all about in order to make your perience more enjoyable.

1. Do not buy a ticket for the dance. here are many innovative ways to get in ithout paying. One popular method of rry is to walk into the lobby of the men's om and through the door which leads to the International Room.

Last year five dollars got you a six inch ece of gold yarn which needed to be sible for entrance. Luckily, one piece of rn is constructed of approximately four reads so it is possible to get in for one llar. This years rumor has it there will be ofessional security guards.

2. Do not go to the dance with a date. oing stag decreases your costs and creases your probability of having fun. ithout a date you can roam freely and be obnoxious as you want.

3. If your parents insist on attenting, be lite and introduce them to a few clean- sober friends, then dispose of them ickly. Maybe show them to the room th the orchestra music, suggest they nce, then cut out. Don't let the 'rents mp your style at the big bash.

4. Alcohol for the underaged at the admoor is always difficult to procure. A lity fake I.D. or a little green to the ender will probably do the trick. other plan, if these fail, is to sit in the dows at a back table, find an empty ss, give it to a waitress, and ask her to ng you another. If economy is more your le, bring your own flask.

Those who are old enough to drink can ke some cash by buying drinks for the ngsters. I heard a story about a girl king $40 by doing this.

5. When entering the room with the ntry band, immediately adopt a bow- ged gait and a drawl. Try to get them to "Rawhide" or if they have a male singer, request the country classics, "Stand by Your Man" and "Coal Miner's Daughter."

6. If you want a glimpse of your future, take a peek into the room with orchestral music. Watch the band crank up the bubble machine while the older folks waltz to music you swear you will never listen to.

7. Another CC tradition is to steal Broadmoor paraphernalia. Glasses and towels are particularly popular items. If you go to homecoming each of your four years, you should have a fine collection of glassware and linen when you graduate.

8. To top off the evening, you can chase the ducks and try to herd them inside. If you are not the nature-loving type, you might consider a slide down the middle of the two escalators. Or if you really want to finish the evening in style, stealing the cap off the head of one of the Broadmoor's doormen out front could be that coup de grace you're looking for.

However, be forewarned if you should opt for this last measure that the doormen will engage in hearty pursuit of caps lifted from their heads, so plan it out and for heavens sakes use a good getaway car and a competent driver.

Good Luck!

Reprinted by permission of David Klein.

Homecoming Happenings

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1986

u.m. – 00 p.m.	Women's Soccer Tournament Stewart Field (CC vs. Carleton 3:30 p.m.)
p.m. – 30 p.m.	Freedom and Authority Forum Armstrong Hall (refreshments included)
p.m. – 00 p.m.	KRCC Open House 117 E. Cache la Poudre
p.m.	Dedication of Palmer and Cutler Halls to National Register of Historic Places Palmer Hall steps
p.m.	Men's Soccer Washburn Field (CC vs. Aurora College)

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 4, 1986

a.m. – 30 a.m.	Freedom and Authority Forum Tutt Library (Continental breakfast included)
9:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.	Women's Soccer Tournament Stewart Field (CC vs. Marysville 2:00 p.m.)
10:00 a.m. – Noon	KRCC Open House 117 E. Cache la Poudre
11:00 a.m. – Noon	Alumni Association Awards Presentation – Packard Hall
1:00 p.m.	Dedication of Dr. Robert M. Stabler Collection El Pomar Sports Center
1:30 p.m.	Football Game – Washburn Field (CC vs. Aurora College)
5:00 p.m.	Women's Volleyball El Pomar Sports Center (CC vs. Mines)

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1986

9:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.	Women's Soccer Tournament (CC vs St. Benedict – 1:00 p.m.)
2:00 p.m.	Men's Soccer Washburn Field (CC vs. Trinity)

Awesome CC Alums

Six CC alums will be on campus this weekend to receive the Louis T. Benezet (President of CC 1955-63) and Lloyd E. Worner (President 1949-81) awards. The Benezet award recognizes outstanding achievement in one's field and the Worner award honors loyalty and support of CC.

Receiving the Benezet award are a photo journalist, an economist, and a physicist.

David A. Burnett ('68) has an international reputation as a photo journalist. His photos often appear in Time, Life, and other major publications, including the recent "Day in the Life" book series.

Dwight S. Brothers ('51) is a renown consultant with U.S. government departments and the governments of Kenya, Mexico, Lebanon, and Brazil. His many publications focus heavily on Third World economic issues. Brothers is currently working with the World Bank to resolve the Mexican financial situation.

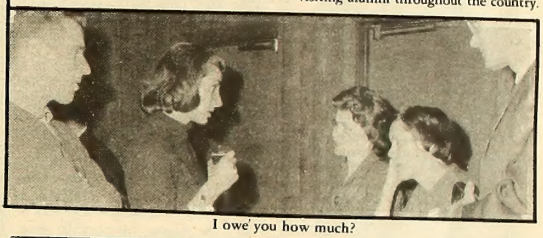
Helen S. Hopfield ('21) is an established physicist, who focused on the troposphere until her retirement five years ago. She has made important contributions to space exploration.

The Worner awards will go to Kathryn B. Beimford ('42), Constance P. Murray ('32), and W. Henry Willie ('33).

Beimford has made special efforts to represent the alumni of her era to alumni groups and to raise scholarship funds.

Murray grew up on campus as daughter of the College treasurer. She was one of the first women members of CC'S Board of Trustees and has played wide roles in several College-related organizations. She is well known in the Colorado Springs community.

Willie's years as an educator, businessman, and community leader, and CC President of the 50 Year Club have also made him well known in Colorado Springs. In addition, he is a CC ambassador-at-large, visiting alumni throughout the country.



I owe you how much?

Mention this ad for 10% off (sales items excluded)

The Largest Selection
In The Pikes Peak Region

Fine Vintage Clothing and Jewelry for men and women from 20's through 60's

Hey kid!
Your momma dresses you funny.
Come in and let us dress you funny.

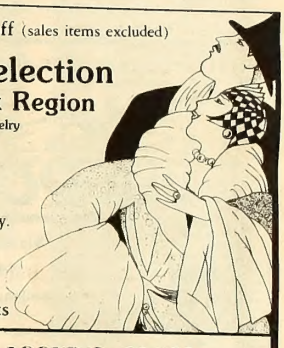
on-going 50% and 75% off racks



• THROUGH • THE • LOOKING • GLASS •

10 Ruxton Ave., Manitou Springs, CO, 685-1666 (Where Manitou Ave. meets Ruxton)

HOURS: 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Mon.-Sat. 11 to 5 Sunday

Our precision haircutters will give you the most up-to-the minute look...a look that stands out and lets you be who you want to be. Great Prices too!

exciting hair styles

Mon. -Fri. 8-7
Sat. 8-5
Sun. 11-5

6 Southgate Road
(Southgate Mall)
520-9957

NO APPOINTMENT NECESSARY
GREAT EXPECTATIONS PRECISION HAIRCUTTERS

coupon — coupon — coupon

SAVE $2.00 Shampoo, cut, & blow style now only $8.95 (Reg. $10.95)

SAVE $5.00 on any perm complete with shampoo, precision haircut, styling & our written guarantee

SAVE 20% on any coloring, frosting or cellophane

WE'LL DO YOUR LAUNDRY!!!

WASHED
DRIED FOLDED

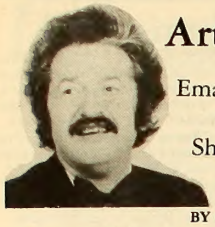
Suds 'um
Laundry & Cleaners

1931 W. Uintah (across from Uintah Gardens)
473-3756 Special student offer w/CC ID.



Artists in Residence

Emanuil and Kseenia Svdarikova

Sheynkman Visit CC

BY CAROLINE BRYAN

During the second week of October the Colorado College community will have the unique opportunity to meet with Emanuil Sheynkman and his wife Ksenia Sudarikova Sheynkman. They will be visiting the Colorado College as artists in residence in conjunction with the music department.

Mr. Sheynkman, who plays the balalaika and the mandolin, was born and raised in the Sovier Union. He began his studies of Russian music at the age of nine with a childrens Russian folk orchestra. He swiftly graduated to a more advanced section because of his obvious talent and passion for Russian music.

He received his first professional degree from the Mussorgsky Institute, and was admitted to thr Rimsky-Korsakov Conservatory where he received his conservatory degree as a soloist, conductor, and instructor of stringed instruments. Mr. Sheynkman has performed with the Leningrad Philharmonic Orchestra, and the Leningrad Chamber Orchestra. While in the Soviet Union, he made many recordings which include the first Soviet recording of Vivaldi's mandolkin concerti and various film scores.

In 1978 Mr. Sheynkman moved to the United States. He has since devoted himself to performing all around the United States in an effort to make American audiences more aware of the beautiful voices possessed by his two instruments the balalaika and the mandolin.

Mr. Sheynkman's wife, Ksenia Sudarikova Sheynkman, is a rencent immigrant from the USSR. As a pianist she has been a three time winner of the All-Republic Triennial Competition in the USSR where her latest publication, "The Fundamentals of Teaching Piano Accompaniment" won first prize.

Mr. Sheynkman and his wife will be at CC during the second week of October. Mr. Sheynkman will deliver the Thursday-at-Eleven performance on October 9th which will feature live balalaika and mandolin music. On Wednesday, October 8th at 3 o'clock there will be an informal discussion with Mr. Sheynkman at the Russian house (1112 North Cascade); everyone is welcome. Mr. Sheynkman will also be visiting the Russian instrumental music class on Wednesday morning.

Small Slices of the Big App

BY MAC AND T.G.B.

The art majors have returned from the fast-paced street life of N.Y.C. after experiencing a mild case of culture shock at the sight of Pike's Peak. Overall, the trip proved to be very successful, exposing the students to an endless amount of diverse paintings, sculpture, and architecture, including that of the existance of the city itself. Knowing that each individual would react differently to the frenzy and fascination, we asked two students to share their own impressions of the Big Apple. They read as follows:

* * * * * *

On Wednesday, Sept. 17, 34 senior art students (both art history and studio art), along with Gale Murray and Jim Trissel left for New York City. The purpose of the trip was to expose ourselves to as much art as possible. We saw everything from the Metropolitan Museum of Art, to small galleries in Soho, to street painters who would gladly paint your portrait for five dollars.

The city of New York itself is a work of art, and this was a chance to experience it without boundaries. Every day we had a planned group trip, we saw The Whitney, The Frick, The Met, The Museum of Modern Art, The Cloisters, many of us went to The Guggenhiem, as well as 30 or more small galleries all over town. Yet we had free time to find the little cafes, to go to The Village for some great jazz, or to ride the Statton Island Ferry.

Each individual would tell a different tale of his or her experience in New York, but all tales would have an element of excitement and a recollection of the adrenline we all felt just being in the city. The trip was one of the best times of my life and a highlight of my college career. Finally, yes Jim Trissel and a few others did make it to (and across!) the Brooklyn Bridge, New York's largest sculpture.

* * * * * *

Sometimes I can see my reflec store-front windows as I weave in a of the multitude of passer-bys cr the streets of New York. Yes, I'm here. Aren't I? Oh yes, there window. Hello. No one says here—is there some sort of pro Don't stare, keep your eyes to yo because nobody looks. Just keep to yo Don't smile. Someone might ge wrong idea. Or else they simply don the time to smile back. Always some to go...it is good.

There really is nowhere to be alone and there's no place very quiet. The [hotel room] is loud. The art museu crowded and we're always suppose listening to someone talk about th that, or whatever. I keep forgetting w am and what I'm suppose to be doin how I'm suppose to do it. Art is a fe It's a way of telling a bunch of fa people, "Hey! I've felt this way b have you?" And maybe they ha certain smell, temperature, a s something. It reflects back to ther they know and they can relate, no m what sort of memory has been recal them.

So now maybe I'll get up from whe on the steps of a church on Fifth Ave city where you don't really take the t sit (which is fun in an abstract kind of and walk. Walk past the mounta buildings, past Wall Street w businessmen sit endlessly. I'll just Something different has yet to happ new idea at least. An 'artsy' idea. Don't run out of them. They will neve through the grids and fall below th Swallowed up and unnoticed. Nothi last too long or get too loud. There turning back. We are what we become—don't get stuck. Move on. be molded into the wrong form shouldn't have to squeeze. It's t move on...

What's On Your Turntable?

John Shallow - Paraprofessional - Geology
John Anderson, "Olias of Sun Hillow"

Ben Leaf - Senior - English
Led Zeppelin, "Houses of the Holy"

Heather Harding - Junior - Biology
Cat Stevens, "Footsteps in the Dark"

Leesa Smith - Junior - Art Stud
Guadalcanal Diary, "Jamboree"

Sue Tushette - Senior - Englis
Fleetwood Mac, "Rumours"

Gautam Gujral - Senior - Political S
The Nina Haagen Band

Hair Designers for Men & Women

RAPUNZEL

Style cuts, Cellophanes,
Perms & Color.
Nexus, Redken, and Tri products available for sale.

Stop in or make your appointment:
827 N. Tejon at Cache La Poudre 632-3532

DALE STREET CAFE

End the study blues head over to the Dale St. Cafe for an unforgettable evening with Person to Person

Thursday thru Saturday 8:00 to 11:00 PM

New American Cuisine
115 East Dale St.
578-9898

PEGGY SUE Got Married

...or will she?

Kathleen Turner PG
"Peggy Sue Got Married" Nicolas Ca

amc 598-5200
TIFFANY SQUARE 6
I-25 & WOODMEN RD.

Starts Friday, October 10th. Listen to 96.5 KKFM visit theatre lobby for details on how to win gre prizes including a JUKE BOX filled with hits fro the 60's.

96.5 KKFM COLORADO CLASSICS

RecordsRecordsRecordsRecordsRecc

Elvis Recovers on Blood and Chocolate

BY JODY REED

I can see you now: you are sitting in a dark, smoky bar with a beer for your only companion. "Alison" can be heard over the din of voices and clanking of glasses. "Those were the days," you say,"real Elvis Costello. None of that Costello Show nonsense." The days of real Elvis: you wonder what happened to them. Take heart—these are the days of Blood and Chocolate.

Blood and Chocolate is Elvis Costello as he should be. The angry young man of days past has cleaned up his act, yet has managed with this new album to recapture the essence of such greats as Imperial Bedroom and Trust. The edge to the music, absent throughout Punch the Clock and Goodbye Cruel World, is alive and thriving in Blood and Chocolate. Unexpected rhythms and clever lyrics keep this album moving.

Elvis has been, in recent times, trying to change his image. An attempt to shed his chosen name of Costello for his real name, Declan MacManus, proved to be too much of a battle, and after venturing out as the Costello Show, he has reunited with the attractions to produce an album that is the best of all his images: the old and the new, all rolled up in eleven songs that everyone can enjoy.

The great range of the album can be best enjoyed through such tracks as "I Want You," "Next Time Round," "Uncompleted," and "Home is Where You Hang your Head." Elvis takes his listeners into the pain of unrequited (Misunderstood?) love and offers moments of everyday life with an upbeat rhythm and an off beat perspective. Blood and Chocolate is a necessary addition to any record collection. Don't leave home without it.

Pleasant Heads

BY CHRISTOPHER DUNN

I don't want to sound like one of those critics who always says "they just don't have what they had in '78," but Talking Heads have lost much of their characteristic spunk and originality. Their latest album, True Stories, is worth a listen since anything that this band does is necessarily fun and usually quite entertaining. Yet, many of the melodies and guitar licks in True Stories are all too reminiscent of their past efforts, particularly their last album, Little Creatures.

In True Stories, David, Tina, Chris, and Jerry celebrate Americana, specifically the rural Southwest, a theme that has become favored again among pop artists. The songs are from a newly released movie of the same title. But in the movie the actors sing the songs instead of the band. Maybe their renditions are more interesting than the cuts on this record. At best, most of these tunes are predictable, at worst, cliché'd.

To compensate for the lack of originality, Talking Heads employ some non-traditional rock mediums. In Radio Head, a sort of Tex-Mex polka, they feature an accordian, in People Like Us, they mix in some nice pedal steel guitar and fiddle work, and in Hey Now they exploit the fine talents of the St. Thomas Aquinas Elementary School Choir (don't worry the -kiddies are not chanting "we don't need no education.") David Byrne incorporates these elements well and they don't sound a bit affected. The prettiest song is a ballad just with the band called Dream Operator which also has some nice lyrics.

I realize that I have said some pleasant things about an album that I cut down in my opening remarks. And that is my criticism. Talking Heads do nothing particularly interesting or innovative in this latest release. The album is just pleasant. But the best feature of True Stories is the black and white photograph of the band in a simulated 1940's radio studio on the record sleeve.

Pure Armatrading: Another Masterpiece

BY E.J. BERNACKI

One of the most important and best published female singer/songwriters of our time has come up with yet another smash. Joan Armatrading, in her new album Sleight of Hand, covers all kinds of new ground without abandoning the awesome characteristics of her past successes which have gotten her into our record collections. In the past, Armatrading has worked with other songwriters in coming up with her songs and albums. Sleight of Hand however, is pure Armatrading, all Joan. The consistency lies in the fact that like her past albums, Sleight of Hand is a work of art, a masterpiece.

Her sound is constantly changing and her new album exhibits, on several fine tracks, innovations in her own work as well as continuations and expansions of directions set in albums such as The Key and Secret Secrets. Songs like "Kind Words," "Russian Roulette," and "Killing Time" are very danceable but in more progressive than pop style in that her rhythms are complicated and ever-changing rather than predictable and synthetic.

Although she is exploring new areas in her music, Armatrading has not abandoned the mellow folk-like style that so many of us love her for. "Jesse," "Don Juan," and "Laurel and the Rose" are tracks which remind us of the beauty and sensitivity of her voice and her lyrics which, for some, may get lost in Armatradings exploration of funk and electric.

Listening to the lyrics, one may feel that Joan was really bummed out when writing these songs but don't let that bother you. Listen to it. It's worth your time. The album is amazing. Lots of people make albums. Very few of them are professionals. Joan Armatrading is a professional.

ALBUMS DONATED BY BUDGET TAPES & RECORDS

Wondering what to do for your kids birthday?

Why not make arrangements with SKODACK & TURNER Flowers & Gifts to have something delivered on that very special day.

If you choose to pay with your credit card, you won't be billed until the date of delivery.

Parents of C.C. students get a 10% discount on everything but FTD orders.

508 N. Tejon 632-3194

Avenue Antiques & Collectables

- Vintage Clothing & Jewelry
- Old Movie Memorabelia & Celebrity Stuff
- Books
- Broadmoor, Veller-Pottery
- Oak Furniture
- Coca-Cola & other advertising items
- DISNEYANA
- Primitives
- Oriental Rugs

A new & fun place to be for the nostalgic minded folk.

2502 West Colorado Avenue
520-9894
"Right in the heart of Old Colorado City"

The Guinea Pigg. IN OLD COLORADO CITY
633-0584
PRIMITIVE & ETHNIC ART, CLOTHING & JEWELRY
FROM SOUTH AMERICA, AFRICA & ASIA
2510 W. COLORADO AVE. COLO. SPGS.
MON-SAT 10-6
SUNDAY 12-6

MoviesMoviesMoviesMoviesMoviesMovies

Missionary Madonna Meets Chivalrous Sean

BY NINA DE GRAMONT

We've seen Madonna nude from head to toe in Playboy. We've seen her dry her armpits with hot air in Desperately Seeking Susan. We've seen her in leather, in lace, and in nothing but white gloves. So when Shanghai Surprise presents her wearing a modest missionary's costume and the most insipid "holier than thou" expression you've ever seen, we expect her to rip off the uniform to reveal a snake-skin bikini. To tell you the truth, Shanghai Surprise is such a stupid movie that she very nearly meets our expectations.

It's not that Shanghai Surprise is predictable and unrealistic: that's expected. It's boring. This is probably the most impressive aspect of the movie, because it would take some effort to make a movie starring Sean Penn and Madonna DULL. But dull it is, and don't worry E.J., it's not all her fault.

The story, which takes place in late 30's Shanghai, revolves around some lost black market opium. The church desperately wants to get their hands on it so they can make morphine for all the poor, wounded Chinese soldiers. Right. Of course the mission assigns this dangerous and important task to Madonna. Luckily for her she meets Sean Penn, an American bum hanging out in Shanghai. Method actor that he is, Penn looks like he didn't sleep for three weeks preparing for the role: tired, hideous, and not much fun to watch. To employ his somehow valuable help, Madonna takes off her clothes and crawls into Penn's bed. She rubs herself against him until he gives in and ravages her, thus "obligating" him to help the virtuous lady find her opium. You figure that one out.

The movie creaks onward from there, using all the worn out gimmicks in the book. There's a sadistic Chinese policeman with ivory hands. There's a fat little Chinese hustler who loves baseball—he gives out some $15,000 worth of information in exchange for Penn teaching him how to pitch a knuckleball. There's a beautiful Chinese seductress who manages somehow to be both an emperess and a concubine. It's all brought to the unlikely, expected conclusion that we never really cared about anyway. If you're a George Harrison fan you might enjoy the music, but if you go to see Shanghai Surprise for either of the newlyweds, you'll be very dissapointed. Don't bother.

Dandy Dundee

BY BROOKE BURBANK

If you have seen or read any of the advertising for the new movie Crocodile Dundee you know that it is about a rugged man from the Australian outback who goes to New York to learn about a different type of survival than he is accustomed to. (If you didn't know this before, now you do.) You may very well get the impression that this is yet another in the series of tough-guy adventure films that have been flooding the theaters in the past decade. To a certain extent this is true, as it definitely fits this mold. However, Dundee himself, played by story-writer Paul Hogan, is quite different from the heroes of similar storylines. His humor, warmth, and appreciation of the natural order of things make him a surprisingly appealing character.

The humor in the film is a del highpoint; at times it is subtle, at oth ironic, and throughout it maintains Australian sense of the perverse. W this is the key to the film, the chara development is also quite good. energetic New York reporter, played Linda Kovlowski, is also more interes than her "damsel-in-distre counterparts. Hogan's charisma Kovlowski's enthusiasm create a uni and refreshing combination personalities.

The major disappointment in this f is the sappy, unrealistic end. It cuts sh the development of the plot, and leaves impression that the filmmakers ran ou time. Despite the disappointing ends Crocodile Dundee is a thoroughly amus and entertaining film.

the Stagecoach Inn
On Fountain Creek in Manitou Springs
Just minutes away.

Featuring
Fresh Seafood
Prime Beef, Veal
Pasta

FINE DINING

LUNCH • DINNER
SUNDAY CHAMPAGNE BRUNCH

A Great Experience
Reservations 685-9335

EVERY WEDNESDAY
COLORADO
IS COLLEGE
NIGHT!
$1 COVER with your C·C· student i·d· only
+CHEAP COLD WET STUFF (like $2.00 pitchers)
8PM til 12MID
18 ID Required
1807 De Paul • Colorado Springs
BEHIND DENVER WAREHOUSE SALES
ANNEX
632-7251
support KRCC
NEW MUSIC LIVES
CONSTITUTION
UNION
PALMER PARK
UINTAH
CC

10% OFF
EVERYTHING!
(SALE ITEMS EXCLUDED)
WHEN YOU SHOW
YOUR STUDENT I.D. CARD
327 N. TEJON
471-4419
Budget Tapes and Records
M-F 10-8
SAT 10-6
SUN 12-5
Offer Expires 10/10/86

Come Home to Us.
Mon.-Fri. 10-6 pm
Sat. 11-5 pm
THE LOTUS EATER BOUTIQUE
Downtown
on Platte
Between Tejon &
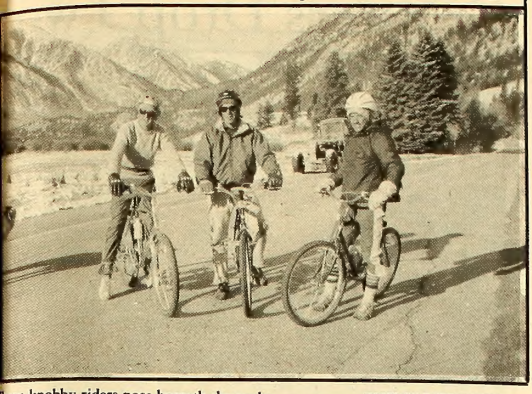
Cascade
phone:
635-2118

Snow Beats Aspen Bikers



hree knobby riders pose beneath the peaks. PHOTO BY KATIE CLINTON

BY PETER HUDSON & PETE LOACH

On Wednesday of 1st block break, while ost students were sorting out post-exam nsion, 43 hearty masochists embarked on e first leg of the Aspen Bike Trip. aving extreme winds and damp, chilly ather the group climbed to Woodland rk and over Ute Pass to Roundmountain mpground for a night of screaming nter winds and huddling around the epit. Besides the breathtaking scenery of first day, most bikers enjoyed the sugar h of a Donut-Mill pitstop, wished they re in awesome shape and re-examined ir beliefs in some sort of divine help. A sense of comradery developed around campfire that first night as everyone red horror stories about having to pedal downhills just to struggle through the id.

ikers awoke the next morning, nmed a few bagels, greased their joints, l a silent prayer and embarked on day 80 miles to Twin Lakes, "nestled at the " of Independence Pass. The beauty of th Park went unnoticed while bikers sed their attention on the bike in front nem and employed a 19th Century work c. Following other bikers closely, iced the "treading water" sensation ted by the gale force winds.

fter an orgasmic nine miles of nhill into Buena Vista, (known as wni" by local inhabitants,) bikers ed in SAGA carbohydrates in a sunny . From "Bewni," bikers climbed along Arkansas River through famous rado towns, such as "Granite," to n Lakes and The Inn of the Black Wolf. t night, as bikers slept with visions of pendence Pass dancing in their heads, es howled and snow blanketed the ed peaks and aspen groves.

On Friday morning, after pounding yet more bagels, four courageous mountain bikers set out early, testing their knobbies in the ice and snow while the road bikes awaited the thawing sun and snow plows.

Despite a tortuous climb to the frigid pass summit (12,095) and a chilling, hair-raising descent into Aspen, the bikers felt a warm sense of triumph. This warmth was enhanced by the tempid waters of the St. Moritz Hotel hot tub. The spoils of this windy, snowy asphalt battle were realized in this final splashdown.

The bikers enjoyed two beautiful days in this pastel town—the nest of American sensations. They spent their time enjoying the mountain air, exploring Aspen, searching for movie moguls and dancing with frequent hot tub breaks. Riders who couldn't get enough, went to the Maroon Bells or rode mountain bikes Saturday afternoon.

Thanks to all the group leaders for a great block break. Next year, for a crash course in fitness, gorgeous scenery and a fantastic time, consider the Aspen Bike Trip.

Outward Bound

Ever balanced yourself while walking across a log 50 feet above the ground or from the same height try to swing yourself from one swing to another?

The Outdoor Recreation Committee in conjunction with Outward Bound, sponsors ORC Leadership Training for future FOOT (Freshmen Outdoor Orientation Trips) leaders and ORC leaders. There are only two of these sessions a year and the next one is over second block break. Spend the time in the mountains!

The four day program consists of going to the Colorado Outward Bound School's headquarters in Leadville, challenging the Ropes Course and the Odyssey Course (of which The Wall is a part), camping, backpacking, and other group activities. It's always a good time plus a beneficial experience. Applications are available at dormitory desks and Rastall Student Center. They are due at Rastall (corner of Yampa and Nevada, across from Shove Chapel and Slocum) Wednesday, Oct. 8.

Weekend Events

Friday, Oct. 3
-Women's Soccer Tournament, 9:00 am-5:00 pm, Stewart Field
-Women's Soccer vs. Carleton College, 3:30 pm, Stewart Field
-Men's Soccer vs. Aurora University, 5:00 pm, Washburn Field

Saturday, Oct. 4
Women's Soccer Tournament, 9:00 am-5:00 pm, Stewart Field
-Football vs. Aurora University, 1:30 pm, Washburn Field
-Women's Soccer vs. Maryville College, 2:00 pm, Stewart Field
-Volleyball vs. Colorado Mines, 5:00 pm El Pomar Sports Center

Sunday, Oct. 5
-Women's Soccer Tournament, 9:00am-5:00 pm, Stewart Field
-Women's Soccer vs. St. Benedict, 1:00 pm, Stewart Field
-Men's Soccer vs. Trinity, 2:00 pm, Washburn Field

the Date Bar a Restaurant
Serving UNIQUE HOMEMADE RECIPES
10% off with CC ID
Serving Breakfast & Lunch
Mon.-Sat.
7 am - 4 pm
24 E. Kiowa 578-5693

ood Luck Tigers in your Homecoming hletic competitions.
ome in after the game and try our achos™ and Potato Ole's.™
Use the 10% discount card below.
TACO JOHN'S It's Tacomific!
Taco John's Discount Card
[must show C.C. ID for 10% off]
Name _____
Student I.D. # _____
Signature _____
TACO JOHN'S.
More than just tacos.

Make Fun Of The Road.
With the Honda Spree™, you never have to settle for just getting there. You can have a good time along the way.
This is our most affordable scooter. Push-button starting and no shifting make it easy to use. And it's almost maintenance-free.
So come see the Spree yourself. Because the road never ends. Neither should the fun.
HONDA
don's cycles
HONDA MOTORCYCLES - ATC'S
739 E. Pikes Peak Ave.
475-2437

Spree
Designed for operator use only.
Always wear a helmet & eye protection.

CC Drowns In 10,000 Lakes

The CC men's soccer have had a very disappointing past 2 weeks. Scoring only 2 goals in 4 games, they amassed a 1-2-1 record against some mediocre teams. They will have to play much better if they hope to earn a sixth straight NCAA playoff berth.

Two weekends ago, the Tigers went to Albuquerque, New Mexico to play the Division I New Mexico Lobos. An obviously flat CC squad took the field and found themselves down 2-0 after only 30 minutes. CC could not mount a serious threat on the New Mexico goal. Despite the heroic goaltending of Steve McDougall, the Lobos punched 2 more in the goal in the second half to win 4-0. The seven hour bus trip really showed in the Tiger performance.

CC hoped to bounce back the next weekend in Minnesota, but once again did not find the effort. Certainly outskilling the St. John's Johnnies, they were constantly outhustled and outphysicalled and lost 2-0. The Johnnies received a penalty kick 10 minutes into the contest on a very dubious call. McDougall guessed incorrectly and the Johnnies found themselves ahead 1-0. Despite being given many chances by the St. John's defense, CC could not capitalize and find the net. St. John's added an insurance goal early in the second half on a CC defensive mistake. CC countered with many serious threats but once again could not score and the game was lost. In the Consolation game (CC was in a 4 team tournament) Andy Dorsey finally broke the scoring drought 5 minutes into the second half, receiving a nice pass from Andy Henderson and beating the St. Thomas goalie. CC appeared to be headed for a hard fought 1-0 victory when a last second defensive breakdown allowed St. Thomas to tie it at 1-1. Neither team could mount an offensive threat and the contest ended in a tie.

An obviously mentally exhausted team traveled to Golden to meet the lowly Colorado School of Mines.

Once again the Tigers blew many easy scoring chances and had to rely on a goalie error off a Chip Sagel shot. Mines had a chance to even the score but the Miner failed to kick the stationary ball five feet from the goal, he stubbed his foot and the obviously dismayed Steve McDougall gladly collected it. The Tigers held on to win 1-0.

After climbing to Number 12 nationally, the Tigers are certainly unranked and in need of a few wins. This Friday they play Aurora College at 5 p.m. and Sunday they take on Trinity at 2 p.m. Come out and watch them as they attempt to change their luck.

Gridsters Drop Two

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Matt Holmes (85) runs for daylight.

BY JAMES S. GRANTZ

The Colorado College football team went on the road for the first time to Hastings, Nebraska last Saturday and received a less than cordial welcome from the 15th ranked NAIA Division II Broncos to the tune of 48-6.

The Tigers were looking for an upset, but after turning the ball over three times inside their own 35 yard line in the first quarter, things didn't look good. To top that, the Broncos scored on every possession in the first half. By halftime the game was out of reach as the Tigers trailed 45-0. The Tigers had a gut check at halftime and came out in the second half showing major improvement, both offensively and defensively. The offense moved the ball effectively while t defense allowed only 3 pts.

The only two highlights of the game f CC came in the last two minutes. Freshm strong safety Jim Grantz fell on a Bron fumble and on the ensuing pl sophomore half back Shawn "Jimmy Le Holt broke a tackle at the line scrimmage and went 67 yards for t Tigers' only tally.

CC was just another one of the casualti of last weekend's barrage of lopsi beatings in both the pro and college ran The Minnesota Vikings stomped Gre Bay 42-7 while the Bears mauled t Bengals 44-7. Notre Dame thras Purdue 41-9 and Ohio State massac Utah 64-6.

Manitou Springs Vintage Clothing and Company

In the Promenade - 725 Manitou Ave. - 685-9077

ART POSTER SALE

Loomis Lounge
10-4
THUR-FRI OCT 9-10

STUDENT PRICES
Escher, Laser Art, Photography,
Museum & Gallery Posters,
Art Reproductions from Dali to Monet, Movie Posters
and more.

Spikers Roar

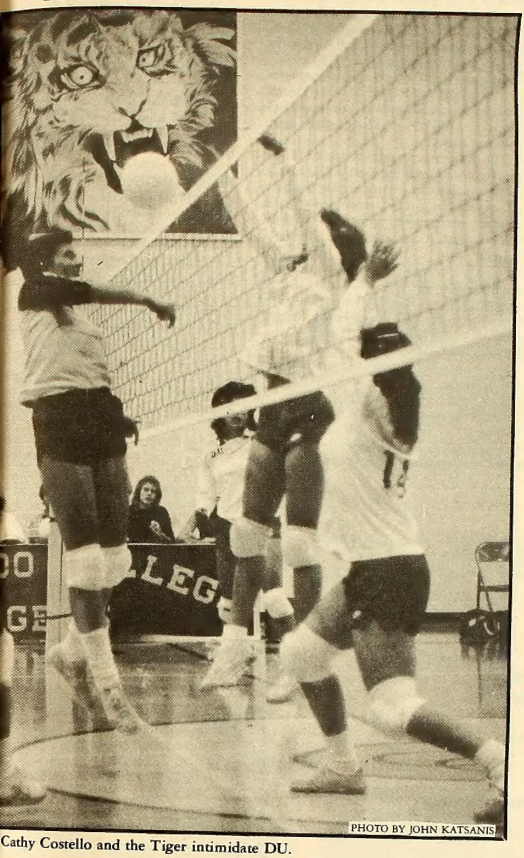

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Cathy Costello and the Tiger intimidate DU.

BY JOHN KLEEMAN

though many of you don't know it, its yball season and the C.C. Tigers are ng a mark for themselves as one of the ier volleyball teams on the Division vel.

her second year as coach, Sue Bethanis aunched the C.C. volleyball program an "also ran" to a national pionship contender. It all began last n when the Tigers would up the n with a 40-10 won-loss record. The n also included a two week streak in the Tigers went 21-1 and were ed number 1. This set of plishements earned the Tigers a trip e national tournament where they all the way to the quarterfinals.

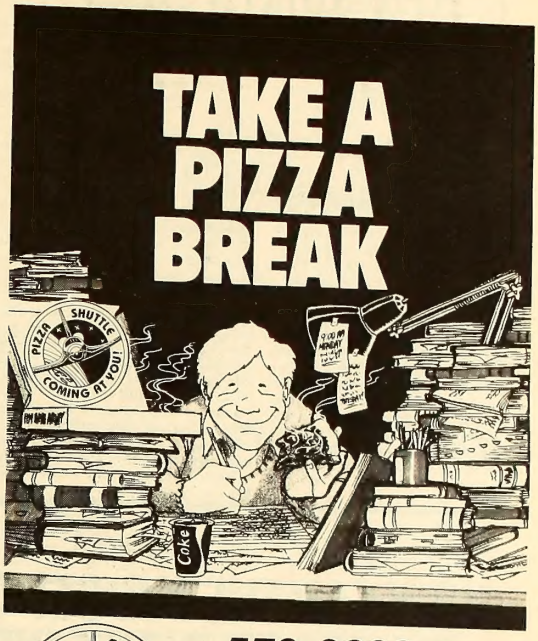
ording to Coach Bethanis this 's edition should be even better. All arters have been nominated as All- ican candidates and even more tantly the team has capable backups h position which is something that not be claimed a year ago. The 's are; Alex Reich (senior) who all tourney honors last year at the ental Tournament, Lisa Korte r) who just may very well be the best at the Division III level, Jule James r) who is a great all-around player, Smith (junior) who was a second All-American last year, Elissa rd (junior) who is a ferocious spiker osh phenom Cathy Costello. Other 's are junior Liz Leibold, nores: Faith Brunnhoelzl and Gloria i, and first year players Emily

So far this season the ladies have posted a 10-3 record and are currently ranked number 9 in the country. Coach Bethanis points out that although this year's team may not amass as many victories as last season, the team will be better because they are playing a tougher schedule which includes teams ranked in the top 20 from both Division II and III. The schedule should prepare the team better for the national tournament.

This season balance has proven to be the team's major asset. Everybody is playing tough defense and passing the ball extremely well. Offensively the Tigers are very creative and innovative. Coach Bethanis has installed a unique offense which you will not see from anybody but the CC Tigers.

According to starting outside hitter Elissa Breitbard, everybody has a positive attitude and there seems to be something magical that makes the girls play so well together. Elissa believes the team will cruise to the final four and could possibly bring home a first ever national championship for CC.

On October 10-11, CC will host the Tiger Classic which is a 10 team tournament. The tourney will include in addition to CC such volleyball powerhouses as Carleton, Cortland St. Pamona and Wisconsin-Lacrosse. Hope to see all of you down at El Pomar for the tournament because the Tigers always play better when the home crowd comes out and gives their whole hearted support.



PIZZA SHUTTLE
COMING AT YOU!

578-8686

4 Pizzas & 8 drinks
Only $20
Monday - Thursday

14" single item pizzas they can be different
Sorry no coupons on this special tax incl.

FREE DELIVERY
IN 30 MINUTES OR LESS
ANYWHERE IN OUR SERVICE ZONE

Enjoy Homecoming Weekend in Colorado Springs

NORTHPORT Restaurant

BBQ RIBS AND CHICKEN
FRESH SEAFOOD
PRIME RIB

Char-broiling brings out the flavors of dry-aged USDA choice beef, Danish Baby Back Pork Ribs, Fresh Seafood and Teriyaki. Upstairs, the Blue Parrot Grill features island appetizers, fruit daquiris and beautiful sunsets.

7115 Commerce Center Drive · 593-7678
(Just N.W. of Woodmen & I-25 next to the Hampton Inn.)

Finn's
FRESH SEAFOOD & PRIME RIB
OYSTER BAR

THE MOST EXTENSIVE LIST OF FRESH DOMESTIC AND EXOTIC SEAFOODS IN SOUTHERN COLORADO

Specials change daily with availability of fresh fish. Beef, poultry and lamb round out dinner; salads and sandwiches at lunch. Light Oyster Bar menu.

RESERVATIONS · PATIO
LUNCH · DINNER · SUNDAY BRUNCH
128 S. Tejon · Downtown · 635-3535

JOSE MULDOON'S

MEXICAN-STYLE AND AMERICAN DISHES IN A CASUAL ATMOSPHERE

Santa Fe style blue corn tortilla specialties; beef, chicken and shrimp fajitas. Salad bar with dinners. Live entertainment W-Sat after 9:30 p.m. in the lounge.

PATIO · MARGARITAS & SANGRIA
LUNCH · DINNER · SUNDAY BRUNCH
222 N. Tejon · Downtown · 636-2311

FRESH
OLD CHICAGO
PASTA & PIZZA

FRESH PASTA AND SAUCE BAR
DEEP DISH PIZZA

Chalkboard specials, salads, sandwiches and giant, fresh-baked chocolate chip cookies! Something for everyone! Take-out available. Full service tavern with satellite T.V. for sports viewing. Cubs HDQ's!

PATIO · LUNCH · DINNER
118 N. Tejon · Downtown · 634-8812

Armadillo's Alley

BY ARMADILLO

Hello Folks,

Welcome back! Hope everyone had a good block break. I'm one down, dejected, and depressed Armadillo. The Donks are 4-0. I was hoping the Donkey's 3-0 start was a fluke considering their first three opponents had a combined record of 0-9.

I figured New England would teach the Donks a thing or two. During the first half of last Sunday's game they did, heading to the locker room with a 13-3 lead that should have been larger. I don't know what the Donkeys snorted during half time, but they came out sky high. New England came out deader than a doorknob. The second half was a complete reversal of the first, the Donks dominated and won 27-20.

I hate to admit it, but the Donkeys are definately for real. Gads, I can't put up with the Broncos till late January. Please, somebody deal on their asses. I knew life was over when the Broncos contaminated Bloom County.

The 1986 Major League Baseball playoffs are upon us. Once again they have expanded the format, the league championships are now best of seven. Should be a couple of hot match ups!

Boston vs. California. Boston is led by Roger Clemens (24-4) and a fine pitching staff that compiled the 3rd best ERA in the American League, while pitching Fenway, a notorious hitter's park. The offense is led by Wade Boggs, Jim Rice, Don Baylor and Dwight Evans. The Red Sox are solid. Their only weakness is lack of speed upon the base paths.

The Angels are a strange bunch. Their pitching staff has the best ERA in the American League. Their starting pitchers all have ERA's well under 4.00. Their offense, except for young but balding Wally Joyner, is composed of toothless old geisers. Many of the Angels were stars when most of us were too young to know anything but "Mamma and Dada." Angel shortstop Rick Burleson was Boston's shortstop in the 1975 World Series. Reggie Jackson was a key member of the World Champion Oakland A's of the early 1970's. Doug Decinces, Bobby Girch and Bob Boone are not young pups either.

The Angels could surprise Boston if Mike Witt beats Clemens in Game 1. Clemens suffered a bruised elbow in his last start before the play offs, if he is unable to pitch effectively, Boston is up creek. The Angels also have a chan Reggie "Mr. October" tears up post se games as he has in the past. The pick is Boston in 6 games.

The New York Mets vs. the Ho Astros. It is going to be a barn burner Mets boast one of the best recor baseball, while the Astros have baseball's hottest team since the All break.

The Mets are loaded, five pitchers 14 wins or more. The staff has one best ERA's in the league. Gary G Keith Hernandez, Daryl Strawbery company comprise the most offense in the league. They are an awe ball club, but the Astros will win in The Astros have superior pitching currently on a tear, six shut outs in eight games. Mike Scott (18-10), 2.25 and 298 K's should win the Cy Y award along with two of the three g he will probably pitch against the Nolan Ryan has been overpowering coming off the disabled list, averaging 11 strike outs per nine innings.

Bob Knepper and Jim Deshaies also been outstanding, even th Knepper has struggled in his last starts. Charlie Kerfeld and Dave S anchor an excellent bullpen. The A offense doesn't have the Met's impre statistics, but they score enough ru win. Also, the Astros have four gam home, including the final two, if the goes seven games.

Intangibles: The Astros clinched pennant with a no-hitter, they obviously a team of destiny.

QUESTION #2.

HOW CAN THE BUDGET-CONSCIOUS COLLEGE STUDENT SAVE MONEY?

a) Save over 50% off AT&T's weekday rates on out-of-state calls during nights and weekends.

b) Don't buy textbooks when "Monarch Notes" will do just fine.

c) Save 40% off AT&T's weekday rate on out-of-state calls during evenings.

d) Count on AT&T for exceptional value and high quality service.

e) Hang around with the richest kids in school; let them pick up the tab whenever possible.

If you're like most college students in the western hemisphere, you try to make your money go a long way. That's why you should know that AT&T Long Distance Service is the right choice for you.

AT&T offers so many terrific values. For example, you can save over 50% off AT&T's day rate on calls during weekends until 5 pm Sunday, and from 11 pm to 8 am, Sunday through Friday.

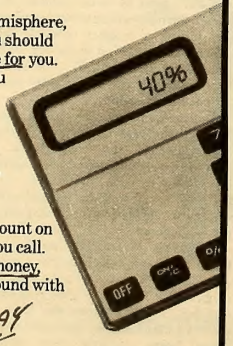
Call between 5 pm and 11 pm, Sunday through Friday, and you'll save 40% off our day rate.

Ever dial a wrong number? AT&T gives you immediate credit if you do. And of course, you can count on AT&T for clear long distance connections any place you call.

To find out more about how AT&T can help save you money, give us a call. With a little luck, you won't have to hang around with the rich kids. Call toll-free today, at 1 800 222-0300.

GREAT DEAL!

CALL TODAY



AT&T
The right choice.

© 1986 AT&T

Kang Strides

BY GENGHIS KHAN

The Colorado College Men's C Country team ventured down I-25 on 15th to participate in the Universi Southern Colorado Invitational. Facin CC squad was intense heat and an a course featuring arroyos, ca tumbleweeds and a killer half mile h

The adverse conditions did not b junior Scott Kang as he demolishe field of 60 plus runners, covering th mile course in 26:30. Scott engaged riveting three mile dual with Adam S James Seegeldt as they blew away th of the field by almost a minute. Kan "the hammer down" with 400 yards and cruised to a ten second victory Koch 23rd, Victor Reckmeyer 25th Ted Perkins 28th, also turned in efforts. The post race comments ind the geographical diversity of the tea

"The oven I stuck my head in when two years old wasn't this hot," said Y freshman Steve Miller, the "Dead H of the team, no pun intended. I Texan, Erik Browning failed to she sweats while encouraging the squad.

"It was a little nippy out, so I reckon better stay bundled up," dra Browning.

Over block break the team did up th Force Invitational. A field of 130 ru including Pat Porter, 1984 Olympic 10 meter finalist and Adams State (three defending NAIA National Champ awaited the heroic CC squad. Scott ran an outstanding 26:11, overcomin hilly five mile course and 7500 ft alt Scott was the 5th collegian and 8th overall, finishing less than a minute b Porter.

The team closed ranks behind CC's 2nd through 5th men finished 37 seconds of each other. Ryan "Am wave or what) Shaffer led the Tige followed by fellow freshman pup Kack, sophomore Ben Harrison, junior Ted Perkins. Victor Reckmeye Suhl, Scott Sarthy and Steve Miller close behind.

The CC squad is gearing toward th 11th defense of their CC Invitational C'mon out and support the team!

Ellipses and Hyperbole

BY AARON SHURE

s you may know, there are two theme ses on campus this year, the Asian and sian theme houses. Any group of lents may apply for a house, provided group is united under a common theme will enrich the entire campus. The ses haven't had a chance to prove nselves, but there are already rumors ut the lifestyles of those who live in n.

pparently the Russians use newspaper ead of toilet paper and practice ding in lines for no reason. It is said the ns don't use the whole house: all the nbers live in just one room, and there are severe restrictions on the number of children members may have. Mind you, these are only rumors. I say that lest I am attacked by Ninjas and KGB.

In search of the essence of the theme house concept, I dredged the Housing Office archives. I found the following proposals for themes that were not accepted but received honorable mention:

Velcro Theme House—The students vowed there would be not one single hard-fastener in the entire house. Residence would address the questions. 1) does velcro last indefinitely or do the little hooks eventually wear out; if so what is velcro's half life; 2) is velcro as significant as Tang as a space-spawned product, and does its advent really pale in comparison to the Great consonant Shift and the Black Death; 3) can velcro possibly be construed as a metaphor for Yin Yang, The Tao, or conscientious agriculture. There was also a cryptic reference to sleeping on the ceilings.

The Wayne Rudner Theme House—Devout Waynies would actively petition to not only get Wayne on the David Letterman show, but to have two hours of prime time television devoted to Wayne discussing himself and his life in Arizona, which would be renamed Wayne's state.

Frisbee Golf Theme House—Members would try to get all grade point averages determined by a round of frisbee golf. They would biograph the life of Jake McDuff, who invented frisbee golf when he was too proud to admit he had missed his partner and hit a tree by accident. Students in this house would explore the possibilities of Golf Frisbee, a game in which two people drive a golf ball at one another and then try to catch it.

Aerodame Theme House—The all female members of this house would write numerous papers on the movie Top Gun, learn the names of airplane parts, review the marriage vows, and go on many excursions to neighboring military educational institutions.

Another item of note I found in the Housing Office archives was a recent attempt to assign a slogan to each of the campus dormitoris. Here are some of the suggestions:

Slocum—"It's a great place for an orgy, but I wouldn't want to live there."

Mathias—"It's a great place to learn new things, like what asbestos smells like."

Loomis—"Where to go when you miss the mall," or as Chris Bell suggested, "Your home away from Holiday Inn."

McGregor—"Where men are men, and women don't live there."

Montgomery—"Where the rugs are clean, and that's exciting."

Bemis—"Where the women who don't live in McGregor are."

Ticknor—"The cleanest rugs this side of Montgomery."

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

ege president who shall remain harmless plays a round of golf at the ous Baca resort.

The One Block Plan

BY JACK KLEIN

Eight Blocks instead of Nine? Hell yeah, it sounds like the best idea I've heard in a long time. The only thing is that I think I might have a better idea. Not that this proposal is bad or anything like that, but I think we could go one step further with the finer points of the proposal and get a lot more out of a slightly different block plan. First of all, I think the idea of having more time for professors to study their subjects is very valuable. In the long run the extra knowledge that the professors gain will be handed down to us students. So what if it seems like we're getting jipped out of an extra block of education. We're gonna get the same amount of education in a shorter amount of time. That means we'll be just as educated and have even more time over the summer to apply our wealth of knowledge to the real world, and to do the things that we've always wanted to do. It sounds like an awesome plan to me, except that I think it has so much more potential. I'm almost sure someone said that we can learn from the proposals of others. Just think, if we can get the same amount of education in eight blocks as we can in nine and still get more summer vacation, then why stop there. I propose that we install the One Block plan and get straight to the point. Who am I trying to fool here anyway. The teachers want more time to study their subjects so that they can do more of what they really like to do—learn and teach. At the same time, we still want to get our full education, but we also know that vacation is the real spice of life. With the One Block plan we can have all of these in the best combination possible. The teachers will have all year to study their subjects, so then they can come back and enlighten us in one fell swoop. As a result, we will become geniuses in one block. At the same time our minds will expand increadibly because we'll have to learn the art of learning through mental telepathy. Students at CC could become valuable specimens for science. Then once we've learned our years worth in one block, we can take a huge block break for the rest of the year and do the things that we really want to do. It all sounds pretty logical to me. Why waste time, the possibilities are endless.

Josh & John's
naturally homemade ice creams
10% discount w/ad
(exp. 10/10/86)
"Over 100 Flavors Rotated Daily"
632-0299
ntown on Kiowa btwn Tejon & Nevada
Open 11 AM to Midnight

House of
YAKITORI
Japanese Restaurants
Every Tuesday
5 pm - 9 pm
ALL THE YAK YOU CAN ATTACK
$6.30
on the #17 dinner
*not available on to go or delivery orders
YAKITORI
Also try our Sushi Bar
DOWNTOWN ONLY
Downtown
16 E. Bijou
578-0915
M-Thurs 11 am-3 pm 5-9 pm
Fri & Sat 11 am-3 pm 5-10pm

ANNOUNCEMENTS

JAZZ IN THE GALLERIES "AFTER HOURS," September 24th.

The Colorado Springs Fine Arts Center has announced that it will begin a new "after hours" jazz series on Wednesday, September 24, 1986.

Each Jazz in the Galleries after hours will feature a different local jazz group, some of whom have not have not yet appeared in the park concert series.

The Fine Arts Center is located at 30 West Dale Street (at Cascade).

For more information call the Fine Arts Center at 634-5581 or the Pikes Peak Jazz and Swing Society at 634-7285.

ALWAYS RUNNING OUT OF MONEY before you think you should? Does your checking account balance play "the float" year around?

HELP IS ON THE WAY! The Financial Aid Office and the Business Office will present DOLLARS AND SENSE: How to Make Do With What Ya Got. This is a one hour money management workshop for hour money management workshop for CC students on Monday, October 6, 1986 at 3:30 p.m. in Armstrong Hall, room 300. Budgeting tips, money-stretching ideas, and information on additional resources will be available. Everyone is invited - bring that friend who owes you $$$$$$!!

ATTENTION PREMEDICAL STUDENTS.

"PREMED DAY" at the UNIVERSITY OF COLORADO MEDICAL SCHOOL will be SATURDAY, OCTOBER 4, 1986 this year. All interested premed students are invited to attend, but it should be of special interest to juniors and seniors for whom application to medical school may occur within a year.

If you wish to go please sign up at Olin Hall Desk by Friday, October 3. Cars will be leaving Olin Hall parking lot at 7:00 A.M. on Saturday and returning back at CC about 5:30 P.M.

Each Wednesday come practice your FRENCH at 5:30, at the French Table, between Bemis and Taylor.

EXHIBIT EXPLORES ANCIENT MAYA RUINS.

September 16, 1986—(Colorado Springs, CO)— The discovery of magnificent Maya ruins of Mexico and Central America is explored in "Views of Ancient Monuments," on display from August 23 to October 17 at the Tutt Library, The Colorado College.

The exhibit was produced to travel throughout Colorado by the Denver Museum of Natural History, funded by the Colorado Endowment for the Humanities and Otero Savings.

Course on African Narrative - Unfortunately an important course which will be offered in Block 6 by visiting Professor Dingome from Cameroon was left out of the last course schedule.

The course, Comparative Lit 200, will be taught in English, and will study samples from different African traditions and periods. No pre-requisite.

STAR WARS: Security Shield or Dangerous Delusion? will be the topic for an informative debate featuring Barry Daniel, Manager of Government Affairs with Martin Marietta in Denver and Dr. Niels Schoenbeck, Visiting Scientist for the National Center for Atmospheric Research in Boulder and Professor of Chemistry at Metropolitan State College in Denver.

The debate will be presented at Benet Hill Center, 2577 North Chelton Road in Colorado Springs on Saturday, October 11 at 7:30 p.m.

THE ROMANCE LANG. DEPT. IS RECRUITING students for the Mexico Program of Fall 1987. Please contact prof. K. O'Connor (AH 318) to pick up an application and fixing an interview.

Each Thursday come practice your SPANISH at 5:30, at the Spanish Table, between Bemis and Taylor.

OKTOBERFEST Oct. 11 outside the German house starting around 8:00 p.m. Refreshments (the German national drink), food, and a German band coming at 10:30. Auf Wiedersehen bis dann.

humanities who show greatest promise or future achievement in academic research and scholarship in higher education.

Contact: the Fellowship Office, National Research Council, 2101 Constitution Avenue, Washington, D.C. 20418.

BIG MOUNTAIN GLEANING—very short notice we understand, but if you want to help gather potatoes for shipment to the Navajo people of Big Mountain, meet Friday afternoon (today) at 2:30 in the Slocum parking lot. Much fun. Camping at the Sand Dunes Friday p.m., return Saturday afternoon/evening.

Carrie Battilega
For Homecoming Queen

"Cycles Peuge

The French Manufact
of the World's fines bicycles since 1882

jay's BICYCLE
SINCE 1905

19 E. Kiowa • Downtown
(7 blocks south of campus)
Phone: 634-4733

RICK WAGER—
"CC Class of '64 Proprie

LEVIATHAN

In Our 13th Encore Season

Submit Pure Art, Political Art, Pure (?) Politics or Artifice Before Oct. 8th at Bemis Desk
or the
Student Center

Remember, Leviathan is Your Journal—Contribute Today!

The 1985-8
YEARBOOK
are here!
Pick them u
at Bemis/
Taylor 11:30
1:00 Mon-Fr
next week o
call Jane x22

ENROLL IN AMERICA'S LARGEST MANAGEMENT TRAINING PROGRAM.

Becoming an officer in today's Army—which also includes the Army Reserve and Army National Guard—requires getting the right kind of management and leadership training.

What's the best way to get it? By enrolling in America's largest management training program-Army ROTC.

In the Army ROTC 4-year program, you'll acquire discipline of mind and spirit, and the ability to perform under pressure. We call it learning what it takes to lead.

It'll pay off, too. First, during your last two years of college, when you'll start receiving up to $1,000 a year.

And, most of all, on graduation day, when you receive a commission along with a college degree.

ARMY ROTC.
BE ALL YOU CAN BE.

MILITARY SCIENCE OFFERS

"FUNDAMENTALS OF LEADERSHIP"

EVERY WEDNESDAY, 3:30-4:45 PM

BOETTCHER HEALTH CENTER
Small Class Room

State University of New York College at Oswe

International Education / Overseas Academic Programs

102 Rich Hall
SUNYCO, Oswego, NY 13
Telephone (315) 341-2

SEMESTER OR YEAR 1987/88

LONDON, ENGLAND (Spring: Jan.-June/Fall: Sept.-Dec.)
$2640/semester — Humanities & Int'l. Broadcasting

Humanities students choose from art, history, music, English, & theatre courses and attend Shakespeare Festival. International Broadcasting students gain perspective of British media via classes, excursions, & guest lecturers. Students are housed in central London. Cost includes roundtrip air NY to London, room & full breakfast, field trips, & cultural events.

PARIS, FRANCE (Spring: Feb.-June/Fall: Oct.-Jan.)
$2640/semester

Courses are given at the prominent Sorbonne and Institute Catholique de Paris. 12 credits minimum are taken from several disciplines: humanities (language), economics, business, social sciences, cinema, etc. Cost includes roundtrip air NY to Paris, room, field trips & cultural events, and Sorbonne & institute fees.

UNIVERSITY OF PUERTO RICO
(Rio Piedras Campus) (Spring: Jan.-May/Fall: Aug.-Dec.)
$2050/semester

Studies in all fields of liberal arts & humanities. Participants should have 5 semesters or equivalent in Spanish (Summer "Pre-Program" in Rio Piedras available to help meet proficiency.) Room in UPR residence halls. Cost includes: roundtrip air NY to San Juan, room & board, cultural events & field trips.

UNIVERSITY OF PUERTO RICO
(Mayaguez Campus) (Spring: Jan.-May/Fall: Aug.-Dec.)
$1750/semester *

Business Administration students select courses from Industrial Management, Accounting, Finance, Marketing, Organizational Studies, & Economics divisions. Instruction in Spanish; texts in English. Spanish language proficiency required (Summer "Pre-Program" in Rio Piedras available to help meet proficiency.) Cost (* estimated) includes room & board, texts, & cultural events.

BEIJING, CHINA (Spring: Feb.-June/Fall: Sept.-Jan.)
$2500/semester

At Beijing Teachers College in suburban Beijing, studies in Chinese language, literature, culture, art & history are instructed in English. The Great Wall and Ming Tombs are only a day trip away. Program cost includes room & board, texts, field trips & cultural events.

SUMMER 1987

FRANCE (6 wks./St. Malo/late June-early Aug.)
$1550 French Language & Culture (6-7 credits)

Two weeks in Paris followed by 4 weeks of cont study & family homestay in St. Malo, the "Em Coast of Brittany." Excursions, including the Arthurian Country, the Druids, & the Isle of Jer Cost includes roundtrip air, ground transportat room in Paris, room & full board in St. Malo, excursions & activities.

SPAIN (6 wks./Madrid/early July-mid-Aug.)
$1395 Spanish Language & Culture (6-8 credits)

Classes and guest speakers 4 days a week, toge with weekend excursions to cities such as Segov Toledo, Sevilla & Granada. Get to know Spain through many cultural activities: theatre, bullfights, and flamenco dances. Cost include roundtrip airfare, ground travel, room & board all cultural activities.

ENGLAND (6 wks./London/late June-mid-Aug.)
$1395 Contemporary British Culture (6 credits)

Meet four days a week for classes, go on field observe & critique plays, attend the Shakespe Festival, & explore more of the UK in your spa time. Accomodations are centrally located wi walking distance of Hyde Park, theatres & muse Cost includes roundtrip air from NYC, room with breakfast, field trips & cultural events.

SCOTLAND, ENGLAND & WALES (2 wks./early June)
$990 Study Tour of Historical Britain (3 cred

Travel thru these 3 beautiful countries by mot to visit museums, castles, cathedrals & archeo sites brought into perspective by a knowledgea historian. 3 credits may be earned in History Int'l. Studies courses. All pre-arranged hotel accomodations with full English breakfast are i cluded in cost, plus roundtrip airfare, motorco and medieval banquet in a Welch castle.

JAMAICA (3 wks./late May-early June)
$1060 Modern Janaica (6 credits)

Study modern Jamaicen history, politics, and e economic structure with special emphasis on Af culture while in a West Indian paradise! Visit historical & cultural sites, and observe fanta of stunning natural beauty. Program cost inc roundtrip air from NYC, ground transportation, accomodations & field trips.

* All Program Costs Subject To Change With Notice
* Cost Of Mandatory SUNY Health & Accident Insurance Is Additional
* High School Jrs. & Srs. May Attend Summer Programs For College Credit

Mail Coupon to:
Director of International Education / 102 Rich Hall / SUCO / Oswego, New York / 13126
Please send program brochure to:

NAME _____
STREET or PO # _____ APT. # _____
CITY _____ STATE _____ ZIP _____
Program of interest: _____
I am a student at: _____
I heard about your program from: _____

CATALYST

Volume 20, No. 4 | Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado | 10 October 1986

Romer Debates Alone

Strickland a No Show

Storey Speaks Next Week

BY CAROLINE BRYAN

Roy Romer had the once in a lifetime opportunity to debate with himself on uesday evening in Armstrong Hall. omer, the Democratic candidate for vernor, was scheduled to debate with epublican Ted Strickland, but Romer was e only candidate present to state his inions.

The question and answer session, which s broadcast on KRCC, featured estions from the American Association University Women, and was followed by examination of current issues by the ague of Women Voters. The League of omen Voters will be at the Colorado llege again on October 14 at 7:30 p.m. to onsor a Congressional forum and debate h regard to Amendment 4. The estions from the A.A.U.W., dealt mainly h environmental and educational cerns, but also detailed a strong phasis upon clarifying the candidates ws on women's rights.

Romer, who is currently the state asurer, firmly stated that his utmost priorities as Governor of Colorado would be to achieve "absolute" equality for women, and a higher quality of education statewide. Romer views an election as a "collective expression of what we value most," and believes that the interests of greater Colorado lie in the creation of more jobs and the investment in public improvement.

Not really a lonely guy. PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Romer plans to revitalize the "soft" economy that Colorado is currently wrestling with by a direct attack on crime,

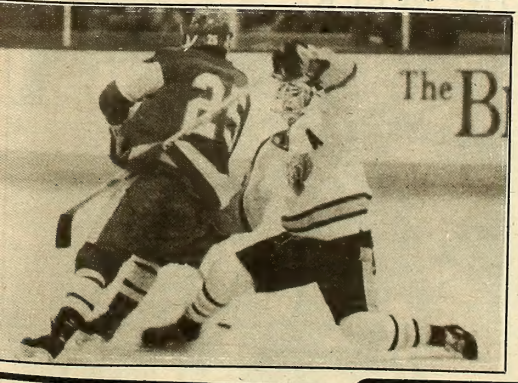
Continued page 2

Veterans to Lead CC Icers

BY KATHLEEN MAHONEY

fter a disappointing 1985-86 season Colorado College Tigers are looking to things around this year. With fifteen erans, Head Coach Mike Bertsch feels as the crew to improve upon last year's record. The experience of these players combined with the new additions to the roster make up a solid team.

The Tigers lost eleven games by only one goal last year in compiling their 12-26-2 overall record. Scoring production was the major disappointment for the team. But Bertsch is confient that that will change this year and scoring will be one key to CC's success.



"The goal percentage has to turn around for the wins. We have the talent to score and it is not just one or two players. It'll be spread amongst the team," commented Bertsch.

Back in position for the Tigers is senior forward Rick Boh, last year's leading scorer with 30 goals, including two hat tricks. Another offensive-defensive threat is tri-captain and second team All WCHA defenseman Rob Doyle. Tying Boh with a total of 59 points for the season, Doyle tallied 18 goals and 41 assists. Doug Clarke, 1 1984-85 second team All WCHA defenseman, returns to the Tigers after spending last year with the Canadian National Team. The combination of Clarke and Doyle at the blue line worked two years ago for the Tigers, contributing 105 points between them. So Bertsch is hoping for big things from this duo again this year.

Continued page 17

Information Systems Network to Link Campus Terminals

BY DAVID A. FITZGERALD

The Colorado College is currently installing an Information Systems Network which will link together computer terminals on campus. The installation of the A.T. & T. Information Systems Network will increase the access of the five main computer systems which will operate on campus. The new computerized library card catalog and the A.T. & T. 3B2 system will be two new systems on campus for the students use.

The five central systems which will be linked under the A.T. & T. Information Systems Network are the Academic Vax, the library card catalog, the A.T. & T. 3B2, the Administrative Prime, and Program Development. Students will have access to three systems, the Academic Vax, the library card catalog, and the A.T. & T. 3B2 which is the new writing program called Writers Workbench.

The installation of the Information Systems Network will link the 110 terminals on campus. Faculty offices are currently being wired to accommodate more terminals. This will give faculty the ability to reserve books in the library via the computer terminal without leaving the office. There is also potential for faculty to request transcripts of their advisees through the new systems network.

The automation process occurring in the library will also become a part of the new computer network. The new computerized card catalog will enable students to gain information from the card catalog from any terminal on campus. This card catalog will even give status on the availability of a book. Students will also be able to reserve books or place their names on a waiting list if the book has been checked out.

The potential for students access to general information will also increase with the use of the network as an electronic bulletin board. Groups on campus will be able to put announcements into the system and update them periodically.

The new information system will not enable students to pry into areas containing sensitive information. The network operates on a switch which enables a user to log into one of the main sytems.

According to Rick Keller, the director of Academic computing, the switch will contain two different security barriers. The first barrier to prevent unauthorized entry into a system will be the physical defense. Certain terminals on campus will only have access to those systems containing sensitive operation. Access from an unauthorized terminal will be denied because the terminal will not have the

Continued page 3

God,

Politics,

and the G.O.P.

See Page 11

South African

Divestment at CC

See Page 8

Grad school or career? Propose or not? Contras or Communists?
Sprite or 7-Up? Regular or Sugar-free? Less salt or classic Spam?
Reproduced from 1959 Tiger

Romer continued

and the re-channeling of Colorado's energies from skiing and football towards educational and environmental improvement.

Romer sees Colorado as the "Athens of the West." He views it as the commercial center, but also as a Mecca with the highest value placed upon the mind, the soul, the arts, and culture. Romer believes that "Athens of the West" is a good investment for our future.

Romer plans to set aside a specific fund for centers of excellence, a fund composed of six million dollars from the government and another six million dollars from the private sector; he plans to allocate this sum in what he sees as the five most important areas: aerospace, microbiology, material science, telecommunications, and the liberal arts. He plans to return eighty-five percent of the "windfall" from the federal government to the taxpayers, while reserving the remaining fifteen percent for the improvement of the quality of education in Colorado, viewing education as "a precondition to economic vitality."

Romer sees no use in "treading water" economically, and strongly believes that we must work towards an improved quality of life in Colorado. This, according to Romer, would include a narrowing of the gaps between the "five Colorados": the Denver metro, front range, southern Colorado, eastern plains, and western slope area.

During the next four years, Romer believes that the two most important issues facing Colorado will be the health of the economy and the maintenance of an adequate number of governmental services. With the federal government cutting back on financial aid, the dual handling of these issues will become a juggling act of sorts.

On his democratic party status, Romer believes that Coloradans will see their way clearly towards the real reasons for electing a Governor. He views himself as a more agressive, bolder, and harder driving candidate than Strickland, and typifies leadership qualities as the requirements for leadership, and labels soley as the rights for labels.

Next Tuesday's event was also planned as a debate between candidates, featuring the contestants for Ken Kramer's vacated Fifth District Congressional Seat. The Republican candidate Joel M. Hefley however, has backed out of the engagement. Bill Story, Democratic candidate for the position, will attend the event.

The controversial Amendment 4 will be debated at the forum. If adopted on November 4th, the Amendment would require that all tax changes (increases or new taxes) be approved by the voters at a General Election. The October 14th event will be broadcast by KRCC.

Please Recycle This Paper

FREE
FLAVORED CORN
Bring this coupon with you the next time you buy a 30 oz. bag of Vic's popcorn. You'll get a FREE medium bag of the flavored corn of your choice.
- buttery caramel
- zesty cheese
- spicy cinnamon

Good at Uintah location only
Limit one per coupon
CORN Vic's POPPER
1864 W. Uintah 520-9129
Mon-Sat 10-7 Sun 12-6

Radio Symposium Focuses on South Africa

BY BILL PORTER

Concerned about what lies ahead for apartheid after Congress' recent passing of new sanctions, CC students gathered Wednesday evening outside of Armstrong Great Hall to listen to the KRCC broadcast of a collegiate symposium on South Africa held at Middlebury College.

Despite the distinguished credentials of the panel members, as well as the unique opportunity for members of the CC community to learn more about the situation in South Africa, only 26 people attended the meeting, with 14 staying the full two hours.

Black Student Union President Sindi Medar-Gould exclaimed that she was "totally disappointed" in the turn out. Although recognizing that a slide show on Guatemala was also being held that night, she commented, "If this is the level of concern on such an issue, then I am very sorry for the students at CC." English exchange student Annabel Lermer agreed, citing the "complete lack of social conscience on the campus." Both were also upset that only one faculty member and none of the representatives to the College's Shareholder Responsibility Committee were present. Finally, KRCC Manager Mario Valdez observed that people who allow blacks to be oppressed in South Africa "will allow people anywhere to be subjugated."

Those students that did manage to attend the gathering, however, found the symposium to be educational. The panel, focusing on what will happen next for Pretoria, discussed the effects of the new U.S. sanctions, whether black workers will truly be better off in the long run with these sanctions in place, what British actions should now be, and whether colleges and companies should continue to divest their South African holdings.

Malcolm Frazer, former Prime Minister of Australia and member of the Commonwealth Emminent Persons Group, spoke first, stressing, "Words are not going to achieve change." The group, after lengthy discussions with senior government officials of South Africa, concluded that sanctions are "the only option available to the west" that could solve the problem of black repression. Pretoria, he reiterated, has shown great fear of sanctions. He also pointed out that the U.S. sanctions would not be effective unless other countries, such as Britain, Germany, and Japan, also acted strongly.

Furthermore, Frazer warned, maintenance of present policies in Great Britain will be "a great gift to Mikhail Gorbachev," as South Africa could very easily fall under communist influence if the present government remains in power. Drawing applause from the radio audience, he questioned why Contras in Nicaragua are said to have the right to take up arms against an oppressive government when blacks in South Africa are not. He concluded by asking the US to retain its reputation as the "greatest liberating institution in the world" and help the blacks attain their rights.

Next to speak was NAACP representative Benjamin Hook, who contended that the US policy of "constructive engagement" was "a colossal failure." He strongly believed that sanctions "will work, will bring about change." He also questioned the recent appointment of a black as the new US ambassador to South Africa, asking whether "we're only changing the messenger, and not the message." He also acknowledged that change will undoubtedly come to South Africa, but he asserted, "The sooner we act, the more likely we are to save lives." He ended with an appeal to college students to continue bringing attention to "the evil of apartheid."

Dumisani Nxumalo, a South African journalist exiled to the US, criticized Ronald Reagan for not being "emotionally, mentally or spiritually involved in ending apartheid." In fact, he noticed, "Americans [in general] love black people as long as they remain 10,000 miles away." Claiming the South Africa issue is "about lives," he asserted that blacks and whites are "doomed to live together and the point is how many people should die before Margaret Thatcher or Ronald Reagan fully recognize the problem in South Africa."

Finally, Alan Van Egmund of the St... Department working committee ... southern Africa shared the Administ... tion's views on Pretoria. "The mo... compelling issues," he asserted, "are ... promote justice and reconciliation." T... problem, however, is not as eas... recognized as one in "Miami Vice," ... explained, but is a "complex issue."

Additionally, he cited Reagan ... executive order that "all governme... agencies will faithfully enforce [Congre... recent Anti-Apartheid Act of 1986]," ... well as figures showing the US has spe... $50 million dollars in direct aid to victi... of South Africa's government. He al... mentioned that, as part of the A... "consultations will occur" with oth... nations concerning tougher sanctio... Lastly, he highlighted the administratio... present goals: to have the current So... African state of emergency withdrawn, ... have all political prisoners set free, and ... allow all anti-apartheid organizatio... such as the National African Congress, ... operate freely.

The second half of the program w... devoted to answering questions, both th... of students at Middlebury College a... those of students listening to the progra... throughout the nation. CC student Te... Mattera called in a question that w... answered by Van Edmund. Asking why ... harsh US policy towards Libya—includi... sanctions and other such restrictions—... not applied against South Africa, Matt... was answered, "South Africa is a uni... situation. Here we're trying to work ... promote negotiation and dialogue."

Mattera, however, found the ans... unsatisfactory, calling it "bureaucrat... Medar-Gould, who helped formulate ... question, agreed, saying, "We asked ... right question to the wrong person. ... should have asked Benjamin Hoo... someone not involved in ... administration."

The gathering concluded with Med... Gould reminding students that a rally ... be held today on the steps of Palmer Ha... 12:15. The rally will culminate wit... march to Joy Manufacturing Comp... which has investments in South Afric...

Photo of the Week

Winning submission to Photo of the Week wins a fabulous mocha shake from the Hub—courtesy of David Klein.

Writing Center Provides Workbench

BY ALEC REKOW

Into the first week of second block, approximately 200 students have visited the Writing Center and received individual help from center tutors. "Many students, however, may think the reconstruction of Rastall Center has demolished the Center's facilities. This isn't true. We're here in Cossitt Hall and are ready to provide any type of writing help students or faculty may need," says Writing Center Director Robin Root.

This fall the center's facilities include a new computer editing program. Within two months students will enjoy limited access to the program, called "Workbench" via computer terminals all over campus. "Workbench" will help students and faculty improve their writing technique through objective analysis of editing problems such as grammar and style. "Workbench" will constitute one aspect of the many facilities and writing options offered through the Writing Center.

Originally Bell Labs developed "Workbench" for business purposes. Several years ago, however, Colorado State University obtained the program free of charge because they converted it toward academic usage. Recently, CC bought the converted package from Bell Labs.

While "Workbench" cannot help with organization and logic problems, it can point out mistakes through the use of its 30 sub-programs. It recognizes vague or wordy phrases, i.e. "due to the fact that," capitalizes and brackets all "to be" passive verbs and determines the total percentage of passive vs. action verbs, analyzes all sentences for average length and complexity, i.e. 48% simple sentences, 52% compound, checks similarily sounding words, i.e. affect and effect, it's and its, your and you're, alerts writer to spacing and capitalization errors, and moves punctuation inside double quotes. Based on its analysis the computer suggests at what grade level the student is writing on this particular paper.

"The computer's analysis will not necessarily be correct," cautions Robin Root. "You have to make your own judgement." But after scanning the program's analysis, the student may better determine a paper's grammatical and stylistic quality. "If you are still stuck or can't develop a thesis, come to the Writing Center," Root offers.

The center's availability to students is a special bonus for the CC community. At many colleges students must be referred with specific writing problems by a professor in order to have access to campus writing help.

At CC, however, students may arrive in Cossitt with any type of writing dilemna at any stage in the writing process and receive individual help. Additionally, Director Root and the writing staff store a variety of helpful instruction sheets that cover: how to give a good oral report, how to spot a dangling modifier, what to do about semi colons, and how to take class exams painlessly. Students are encouraged to borrow any of the shelves' list of reference books.

While writing papers often involves the individual's painstaking process of evaluation and re-writes, the Writing Center tutors and facilities can help make the process easier.

Doug Haller, a junior Geology major, has visited the Writing Center since his freshman year. "I like to get an outside opinion of my writing before I turn in a final draft," Doug says. "It definitely helps me organize my thoughts and express them clearly in the paper. We find out if my thesis is well supported, if my paper makes sense," he observes.

Obviously, each student has individual strengths and weaknesses. But it's through revision that one achieves a clear logical paper. After all, one purpose of writing papers is to educate others about an idea or fact; in order to educate, one must be understood.

The center welcomes students from any class or major whether it be a freshman with her first three page paper or an English major stuck on his senior thesis.

The center's atmosphere is relaxing. The tutors provide constructive criticism while helping the student. As writers, they know how difficult it can be to share personal thoughts. If the students become hungry or thirsty while they work with the tutors, they may help themselves to tea and cookies.

Director Robin Root enjoys seeing such a variety of students and their work in the center. "I think it's important for students to share their work with the tutors. Second opinions help clarify a student's main ideas. Its nice to have a place where students can talk about writing," Root says.

Students may take their work to the Writing Center Monday through Friday, 10:30 AM-4:30 PM. Sunday through Thursday evenings 7-10 PM they may go to the library for special attention. For an appointment, call ext. #742.

Network continued,

physical capability to log into unauthorized systems.

Once a user has the physical capability to log into a system they must then pass through the logical defense barrier. The logical defense is incorporated into a system to prevent unauthorized access to information.

The user must first receive approval as an approved user of the system by giving their name and the the user must give the proper password. Passwords will be individualized and each person will be required to change their password every two weeks or subsequent attempts to gain access to the system will be denied.

"Colorado College will become the first college of this size to install a system of this complexity."

According to Rick Keller "Colorado College will become the first college of this size to install a system of this complexity." The completion of the installation of the Information Systems Network will occur in the next two months. The cost for the installation of the Information Systems Network is $200,000. The network however will expose C.C. students to the changing nature of moving, storing, and using of information.

Please Recycle Your Computer Paper

DOMINO'S PIZZA

TWO 12" ONE TOPPING PIZZAS FOR $9.14

(TAX NOT INCLUDED)
Please see below for other selections.

Limited Delivery Area
Our drivers carry less than $20

AVOID THE NOID
CALL DOMINO'S PIZZA

30 minute guarantee

If your pizza does not arrive within 30 minutes, present this coupon to the driver for $3.00 off your order
One coupon per pizza

Fast, Free Delivery
Good at listed locations.

One of the greatest offers ever from Domino's Pizza—two 12" pizzas for the price of a large! Twice the pizza for one low price!

For a limited time, order any two 12" pizzas (they don't have to be the same!), and you'll get them for the price of one 16". The price will be determined by the pizza with the most toppings.

Two 12" pizzas will only cost you:

Superb cheese	$7.95
1 topping	$9.14
2 toppings	$10.33
3 toppings	$11.52
4 toppings	$12.71
5 toppings	$13.90
6 toppings	$15.09

Twice the pizza for one low price—two 12" pizzas for the price of a large!
And, hot to your door in 30 minute or less, GUARANTEED!

Offer expires Nov. 1, 1986.

635-1511

DOMINO'S PIZZA DELIVERS® FREE.

All Pizzas Include Our Special Blend of Sauce and 100% Real Cheese.

Our Superb Cheese Pizza
12" Cheese $5.65
16" Cheese $7.95

Additional Items
Pepperoni, Mushrooms, Ham, Onions, Green Peppers, Black Olives, Pineapple, Sausage, Ground Beef, Jalapeno Peppers,
Extra Cheese (1 item)
Double Cheese (2 items)
Thick Crust, Extra Sauce

Each Item
12" item $ .79
16" item $1.19

Ask about our Group Discount (on 5 or more pizza orders).

We accept checks.

Prices do not include tax. Our drivers carry less than $20.00.

Open for Lunch Every Day
11 am - 12 am Sun.-Thurs.
11 am - 1 am Fri.-Sat.

Latin American Awareness Week

Malone Discusses Guatemalan Abuses

BY TED CRAIG

Speaking Wednesday night in Armstrong Hall, political activist Bob Malone described Guatemala's long and continuing record of human rights violations. Despite the inauguration in January of a civilian president, Christian Democrat Vinicio Cerezo, "the military remains in control." Malone is touring the country to better inform Americans as to what is happening in Guatemala and to expose what he sees as the US role in supporting that repression.

The program began with a brief video on the activities of the Mutual Support

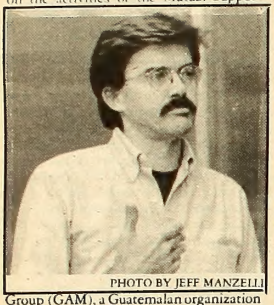


PHOTO BY JEFF MANZELLI

Group (GAM), a Guatemalan organization created by relatives of the "disappeared." GAM is the only opposition group able to operate in Guatemala today, a privilege due primarily to its international reputation and publicity. The video documented the continuing occurance of "disappearances"—instances of citizens simply disappearing, presumably murdered.

In his talk following the video, Malone discussed Guatemalan "disappearances" in depth. He stated that this form of political repression is actually more common in Guatemala than even in well publicized Chile. Under Cerezo's civilian rule, "disappearances" are still running at a rate of over one a day.

According to Malone, Cerezo does have strong credentials as a reformer and human rights activist. The political strength of the military, however, has greatly limited the President's ability to act. Upon leaving power, the Army passed over 40 decrees designed to maintain their control over the "civilian" government.

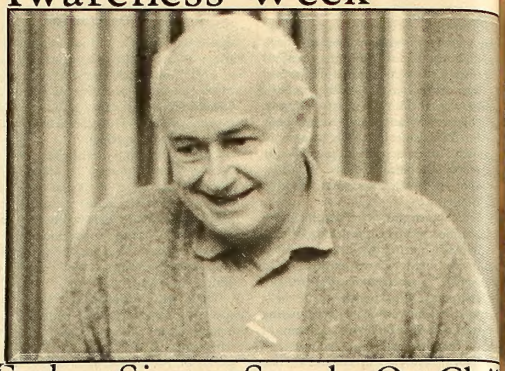
Malone stated that the Army was prepared to symbolically step down from power for two central reasons. First, the economy has declined to its worst state since the great depression; military leaders are apparently anxious to have a civilian take the blame for this. More importantly, the Army's campaign against Guatemalan revolutionaries has been largely successful in destroying their bases of support. Through a program of village destruction and of establishing secure villages likened to the "strategic hamlets" of Vietnam, the Army has managed to curtail rebel activities.

Although Cerezo assumed power (in an election remarkably free of fraud according to international observers) with a pledge to make service in the military and residence in "strategic hamlets" voluntary, he has so far not done so.

Mr. Malone is a national representative of NISGUA (Network in Solidarity with the People of Guatemala) and is touring the country in an attempt "to raise the visibility in this country of the human rights abuses occuring in Guatemala."

One component of NISGUA's work is a letter writing campaign directed at President Cerezo. Malone is soliciting letters which will admonish Cerezo to take action against the assasinations, to appoint an independent commission to study past abuses, and to protect members of the Mutual Support Group.

CC Students interested in aiding NISGUA or in gaining more information about the group should contact Lisa Graves or Anne Lindsey of the Latin American Awareness Group.



Father Sinnot Speaks On Chil

BY GREG GRIFFIN

Monday evening Father Jim Sinnot, a Maryknoll priest, spoke on the present day situation in Chile. Sinnot, who was expelled from South Korea on human rights issues after living and working there for 15 years, has just returned from a year of service for the church in Chile.

Living and working in a working class parish in Santiago, Sinnot witnessed the situation of Chile's lower class under General Pinochet's military regime. He described his parish and others like it as "zones of civil war." In the informal speech, Sinnot spoke briefly on current events in Chile, such as the recent attempt on Pinochet's life on September 7 which led to a declaration of a state of siege by the Pinochet government. Sinnot also touched upon Chile—US relations, critisizing each government for their lack of any movement to restore democracy in C

After speaking, Father Sinnot answ the questions of students and faculty. M of the questions addressed the strength power of opposition and human ri groups in Chile. Sinnot stressed the ro the church as the strongest human ri organization in Chile, although t power is severely limited by government. Political opposition gr are, of course, even more oppres particularly under the state of siege. Si expressed cinicism about the upcom "elections" in 1989.

Father Sinnot's speech was sponso by Latin American Awareness, a stu organization promoting education involvement in current events in L America.

An Eye Beyond War

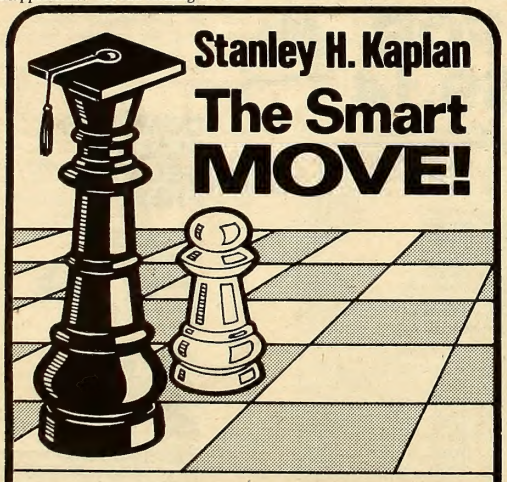
BY AKLILU DUNLAP

Nuclear war prevention is the theme of a presentation to be given by Beyond War representatives Tuesday, October 14 at 7:00 p.m. in Tutt Library. The event is sponsored by one of the new organizations on campus, the Nuclear Action Coalition. "We hope to present a wide range of views concerning the nuclear war issue," said NAC president Laurie Stone, explaining the group's purpose.

In a self-descriptive pamphlet currently in distribution, the international movement Beyond War characterized itself as an "opportunity for concerned individuals to become involved and to make a difference." The foundation believes the resolution to the nuclear war threat is a multi-step process: the first being education. "Ending war will take a new way of thinking and acting—one based upon the understanding that all people share one interconnected, interdependent life-support system." The group hopes to "inform people of the crisis we face and to demonstrate and communicate the new way of thinking will bring about a world beyond war."

Referring to the arsenals of the m powers, the non-profit organization wa that "these weapons must never be used humanity is to avoid the daily threa extinction. Continuing, they add that primary loyalty must be to all life and to well-being of the whole system. If we a endure and propser, it will be togethe not at all." Beyond War has a member of 8,000 people spanning various count throughout the world. The local chapt stationed in Denver.

In addition to such special progra NAC will conduct video presentations discussions every Thursday as part o public awareness program. The gro next project is a fund raiser titled "C Peace A Dance." This dance, to be he conjunction with others on camp throughout the country this fall, will r money to fund local and national p movements. CC's version will feature live bands. The event will take plac Cossit Gym sometime in early Novem



PREPARATION FOR:

GMAT • LSAT • GRE

Stanley H. KAPLAN Educational Center LTD.

CLASSES HELD AT DOWNTOWN RAINTREE INN I-25 & BIJOU STARTING NOW!

(LSAT & GRE start Oct. 25)

Call 761-8904 Now!

1146 N. TEJON 633-0132

Mountain Chalet

RENTAL EQUIPMENT SALE!

BACKPACKS, TENTS, SLEEPING BAGS

Sale Begins - 9:30 a.m. Friday October 10th

FINAL DISCOUNTS ON ALL SUMMER SALE ITEMS

Sale Ends October 18th

hursday at 11

BY CAROLINE BRYAN

he Thursday-at-11 lecture series in unction with Great Performers ured Emanuil Sheynkman, who has n visiting the school with his wife nia Sudarikova as an artist in residence the past week. He delivered a short ure in which he described the history of instrument the balalaika.

s a native Russian, Mr. Sheynkman is emely fond of Russian folk music, and ted the audience to a live performance even selections for the balalaika and o which were met by an enthusiastic vd response. Mr. Sheynkman, who has n playing the balalaika since he was years old, studied the instrument in ia for many years. He attended both Mussorgsky Institute, and the Rimsky-sakov Conservatory, where he received conservatory degre as a soloist, ductor, and instructor of stringed ruments.

Mr. Sheynkman has performed with the ingrad Philharmonic Orchestra and Leningrad Chamber Orchestra. While ding in the Soviet Union, Mr. ynkman made many recordings which ude music for the mandolin, and ous film scores.

n 1978, Mr. and Mrs. Sheynkman ved to the United States and now make ir home in Los Angeles, California. ey both devote a large amount of their e to performing in an effort to make erican audiences more aware of the satility, and incredible beauty of the alaika and the mandolin. Largely due to Sheynkman's efforts, the balalaika is ng viewed as a more serious instrument he United States.

The Sheynkmans will be giving their final concert this week to the Colorado College community on Friday evening at 8:15 in the Packard auditorium. This concert will feature music for the balalaika and the paino, with a few selections specifically for the mandolin.

Theft Update

BY COURTNEY MURPHY

"Thefts and burglaries are worse this year than ever before," according to CC Security Head, Lee Parks. Since August 26, when the first new students arrived, there have been a total of 51 thefts on campus. All of the thefts took place in heavily traveled areas and with items "too tempting to pass up." In addition to the "typical" items stolen (e.g. wallets and bicycles) cars and telephones were added to the list of bootie. Due to the increase in theft, campus security is on the alert. Unfortunately, students and faculty are not so conscious.

Apparently no area of campus is immune to the hands of thievery; wallets have been taken from Bemis, Slocum, Ticknor, Tutt, Armstrong and Packard. Although returned at the end of "joyrides, cars have been stolen from Mathias and Loomis parking lots. Eight bicycles have been stolen in the last six weeks, four of which were reported unlocked and four as locked (although no broken chains were found). From August 26 to September 4, 17 telephones were stolen from various dormatories, "presumably by off-campus students," conceeds Parks.

To date student's possessions have been the primary target, though no one in the CC community can escape unscathed. Security in Armstrong has been stepped up considerably after the theft of eight pieces of office equipment. Details of the thefts are sketchy in order not to jeopardize the investigation. Parks reported that he has had to "utilize extra manpower to patrol Armstrong and Palmer because faculty fail to lock their doors" and that he would rather see "security out patrolling the campus where they belong."

The responsibility should not rely solely on campus security. Parks suggests that students should "lock up and be alert." In the event of observing a suspicious character, "call security at once." Parks also advises that students engrave serial numbers on their property with electric pens available in the Student Center. The Student Center also has "forms to fill out, listing valuable items with make, year and serial number, to make the items more identifiable." One final thought from Parks, "be able to identify all property."

Please Recycle This Paper

SKYWAY VIDEO

Rentals & Sales

577-9047

Hours:
Monday-Thursday 10:30-7
Friday & Saturday 10:30-8
Closed Sunday

- Foreign Films (Excellent Selection)
- Classic Films
- Operas
- Musicals

As well as an extensive selection of

- Current Releases

— No Club Or Membership Fees —
Tuesday Special - $1.49 Rentals
Sunday Rentals - Free

Skyway Plaza • S. 8th & Arcturus
(feel free to call for directions)

PIZZA SHUTTLE

PIZZA SHUTTLE COMING AT YOU!

ANNOUNCES THE

"PRICE WARP"

ANY LARGE 16" PIZZA FOR A

TOTAL OF $10.00

THAT'S RIGHT! Any amount of items for only TEN DOLLARS. Tax is included in this price. No need to worry about change.

BONUS! 2 FREE Drinks With This Special.
Please Ask for The "Price Warp" By Name.

CALL 578-8686

Special Expires 10/31/86
Sorry No Coupons
2573 Airport Rd.

FREE DELIVERY
in 30 minutes or less anywhere in our service zone. Road conditions permitting.

Pizza Shuttle Has Always Had Two Pizzas For One Low Price

TAKE A PIZZA BREAK

THE GEMINI PROGRAM
TWO PIZZAS FOR ONE LOW PRICE

Special — may expire anytime

Two 10" Cheese Pizzas only $5.89
Two 14" Cheese Pizzas only $8.89

Two 10" Pizzas - $1.25 per item Two 14" Pizzas - $1.49 per item

THE ORBITER
Pepperoni, Sausage, Green Peppers, Onions and Mushrooms
(5 items for the price of 4)

Prices:	12"	16"
Cheese	5.00	7.20
Additional Toppings	.75	1.10

16 oz. Bottled Drinks 60¢ each

Hungary for Knowledge

An interview with Prof. J.C. Nyi

BY KATE WELCH

Professor J.C. Nyiri stands before his first class of American students. "If there are any mistakes in my English, please correct me," he says with a thick accent. Head of the History of Philosophy department at the University of Budapest, Hungary, Nyiri is at CC for one block to enlighten students on "Tradition and change in Contemporary European Philosophy."

"When you have to talk for a long period of time in a language which is not your own, your tongue revolts," he explained.

But language is the only potential barrier in Nyiri's eyes. In comparing American and Hungarian students, "I see almost no difference. There is a great difference between the countries, and here, the college is much better organized and run. But once class starts and we are talking philosophy, the differences are few. I relate to the idea of a global intellectual community."

Nyiri's course at CC represents more than a teaching opportunity. Awarded a Humbold Research Fellowship at the University of Bochum in W. Germany, he has interrupted his work in Budapest until August in order to put together a book on the concepts of tradition, with which this course deals.

"In Budapest, my teaching is mainly of the philosophy of the last 100 years whereas this course is systematic philosophy."

Philosophy professor Harvey Rabbin invited Nyiri to teach here. The two met in Budapest ten years ago and have since corresponded.

"When he [Rabbin] informed me of his rather unique arrangement of block courses, I thought it would force me to put together material for my book," says Nyiri. "The main reason for accepting the offer, apart from teaching, is that it would be a scientific challenge."

"From the point of view of combining research with teaching, it [the block system] is good. You have to make a single concentrated effort. For a visitor, it is ideal."

Nyiri's academic background began at the University of Budapest where he studied mathematics. Thereafter his studies included logical semantics, Ludwig Wittgenstein, and Austrian intellectual history.

With most of his reasearch published in Hungarian, German, and English, Nyiri has traveled extensively throughout Italy, Austria, Germany, Denmark and England. He first visited the United States last year attending conferences at Bloomington, Indiana, Princeton, and Camden, New Jersey.

"It definitely set the desire in me to come back," he said of his first visit. "But now I am not a tourist; I'm nearer to everday university life."

For his course objectives Nyiri hopes to explore with his students the theoretical problem of keeping contact with the past while being "immersed in an age of great modernity. The advantage of a European, especially an Eastern European, is the very backwardness of his background. Present day America and its modernity is seen by the outside observer. If you live here, you take things for granted that backwardness takes in as frutiful theoretical perspective."

"The Eastern European is at another sense of history than the American. Modernization is an unmastered task, even for Hungary which is in a much better position than other countries in Eastern Europe," he added.

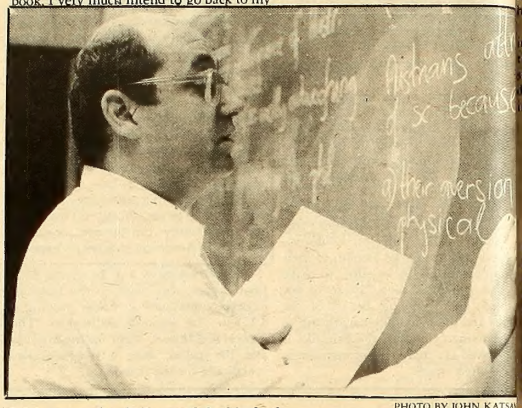
Nyiri plans to return to Germany after this block to complete his book and is "looking forward to acknowledging the role CC played in its coming into being." From there, he will return home to his wife, dog, and eight cats who live 20 miles from Budapest.

"When I have finished writing this book, I very much intend to go back to my epistomology and artificial intelligence. He adds, "A mathematician who is astray is now hoping for a homecom

He says he would teach in the U States again if the opportunity arose.

"In the academic world, the differe (among cultures) are much smaller read the same books and ask the questions." He continues, "The scho exchange in publishing and conferenc so solid, even between Hungarian American scholars, that one does no one moment have the feeling of bei stranger."

"The interests diverge since histo experiences and political tasks fa philosophers here and there are diffe Even so, we speak the same language



Nyiri accepts the challenge of the block plan. PHOTO BY JOHN KATSA

ONE DAY
FILM DEVELOPING

OR YOUR PICTURES ARE FREE

QUALITY COLOR PRINT FILM DEVELOPING & PRINTING

12 Exposure Roll..... $2.99
15 Exposure Disc $4.49
24 Exposure Roll..... $5.99
36 Exposure Roll..... $8.59

A single set of standard size prints.

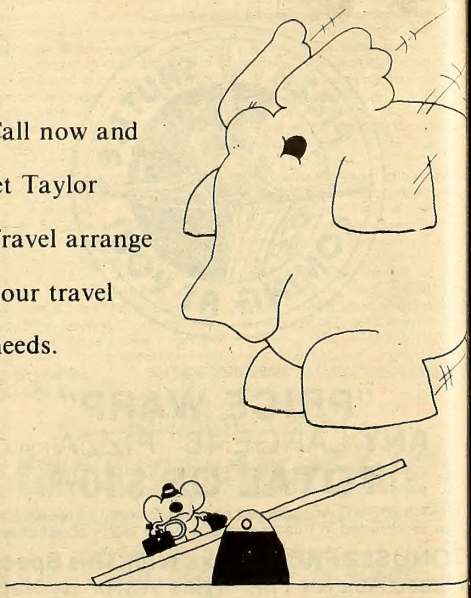
On roll developing and printing of standard size prints from 110, 126, Disc or 35mm color print film (C-41 process). Excludes weekends and holidays. Does not apply to orders where severe weather causes a delay. Ask for details.

Kodak PAPER for a Good Look

COLLEGE PHARMACY
833 N. TEJON
PHONE 634-4861

Don't Fly Home the Hard Way

Call now and let Taylor Travel arrange your travel needs.



"Your Campus Travel Agency"

818 N. Tejon 636-3871

Intelligent Life at CC?

BY HAROLD VANDERPOOL & JAMIE TAYLOR

Little beknownst to the average member of the C.C. community, a search on campus for "intelligence of a different kind" is actively in progress by a covert, fraternal (unfortunately) organization known only as The Colorado College Robotics Group. The group, which meets weekly in the Physics research lab, attempts in the best tradition of great scientists like Frankenstein to instill life and intelligence to an inanimate object.

Is it possible? Will it be done? Will professors soon be replaced by walking, talking, thinking chunks of silicon? The answers to these and many more exciting questions can be discussed every Wednesday night at 7 pm in Olin. (And some people think only boring science happens in Olin!)

That's the pitch hoping to stimulate interest and excitement in a real, state of the art research project currently supported by the Physics and Math departments. This project involves investigating Artificial Intelligence (A.I.) especially in ways that involve interfacing with the real world through robotics.

During the course of the 85-86 school year, a first robot capable of solving a maze, among other problems, was constructed and a second more advanced version is in the works. Topics of interest include problem solving, planning, real time operation and other hot topics in the world of A.I. CCAIR, C.C.'s (first) Artificially Intelligent Robot, made its first public appearance two weeks ago at the Ice Cream Social and with good luck, Telos, CCAIR II, will be running around Olin in the next month or so.

Thanks to the generosity of the Venture Grant Committee, three members of the Tobotics Group attended the American Association of Artificial Intelligence national conference held in Philadelphia last summer (Aug 11-15). The three participants were Harold Vanderpool (Physics), Jamie Taylor (Psychology), and Prof. Val R. Veirs (Physics). The conference consisted of the presentation of hundreds of papers, an industry trade show, and various keynote lectures on broad aspects of artificial intelligence.

The keynote addresses proved to be the most interesting for several reasons. The individual papers dealt with very specific problems. Moreover, the presenters were allowed very little time. This required the conventioners to have read the paper prior to the presentation and usually to have a fair amount of knowledge about its general area.

The keynote speakers, on the other hand, were allowed much more time and provided some background, so they were generally understandable. Some keynote addresses were panel discussions between several renown members of the A.I. community who debated philosophies of and approaches to A.I. problems.

The trade show gave us a chance to see the top of the line computers and software available for A.I. programming. There are many new companies dedicated to developing A.I. specific tools. Most of the large computer manufacturers (IBM, DEC, T.I., XEROX, etc.) have divisions devoted solely to keeping up with the needs of A.I.

The most interesting tools shown were computers designed to handle the unique structures of A.I. languages (Such as LISP).

The highlight of the show was the introduction by several companies of a silicon chip capable of doing all the processing which current A.I. computers handle.

Although the convention largely emphasized expert systems, due to their growing commercial feasibility, there still was much information that could have been gained about the particular A.I. subjects of interest to C.C.'s Robotics Group. With this new knowledge and excitement brought back from the conference, we hope to make strong strides into new frontiers of A.I. If you're interested in computers, robotics, soldering, or anything else even remotely related, come by and see what we're up to. No experience necessary!

P.S.—PROF. VAL VEIRS IS ALSO OFFERING AN ARTIFICIAL INTELLIGENCE CLASS BLOCK EIGHT. SOME EXPERIENCE WITH LISP IS A PREREQUISITE AND CAN BE LEARNED THROUGH THE LISP ADJUNCT CLASS OR JOINING THE ROBOTICS GROUP.

The Coffee Achievers

BY CHRIS ANDRESEN

Most students get their often less-than-luxury dorms by sheer luck, but chance had little to do with the performing arts wing's residents. Unlike most dorms, they all asked to be there, and often ask to live there more than one year.

Rob Peck, resident advisor for the wing, finds that "over half [of those on the wing] are returning from last year." There are eight freshmen. They are a group of students interested in the arts—all forms, performing and technical. We have everything." Peck, who had never lived on the performing arts wing before, finds it interesting, and adds, "they're a great group of people."

Freshmen Naomi Cohen and Sue Ann Martin think so too. "I'm really into the performing arts—it's what I do. I was really excited there was a wing where I could walk in and hold a conversation right off and people would know what I'm talking about," says Cohen. Martin adds, "I thought it'd be a good way to meet people who are interested in the same things I am."

What she found was that most of the students are involved in the theatre, but for Martin, a dancer, "it was neat to meet others in theatre because I didn't know that much about the theatre. They're really interesting." The fact that all classes live there is an added bonus. "It works real well," says Cohen. "They [upperclassmen] generally know what's going on."

While most residents of the performing arts wing are involved with shows that the drama department is planning, or dance and theatre workshops, the wing also sponsors The Loomis Coffee House.

This is one chance for the CC community to display their talents. Interested people can sign up through Peck. "We sponsor The Loomis Coffee House as a wing, but it's organized by our RA and whoever's available," says Martin.

Both Cohen and Martin have found the performing arts wing a great place to live. In fact, they will probably be back for a return engagement next year. "Sure," says Cohen, "I'd like to live there again." "I'll probably live here again next year," adds Martin. "I love the wing!"

A College Degree and no plans?

Become a Lawyer's Assistant

The UNIVERSITY OF SAN DIEGO, in cooperation with the National Center for Paralegal Training, offers an intensive post graduate 14 week day or 36 week evening LAWYER'S ASSISTANT PROGRAM. This Program will enable you to put your education to work as a skilled member of the legal team.

- Specialties offered in the following fields:

Generalist — Civil Litigation
General Litigation — Corporations & Real Estate

- ABA Approved
- Internship
- Employment Assistance

For a free brochure about this career opportunity call (619) 260-4579 or mail the coupon below to:

USD University of San Diego
Lawyer's Assistant Program
Room 318, Serra Hall
San Diego, CA 92110
COC

Name _____

Current Address _____

City _____ State _____ Zip _____

Current Phone # _____

Permanent Phone # _____

The University of San Diego does not discriminate on the basis of race, sex, color, religion, age, national origin, ancestry, or handicap in its policies and programs.

F.O.O.T. Trippers

BY JODI TAYLOR

The first night we slept in a parking lot covered with frost.

"I know that I slept for at least a few minutes because I dreamt fantasies: Of hot showers, of being baked in a pizza oven, of sweat."

"Group Huddle! Group Huddle!"

I don't know that our group was actually all that affectionate. It was more like Parasitic—sucking as much warmth off of each other as was humanly possible. Hugging is nice, but body heat definitely beats wool.

PHOTO BY JODI TAYLOR

John doing fondue.

"John's food was fun."

Cheese Fondue (serves 12)
5 lbs. Swiss Cheese
4 T Olive Oil
1 Clove Garlic
1 Liter White Wine

Cut cheese into little pieces, put in pot over camp stove. Wait (and wait) for it to melt, put in other stuff and play with it until you're hungry enough to eat it. Best with bread.

"I melted out of the tent."

No, not the cheese, his body. After packing 4 days' camping stuff for 7 miles uphill, the group found Nirvana through Gang Massages.

GROUP IS PAID BACK IN KARMA

It finally got warm. The sun shone, calling for an emergency hacky sack and frisbee break in the first beautiful, open, green meadow we passed. I don't know about the rest of the group, but at this point I started to regain feeling in my toes and stopped thinking about immersing my body in hot mashed potatoes.

We made up stories around the campfire, one sentence each.

Once apon a time there was a castle with a moat. In it lived a Queen and King and other courtly people. The moat was filled with green jello. We all know that green jello is the root of all evil. The king went on a business trip. The queen took the fool swimming in the moat. The king came back, detected the jello and killed them both, so, Princess Juanita—Pistachio sought sympathy from her true love, Tim, the Wizard. He wasn't home so Juanita, while playing with his magic-type stuff, turned herself into a frog. And, though depressed and small, she found happiness on a lesbian commune. But then she was captured and eaten by her widowed father who was looking for her in the woods (he didn't know she was a frog).

"Why do we have to go uphill, Steve?"

"Because it's in the way."

"Because it's a teleological suspension of the ethical."

So we climbed Pecos Baldy Peak and there weren't any clouds. It was cold and we saw a lake. We were small.

CC Administration and South Africa

The Struggle for Divestment Continues

BY ANNABEL LERMER

The first of a two-part series.

Student power. The phrase promotes images of the 1960's—of civil rights, of the birth of Black Power, of the second wave or feminism; of national opposition to US foreign policy, and of war in Vietnam. Yet student power is raising its potentially powerful head again, and again it attacks racism, again it attacks US foreign policy and the role of the US in world policies.

The subject of protest on US campuses in the 1980's is the South African system of Aparthied, and more specifically the role of US corporations in upholding and maintaining the rule of apartheid. The US Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs found in 1978 that:

> "The net effect of American investment has been to strengthen the economic and military self-suficiency of South Africa's apartheid regime, undermining the fundamental goals and objectives of US foreign policy."

The national campus movement against Apartheid has focused on US companies doing business in South Africa. Students advocate that their college or university divestment in these companies, with the intention of the complete withdrawal of US business activity in South Africa.

The success of the campus anti-apartheid movement is achieving its goal of divestment cannot be contested. Since 1978 $250 million has been divested from universities as diverse as the State University of New York to Harvard and Yale, with the University of Columbia breaking all records with its 1984 decision to divest $39 million within two years. Between 1978-82 35 colleges and universities had either partial or total divesment.

On the whole, American investment in South Africa has declined by 20% over 2 years. Thus the divestment issue needs careful consideration.

Divestment at CC

Colorado College is not immune to the divestment movement; in April, 1984 the CCCAA (Colorado College Community Against Apartheid) formed. The aim of this movement is to educate the college and the community at large of the Apartheid regime and of the role of US corporations which they believe uphold that sytsem. Thus their ultimate short term aim is to pressure the college to divest its shares from the 19 companies which have South African holdings.

Presently the CC Board of Trustees justifies its shareholdings in these companies by their adherence to the Sullivan Principles. These principles and their effectiveness after eight years of implementation will later be critically examined.

The issue of social responsibility over South Africa did not arise until the 1977-8 academic year when the CCCA and the CC Corporate Responsibility Project attempted to convince the Board of Trustees to sell all endowment securities in companies during business in South Africa. Instead the Board decided to divest all funds from firms refusing to sign and adhere to the newly formed Sullivan Principles.

These Sullivan Principles are often considered a major barrier to the divestment issue as they present a veneer of respectability to those firms operating in South Africa by providing six basic tenants which promote a nonracist, nonsegregated appearance to the South African workplace.

These principles were developed by Leon H. Sullivan, a black civil rights activist and board member of General Motors. His initial attempts to force divestment met with frustration and so in 1977 he opted for a more moderate plan, an employment code which is commonly referred to as the Sullivan Principles.

Having resolved only to invest in firms adhering to these principles the Board sent a circular to all firms in which it has shares that do business in South Africa. It was dated July, 1978. 12 companies answered, one of which, Tenneco, indicated that it would not sign the principles as it was against company policy to "adopt any statement of policy directed specifically to South African operations."

Thus, according to the Board's 1978 decision, CC should have divested in Tenneco—this is yet to happen. The CC business office also failed to renew subscriptions to the investment Responsibility Research Center's South African Renew Service, even though this provides the only information on company compliance which does not come directly from the companies concerned. Until a 1984 Catalyst investigation, no effort was made to enforce the trustee resolution apart from the initial circular.

In a recent interview, Gresham Riley stated on behalf of the Board of Trustees that despite recent decisions by the House & Senate concerning sanctions on South Africa, he does not consider the actions of CC to be inconsistant with the direction of American foreign policy.

He stated three main positions of the board after a recent meeting in September when the board reaffirmed the position taken in the 1970's to only invest in these companies that either sign or comply to the Sullivan Principles.

When asked how compliance was checked, Riley stated, "The position of the Board is such that if they (the companies) have in good faith indicated that they will subscribe to those principles, it is a sufficient condition for us to consider purchasing stock in that company."

Riley also stated several views of the Board concerning corporate responsibility in South Africa.

"It is in the long term interest of social change in South Africa that there be an American corporate presence.

If there is an American corporate presence in South Africa it is to the good that institutions such as CC can help shape policy in these companies through the use of proxy votes."

On the basis of these two decisions the Board also decided that "it should not restrict the manager of CC's portfolio from adding to stock or to buying stock in companies in which we don't already own stock."

Yet the anti-aparthied movement on companies is not directed at working for compliance ot the Sullivan Principles, it is principally a divestment movement.

> "The government is often said that loss of foreign investment would hurt blacks the most. It would undoubtedly hurt blacks in the short run because many of them would stand to lose their jobs. But it should be understood in Europe and North America that foreign investment supports the present economic system of political injustice...If Washington is really interested in contributing to the development of a just society in South Africa it would discourage investment in South Africa. We blacks are perfectly willing to suffer the consequences! We are quite acustomed to suffering." —Steven Biko

A Critical Assessment of the Sullivan Principles

1) Nonsegregation of the races in all comfort eating and work facilities.

Despite eight years under the Sullivan Principles, 71% of black workers employed by signatory companies are employed in job categories where there is not a single white worker. To technically comply, a number of signatory companies have removed discriminatory signs. While certain companies have replaced signs saying "Whites Only" with a colour code, other companies have now assigned lunchrooms, toilets, etc., that were previously only for blacks to hourly workers—those previously assigned to white workers are now only for salaried workers. Thus while segregation is preserved the Sullivan Principles are officially adhered to to.

2) Equal & fair employment practices for all employees.

By October 1979 only two signatory companies had recognised black unions. American corporations often replied that as black unions were not legally recognised, their hands were tied—this clearly shows the limited power of the principles under the heavy hand of South African law.

3) Equal pay for all employees doing equal or comparable work for the same period of time.

To the vast majority of black workers who have been prevented from doing work that is "equal" to that of whites, Principle #3 is nothing but empty rhetoric. 75% of those in the lower paying job category are black—2% are white. In 1978 Goodyear employed 9 black salaried workers—a total of three percent of its total white collar workforce. Thus, until blacks are employed throughout all levels of the workforce, Principle #3 becomes meaningless.

4) Invitation of and development of training programs that will prepare in substantial numbers, blacks and other nonwhites for supervisory, administrative, clerical and technical jobs.

In October 1979 1/5 of the signatory companies no training programs for blacks. Of the other firms have limited programs, far more blacks are being tr as operators other than technicians, supervis managers thus assuring that the majority of the workforce will remain in the lowest category of work—thus ensuring their income can neve substantially. Closed shop agreements between unions and employers have also banned blacks skilled work.

These unions control all apprenticeship agreem By skirting the legal and trade union obstacle Sullivan Principles drastically misrepresent potential for change in the black workforce.

5) Increasing the number of blacks and nonwhites in management and supervisory posi

Half the signatory companies employ NO blac these positions. In 1979 of the 244 workplaces ow these companies, blacks made up 67 of a manag force of 3,243—0.7% of blacks working for companies were involved in management or super training.

6) Improving the quality of employees' outside the work environment in such are housing, transportation, schooling and ho facilities.

Before considering the record of compliance principle #6 a number of statistics should be consid As blacks are not allowed to live in white urban such as Johannesburg, shantytowns have deve outside the white cities. These serve as cheap reser of labor. While Soweto, the black township o Johannesburg, has twice as many resident Johannesburg, it has one hospital. Johannesburg fourteen. For every 40,000 blacks there is 1 doct

The average house in Soweto is home to 6-7 p and consists of a two to three roome shack. One th these homes have no hot water. If one is a black w divorcee, unmarried or deserted mother, the S African government will provide no hou whatsoever. The South African government, spe nearly 20 times as much on white education than i on black, provides mandatory secondary educati whites. This is not so for blacks. Indeed, since the uprisings in South Africa many black schools have shut down.

Bearing these facts in mind, we turn to implementation of the 6th principle. While ch receive 75% of educational scholarships donat corporate signatories, in 1979 housing aid to b accounted for 0.6% of the total assistance alloca The Ford Motor Company averages a total of five k year for a total black employee population of 1,2

Paying Lip Service to Reform

The Sullivan Principles are not working within limited context of signatory workplaces—it is ha see how they will force an impact on South Afric whole. Thus it seems more than ridiculous to see principles as a "progressive force" in South Afri

The signatory companies provide jobs to only 0.2 South Africa's black workforce—yet they form a function in the economy of Apartheid by sustain system that deprives 18.6 million black peop citizenship, political rights, and legal recourse. U the apartheid system nearly 75% of the populatio denied the right to own land, move freely aroun country, live in family units and to work at jobs of own choice. These companies bolster an economy denies the indigenous population a basic educ decent housing, and health care.

The Sullivan Principles have failed to fulfill intended purpose—yet this employment code seemed to aid American corporations who wish to p from cheap labor. While avoiding interference fr dissatisfied American public. This code allo profession of progressive action while avo confrontation with the aggressive white racist regi South Africa and insures the safety of American c and corporate profits, allows a continuation involvement which strengthens and perpetuate apartheid system.

Yet 22 million nonwhite South African's—the majority—have not benefited from this employ code, even after eight years of implementation o code. To those 22 million the Sullivan Prin legitimize the continuation of American involve which bolster the economy—thus meaning nothin "business as usual."

"The Sullivan Principles have been reduce cosmetic changes in order to placate critics. The nothing more than a public relations front fo existing white power structure." Elizabeth Schr Author of "Decoding Corporate Camouflage."

The opinions here do not necessarily represent th the Catalyst.

God, Politics and the GOP

By T. John Caldwell

Doublespeak has returned with a vengence to the eastern slope. Conservative pretender George Bush recently let it all gush out at a rally for senatorial candidate Ken Kramer. Kramer is needed in Washington to help fight deficits and taxes, the veep declared; implicitly, he is needed for the head count, to help Republicans maintain control of the Senate.

Somehow the myth persists: Republicans fight government spending and big deficits, Democrats create them. The myth has persisted despite six years of conservative mis-management. Has the government debt tripled or quadrupled since Reagan took office and the GOP took the Senate? Frankly, I've lost track.

Still, Reagan Republicans manage to blame it all on Democrats (and even on poor old Jimmy C.). Every two years GOP stumpers raise the comfortable illusion of a balanced budget amendment, blaming the Dems for blocking it. Haven't you heard enough about it Tip? As bad as the amendment would be, the House Democrats should just pass the damn thing and watch the GOP sweat. Bets could be placed on which would go first, Reagan's pledge to raise no taxes or Casper's big fat Pentagon budget.

Now all this Republican slaming is rather upsetting to yours truly TJ. To committed moderate Republicans like myself, the strange notions of the Reagan boys can be too much. Strong leadership, strong defense, less government, free trade - these things we needed and got with Reagan. But the rest we didn't bargain for: The social agenda of the moral right, "star wars," Keynsian spending on an order never dreamed of by a Democratic president, and a little war in central America.

GOP or GOD?

The Republican party has lost its way. At the core of this once Grand Old Party was a commitment to the rights of the individual. The Libertarian distrust of government interference in our private lives is still an icon to which all Republican politicians genuflect. But today many in the party (civil heretics) have cast naughty eyes to the powers of the federal government; with it they can impose God back into our lives and morality back into our bedrooms.

Delawarian (Delawarite?) Pete DuPont, the first open GOP contender for 1988, exemplified this embrace of the state in a call for testing all public high school students in the nation for drugs (Pete went to a private school). Now, admitting that drug abuse is a significant problem (though this writer is slightly more concerned about the drug trade's contribution to our trade deficit than he is about its affect on the People), such a blatant violation of civil rights is clearly not the solution. Have we as a nation lost all faith in ourselves?

President Reagan, at least, has certainly lost faith. He doesn't even trust his Vice President's personal habits. For his part, candidate Bush nicely displayed a lack of backbone in submitting to the "voluntary" drug test. A bold Republican, one from the old party, would have objected to such humiliation, not out of fear for the results but out of a fear for liberty. "Voluntary tests will never be truly voluntary," he would declare; "denial will imply guilt." As a nation, we should not be marching around the workplace pissing into cups.

Just to get the bad taste out of my mouth, I'm going to take a time out here and slam the Democrats. What was Tip's House of Representatives doing when it charged the Pentagon with sealing the borders and attacking the drug trade? I guess everybody has hit the panic button in '86. Fortunately the Republican Senate won't concur on this one; the U.S. marines won't be turned into an extended arm of Miami Vice.

Drug testing, of course, isn't the only threat to liberty on the horizon. The religious right is seeking to turn the GOP into an instrument of their GOD, and after the party the tools of the state.

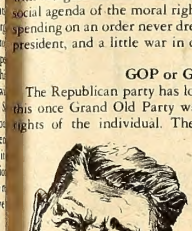
Pat Robertson, his pearly whites revealing more interest in the moralistic tribulations of the affluent than compassion for the poor, has claimed the high ground for 1988. With the power of the presidency Rev. Robertson could do wonderful things for the country: put "voluntary" (that word again!) prayer back into the schools along with religious teachings (presumably protestant-Christian: so much for the Constitution's "Establishment Clause"), deny women control over their own bodies, pack the Court against humanists, etc. Still, it might not be all bad. A man who can divert hurricanes through the power of his prayers would be handy in the White house during a crisis.

Robertson, of course, hasn't officially declared his candidacy (an oversight which will allow him to hold on to his television pulpit, implicitly pushing his campaign, raising money, and avoiding the equal time requirements a formal declaration would entail). And the chances are that he, and certainly Mr. DuPont, will not win the GOP nomination for 1988. But even if more rational Republicans prevail, it is clear that the religions right is shaping the GOP's agenda. To see moderates like Dole, Bush or Baker sucking up to the moralistic conservatives portents a sorry future for the Republican party.

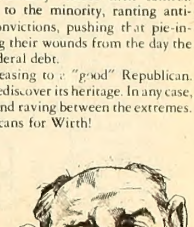
Until recently, there had been much talk of the GOP emerging as the dominant American party. Unfortunately, its leaders have lost touch, both with their own roots and the sentiments of Americans. The success of the Republicans has had the happy effect of moving the Democrats more to the center: from that point they look to eventually restore their control. The GOP will return to the minority, ranting anti-libertarian religious convictions, pushing that pie-in-the-sky SDI, and licking their wounds from the day the bubble burst on the federal debt.

It's a scenerio displeasing to a "good" Republican. Perhaps the party can rediscover its heritage. In any case, I'll ride it out, ranting and raving between the extremes.

Next week: Republicans for Wirth!



Ye Shall Know The Truth...



BY MICHAEL S. MEHAN

I can just picture the scene. Its late at night, no, scratch that, because if it was, Reagan would be asleep. It is mid afternoon in the Oval Office. Reagan is conferring with his advisors on a delicate matter of state.

"Well, what should we tell 'em," inquires Ron of his trusted associates.

"Tell 'em the commie Sandinistas are all pouring over the border into Honduras and we have to drive them back," blurts out Pat Buchanan.

"No, we can't do that," interjects George Schultz.

"Why not?"

"Because we already have, remember last spring?"

"Oh yeah. So how are we going to stir patriotism in the breast of the American people?" Buchanan stares out the window, lost in thought.

"I know," shouts Don Regan, jumping up from his chair, "We'll just say that Lybia is planning to take over the whole world again!!" Schultz winces, and with a painful look on his face quickly discards that idea.

"No, we've, uh, already done that, too," he says to Regan, who sits down again, looking rather dejected.

"Anybody care for more tea?" interrupts George Bush, walking into the room carrying a silver tray laden with cups and saucers.

"Nah, beat it George. Can't you see we're busy with important matters of state," Regan answers, looking rather annoyed at the Vice President's rude interruption of their meeting, "just make sure have dinner on the table by seven. Now scram."

Bush bows apologetically and scampers out of the room.

"Well, boys, I'm getting a little weary," says Reagan with a yawn, "I'm tired of all this talk. Why don't we just tell the American people the truth. They have a right to know what we are doing."

The group falls out of their chairs laughing.

"The truth?" roars Buchanan, holding his sides, "what's that?"

With tears rolling down his face Regan looks up at the President, "The truth? Ron, you wouldn't know how!!"

"Really, I think it is my duty, as the most trusted and admired elected official, holding one of the most sacred offices in the world, not to deceive the American people," continues Reagan, becoming flustered.

"Stop it Ron, stop it! or else I'm gonna pee in my pants," gasps George Shultz, in between fits of laughter.

Is this such a ridiculous scene? Or is it the way Reagan and his administration have been running this country, under a blanket of deceit?

The resignation of State Department Spokesman, Bernard Kalb, and the recent events in Nicaragua, once more bring up the issue of just how far can we believe the President.

"Faith in the word is the pulse beat of American democracy," said Kalb, announcing his resignation on Wednesday.

How true these words are. The American people entrust the President to honor the most sacred office in the land and to represent a paragon of honesty and justice, as the leader of the free world. Reagan has openly violated that trust.

The office of the President was nearly brought to ruin by the Watergate scandal of Richard Nixon. Now, when faith has finally been restored in the office of the president, the very man who helped restore this disgraced position, is threatening to hurl it once again to the depths of political opinion polls. Scenario two, Reagan before Congress, shaking his jowls Nixon style saying, "I'm not a liar."

The question now arises, whether or not we should believe the President, if so to what extent. After the Sandinistas shot down a US cargo plane filled with weapons and ammunition for the contras, Reagan said of its crew, "there is no government connection with them at all." Yet, the Sandinistas found evidence on the planes crew indicating that they were military advisors working out of the United States Embassy in San Salvador, and relatives of the men say they were working in cooperation with the CIA. Maybe the White House kniew nothing about the details, but this, and other evidence is pointing to the very government involvement that Reagan, and later, Shultz, has denied.

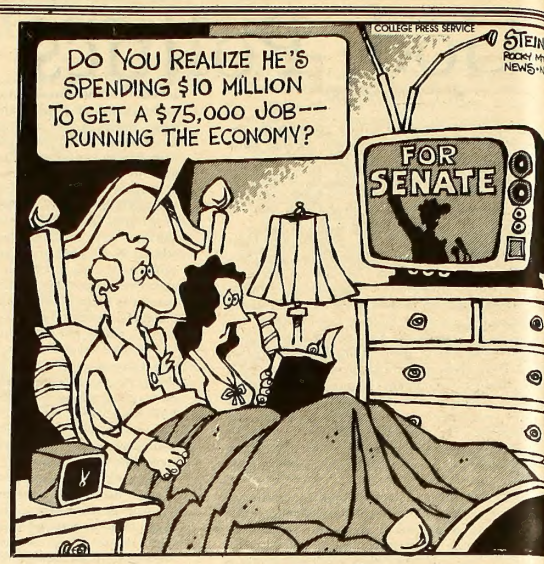
The American people have, if not a right to know all the government does, then at least the right not to be deceived. The President and his advisors have conspired against the American public. There are areas of policy that people, for security reasons, should not know, of course, but when government treachery is discovered, we should not be lied to by our leaders, or tricked into believing false information.

As Reagan and Gorbachev take up the public spot light at the summit this weekend, what will our President, the alleged liar and sneak, look like to the world? No one will mention it, probbably, but that does not mean we should just forget about it.

He will be sitting with the man who runs a nation in which the truth is a tightly guarded secret. It seems our leaders are in the process of lowering themselves to the level of a Soviet Agitprop minister. All criticisms about morality and truth and justice will seem absurd coming from a man who has recently joined the fetid depths of Soviet style propaganda and disinformation.

So now, after the events of the past few weeks, when the Gipper stands before us on the big screen, appealing to all of us honest Americans, conjuring up bold images of red, white and blue patriotism, we must give him a wary look, rub our chins and wonder, is he telling the truth?

PRETTY SWEET TRADE, I'D SAY...
Nick Skorich
U.S.News
NICHOLAS DANILOFF
LET'S SEE... BABE RUTH, REGGIE JACKSON, PETE ROSE, HANK AARON, MICKEY MANTLE, DWIGHT GOODEN, FERNANDO VALENZUELA, WILLIE MAYS... etc...
BARRY
COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE



LETTERS TO LIZ

Dear Editor:

I was disgusted with the recent column by Mark Thesing, "No More Mr. Nice Guy." Is Mr. Thesing implying that he never would have considered asking "a heavy girl" to dance if he had not been intoxicated? God forbid! Why else would he include this useless description in his article?

His discussion would have been just as convincing and certainly more universal if the girl who refused to dance with him due to his obnoxious behavior had been more generic. A physical description of her was unnecessary, unless his point was to put down anyone who does not conform to his idea of physical perfection. I suggest that Mr. Thesing rethink his reason for writing the article and that he exercise a bit more tact in the future.

Sincerely,
Terri Maizels ('85)

Dear Editor:

We are writing concerning Mark Thesing's "controversial" column. Its not the controversy we object to, but rather the issues and the style in which he chooses to write them. Discussing stereotypical attitudes is one thing, but naming "bitches on campus" and using such pejorative terms as "fatty" are tasteless and valueless. Perhaps he is trying to be funny, but his attempts are in vain. We find this article tacky.

Signed,
Nice Girls

Dear Editor:

Opinions like Mark Thesing's are in no way exemplary of the thoughtful student. They are base, inane and pathetic. I question the Catalyst's better judgment in running his column No More Mr. Nice Guy. The column only succeeds in perpetuating sexist language and stereotypes. Thesing shows himself sadly naive and incredibly arrogant when he assumes that Women are obligated to accommodate his gestures simply because a stereotype presumes them to be repugnant.

When Thesing says "The intoxication made me wreckless and unnatural," he implies that his vision and better judgment were so impaired that he actually made an attempt to interact with someone deemed unattractive. How humiliating it must be for him to publicly proclaim that his criteria for relating to other people lies only in physical attractiveness. Perhaps I overgeneralize. Maybe physical attractiveness is only a requirement for the women he interacts with.

Thesing should spare himself further humiliation and degradation and withhold any other forthcoming shortsighted assessments of humanity. If this is his attempt to identify with his fellow students, I fear for his desolation.

Valerie Feder

Dear Editor:

If you had a thousand dollars in the bank, and someon took eleven percent (one-hundred and ten dollars) that money, you would probably be pretty irate. Wh then, is everybody so gung-ho about the proposed eigh block plan? Eleven percent of one year isn't much, right Well, let's convert it to four years. Over a four ye period, you would lose an entire semester, but you wou still be paying for it. Yes, although the course load wou decrease to eight, the tuition would stay the same increase. Maybe the graduation requirements will less. Yes, they will, but earning thirty-two credits in fo years means no blocks off. If you get mono, if a relati dies, or if you just need a block off your senior year- forget it! Unless, of course, you want to spend more tim and money to go to summer school to make up that blo you missed. Doesn't sound too appealing, does it? faculty are the only benefactors of this proposal, yet students are kicking back and saying "Sounds good me." We support this institution, thus we should ha some input in our future which will, no doubt, be affec by a change to the eight-block system. They proposed they vote on it, and WE pay for it! Do you think that fair? Think again.

Heidi Do

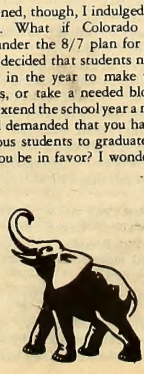
Dear Editor:

Thanks to all of you students who participated in th September faculty meeting discussion of the 8/7 yea You spoke nobly and forthrightly on the pressures th proposed schedule would put upon you, with no time take a block off, counteract emergencies or make u failures.

As I listened, though, I indulged myself in a thoug experiment. What if Colorado College had bee operating under the 8/7 plan for some years, and th faculty had decided that students needed an extra blo somewhere in the year to make up work, counter emergencies, or take a needed block off? What if decided to extend the school year a month, required of of you, and demanded that you have two more credi than previous students to graduate?

Would you be in favor? I wonder.

Marcia D-S. Dobs



CATALYST
Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado

DAVID KLEIN
BLAIR SANFORD
Editors

LIZ CHENEY, Opinions Editor
TED CRAIG & DAVID FITZGERALD, News Editors
PATRICK CHISHOLM & KATIE DALSEMER, Features Editors
KATHY MAHONEY & ALEC REKOW, Sports Editors
ERIC BREITBARD, Arts Editor
SUSAN GRIAK, Associate Arts Editor

•

JOHN KATSANIS, Photography Editor
MIKE FRATERELLI, Copy Editor
JACK KLEIN, Layout Editor

•

JEAN BOYER
Business Manager

LINDA SHIREMAN, Typesetter
JANE NEWBERRY, Typesetter
LINDA IMHOFF, Typesetter

The Catalyst logo by JANE PATERSON

The Catalyst is published by Cutler Publications, Inc., Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado 80903. Phone: (303) 473-2233 extension 675. The Catalyst is printed tri-monthly from September to May, except during holiday periods.

Cutler Publications, Inc. does not discriminate on the basis of race, color, age, religion, sex, national origin, or physical handicap in its education programs, activities or employment policies in accordance with federal, state and local laws.

Editorials appearing in the Catalyst are the opinions of the designated author and not necessarily those of any other Catalyst staff member.

The Catalyst encourages the letters to the editor. Letters should be no more than 400 words in length and be typed or neatly printed. Address letters to the Catalyst: Rastall Center, Colorado College, Colorado Springs, 80903. Unsigned letters will not be printed.

A work of considerable length may be submitted as a guest commentary. Persons interested in submitting commentary should contact the Catalyst at 632-4999 or 473-2233 ext. 675.

The Catalyst reserves the right to edit or cut letters to the editor and guest commentaries.

Saving Our Rainforests

BY ERIC JOHNSON

The importance of intact rainforests to a healthy osphere is undeniable. Rainforests cover only 7% of e Earth's surface, but are the most biologically diverse osystems, providing habitat for more than half of the rld's species of life. They are major weather odifiers—a sizeable percentage of the rainfall in the pical Amazon Basin originates as moisture within nts of the region's rainforests. Also, intact rainforests hibit the "greenhouse effect" while rainforest struction accelerates it. Without rainforests, major matic changes would be inevitable. And, rainforests e important to human members of the biosphere as ing space for indigenous peoples and as the source for ore than 25% of prescription drugs.

Realizing the vital nature of rainforest ecosystems to e on Earth, one would hope they'd be protected. owever, rainforests around the world are facing assive destruction. Over 40% of Central American inforests have been converted to cattle pastures over e past two decades. John Seed, an Australian rainforest pert, states that the remaining rainforests of India will "annihilated within five years." A Brazilian scientist ys that at present rates of deforestation, the rainforests the Amazon will be gone in 30 years.

One major cause of deforestation is the heavy demand, pecially in wealthy industrialized nations, for tropical od and wood products. The Jari Project, owned by nerican billionaire Daniel Ludwig, planned to minate 1.75 million acres in Brazil, replacing the nforest with alien species of trees for wood pulp aper) production. Latin American, Australian, and utheast Asian rainforests are being logged. nfortunately, rainforests can't be replaced—most of e fertility of the land is in living plants, and removing em leaves a poor, erosion-prone soil behind.

Rainforests are also destroyed through production of export agricultural crops in third world nations. In Central America, the culprit is cattle ranching. Forests are clearcut or burned and then planted in grasses edible to cattle. After five or ten years of grazing, the soil is eroded and depleted and unable to support agriculture. The desertified land is abandoned and new ranches are carved from the forest. The beef produced is primarily for export, and the U.S. (mostly fast food chains) buys 90% of it. There is no shortage of domestic beef. The reason it's imported is that it's cheaper. We are destroying the rainforests of Central America, only so that we can (for example) save an estimated five cents on the price of a Burger King Whopper.

In other parts of the world, the export crops of coffee, bananas, or oranges are responsible. If the crops are grown on rainforest land, the soil is soon depleted. If they are grown on good agricultural land, they take up space needed for domestic food production and force the poor to cut unsustainable farms out of the rainforest.

Rainforest "development" (deforestation) projects are often financed through loans from the World Bank and other multilateral development banks (MDB's). Without MDB financing of projects such as roads into the rainforests, cattle ranching in Central America would not be profitable. MDB's also provide funding for "transmigration projects" in which poor people from populated areas are relocated into rainforests, which are cleared for farming (until the soil wears out).

The World Bank professes concern about the ecological impacts of its projects, but actual impacts tell otherwise. Cattle ranches may operate only ten years, decimate the countryside, and provide little food for local consumption, but if the loan is paid back the banks are satisfied. The U.S. government is the major funding source for MDB's.

The future for rainforests looks bad, but you can do these things now to eliminate your role in aiding deforestation:

First, reduce your consumption of export crops from the tropics, with the goal of eventually eliminating them from your diet altogether. Find alternatives to coffee and eat fruit other than bananas. Drink apple juice instead of orange juice—most brands of orange juice are a blend of up to 50% imported tropical orange juice. If SAGA still serves the same brand it used to, the orange juice at breakfast is 100% produced in Brazil, and is directly or indirectly responsible for deforestation. Avoid fast food beef unless you know it is domestic USDA beef (imported beef is labelled USDA).

Second, recycle the paper you use. Recycling will make destructive projects such as jari unnecessary and uneconomical. ENACT provides on-campus recycling services for all paper products.

Third, find out if your bank loans money to third world nations for rainforest destruction schemes. In many projects, MDB loan money is matched by up to three times as much money from private banks. If your bank is helping to deforest the tropics, take your money elsewhere.

Finally, become involved in efforts to stop deforestation. Avoiding the consumption of rainforest products is good, but may have a limited economic effect. Public pressure, however, is powerful. Tell Congress to enact legislation placing strict environmental controls on MDB projects. Write to corporations involved in rainforest ripoffs and tell them you won't do business with them anymore. There are many other things that can be done. Colorado Earth First! may be sponsoring an MDB demonstration in Denver later this month.

If you are interested in finding out more about deforestation issues, ENACT can suggest readings and avenues for action. We meet Wednesdays at 7:00 p.m. in the ENACT office next to Mathias desk.

Procrastinating in Style

BY SHANNON WHEELER

Now that I've written three papers for class, two of hich I am proud, I feel that I am back into the swing of ings, though I have yet to take a test and won't until ile 2. Writing papers is for me a hellish but fun activity. The kind of paper depends greatly on what class your . My last three were of that laid back, it's the content t the style that matters, form. Those are the type I like ice my usual way to write a paper is to think about it r about as many days as are allowed and perhaps a little ore and then to write it in the few hours before it is e. I write these papers in the unapproved of way, raight from my head to the final copy. I hate outlines d rough drafts, the only time I make more than one py is when I don't have access to a wordprocessor nen I want to write. This is rare.

My methods only work on those laid back type of pers, there are also the nasty papers where you can st write what you've been told in class in different rds and put in a few quotes and then have real neat otnotes with a bibliography and proper spelling and e rest and get a good grade. I guess this latter kind of paper is okay since it takes a lot of time and effort, or a different sort.

My method is a lot more fun though. You don't have to write a lot or retype and it leaves a lot more room for procrastination. Many seem to frown on procrastination but it is a fine art. I get more things done in the process of procrastinating other things than if I were to not procrastinate.

For example an experienced procrastinator, which my friends will tell you I am, doesn't watch TV or go skiing or eat or just sit around listening to KRCC, that provokes too much guilt. The experienced procrastinator does constructive things. I clean my room, or make a good dinner, or read good books on other subjects, write letters to friends, go cycling, catch up on sleep, write Catalyst articles, all things that deserve procrastination in and of themselves.

While doing these things I can say to myself "well my room really needed cleaning" or "I can't write a good paper without being rested," after all Dad said "health comes first," and various other rationalizations are formulated. Also if I am actively doing something productive it leaves less space in my head into which guilt can creep. Then when that well thought out paper is written there will be all these great things that I had accomplished to make me feel even better.

This procrastination method works both ways: when my room is really messy and I can't face it I am forced to go to Olin and write my Catalyst article, wordprocessors are the only way to go, but I haven't figured out how to use the spellor yet. After this I'll probably go to Tutt and get some books. Maybe I'll write letters or visit friends, friendship is far more important than a clean room.

I also know where to find professors who prefer content to correctness. If I do feel the need to c ote I just put the author and text in the paper, I can't stand trying to organize footnotes and using silly things like ibids, it's Greek to me. If I use another quote I just say so "Kant writes, from the same page as before..." I think this conforms well to the "honor code." I hope it does. Say did any nonfreshman fulfill their duty and ask their professor how the honor code applies to the class. Not I.

My methods are the easiest, not that I'm lazy, ways that I know of to write a paper and spend time thinking not writing, if anybody has any suggestions they're welcome.

Reflections

BY MARK THESING

We buried him that spring. A month before our high ool graduation our friend was killed. He was killed in r accident involving drinking.

The last month of school was hot and tedious. We re relieved when we graduated so we wouldn't have to about it anymore. It seems all the discussions about death just made it different then it was.

Death is an enigma and anyone who pretends to know thing about it is an asshole. No one knows why he d or why he died or what happens now that he is d.

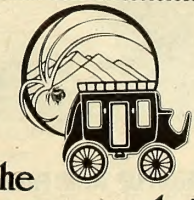
haven't made any sense of the death and I suppose I ver will. At the funeral I was hungry and tired because adn't eaten or slept much. The morticians said "amen" loudly.

That is all I remember except that is was sad and dark in that church and we were relieved to finally get outside.

We cried at church but joked and laughed as the procession motored to the graveyard. We were all tired of being serious and we knew we had experienced something that would affect our lives and we laughed.

The priest sprinkled holy water and read a prayer that Jesus grants those who believe in him, ever lasting life. I am a Christian so I supposedly believe that. I hope that it's true. The death made life seem meaningless and confusing. Maybe life is always that way but I only realized it because of the death.

They lowered the coffin into the ground and people left. A cool afternoon breeze blew off the bay, that spring we buried him.



the Stagecoach Inn

On Fountain Creek in Manitou Springs
Just minutes away

Featuring

Fresh Seafood, Prime Beef, Pasta, Veal

LUNCH • DINNER • SUNDAY CHAMPAGNE BRUNCH

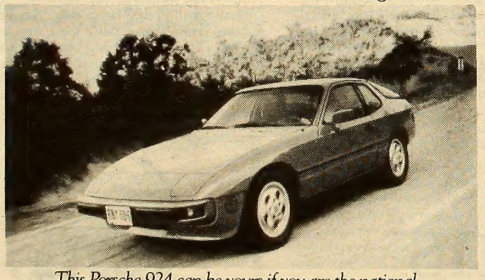
A GREAT EXPERIENCE
RESERVATIONS 685-9335

FINALLY A FREE FLIGHT PLAN JUST FOR STUDENTS.

YOU WON'T GET A BREAK LIKE THIS ONCE YOU'RE OUT IN THE REAL WORLD.

INTRODUCING COLLEGIATE FLIGHTBANK, FROM CONTINENTAL AND NEW YORK AIR.

If you're a full-time student at an accredited college or university you can join our Collegiate FlightBank.℠ You'll receive a membership card and number that will allow you to get 10% off Continental and New York Air's already low fares. In addition, you'll get a one-time certificate good for $25 off any domestic roundtrip flight. Plus, you'll be able to earn trips to places like Florida, Denver, Los Angeles, even London and the South Pacific. Because every time you fly you'll earn mileage towards a free trip. And if you sign up now you'll also receive 3 free issues of BusinessWeek Careers magazine.



This Porsche 924 can be yours if you are the national referral champion.

SIGN UP YOUR FRIENDS AND EARN A PORSCHE.

But what's more, for the 10 students on every campus who enroll the most active student flyers from their college there are some great rewards: 1 free trip wherever Continental or New York Air flies in the mainland U.S., Mexico or Canada. Or the grand prize, for the number one student referral champion in the nation: a Porsche and one year of unlimited coach air travel.

And how do you get to be the referral champion? Just sign up as many friends as possible, and make sure your membership number is on their application. In order to be eligible for any prize you and your referrals must sign up before 12/31/86 and each referral must fly 3 segments on Continental or New York Air before 6/15/87. And you'll not only get credit for the enrollment, you'll also get 500 bonus miles.

So cut the coupon, and send it in now. Be sure to include your current full time student ID number. That way it'll only cost you $10 for one year ($15 after 12/31/86) and $40 for four years ($60 after 12/31/86). Your membership kit, including referral forms, will arrive in 3 to 4 weeks. If you have a credit card, you can call us at 1-800-255-4321 and enroll even faster.

Now more than ever it pays to stay in school.

SIGN ME UP NOW! (Please print or type) ☐ 1 Year ($10) ☐ 2 Years ($20) ☐ 3 Years ($30) ☐ 4 Years ($40)
Must be submitted by 12/31/86.

Name_____ Date of Birth_____

College_____ Address_____

_____ Zip_____

Permanent Address_____ Zip_____

Full time student ID #_____ Year of Graduation_____

$_____ ☐ Check/Money Order Enclosed PLEASE DON'T SEND CASH
☐ American Express ☐ Visa ☐ MasterCard ☐ Diner's Club

Account Number_____ Expiration Date_____

Signature X_____

FOR MEMBERSHIP APPLICANTS UNDER THE AGE OF 18: The undersigned is the parent/guardian of the membership applicant named hereon, and I consent to his/her participation in the Collegiate FlightBank program.

Signature X_____

Send this coupon to: Collegiate FlightBank
P.O. Box 297847
Houston, TX 77297 168

Complete terms and conditions of program will accompany membership kit.

CONTINENTAL NEW YORK AIR

Some blackout periods apply for discount travel and reward redemption. Complete terms and conditions of program will accompany membership kit. Certain restrictions apply. Current full time student status required for each year of membership. To earn any prize a minimum of 12 referrals is required. All referral award winners will be announced by 8/1/87. 10% discount applies to mainland U.S. travel only. Students must be between the ages of 16 and 25. Porsche 924 registration, license fees, and taxes are the responsibility of the recipient. © 1986 Continental Air Lines, Inc.

PHOTO BY ANITA CHENG

Richly decorated costumes enhance the focused ambiguity of the upcoming play, "Scenes from an Execution."

Truth Verses Reality: "Execution" Premieres

BY ANITA CHENG

"Focused ambiguity" is the key to "Scenes from an Execution," according to director Joanne Klein. The American premiere of Howard Barker's play opens at Colorado College Thursday, October 16 through Saturday, October 18 at Armstrong Hall.

Timed to coincide with a symposium addressing art and war given by Bill Hochman CC professor of history, the play pivots around Galactia's painting of the Battle of Lepanto in 1573: a battle between the Turks and the Muslims that left approximately 50,000 dead.

The plot chronicles a clash of extremes: political versus artistic, art versus war, and truth versus reality. As Klein states, Barker shows a political world with power but no imagination, and an artistic world with imagination but no power. Galactia must appeal to her patrons for money while reviling their intrigues. Klein explained, "she has to 'lick the dog's crevices just to get the materials for her rebellion."

Originally a radio play, the text derives its impact from eloquent dialogue. "Barker makes difficult and heightened language seem natural," praised Mary Bevington who plays Supporta. The playwrite creates extreme yet believable characters to demonstrate the consequences of chosen prejudices. "The play demands careful attention from its audience: it is a play designed to be listened to," insisted Andrew Leman (Urgentino). Catherine Rees (Galactia) added, "You can't just turn up for a good time, you have to concentrate." "I've had to fight my own inclination to take sides," the director continued. "The play makes every point of view cogent and defensible." "Every character choses," Mary Kate Mendoza (Rivera) stated, "and no one is right, but they're damn set on it." Promised Lehman, "Barker makes you see where ambiguity lies and forces you to decide how you're going to deal with it."

She has to lick the dog's crevices' just to get the materials for her rebellion.

A spectacular setting for the two worlds of the play designed by Collean Ballance, original lighting by Tom Mays, and lavish costumes by Gypsy Ames, all intensify the opposition of ideas.

"The costumes are amazing," Leman exclaimed, "my pants alone have 61 yards of gold sequined trim."

Hair Designers for Men & Women

RAPUNZEL

Style cuts, Cellophanes,
Perms & Color.
Nexus, Redken, and Tri products available for sale.

Stop in or make your appointment:

827 N. Tejon at Cache La Poudre 632-3532

Tapestries
Etc. Etc. Etc.

Mon.-Fri. 10-6 pm Sat. 11-5 pm

THE LOTUS EATER BOUTIQUE

Downtown on Platte Between Tejon & Cascade

phone: 635-2118

Sabia

Unique New Song Concert

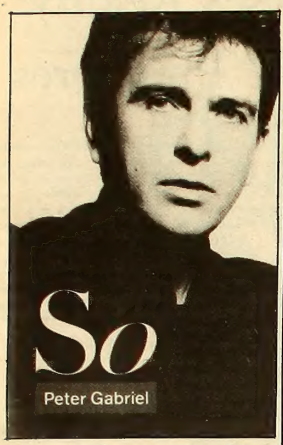
Sabia, an internationally renowned Los Angeles-based new song group is here on CC's own campus. Their '86-'87 international tour celebrates the release of their second album "Portravoz" on Flying Fish Records. The group has performed throughout the United States, Canada and Latin America and has developed a large national and international following.

Sabia's music combines superb vocals with a strong instrumental foundation. Drawing from diverse roots with a heavy accent on Latin America, these six musicians sing in both Spanish and English and play instruments ranging from traditional acoustic to electric. The members of Sabia are: Libby Harding, Gary Johnson, Paul Olguin, Mari Riddle, Ericka Verba, and Francisca Wentworth.

"Portavoz," the title of their new album, translates as "voice carrier." The voice that Sabia carries is one of cross-cultural understanding, political freedom and human rights, expressed with beauty, strength and humor. Sabia's performance is a unique and powerful musical experience.

Sabia will appear in concert on October 11, at 8:15 p.m. in Packard Hall. Tickets for this exciting show are free with CC ID and available at the student center.

RecordsRecordsRecordsRecordsRecc



So Surreal!

BY ALEC REKOW

Three years since he recorded "Plays Live" on his 1983 North American Tour, Peter Gabriel has incorporated a variety of themes and paces into his latest album, "So."

On his first titled album (sixth album overall), Gabriel reaches wider audiences than he did as a near cult figure in his earlier solo days when he produced such classics as "Salisbury Hill," "I Don't Remember," and "Games without Frontiers."

Exemplified by his participation in Amnesty International, Gabriel's concern for human rights is also evident in "So." Many people listen to this album because they relate to the universal themes shown through his songs. The stories are familiar.

Known as a percussion expert even before his Genesis days, Gabriel has incorporated a wonderful blend of samba drums and dance to "So." Percussion within each of "So's" songs was engineered in Rio de Janeiro.

In "So," Gabriel adds poetic and insightful lyrics as well as a wide range of vocals to the powerful background rythmn established by Stewart Copeland (ex-Policeman), Manu Katche, and Jerry Marotta. Kate Bush accompanys Gabriel in "Don't Give Up," a song about the encouragement a family can provide to combat despair.

Throughout the album, Gabriel floats the listener through a dreamscape of surrealistic images. "Red Rain" exemplifies this, where the chilling crescendo of drums and piano rises from the lyrics, "It can't be that cold, the ground is still warm to touch" to "this place is so quiet, sensing that storm." The cyclical themes of life and death, joy and sorrow appear in many of the songs.

In "That Voice Again" and "In Your Eyes," Gabriel portrays human uncertainty and longing: "Love, I get so lost sometimes." But it's love's potential that saves: "In your eyes I am complete, In your eyes..." he finds "...resolution of all the fruitless searches... It's only through uncertainty that we're naked and alive."

Some of Gabriel's heavier themes are broken, however, by the introduction of two tracks, "Sledgehammer," a knockout love roar, and "Big Time," a danceable mixture of satire and aspiration that describes a star's rise to fame.

In "So," Peter Gabriel's songs give more hope than in some of his earlier works where bitterness and despair were so often dominating themes. "So" not only exemplifies Peter Gabriel's extraordinary talent as a percussionist and songwriter, but succeeds as an artist's creation of love. It is a brilliant album.

Dancing On Diamonds

BY JODY REED

Now I've never been a big Paul Simon fan: in fact, my knowledge of his music is limited to hazy images from sixth grade slumber parties with an A.M. radio transmitting "50 Ways to Leave Your Lover" and cross country travelling in a station wagon with Simon and Garfunkel's Greatest Hits on the eight-track tape player (remember those?).

Paul Simon's latest is Graceland, an eclectic mix of sounds that combines South African rhythms and American sensibilities. Simon, inspired primarily by a group called the Boyoyo Boys and a collection of songs called Gumboots: According Jive Hits, Volume II, travelled to South Africa to entice some of the country's best musicians to play with him, and the result is a strangely danceable, and sometimes haunting, collection of songs.

If you ever watch MTV (even if you don't admit it in public) you have probably seen the video for "You Can Call Me Al." You know - the one with Chevy Chase mouthing the words, as Paul Simon looks on a bit bewildered. Admit it: it's entertaining. It gives you a general idea of what to expect from Graceland, yet there is so much more.

There are several outstanding songs on this album. There is "Homeless," an a capella tune done using mostly native languages and presenting stark images of South Africa as a sort of wasteland. "Under African Skies" offers Linda Rondstadt on backing vocals. The combination of Simon and Rondstadt (another one who I have not been a big fan of) is one of great vocal chemistry. "The Boy in the Bubble" and "Graceland" are two notable listens.

Not only has Simon collaborated with the best of South African artists for this album, but he has added the talents of many American musicians—the Everly Brothers, and Los Lobos, to name a few. Unique instrumentation (how about that accordian?) and native rhythms keep this moving. Listen to it first thing in the morning. Listen to it when you're depressed. Listen to it when you want to have fun. Listen to it when you're drinking pina coladas. You can't go wrong with Graceland.

Hard Fluid

BY CHRISTOPHER DUNN

Rock music evolves in cycles since most musicians assimilate music they grew up with, mix it in with new forms, and hopefully kick in some original sounds. In the 1980's we've heard bands with 1950's rock-a-billy sounds, and more recently, bands that emulate the psychedelic 60's sounds. Within the last year some bands have begun to echo those junky, throbbing mid-1970's rock and roll bands. The mid 70's was not a bad era, unless you were rocking out on Boston and Reo Speedwagon (like me). Underneath the glitter of the disco age, bands like Iggy Pop and the Stooges, the Patti Smith Group, and Richard Hell and the Voidoids were paving the wave for the punk movement which began to gain momentum in 1976.

A new band from Denver, The Fluid, recreates this mid seventies hard rock sound in their first album, "Punch n' Judy." Most of the band were members of White Trash and The Frantix, two of the original punk bands in Denver. The members of The Fluid have broken away from the hard core scene and have innovated their own sound based on raw, hard driving rock. They have a steady, fast beat (but quite unlike hard core punk), and blend howling, buzzing guitar leads over some classic rock chords. The Fluid's vocalist, John Robinson, wails a lot like Iggy Pop, especially on "Preacher Man Blues," but sometimes the wave of sound he sings over drowns him out.

Among the other particularly notable tunes are: "Static Cling," a fast, hard tune reminiscent of the Rolling Stones; "Sacharine Rejection," a swaying, pulsating song with great rhythm guitar work; and "13th Night," a slow, dark, almost bluesy dirge, which sounds great after a full side of hard rock.

The members of the Fluid are all long hairs, some of them wear paisley, and John Robinson adorns himself with elaborate jewelry and love beds. Their lyrics are generally happy and non-violent. Though the Fluid's image may be peaceful, their music is loud and raw.

What's On Your Turntable?

Jody Reed—Senior—English
The Rave-ups, "Town and Country"

John Knight—Undecided—Undecided
Jimmy Buffet on stereo,
Linda Evans on TV

Emily B. Smith—Senior—English
Shaun Cassidy, "Da Doo Run Run"

Lisa Hilgers—Senior—Art History
Peter Tosh, "Witch Doctor"

Dave Klein—Senior—Psychology
Paul Simon, "Graceland"

Lisa Leckenby—Junior—Art Studio
Andy Gibb, "Shadow"

MoviesMo

Fat Guy— Go

BY PROMITA CHATTERJI

It is very rare that a movie thea completely empty on dollar
however, in the case of Fat Guy
Nutzoid this was a completely justi state of affairs. Actually, besides the that I dragged to go see it, four other come in—three of them left. Smart

Fat Guy Goes Nutzoid has the k title which has a weird, cult-filmish ring to it, movies like Morons from Space or Attack of the 50-foot Wo
However, I do a disservice to these comparative masterpieces by mentio them in the same breath with Fat Guy Nutzoid. This film fails utterly at b either cultish, funny, or even maki social statement (which it, incredibl to do). You can't even mock it becaus so pathetic.

The story is about a guy named R (Tibor Feldman) who is trying to working. He goes to stay with his br who works at a home for retarded ad
The brother gets fired and so they k
But unknown to Roger and his bro one of the people from the home s away in their car. This is the fat guy, known as Dave, also known as M
(Peter Linari). They try to return h the home, but after some very sick s Mouka runs away. The rest of the pretends to show how Mouka deals the real world.

Is this supposed to be funny?
supposed to be conscious-raising?
not. The film tries to be both and suc at neither. It starts out as a sigh gross-out movie, but it slowly becom pathetic pseudo-protest against soc treatment of Mouka. Most of the fi spent in degrading him and then, w can sink no lower, it turns around becomes a "fight-the-institutions" with Roger trying to "save" Mouka
the clutches of the evil establishment.
saddest part is that Mouka never becomes "nutzoid"—he just reacts t situations in which he finds himself.
is a premise which certainly does induce laughter, and with a title lik Guy Goes Nutzoid, it obviously is vehicle for profundity.

Do not go see this film. Hopefu its record-breaking attendance keeps will go away very, very soon and the can all forget that it ever existed.

Homecoming Winners

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

CC leading scorer Kerri Tashiro tangles with an opponent.

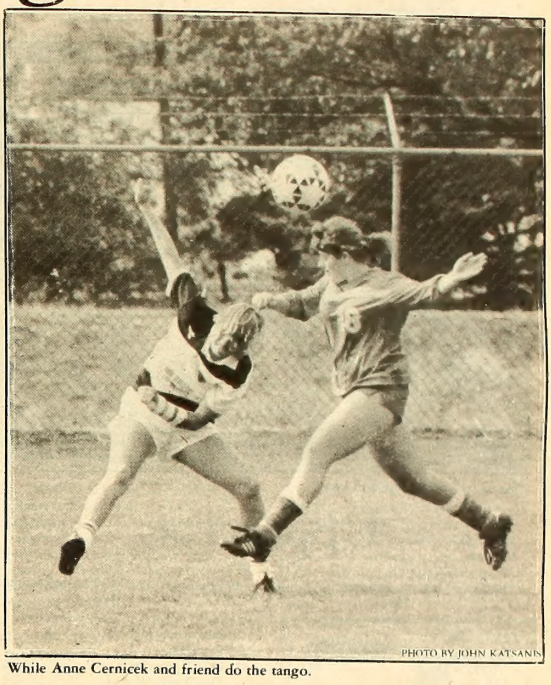

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

While Anne Cernicek and friend do the tango.

Booters Roll On

BY ANNA SHORT & KAREN WILLOUGHBY

Rhythm, consistency, and assertiveness ave been the main focus for CC women's ccer team this season. This young team oped its record to 9-1 after a brutally notional 2-0 victory over Northern olorado in Greeley on Tuesday. Although e sun was shining and the field was near rfect, little did the CC women know hat Bohemouth monsters would be rned loose upon them. The contact was rd and whistles few, but luckily the ground was soft, for both teams felt the blades of grass. After the initial onslaught of the Northern Colorado attack, CC settled things down and began to dictate the play. Both goals came from corner kicks. Maryclaire, "Buffy" Robinson's fine serve connected with fellow freshman Keri Schloredt for the first tally. The second cross created a melee in front of the net before Shelley Separovich's attack from the back destroyed UNC's hopes for a comeback.

Settling things down was new for CC. The emphasis for Homecoming weekend was finishing the attack, and score they did. They defeated Carleton College 11-0, Maryville 3-0, and then St. Benedict 12-0. Highlights for the weekend included a tremendous loyal following and a pregame birthday bash for the little big-guy, Dang. The question is: was the loyal fan support due to (a) the mesmerizing spin of Honey Hogan's ponytail; (b) Dang's tall blonde friend from the Pink Elephant telegram service; or (c) the reappearance of their lone senior, Margot Stolte?

But after all of the Homecoming festivities, the Tigers face a more challenging schedule. They are still learning from their 0-3 defeat to UNC (Chapel Hill) over 1st block break. The areas of concern include confidence and consistency. With these areas in mind and the additional help of Austin Daniels, Carl Beal, and Liza Grant, the CC women are working towards the level of play necessary to outclass the upcoming opposition.

CC faces SMU Saturday at 2:00 p.m. and top 20 team SUNY-Cortland 2:00 p.m. Sunday. Come support your 4th ranked Tigers!!!

Tigers Grab #2

BY JAMES S. GRANTZ

The Colorado College football team got ugh when it had to in the second half and, fore a homecoming crowd of 2,900, shut wn the Aurora Spartans from Illinois -10.

The Tigers scored on their first session when QB Charley Lorimer hit Matt Holmes over the middle for a 49 d TD. After a 27 yard field goal by rora's Byron Fielder, the Tigers scored ce more in the second quarter. lfbacks Rob Seims and Shawn "Jimmy " Holt had TD runs of 1 yard, and 17 ds respectively. The Spartans' last score ne with no time remaining in the half. rora QB Todd Martel avoided the Tiger h, scrambled to his right and found SE dgar White in the end zone for a 6 yard

The Spartans threatened to close the 11 nt gap with just over 3 minutes naining with a first and goal at the ger's 5 yard line. The Tiger defense led by LB Mark Gorman, Linemen Chuck Puga, Steve Gurr, Steve Barbie, Jeff "Je Rockhead" Gaul and Steve "Timmerdome" Timmons dominated the line of scrimmage and stopped the Spartans on four successive plays.

"From that point on, they couldn't get anything going because our defense wouldn't let them get anything going," said CC Head Coach Jerry Carle

The Tiger defense shut out the Spartans in the half while the offense scored the clincher with 7:53 left in the 4th quarter. Again it was Seims, coming back from a leg injury which had kept him sidelined for 2½ weeks, slashing 5 yards for his second TD. Seims finished with 14 carries for 77 yards and 2 TD's.

The Tigers improved their record to 2-3 while Aurora, playing their first official game since 1952 when they dropped football, dropped to 0-1.

Next Saturday the Tigers are host to Trinity (Tx.) University (0-5), 1:30 at Washburn Field.

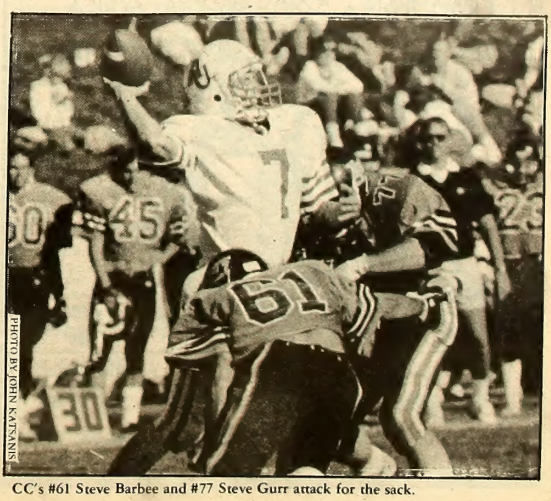

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

CC's #61 Steve Barbee and #77 Steve Gurr attack for the sack.

Intramural Standings

Intramural jocks jump and kick.

Volleyball

Intramural Volleyball Standings
Thru 10/7/86

Womens Spartan Division	W	L
Megans	2	2
2-West TBA	0	3
Bachi Ballers	2	1
Community Chests	2	0

Tiger Division	W	L
HBI's	3	0
1 South East	0	3
Two Easters	2	1
The Big Bad B's	1	2

Freshman Men	W	L
Missionaries	2	2
The Dudes	3	1
Lounge Hounds	4	0
4-West Plague	1	3
One Mouth South	0	4

Upperclass Men Spartan Division	W
Lacrosse Team	0
Schlaudogs	3
5-year Plan	2
Slammers	1
Alpha flight	0
KE Hitters	3
Ichiban	2
Potpourri	0

Tiger Division	W
Team Bogus	0
Hoppy's Kids	2
Dante Jones	1
Beta C.L.	1
5 Seeds	1
MacGregor	0
Resident Live Terminators	2
Faculty	0

Upperclass

Intramural Upperclass Soccer Standings 1986

Spartan Division
Jake Dogs	1-1-1
SWFC is Dead	1-1-1
CW II	0-3-1
Murph's Law	3-0-1
Jammin Salmonistas	2-1
Tiger Division
Spotted Balls	0-3
Slocum Rejects	1-2
McGregor	3-0
Beta C.L.	2-1
SWFC	3-0
One West Brewsers	0-4

Intramural Upperclass Football Standing 1986

Spartan Division
Porta-Frig	4-1
Beta Upperclass	2-3
The Wrong Crowd	2-3
Granny's Playmates	5-0
Bush Boys	2-3
One West Brewsers	0-5
Tiger Division
McGregor	0-4
The Aspen Club	3-1
Beta C.L.	1-3
Groid Crush	3-1
Wardogs	3-1

Freshmen

Intramural Freshman Football Standings

Einhorn	5-1
Risky Business	3-3
Glubenstein	0-6
Hardcore	4-2
Lounge Hounds	6-0
4-West Plague	0-6
One Mouth South	3-3

Intramural Freshman Soccer Standi 1986

Penetrators	2-2
Nilla Wafers	0-
One Mouth South	2-
4-West Plague	2-
Lounge Hounds	1-
The Dudes	3-
Manipulators	0-2
G. Riley Fun Club	2-

The GUINEA PIGG
HAS A NICE SELECTION OF ETHNIC CLOTHING, JEWELRY AND GIFT ITEMS FROM INDIA • SOUTH AMERICA • AFRICA •
P.S. AS ALWAYS, GIFTS, BASKETS, SOUTH AMERICAN THINGS, AND WINDBELLS BY JOE CONIFF • 633-0504
• 2510 W. COLO • OLD COLORADO CITY • MON-SAT 10-5:30

State University of New York College at Oswe
International Education / Overseas Academic Programs
102 Rich Hall
SUNYCO, Oswego, NY 1
Telephone (315) 341-2

SEMESTER OR YEAR 1987/88

LONDON, ENGLAND (Spring: Jan.-June/Fall: Sept.-Dec.)
$2640/semester — Humanities & Int'l. Broadcasting
Humanities students choose from art, history, music, English, & theatre courses and attend Shakespeare Festival. International Broadcasting students gain perspective of British media via classes, excursions, & guest lecturers. Students are housed in central London. Cost includes roundtrip air NY to London, room & full breakfast, field trips, & cultural events.

PARIS, FRANCE (Spring: Feb.-June/Fall: Oct.-Jan.)
$2640/semester
Courses are given at the prominent Sorbonne and Institute Catholique de Paris. 12 credits minimum are taken from several disciplines: humanities (language), economics, business, social sciences, cinema, etc. Cost includes roundtrip air NY to Paris, room, field trips & cultural events, and Sorbonne & ITCULE fees.

UNIVERSITY OF PUERTO RICO
(Rio Piedras Campus) (Spring: Jan.-May/Fall: Aug.-Dec.)
$2050/semester
Studies in all fields of liberal arts & humanities. Participants should have 5 semesters or equivalent in Spanish (Summer "Pre-Program" in Rio Piedras available to help meet proficiency.) Room in UPR residence halls. Cost includes: roundtrip air NY to San Juan, room & board, cultural events & field trips.

UNIVERSITY OF PUERTO RICO
(Mayaguez Campus) (Spring: Jan.-May/Fall: Aug.-Dec.)
$1750/semester *
Business Administration students select courses from Industrial Management, Accounting, Finance, Marketing, Organizational Studies, & Economics divisions. Instruction in Spanish; texts in English. Spanish language proficiency required (Summer "Pre-Program" in Rio Piedras available to help meet proficiency.) Cost (* estimated) includes room & board, texts, & cultural events.

BEIJING, CHINA (Spring: Feb.-June/Fall: Sept.-Jan.)
$2500/semester
At Beijing Teachers College in suburban Beijing, studies in Chinese language, literature, culture, art & history are instructed in English. The Great Wall and Ming Tombs are only a day trip away. Program cost includes room & board, texts, field trips & cultural events.

SUMMER 1987

FRANCE (6 wks./St. Malo/late June-early Aug.)
$1550 French Language & Culture (6-7 credits)
Two weeks in Paris followed by 4 weeks of cre study & family homestay in St. Malo, the "Em Coast of Brittany." Excursions, including th Arthurian Country, the Druids, & the Isle of M Cost includes roundtrip air, ground transporta room in Paris, room & full board in St. Malo, excursions & activities.

SPAIN (6 wks./Madrid/early July-mid-Aug.)
$1395 Spanish Language & Culture (6-8 credits)
Classes and guest speakers 4 days a week, to with weekend excursions to cities such as Segu Toledo, Sevilla & Granada. Get to know Spain through many cultural activities: theatre, m bullfights, and flamenco dances. Cost inclu roundtrip airfare, ground travel, room & board all cultural activities.

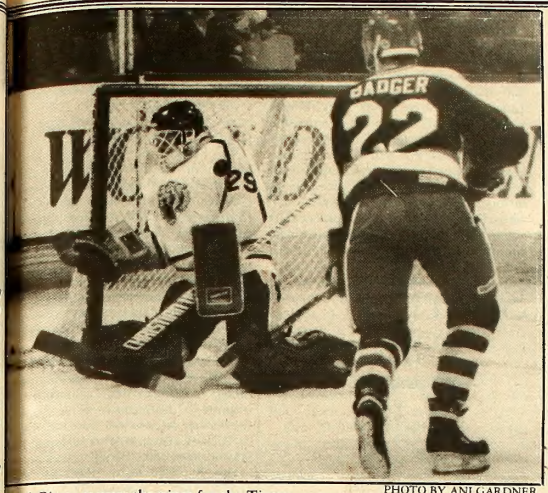
ENGLAND (6 wks./London/late June-mid-Aug.)
$1395 Contemporary British Culture (6 credits)
Meet four days a week for classes, go on field observe & critique plays, attend the Shakespe Festival, & explore more of the UK in your fr time. Accommodations are centrally located walking distance of Hyde Park, theatres & muse Cost includes roundtrip air from NYC, room wi breakfast, field trips & cultural events.

SCOTLAND, ENGLAND & WALES (2 wks./early July)
$990 Study Tour of Historical Britain (3 cre
Travel thru these 3 beautiful countries by m to visit museums, castles, cathedrals & archa sites brought into perspective by a knowledg historian. 3 credits may be earned in histor Int'l. Studies courses. All pre-arranged hot accommodations with full English breakfast a cluded in cost, plus roundtrip airfare, welco and medieval banquet in a Welch castle.

JAMAICA (3 wks./late May-early June)
$1060 Modern Jamaica (6 credits)
Study modern Jamaican history, politics, and economic structure with special emphasis on culture while in a West Indian paradise! Visi historical & cultural sites, and observe flora of stunning natural beauty. Program cost in roundtrip air from NYC, ground transportation accomodations & field trips.

* All Program Costs Subject To Change With Notice
* Cost Of Mandatory SUNY Health & Accident Insurance Is Additional
* High School Jrs. & Srs. May Attend Summer Programs For College Credit

Mail Coupon to:
Director of International Education / 102 Rich Hall / SUCO / Oswego, New York / 13126
Please send program brochure to:
NAME _____
STREET or PO # _____ APT. # _____
CITY _____ STATE _____ ZIP _____
Program of interest: _____
I am a student at: _____
I heard about your program from _____



Derek Pizzey secures the pipes for the Tigers. PHOTO BY ANJ GARDNER

Hockey, continued from page 1

Also look for big things from senior forwards Marty Ketola (tri-captain), Gord Whitaker (tri-captain), and Scott Schneider.

"We're really looking for them to score some goals for us. It's only natural to expect a big year out of guys like Schneider, Whitaker, and Ketola. We know we're going to get some numbers out of Boh and Doyle. But we need the rest of our seniors to make a noticeable contribution too, and those three guys certainly have the capability," said Bertsch.

Other forwards include junior Keith Hoppe who had a strong second half of the season and hopes to pick up where he left off. Sophomores Tim Budy, Guy Gadowsky and Steve Grumley return as veterans and after one year of collegiate playing behind them that experience will help the team.

At the other end of the ice, joining Doyle and Clark at the blue line, will be seniors Scott Campbell and Dave Hardie. Consistent players, they provide the necessary stability in the defensive zone. Other defenders Tom Pederson, Paul Markovich, and Mark Olson are back to help sophomore goalie Derek Pizzey.

Pizzey played in 18 games last season behind Marty Wakelyn (look for Wakelyn between the pipes for the New York Islanders). Both the team and the coaches have confidence in their second year netminder.

"Derek performed like a veteran last year and he will be a key to our success this year. I have confidence in him and I know the team does too," stated Bertsch.

Adding new blood to the list of veterans should provide some depth for the Tigers. Recruits Cal Brown and Doug Kirton are sure to make their presence known on the ice. Bertsch feels these two will come right in as contributing members of the team.

Depth is a concern of Coach Bertsch's. With no junior varsity program at the Colorado College, freshmen must step in and play key roles right away for the Tigers. The players on the bench have to be ready also to take over for an injured teammate. This season with an older squad the depth should surface. Rob Doyle sums up the Tigers' optimism for the 1986-87 season saying "I think the team's really come together. There's alot of older guys leading the way, and Doug Clarke being back will add to it.

1986-87 HOCKEY SCHEDULE

DATE	OPPONENT	TIME
Oct 10-11	Minnesota	7:35/7:35
Oct 17-18	At Northern Michigan	7:35/7:35
Oct 24-25	At Denver/Denver	7:35/7:35
Oct 31-Nov 1	Duluth	7:35/7:35
Nov 7-8	At Wisconsin	7:35-7:35
Nov 14-15	AFA/At AFA	7:35/7:30
Nov 21-22	At North Dakota	7:35/7:35
Nov 28-29	Michigan Tech	7:35/7:35
Dec 5-6	North Dakota	7:35/7:35
Dec 12	At Maine	7:30
Dec 13	At Lowell	7:30
Dec 19	At US International University (San Diego)	7:30
Dec 29	Boston University	7:35
Jan 2	At Providence	7:35
Jan 3	At Northeastern	7:30
Jan 9	New Hampshire	7:35
Jan 10	Boston College	7:35
Jan 16-17	At Michigan Tech	8:05/7:35
Jan 23-24	Wisconsin	7:35/7:35
Jan 30-31	At Duluth	8:05/7:35
Feb 6-7	At Minnesota	7:30/7:30
Feb 13-14	Northern Michigan	7:35/7:35
Feb 20-21	Denver/At Denver	7:35/7:35

Home games in bold.

Judo Expert (with Seoul on her mind)

BY DEAN CAMPBELL

At first glance, soft spoken, mild mannered Kate Donahoo seems ill-equipped for the rigors of competitive judo, the martial arts equivalent of wrestling. But as many vanquished opponents will attest, Kate's five-foot three-inch one hundred twenty-three pound body is deceptively powerful. And with ten years of judo experience under her belt, and numerous top-level tournament appearances to her credit, Kate Donahoo has proven herself to be one of the nation's top judo competitors in the one hundred twenty-three pound class.

Contrary to popular belief, judo does not involve hitting or kicking, two methods of attack used in the commonly associated martial arts of karate and tae-kwon-do. Instead, judo is similar to wrestling in a martial arts robe, with each combatant attempting to throw or pin their opponent using various moves including armlocks and chokeholds.

Kate began competing in judo nearly ten years ago in her hometown of Las Vegas, Nevada. After becoming bored with merely watching her two brothers participate in the sport, Kate joined a judo club at her local parks and recreation youth center, and competed in tournaments that gradually grew in size and importance. Eventually Kate's success earned her an invitation to the 1985 National Sports Festival, where she placed third out of five competitors in the one hundred twenty-three pound class.

So far this year, Kate has experienced both success and difficulty in testing the waters of top quality judo competition. After being picked as an alternate to compete in the 1986 National Sports Festival in Houston, Texas, Kate won first in her division, defeating four fighters on her way to the title. This important victory earned Kate an invitation to the British Open Judo Championships in London, England, a meet that included teams from Germany, France, the Netherlands and Great Britain. Kate's first match was against the European one hundred twenty-three pound champ, whose experience and savvy proved too much for Kate. Kate's second match, against Britain's second-ranked fighter, ended with a similarly unfortunate result.

Though Kate's first international competition was no doubt frustrating, her British matches provided her with invaluable international experience. And together with her continued training at Colorado Springs' National Judo Institute (Kate wanted it mentioned that the Institute provided her with a substantial scholarship to attend CC) five nights a week, Kate can utilize that experience at another international tournament October 10th and 11th in Quebec, Canada. Other upcoming tournaments for Kate include the United States Open Championships November 21st and 22nd at the Olympic Training Center here in Colorado Springs, and The World University Games in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil in December.

The main thrust of Kate's continued training will be toward competing in the 1988 Summer Olympic Games in Seoul, Korea. It will be the first time that a women's judo competition will be part of the Olympics, so Kate is very enthusiastic about the chance to participate in this exciting precedent. To qualify for the Olympics, Kate must first finish in the top eight in her weight class at the 1987 World Judo Championships. To be eligible for competition there however, Kate must make the World Team by finishing first in her division at the World Games. (Last year, Kate finished third at the World Games, so a first place finish in '87 is entirely feasible.)

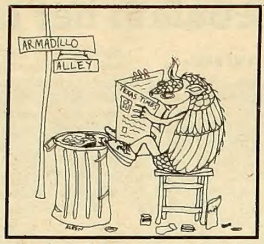
So far in her judo career, Kate has not had much difficulty being active in both school and athletics. This ability to juggle two time consuming endeavors should serve Kate well in her drive toward the '87 World Championships at the '88 Olympic Games. And if all goes well, Kate Donahoo could end up proving to the entire world that she is truly one of the most remarkable one hundred twenty-three pound athletes around.

BAHAMA BRONZE Inc
Tanning Studio
The Oldest & Best Equipped In Town
In honor of our 3rd Anniversary we are offering 25% off all packages with CC ID.
(303) 576-5937
210 E. CHEYENNE MTN. BLVD.
COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO. 80906

WE'LL DO YOUR LAUNDRY!!!
WASHED
DRIED
FOLDED
Suds 'um
Laundry & Cleaners
1931 W. Uintah (across from Uintah Gardens)
473-3756
Special student offer w/CC ID.

Make Fun Of The Road.
With the Honda Spree®, you never have to settle for just getting there. You can have a good time along the way.
This is our most affordable scooter. Push-button starting and no shifting make it easy to use. And it's almost maintenance-free.
So come see the Spree yourself. Because the road never ends. Neither should the fun.
HONDA
scooters
don's cycles
HONDA MOTORCYCLES · ATC'S
739 E. Pikes Peak Ave.
475-2437
Spree
Designed for operator use only.
Always wear a helmet & eye protection.

Armadillo's Alley



Naked Texan Meets Benito Mussolini

Howdy Hicks:

Grab yourself a cold Lone Star longneck. Pop the top, take a swig, swish it around your mouth, savor the unique flavor. You're enjoying the National Beer of Texas. Tastes like cowpiss cause it is cowpiss. Kick back, flip on the national pasttime, slap on some Led Zep, and hang on cause I'm gonna ramble on.

Speaking bout the national pasttime, the Houston Astros are rolling! Mike Scott's 1-0 five hit gem included 14K's, Sweeetness. The Mets are going down! Remember, when "you guys" (all fans north of the Mason Dixon line) watch the Astros spray champagne all over each other after winning it all, you heard it from the Dillo first!

While the Astros may be cruising the Houston Oilers are losing. The 1-4 Oilers amaze me, they have an offensive line comprised of four No. 1 picks and one No. 2 yet they have allowed 13 sacks in the last two games. They throw for 398 yards, but score only 13 points and lose. Last week, desperate cause they might actually win, they added another chapter to their "How to Lose Games" book. Fourth down, Detroit is in punt formation, an Oiler roars in and blocks the punt, the ball bounces off another Oiler, into the Detroit punter's hands and he runs 18 yards for a first down!

Here is another juicy tidbit from Texas. University of Texas running back Edwin Simmons was arrested and charged with suspected burglary. The police found him disoriented and nude in a woman's backyard. I'm afraid that is taking that hip Southern Californian Valley Girl phrase "Let's get naked" a little too far. Edwin is a 225 pound dude with prehistoric facial features, the poor woman must have thought it was the Return of the Neanderthals!

A running back who must be much more psyched about life is the Seattle Seahawks Curt Warner. After Suffering a potentially career ending knee injury on his first carry of the 1984 season, Warner has returned with a vengenance. In Seattles 33-7 victory over San Diego, he rushed for 143 yards. Furthermore, a waterbug would have been proud to claim some of Curt's jittery moves. Curt Warner's inspirational story demonstrates that hard work and desire pay off.

The Denver Post becomes more imbecilic with each passing week. Comparisons of Tom Landry and Dan Reeves handwriting? Give me a break! Who cares! I wondered what is next, a comparison of San Diego Chargers head coach Don Coryell and Reeves' baby pictures? Maybe they could let Donkey fans vote on who had cuter dimples. Like any self respecting liberal arts armadillo, however, I dug a little deeper, and discovered some shocking evidence that had eluded the Post's weak journalists. Landry and Reeves' handwriting shows a startling resemblance to the penmanship of fascist Italian dictator Beniot Mussolini. Make of it what you will. I'm not here to pass judgment on men who are apparently descendents of the leader of one of history's most oppressive regimes. But, when Denver's orange clad fanatics start giving salutes that seem distressingly familiar, don't say da Dillo didn't warn y'all. Ciao.

Sport Shorts

Attention Skiers!

The Colorado College ski team has begun informal practice everyday at 3:30. Anyone who is interested should participate. Formal practice begins the 1st Monday of next block when we will hopefully be able to combine dryland with some skiing. If you have any questions please call Charlie Schwartz 578-2125, Peter Hudson 634-8345 or Mark Rinehart, Head Coach, at 685-5785.

Women's Hockey

Tomorrow, Saturday, Oct. 11, marks the beginning of another season of parties, ski trips to Aspen and Vail, and of course, women's ice hockey.

For all women interested, the first practice will be at Honnen Ice Rink, Saturday at 4:15 (that's on the ice at 4:15). All levels are welcome (a lot of us started when we got here). Skate rentals are available for $1.00 at the ice rink. Please arrive early to give yourself time to get skates (and put them on). Also bring a stick. Again that's practice at 4:15, Honnen Ice Palace, Saturday, Oct. 11. For more information call Sarah Meskin at 632-9824 or Dorothy Diggs at ext. 215.

Women's Lacrosse

Any women interested in a pick-up lacrosse game, we will be playing at 2 p.m. Saturday at Slocum field. Everyone is welcome, so come on down and get psyched for lax. Spring is coming.

Cross-country—Both the men's and women's teams took last weekend off in preparation for this week's Colorado College Invitational. The men's team will compete in a five-mile race Saturday against six other teams in South Monument Park, starting at 9 a.m. The women go against seven other schools in a 5,000-meter run through North Monument Park, starting at 10 a.m.

Bad Weekend

The CC men's soccer team had a[n] bad weekend over homecoming comp[ared] a 1-1 record against 2 poor teams. Spo[rting] a very mediocre record of 5-4-2, [and] hopes for a NCAA playoff berth [have] faded nearly into oblivion.

On Friday, the Tigers took on [the] bottom of the barrel Aurora Spar[tans]. Aurora had a 1-6 record and in fact [was] coed team, but that didn't prevent [them] from coming out strong and bounc[ing] shot off the Tiger goalpost ten min[utes] into the game. CC stayed true to [form] form and constantly failed to capitali[ze] easy chances in front of the Aurora [goal]. Although CC dominated the first half, [they] only led 1-0 at intermission off a [lucky] Kazemi rip from 25 yards. Coach R[ick] Richardson administered a well-dese[rved] verbal beating to his troops reminding [them] they were playing perhaps the w[orst] college soccer team in the country. A [new] inspired CC team proceeded to dism[antle] the Aurora defense and won 5-0 on g[oals] by Ricky Garcia, Andreas Khlonen, [Jeff] Schmidt, and Mike Blaxill.

On Sunday (yes, the day [after] homecoming) a less than fit (hungover) Tiger team took the field against [the] Trinity University. Although CC [was] without the services of Greg Kazemi, A[ndy] Henderson, and Matt Slothower [who] should have had no problems against [the] Texas rivals. Instead, 2 glaring defens[ive] mistakes gave Trinity 2 easy scor[ing] chances that they gladly took advanta[ge] and jumped out to a 2-0 lead. CC's [many] scoring woes continued as they fail[ed to] score on several easy chances. Th[omas] bounced 2 shots off the post and forc[ed] to make 2 "professional," fouls (de[fined] shots) to prevent the score from get[ting] any worse. The 2-0 final left CC hang[ing] their heads.

This weekend CC travels to Grin[nell] Iowa to take on fifteen ranked Woo[ster], College and St. Mary's College in two [must] win situations. Any loss this weekend [will] certainly eliminate the Tigers from [the] post season play.

Volleyball—Led by junior hitter El[len] Breitbard and All-America setter A[my] Smith, the Tigers beat the Colorado Sch[ool] of Mines in straight games on Saturday [to] run their season record to 11-4. Coach Bethanis has her team near to the [form] that produced a 40-10 record and trip[to] nationals last year, and is looking forw[ard] to another impressive showing in [this] week's tournament.

This Week's Schedule

Friday, Oct. 10—Hockey vs. Universi[ty of] Minnesota, 7:35 p.m.
Volleyball—Tiger Classic, noon-[6] p.m.
Saturday, Oct. 11—Hockey vs. Univer[sity] of Minnesota, 7:35 p.m.
Volleyball—Tiger Classic, all day
Women's soccer vs. South[western] Methodist, 3 p.m.
Football vs. Trinity University, [1:30] p.m.
Cross-country—CC Invitational
Men, 9 a.m.; Women, 10 a.m.
Men's soccer vs. Wooster at Grinnell
Saturday, Oct. 12—Women's soccer [vs.] Cortland State (NY)
Men's soccer vs. St. Mary's at Grin[nell], IA

Other Soccer News

The shirt winning football club announces the changing of the club's name to the Fifth Year Plan. But even if the change doesn't go through, this talented team seems assured of a playoff berth and winning shirts.

Okay, so this team has been around a little longer than most. They did call in a rookie to anchor the defense though. In goal for the SWFC/5th Year is youngster David Fitzgerald, a junior who, unlike the other members of the team plans to graduate in four years. Playing the field are five retired Colorado College soccer pl[ayers] and four buys who wanted [the] championship t-shirts.

At 4-0, the Fifth Year Plan (SW[FC]) remains the only undefeated team [in] Tiger Division (it must be due to th[eir] years at Murph's). Seniors Jimmy [Gr]ow and Dickie Hertel lead the team in sco[ring] and in defense, while some more sel[f-]Dean Winters, Tim Bell, Lisa Sea[rs], Sarah Flynn, Kip Roe, Steve Johnston, Kathy Mahoney also appear on the [roll]. But they will wear their t-shirts proud

Thank you for a memorable Homecoming!

Special thanks to:

Winston Hait-S/AA Homecoming Chairman
Committee Chairmen:
Dorothy Pacheco-Posters
Dylan Forster-Posters
Richard Poling-Picnic
Cathy Cummins-Picnic
Mary Boedigheimer-Tickets
Susan O'Hanlon-Half-time Entertainment

And

The Student Alumni Association
The Class of '87
IFC
Jim Tribble and All Saga Workers
Lee Parks and His Security Troops
The Alumni Office Staff
The Faculty
The Cutler Staff
The Physical Plant
The Audio-Visual Dept.
The Students-For Their Enthusiasm

For the hours and hours of hard work to make a successful weekend!
The Alumni Office

Ellipses and Hyperbole

Sexual Waves

BY AARON SHURE

If you have driven on I-25, you probably have noticed the purple dome of the Embassy Suite hotel, and you must have wondered what its purpose is. Due to some intelligent investigative reporting, I have learned that the dome houses a sensative audio device that is run by the GNO research institute. Patrick Envee is the head of this institute, and he explains the groups premise in this interview.

Pat: Historians have struggled for ages without an acurate common gauge of the progress and welfare of civilization. We at the institute will prove with our new highly sensative equipment, that the advancement of a civilization is directly proportional to female orgasm. Mind you, the equations we have devised, much akin to Quantum Electro Dynamics, only apply to statistical behavior; that is to say, we are not interested in individual subjects, rather the GNO, or Gross National Orgasm.

A: This seems to be a very delicate research, so before we discuss the politics, let's discuss the technology. How exactly do you monitor the GNO?

Pat: It was recently discovered that a high concentration of successful sexual activity emits an extremely low frequency audio wave, we call them O waves. We have been able to construct a detection system that is based here at the Embassy Suite hotel and that involves several geo synchronous satellites.

A: Why here in Colorado Springs?

Pat: We wanted a location that was free of local emissions that could throw our readings off.

A: You said you were interested in female O waves, do they differ significantly from male O waves.

Pat: The difference between the male and female O wave is slight, on the magnitude of several Angstroms in wavelength. And, of course, we are presented with the task of separating the two signals, because, for the most part, they occur in pairs. Just the same, we feel we can successfully extract and monitor the female O waves.

A: I find this hard to believe.

Pat: Well, there is a simple experiment you can try at home.

A: Ummmm, what is that?

Pat: If you turn your TV to a dead station and turn the tint way down, so that only a few periodic dots of static are visibl, one out of a hundred of those sparks of light is an O wave; the rest of those flickers is residual radiation from the creation of the universe.

A: Fascinating. But, to address the political aspect of your work, don't you feel like you are infringing on people's privacy.

Pat: No, not at all. Remember we are dealing with large abstract statistics. Of course there was the case of the Nebraska anomoly, when we were picking up a frightening high consentration of O waves from a very small geographical area. What's more, the wavelength was exactly between male and female O lengths. We sent our people out, in the land rover, to investigate. We found the source to be the home of Denzil Martin, a CC graduate. Denzil was engaged in a huge project to raise and train Sea Monkeys. He is convinced that they are not just brine shrimp, but a highly evolved species that really can be trained, as the ads in the back of comic books claim. The upshot was that a million Sea Monkey's doing loop the loops at the same time transmit O waves.

A: What did you do?

Pat: Denzil has agreed to limit the number of monkey's that practice the loop-the-loop, and we are trying to find a way to distinguish between Sea Monkey waves and O waves.

Unfortunately the interview was abruptly interrupted by a hysterical lab assistant carrying a computer printout and yelling, "My God, Pat you've got to see this." Since then the phones at the institute have been busy. I do promise, however, to get in contact with them as soon as possible.

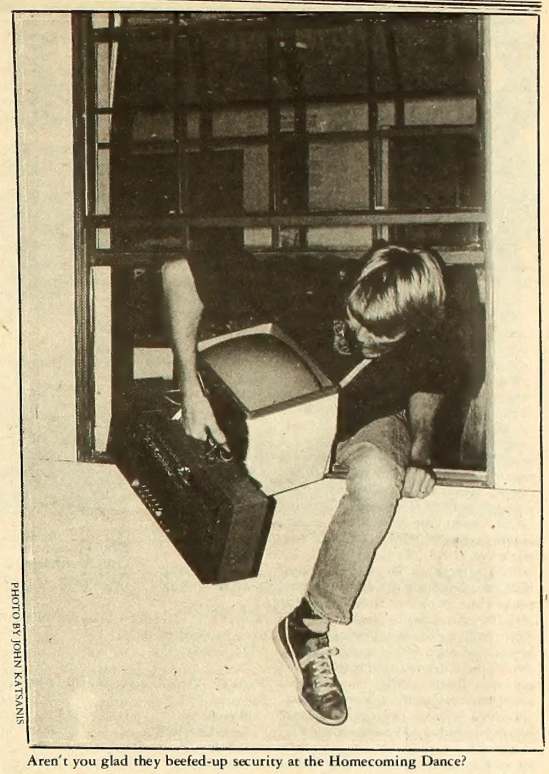


PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

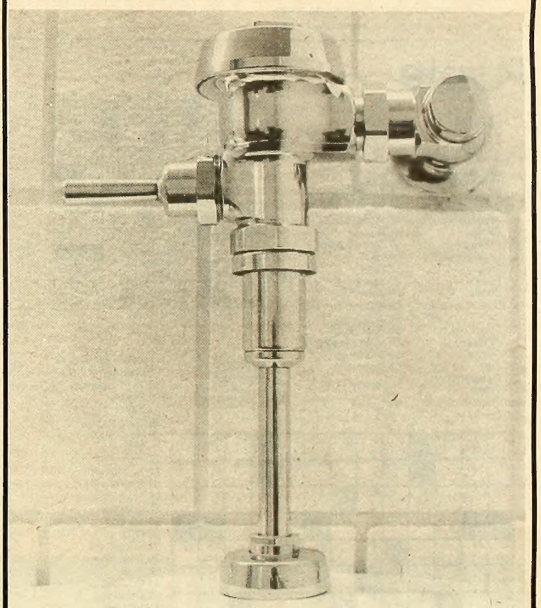
Aren't you glad they beefed-up security at the Homecoming Dance?

House of
YAKITORI
Japanese Restaurants
Every Tuesday
5 pm - 9 pm
ALL THE YAK
YOU CAN ATTACK
$6.30
on the #17 dinner
*not available on to go or delivery orders
YAKITORI
Also try our Sushi Bar

DOWNTOWN ONLY
Downtown
16 E. Bijou
578-0915
M-Thurs 11 am-3 pm 5-9 pm
Fri & Sat 11 am-3 pm 5-10pm

Don't Let Your Brilliance Go To Waste


LEVIATHAN
SUPPORT YOUR WORLD
submit today
essays · photography · art fiction · poetry
at Bemis Desk
or the
Student Center

81

BY JILL BRASSCO & ANITA WALLS

This is the beginning of a new regular column; a forum to keep us all updated about senior events, accomplishments and pertinent information.

Business first...The Career Center is involved and interested in our job pursuits. The Career Bulletin is designed to let us know about interviewers that will be on campus and career programs which are designed to help us in our quest for employment. In order to participate in on-campus interviews, a student must have attended the three workshops given by the Career Center. Interviews have already begun, so you may want to get to the next workshop, ASAP...just in case.

Socially speaking...We're off to a great start. Despite cloudy weather, the annual Senior Class Picnic was attended by more than 200 seniors. Senior Class Officers and Agents will be co-ordinating the upcoming events. Our hope is that members of the class are interested in helping plan activities, so let an officer or class agent know when you're available to help out.

Coming up are two fun "mixers" organized by Cheryl Hintergardt and Kari Gentry. They worked out some great deals for us. The first will be on October 15th at Meadow Muffins from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m. We'll have our own room and service staff, not to mention food and bevies at bargain prices. Get psyched for an evening away from campus, getting to know ALL The other seniors! Look for a personalized invitation that will be arriving in your mail.

Speaking of which, there are 100-plus seniors who live off campus, and do not have on-campus boxes. Give us a break; get a box! We want to let you know about all the festivities.

This weekend is a great opportunity for all of us to get out and salute Senior Athletes. Take a picnic, a banner, a megaphone; get away from the library, the lab, the computers and enjoy the sunshine! Help cheer on these great seniors:

Volleyball—El Pomar, Friday...noon-7:00 p.m., Saturday...Championship Series
Julie James
Lisa Korte
Alex Reich

Women's Cross Country—N. Monument Park, Saturday...10:00 a.m.
Mia Cadmus
Theresa Ellbogen
Ann McLuckie

Football—Washburn Field, Saturday...1:30 p.m.
Phil Apodaca
Doug Burns
Todd Carroll
T.J. Cole
Jack Foster
Steve Gerr
Mark Gorman
Chris Kinney
Rich Lawton
Fred Owens
Steve Timmons
Kent Tooman
Chris Watchman
Bill Young

Women's Soccer—Stuart Field, Saturday...3:00 p.m.
Margot Stolte

Hockey—Broadmoor World Arena, Saturday...7:35 p.m.
Rick Boh
Scott Campbell
Rob Doyle
Dave Hardie
Marty Ketola
Scott Schneider
Gord Whitaker

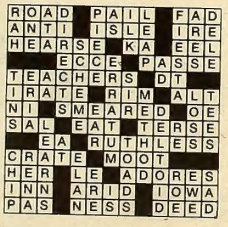
Puzzle

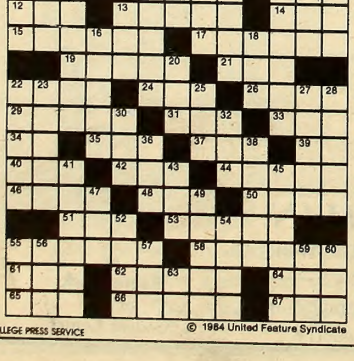
ACROSS

1 Wine cup
4 New Zealand native
9 Drunkard
12 The sun
13 Enthusiasm
14 Mountain on Crete
15 Protective organization
17 Flag
19 Faultless
21 Sister
22 Son of Adam
24 Cry
26 Fixed period of time
29 Puzzle
31 Flap
33 Spanish for "river"
34 Conjunction
35 Decay
37 Still
39 Chinese distance measure
40 Corded cloth
42 Peruke
44 Hereditary factors
46 Walked on
48 Bow
50 Bird's home
51 Base
53 Brief
55 Strikes
58 Wanted
61 Stroke
62 Judgment
64 Beat down
65 Metric measure
66 Cornered
67 Before

DOWN

1 Snake
2 Cry of cow
3 Partners
4 Heavy club
5 Regions
6 Hypothetical force
7 Take unlawfully
8 Country of Asia
9 Transgressor
10 Poem
11 Sailor: colloq.
16 Time waster
18 Hard-shelled fruit
20 Parcel of land
22 To the left
23 Silly blunder; sl.
25 Body of water
27 Irritates
28 Damp
30 Quarrel
32 Supplicate
36 Container
38 Taut
41 Courteous
43 Obtained
45 Sewing implement
47 Speck
49 Thick
52 Direction
54 Musical instrument
55 Health resort
56 Deface
57 Weight of India
59 Organ of hearing
60 Change color of
63 Compass point





COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE © 1984 United Feature Syndicate

BUS/ECON SPEAKERS PROGRAM RETURNS! Bus/Econ Student Advisory Board presents the first speaker in this year's Topics and Issues forum. Curt Ormond, of Curt Ormond and Associates, will discuss 'The Spirit of Enterprenerism' on Thursday, Oct. 16 at 6 p.m. in Gates Common Room. Refreshments provided.

IF YOU HAVE NOT picked up your 1985-86 Yearbook yet—please call Jane Patterson x222 or drop by Jackson House, Room 205 (evenings).

TO THE WITNESS who saw my motorcycle being stolen one month ago. The police have caught the guy and you call and collect your $100 reward by making a statement. Call Devin x331.

TYPING—WORD PROCESSING. Fast accurate typing of reports, resumes, etc., cheap prices 531-7283.

'83 RED FIREBIRD, 35k mi., transverable used car insurance. $6,200.00 O.B.O. Must sell! Shak 598-3191.

ON OCTOBER 16, the film on the life of Thomas Merten will be at 2:30 p.m. in the North Video Room of Tutt Library NOT 1:30 in Shove Lecture.

HANDBALL PLAYERS (not team handball, real handball): Does anyone else play this sport on campus? Call Chris Bell, ext. 327.

BEYOND RASTALL PERFORMANCE SERIES presents Celtic Concert with Sandy Gort and John Stone on Friday, Oct. 17, at 12:00. Behind Montgomery (Loomis Lounge if weather bad). Bring your lunch.

ROTC SCHOLARSHIP NIGHT—A Scholarship Night will be held at the Grant Library conference room at UCCS at 6:30 p.m., October 16 for individuals interested int he Army's Reserve Officer Training Corps two- and three-year scholarship program.

Qualifications, application procedures and processing will be covered at the seminar.

For more information contact Maj. Chuck Sankey at 593-3236.

OKTOBERFEST Sat., Oct. 11 in the German House yard. From around 8:00 'till 1:00 or so. Food and free supplies of the national drink of Germany. A German band coming around 10:30. Records 'till then.

CAREER CENTER HAPPENINGS—The following are interviewing on campus next week: Aetna Life and Casualty Co., Mon., Oct 13; NCR Corp. on Tues. the 14th; Mountain Bell, Wed., Oct. 15; Northwestern School of Law, Thurs., Oct. 16; and State Farm Insurance, Friday the 17th.

Also, there are three programs next week each at 3:30 in Armstrong 259B: Tues. the 14th is resume writing; Wed. is a graduate and professional school session; and Thurs. the 16th is placement office orientation. Call 426 for details.

GAY RAP GROUP meets Mondays at 7:00 to provide discussion and community for gay, bisexual and other students exploring their sexuality. Call x384 for details.

NOTIFICATION OF LEAVE ABSENCE AND WITHDR POLICIES—Applications availabl Dean of Students Office, Armstro Room 213. The deadline for requ leave of absence is November 1 fo which begins in the spring se Students are encouraged to appl leave even if they are awaiting their acceptance to a program. O application, a leave of absence considered for one of the fo reasons: financial or personal em ACM programs, the Wash Semester, or study abroad progra

The deadline for request withdrawal for the spring semest November 1. All students who d interrupt their education at CC, and not qualify for a leave of absence wish to transfer to another institu expected to withdraw formally fr College.

NEW SCHOLARSHIP AVAILA The Colorado Teacher Encour Program (CTEP) has been establi the State of Colorado to create a based program to encourage stu enter the teaching profession. awards are available to outs Colorado residents attending colle universities in Colorado who agree in Colorado.

Applications and more details program are available at the Finan Office (Armstrong Hall) and Education Department (Mierow All applications must be submitte Education Department by Octob 1986.

STUDY IN LATIN AMER ACM's program in Costa Rica semester (eigher fall or spring) o gives you immersion in Latin Am culture and in research problems in plus most of the social science semester 1987 concentrates on the of multinational corporations dependent political and eco structure. Spring semester devo research in your major field. Co different than staying in Colorado S Fall is a thematic minor.

Next application deadline No 15. See Paul Kutsche, Palmer Hall 359.

"Cycles Peuge

The French Manufact of the World's fines bicycles since 188

jay's BICYCLE S SINCE 1905

19 E. Kiowa • Downtown
(7 blocks south of campus)
Phone: 634-4733

RICK WAGER—
"CC Class of '64 Proprie

THINKING ABOUT GRADUATE SCHOOL?

The Career Center is offering an informational program on graduate and pr sional schools:

Wednesday, October 15
3:30 p.m., Armstrong 259B

Other programs this week: Resume Writing (Tues.) & Placement Office Orie tion (Thurs.) 3:30 p.m. in Armstrong 259B.

THE CAREER CENTER
Ticknor Hall, South 473-2233, ext. 426

CATALYST

Volume 20, No. 5 | Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado | 17 October 1986

Eight Block Debate

BY CAREY L. EWING

The Eight Block Proposal was the object of a debate sponsored by the Thursday-at-Seven series last Friday in the Olin lecture hall. Professor Al Johnson and freshman Jake Trevithick argued in favor of the Eight Block Proposal, stating that the proposal can offer a better alternative for faculty and students without decreasing the quality of education at CC. Arguing against the Eight Block Proposal were Professor Bill Weida and sophomore Jon-Mark Peterson, who stated that problems in the block Plan were inherent and could not be improved by the Eight Block Proposal.

Opening the debate, Prof. Johnson began by stating that though originally he had been against the proposal, he now was in firm support of the Eight Block Year. The faculty members are teach-aholics Johnson asserted, and because of this there must be ways to reduce the load without sacrificing quality.

Johnson argued that the Eight Block Proposal is the best alternative to provide for better educational opportunities at C.C. He felt that the loss caused by the removal of four blocks would be restored by the instigation of year- and semester-long independent study courses, improved adjunct programs, major seminars, and a winter symposium. Even if the Eight Block Proposal was not accepted, Prof. Johnson believed that re-vitalization of the block plan would be imperative.

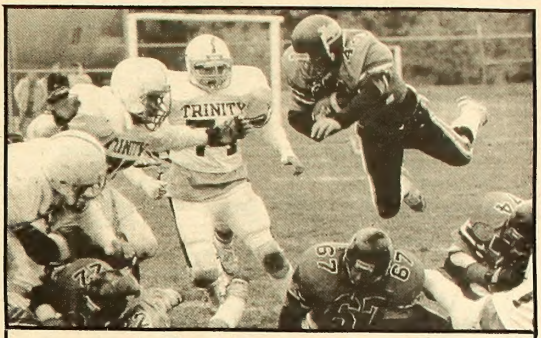
The concerns of students do concern Prof. Johnson. He addressed the "apparent lack of flexibility in meeting the 32 unit requirement for graduation." Stating that illness or family emergency creates a significant problem at any good college or university, Prof. Johnson reiterated that flexibility of the added programs would provide the cushion for any chance of lost credit. Prof. Johnson ended his affirmative speech by stating that, "the failure to adopt meaningful change in our present system could lead to a decrease in the quality of our offerings."

Speaking first for the negative team, Prof. Bill Weida asserted that the existing block plan had been good for C.C. by creating a mutual accountability between faculty and students and allow them to do what they are here for: teach. Prof. Weida stated that the problems being discussed were structural and fundamental. Those problems were part of the cost when the block plan was devised and will remain present as long as the block plan is in effect. Those problems Prof. Weida said, were "the intensity of the teaching experience, the awkwardness of the small blocks of time which surround the teaching blocks, and their perceived faculty workload." The faculty workload, though uneven, shows that the average number of blocks is already below the 7 block average. Prof. Weida figured (with data from the 1985-86 Enrollment statistics) that only 14% of the faculty would be affected by the Eight Block Proposal.

Prof. Weida cited a number of costs the Eight Block Proposal would incur: less flexibility in course selection for students, pressure from parents who question why tuition increases while courses decrease, and the actual increase in the intensity of teaching (based on linkages between faculty pay and a decrease in workload and the linkage between decreased workload and the requirements for publishable research.)

Prof. Weida also chided the proponents of the Eight Block Proposal who have two general complaints: 9 blocks are too much work, and other schools are not doing as much. "Neither point is an appropriate rationale for diluting the educational experience or inflating the academic value

Continued on page 5



CC soars to victory, see page 15. PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

CC Hosts War Conference

BY AKLILU DUNLAP

A league of eleven disciplinarians conducted a four day conference on the topic of war beginning Tuesday, October 14. Through a joint sponsorship by the Harry Frank Guggenheim Foundation and the Colorado College, the group pondered the place of war imagery in history, art, literature, film and education. What's more, the conferees attempted to determine just how these images shape popular attitudes about war.

Consisting of scholars, writers and war veterans, the group examined the expression of war in the various disciplines and how such imagery influences common people, particularly the young. "The nature of war changed forever with the advent of nuclear weapons. Yet people cling to traditional attitudes about the use of violence, attitudes that are perpetuated in art, literature, film and teaching," commented the conference chairman, CC Professor William Hochman. He added, the conference "is an attempt to find the origins of war's images in these fields and how they influence leaders and policies." Whether discussions of the seminar will be published is unknown, but it is likely that the participants will use resulting information in their personal studies.

Conference members were William Broyles, Jr., author of Brothers in Arms: A Journey from War to Peace and former editor of Newsweek; Josiah Bunting, presently the President of Hampden-Sydney College and once faculty member to the U.S. Military Academy; Theodore Lockwood, President of Armand Hammer United World College of the American West; Bohuslav Snajder, a Czechoslavakian journalist currently studying the "cross-cultural images of war"; Colonel Mal Wakin and Lt. Colonel James Dixon, both philosophers at the U.S. Air Force Academy, the former being the Chairman of the Philosophy Department; and William Hochman, CC History Professor and Chairman of the conference.

The other four participants were CC History Professor Susan Ashley, a specialist on European intellectual history; Lehman College Professor of Health Services Ann Pollinger Haas, a researcher of the post-traumatic stress of Vietnam Veternas; Philosopher and critic Roger Himball, the Program Officer for the Twentieth Century Fund; and Historian Charles Storzier, the Executive Director of The Center on Violence and Human Survival at the John Jay College of Criminal Justice.

On Friday, October 17, the final day of the collogium, the conferees will meet with faculty members and students to discuss, among other things, young people's attitudes toward war. In addition, the College Drama Department is producing two modern plays on the theme of war which will coincide with the series of discussions: Howard Barker's "Scenes From an Execution" and Tony Marchant's "Welcome Home." This is not the college's first affiliation with the study of war. In previous years, through a grant from the Henry Luce Foundation, it had directed a three-year program on "War, Violence and Human Values."

Endowed in 1929 for "general philanthropic purposes," the Harry Frank Guggenheim Foundation began in 1959 paying the issue of violence particular attention. Through its grants, it has been instrumental in the study of man's relation to man and the cause of dominance, aggression, and violence. The Foundation supported the conference titled "The Anthropology of Warfare" in Santa Fe, New Mexico last March. Floyd Ratliff, the Foundation President, is a 1947 CC graduate.

tory Blasts epublicans

BY CAROLINE BRYAN

uesday evening Armstrong Hall was e again host to a one sided debate. On s occasion, Bill Story, the Democratic ndidate for U.S. Congress, was scheduled debate with Republican candidate ator Joel Hefley.

Hefley, who had previously agreed to pear at the debate, backed out at the last inute. In all fairness to the Democratic ndidate who had upheld his end of the greain, the League of Women Voters, onsor of the debate which was televised d radio broadcast on KRCC, resolved to ceed as planned.

tory was bothered by the apparent lack concern that the Republican candidates d expressed both on the gubernatorial d congressional levels. "Both [Republican] candidates," Story observed, em to be relying upon their party status her than relying upon the informed blic to make an educated decision." ry, who was extremely aggravated by e situation, maintained that it was totally ir to the American public to assume ything by virtue of title alone.

As a Democrat, Story believes that it is cessary to restore the balance between publicans and Democrats both on state d federal levels. Story feels that by tablishing an accurate balance, the vernment would become a much more tective sampling of the American public. Story is principally concerned with what refers to as the "downward mobility" of

Continued on page 2

Concert Reviews:

teve Winwood and R.E.M.

See Page 14

New Eight Block Proposal

Catalyst Exclusive

See Special Edition

Reproduced from 1939 "Tiger"

This Week

OCTOBER 19 - 25, 1986

SUNDAY (19)

1:00 pm - WOMEN'S SOCCER - STEWART FIELD

CC vs Sonoma State

2:00 pm - MEN'S SOCCER - STEWART FIELD

CC vs Scranton

3:00 pm - INAUGURAL CONCERT - PACKARD HALL

Colorado College Trio

Sue Grace, piano; Donald Robinson, violin; and Susan Smith, cello. No tickets required.

7&9 pm - FILM SERIES - OLIN I

"Gigi"

Winner of nine Academy Awards including Best Picture, "Gigi", set in turn-of-the-century Paris is a charming musical based on a Colette story. Leslie Caron is Gigi, a girl on the edge of womanhood and Louis Jourdan is the bored young playboy who falls in love with her. Maurice Chevalier sings the delightful Lerner-Lowe songs, "Thank Heaven for Little Girls," and "Gigi."

FILM SERIES TICKETS OR $1.00 AT THE DOOR WITH CC ID, GEN. ADM. - $2.00.

MONDAY (20)

*Career Center

11:00 am - UNIVERSITY OF SAN DIEGO LAWYER'S ASSISTANT PROGRAM RM. 304, TUTT LIBRARY
A representative will be on campus.

*5:30 pm - FEMINIST COLLECTIVE MEETING ARMSTRONG 231

*7:00 pm - GAY RAP GROUP MEETING
Call x-384 for details.

*OPEN TO CC CAMPUS ONLY

*7:30 pm - DISCUSSION - COSSITT C

"Modern War: Invest or Divest?"

Different perspectives from the Christian tradition. Discussants: Stephen Handen, Bijou Community, and Captain Kenneth Kemp, Philosophy Department, A.F.A.

TUESDAY (21)

*8:00 am - MEDITATION - SHOVE CHAPEL
Music, silence, mystical and/or other writings.

4:00 pm - MEN'S SOCCER - STEWART FIELD

CC vs Grinnell

WEDNESDAY (22)

*3:30 pm - MILITARY SCIENCE MEETING BOETTCHER BASEMENT

THURSDAY (23)

B L O C K B R E A K ! ! ! ! !

FRIDAY (24)

SATURDAY (25)

*7:00 am - NITE CORE BATTERY TESTING - MIEROW HOUSE

1:30 pm - FOOTBALL - WASHBURN FIELD

CC vs Trinity College

7:00 pm - HOCKEY - BROADMOOR WORLD ARENA

CC vs Denver University

ANNOUNCEMENTS

STUDENTS - TICKETS WILL BE AVAILABLE FOR THE COLORADO SPRINGS SYMPHONY PERFORMANCES OF OCTOBER 23, 24, 25, & 26 ON MONDAY, OCTOBER 20. GARRICK OHLSSON, PIANIST, JOINS THE SYMPHONY. STUDENTS HAVE PRIORITY UNTIL WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 22, AT NOON AT WHICH TIME THE REMAINING TICKETS WILL BE AVAILABLE TO FACULTY & STAFF.

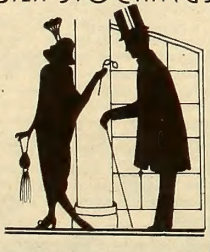
TO ALL OF YOU WHO HAVE NOT PICKED UP YOUR 1985-86 YEARBOOK, PLEASE CONTACT JANE AT X-222! STUDENTS WITH OFF-CAMPUS BOXES WHO BOUGHT YEARBOOKS, PLEASE PICK THEM UP AT THE STUDENT CENTER!

THE FRIENDS OF TUTT LIBRARY WILL BE SPONSORING A WORKSHOP SATURDAY, OCTOBER 25 ON COLLECTING OLD BOOKS. BROCHURES AVAILABLE AT TUTT LIBRARY.

DEADLINE FOR THE OCTOBER 26-NOVEMBER 1 ISSUE OF THIS WEEK IS MONDAY, OCTOBER 20 AT 5 PM.

*OPEN TO CC CAMPUS ONLY

FREE
FLAVORED CORN
Bring this coupon with you the next time you buy a 30 oz. bag of Vic's popcorn. You'll get a FREE medium bag of the flavored corn of your choice.
- buttery caramel
- zesty cheese
- spicy cinnamon
Good at Uintah location only. Limit one per coupon.
Vic's CORN POPPER
1864 W. Uintah 52(-9129
Mon-Sat 10-7 Sun 12-6

SILK STOCKINGS


A NOSTALGIC BOUTIQUE
Antique Costume Jewelry
Equisite Clothing
Unique & Fun Accessories
126 N. Nevada Ave.
636-9640
Use this for 10% off

Bill Story debated himself. PHOTO BY JOHN KA

Story continued

the young people in Colorado. To illustrate this "downward mobility," Story pointed out that in the 1950's, thirty year olds were one third better off than their parents, while today the average thirty year old is only about one fifth better off than his/her parent. Story believes that reversing this trend is of utmost importance to a healthier economy, and believes that he will be able to accomplish this inversion.

He also regards the unbalanced distribution of wealth as a significant issue. With ten percent of the population in this country claiming seventy percent of the wealth, Story believes that apportionment of wealth has become a dangerously volatile issue. "It is a threatening statistic," Story points out, "that is moving five percent every ten years in the wrong direction."

Story supports a balanced federal budget and attributes the increased national debt not to the Republican party, but rather to "a tremendous amount of waste and fraud" in every government facility. He believes that the budget must be balanced on paper, but more importantly that federal government operations must be streamlined. He specifies the area of defense spending as a crucial area of prodigality, and interprets the inordiante costs of the program to a military "up," rather than a military "build-

While Story favors the resea development of SDI, he is com against supplying any further aid contras in Central America. He tru sanctions are an effective way to de both Central America and South Story recognizes that by contin supply money to the contras and America is propitiating "all sorts o to no obvious advantage.

When asked for his impressions recent Iceland summit, Story stated was "an opportunity lost." But h firmly expressed his belief that if the Soviets are willing to do what t they are willing to do, the two super will eventually be able to come agreement. "Peace," Story stated, "s be attained by a now or never ultim but rather peace will be attained forever ultimatum."

The League of Women Vote conjunction with the Rocky Mo News and Channel 9 in Denver, hosting the Gubernatorial and Sen debates on Sunday, October 19 fro p.m. The debates will be broadc KKTV Channel 11 from Colorado S to a live studio audience. Free tick available through Dottie Harmat 1225.

Photo of the Week

PHOTO BY MEESTA HITZ

Winning submission to Photo of the Week wins a fabulous mocha shake from the Hub—courtesy of David Klein

Shareholder Responsibility

BY ELLIOTT HIRSHFELD

After receiving its first recommendations from the Committee on Shareholder Responsibility, the Board of Trustees established procedures at its September 13 meeting for handling proxy votes on companies in the College's portfolio.

According to President Riley's September 16 memorandum, Vice President Wenzlau will share copies of the proxy issues with the Shareholder Responsibility Committee when these are received from corporations and contain items other than those relating to corporate governance.

The Shareholder Responsibility Committee will determine whether it wishes to address any or all of the several issues. The Committee then may choose to prepare position papers to present to the Trustee Investment Committee. In all probability, this process cannot be accomplished in time to permit the Investment Committee to consider the Shareholder Responsibility Committee's position prior to a proxy vote on any issue the first time it is raised. Position papers will be considered by the Investment Committee in instances where the issue is likely to appear as a proxy issue more than once or where the issue is sufficiently general that it affects different proxy votes. Vice President Wenzlau will report to the Responsibility Committee as to how the College votes on all proxy issues.

Approval was not given to the following proposals: To form a consortium of like minded in situations for the purpose of acting as a block on proxy issues; To divest from those companies which have holdings in South Africa; To discontinue the practice of increasing holdings in companies which conduct business in South Africa and adding to the portfolio new companies which conduct business in South Africa.

Elliott Hirshfeld, Chair of the Committee, said that he had expected the Board to react as it had, approving the position paper's recommendation and rejecting the recommendations dealing specifically with South Africa. He was pleased with the Board's positive response as it signifies progress in dealing with the Board. Yet he added that the Board's response was not entirely warm and with open arms. A great deal of work lies ahead for the Committee.

Nyiri Discusses Eastern Philosophy

BY MICHAEL S. MEHAN

Yesterday, at the "Thursday at Eleven" weekly lecture series, visiting History Professor, J.C. Nyiri, gave a lecture on contemporary Eastern European philisophy entitled "Philosophy in the Historical Regions of Europe."

Breaking the lecture into three parts—a brief history, application of history to the conceptual culture of Europe, and the acceptance of Dostoyevsky and Ustrain philosophy in the West—Professor Nyiri explored the difference between civilization and culture.

"It is very rarely that something is built up from a lower level," stated Nyiri referring to the rise of Western Europe and the United States. He opened the lecture with a discussion of the differences between Eastern and Western Europe. He attributed the disparities in their development between the sixth and tenth centuries. The fact that the west had to rebuild from the ruins of the Roman Empire and the east did not was the basic reason for the differences between the two Europes, according to Professor Nyiri.

After the 13th century and over two hundred years of parallel development, Eastern Europe developed away from the model of Western Europe. The reason for this, according to Professor Nyiri, was the fact that the roots of the "the beats of freedom" in Eastern Europe were not that deep. He cited the lack of autonomous cities, corporal freedom, the lack of a strong middle class, the estate system in Eastern Europe, and the fact that there was no renaissance in the east as the reasons for this. According to Nyiri, the historic difference between Eastern and Western Europe can be traced to the urban colony which had a retarded growth in the East, and his structure has remained. This difference has led to the development of a new view of Europe. The West is viewed as being in decay, while the East promises hope of a new society and culture.

He attributes the rise of this distinction, between civilization and culture, to a historical string of philosophers including Kant, Vollograf Tonnies, Spengler and Nietzsche. These men, according to Nyiri, developed a sort of philosophical model, analyzed civilization, its over growth and potential for disaster, and also compared influence of old and new cultures in modern culture.

Continued on page 5

226 N TEJON
633-0132
Mountain Chalet
RENTAL EQUIPMENT SALE!
BACKPACKS, TENTS, SLEEPING BAGS
Sale
Ends October 18th
FINAL DISCOUNTS ON ALL SUMMER SALE ITEMS.

DOMINO'S PIZZA ®
TWO 12" ONE TOPPING PIZZAS FOR $9.14
(TAX NOT INCLUDED)
Please see below for other selections.

Limited Delivery Area
Our drivers carry less than $20

AVOID THE NOID
CALL DOMINO'S PIZZA

30 minute guarantee
If your pizza does not arrive within 30 minutes, present this coupon to the driver for $3.00 off your order.
One coupon per pizza.
Fast, Free Delivery
Good at listed locations.

One of the greatest offers ever from Domino's Pizza—two 12" pizzas for the price of a large! Twice the pizza for one low price!
For a limited time, order any two 12" pizzas (they don't have to be the same!), and you'll get them for the price of one 16". The price will be determined by the pizza with the most toppings.
Two 12" pizzas will only cost you:

Superb cheese	$7.95
1 topping	$9.14
2 toppings	$10.33
3 toppings	$11.52
4 toppings	$12.71
5 toppings	$13.90
6 toppings	$15.09

Twice the pizza for one low price—two 12" pizzas for the price of a large!
And, hot to your door in 30 minute or less, GUARANTEED!
Offer expires Nov. 1, 1986.

635-1511

DOMINO'S PIZZA DELIVERS ® FREE.
All Pizzas Include Our Special Blend of Sauce and 100% Real Cheese.
Our Superb Cheese Pizza
12" Cheese $5.65
16" Cheese $7.95
Additional Items
Pepperoni, Mushrooms, Ham, Onions, Green Peppers, Black Olives, Pineapple, Sausage, Ground Beef, Jalapeno Peppers,
Extra Cheese (1 item)
Double Cheese (2 items)
Thick Crust, Extra Sauce
Each Item
12" item $ .79
16" item $1.19
Ask about our Group Discount (on 5 or more pizza orders).
We accept checks.
Prices do not include tax. Our drivers carry less than $20.00.
Open for Lunch Every Day
11 am - 12 am Sun.-Thurs.
11 am - 1 am Fri.-Sat.

Hit and Run

BY JERREL ARMSTRONG

Colorado College student, senior Diedre Smith was struck by a car, Monday afternoon. Diedre was crossing Cascade at the crosswalk in front of the library, when a car struck her and threw her into the adjacent lane. The driver of the car stopped, but immediately left the scene of the accident. Diedre was released from St. Francis hospital with minor injuries. Eye witness of the accident, "Woody" Stevens noticed that the car was traveling at "a good clip." First on the scene, "Woody" stabilized Diedre and waited for the paramedics to arrive. The 20 ft. skidmarks on the pavement indicated the cars speed before impact. That night police served the driver of the vehicle a summons.

The recurrence of accidents in the crosswalks is a major concern of the Colorado College Community. Dean Taylor and Diedre Smith recognize two main problems with safety in the crosswalks. Students assuming that cars will automatically stop leads to many dangerous situations. Driver failure to recognize the crosswalks and yield to students also poses a dangerous situation for pedestrians.

Dean Taylor and Diedre advocated possible solutions to the crosswalk danger such as a reduction of the 30 mile per hour speed limit on Cascade on campus. Use of highly recognizable signs with flashing lights could also reduce the risk in crossing the street.

According to Dean Taylor the school has continuously attempted to get the city to enact further safety precautions to guard against accidents such as Diedre's. The school proposed closing off Cascade, but since Cascade is a major thoroughfare to downtown the city rejected the proposal. College administration and a member of the C.C.C.A plan to meet with city officials to discuss the safety of crosswalks.

Informally Gresham

BY GREG GRIFFIN

Gresham Riley met informally with a group of about twenty students Monday evening to discuss liberal arts and the Colorado College experience. The meeting, which took place in Mathias lounge, was organized by Craig Heacock in order to give President Riley and interested students a chance to address topics of concern and discuss the direction in which our school is headed.

President Riley began the discussion by emphasizing the difficulties in evaluating the future of a liberal institution such as CC. He stated that the structure of administrative power is distributed such that no one person or group can decide what will happen and even he could not predict exactly where the school will be in the future. He did, however, make assurances that CC will continue in its upward trend toward academic excellence. A million dollar grant to the Humanities Department for art and a similarly large grant to the Business Department for the Visiting Executive Program are examples of this commitment. The improvement and addition of campus facilities, such as the expansion and renovation of Olin Hall, the renovation of the Student Center, and the possible future addition of more residence halls, will significantly improve the quality of studies and life on campus.

After speaking, President Riley fielded questions that addressed, for the most part, the many changes that are taking place at CC these days. In reference to change, President Riley spoke about the innovational and non-traditional path that CC has taken since the mid-fifties. The road we have taken to become a fine liberal arts institution has been one of constant change and transformation.

This, of course, led to a series of questions concerning the current proposal to reduce the academic year to eight blocks. To this barrage of inquiries, Gresham replied that he is "standing on the sidelines" with respect to the eight block issue. Maintaining that his goal as President of the College is to improve its standards of academic quality, he stated that, at the moment, he is considering all the solutions to the problems that fa administration, rather than usin power to push one through. To a sp question about student involvement ultimate decision, he remarked th student body's most effective mea participation is through stu representatives on the va instructional and administrat committees. Student rallies and orga protests, he claimed, are largely ineff in representing student opinions.

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

President Riley chats with students.

President Riley's discussion students on an informal basis positive and effective way in communication was established comfortable and provocative setting only did the students gain a understanding of the Presid objectives and goals for the school, h exposed to student opinions and co as well. This communication, althou the type that will change the course destiny, certainly will promote student-administrative relatio continued.

Greek Upda

BY J. TIM SMITH

All sororities will be having rus block break. There will be no fraternity parties from October 22 th October 28.

The Interfreternity Council and th Helenic Council are co-sponsorin Rainbow Jam presented by Mecha. Th Delts have donated their house fo multi-cultural party to be held Nov 1. The IFC/Pan-Hel Homec halftime trike race raised money f Bijou Soup Kitchen. The race was w Fiji Biker Jeff Schomper who sped Kappa Sig Baby on the home stretc and Pan-Hel are planning an upc community service project with S Olympics; details will follow.

Alcohol Awareness Week begin block. Thursday of that week the Pub Club will be an Ice Cream Soci Fijis will also host a speaker to sp alcohol awareness. The entire cam welcome to attend.

House Briefs:

Sigma Chi will have an open ha house October 31. Proceeds from event will benefit the fraternity's na philanthropy, Wallace Village.

Beta Theta Pi is initiating its class this weekend.

Phi Delta Theta is holding aud this week for 50's Show. The event w held next block and will benefit the House Drug Rehab. Center. weekend the Phi Delts are pa elderly people's houses in Boulder the CU chapter.

Kappa Sigma's Mountain Inform this weekend.

Phi Gamma Delta will host a campus discussion on date rape guest speaker Pual Jones.

More Cards Than Ever Before

Adult Cards
Scarves - Outrageous Jewelry - Fun Toys
Incense - Teddy Bears

And Halloween Masks, Goodies, and Costume Ideas

Mon.-Fri. 10-6 pm Sat. 11-5 pm

THE LOTUS EATER BOUTIQUE

Downtown on Platte Between Tejon & Cascade

phone: 635-2118

Totally confused by the menagerie of Air fares??

TAYLOR TRAVEL will sort them out...

"Your Campus Travel Agency"
818 N. Tejon 636-3871

the Stagecoach Inn

On Fountain Creek in Manitou Springs
Just minutes away

Featuring

Fresh Seafood, Prime Beef, Pasta, Veal

LUNCH • DINNER • SUNDAY CHAMPAGNE BRUNCH

A GREAT EXPERIENCE
RESERVATIONS 685-9335

Continued from page 1

of the block," stated Prof. Weida. He concluded, stating that though the Eight Block Proposal is an interesting solution it does not solve the real problems of the block plan.

Mike Trevithick expanded on Prof. Johnson's arguments by discussing student concerns. Trevithick argued that the loss of four courses is not a major concern because through an analogy he stated that quality is not quanity, and brought up the subject of course fragmentation. Course fragmentation, Trevithick stated, occurs when classes get too specific. He believes that some courses could be combined and that "the Eight Block Plan would help reduce this needless fragmentation and would thus offset the loss of four courses."

Trevithick reiterated Prof. Johnson's arguments on the loss of flexibility, and

"...the Eight Block Proposal does not solve the faculty problems it is supposed to, offers few improvements and has adverse consequences for the quality of CC education."

went on to state that the faculty would go to great lengths to accomodate students in the Eight Block System. Trevithick also addressed C.C.'s academic reputation by stating that the proposed requirements of 32 units/4.0 semester hours per unit is standard at top rate institutions such as Harvard, Amherst, and Princeton. An "enhanced block plan was also mentioned by Trevithick to give C.C. not only flexibility, but also to "diversify C.C.'s educational offerings."

Trevithick stated that if the faculty simply wanted more time off (as many students believe) they could easily reduce the number of hours they were available to students without going to all the trouble to propose such an elaborate change. Trevithick ended his speech by saying that students will hopefully come to understand that the Eight Block Proposal only aims to enhance C.C.'s academic potential.

Jon-Mark Patterson gave the last constructive speech of the debate and while not opposed to the change, he felt that the costs outweighed the advantages of the Eight Block Plan. Patterson reiterated the loss of flexibility in courses through fewer classes, and emphasized the freedom to be able to miss a class. The argument that the Eight Block Plan would make C.C. comparable to other schools was opposed by Patterson because students chose C.C. because of its uniqueness even though there is some burden of attending here.

Patterson went on to assert that an extra three and a half weeks of vacation would not necessarily improve teaching and he reaffirmed Prof. Weida's argument about the inherency of the problems in the block plan. Patterson felt that even though students were shown to average only 33 out of 36 blocks, that flexibility was something that should not be lost. In this same vein, Patterson believed that though the year is long it gives students the flexibility and experimentation which makes C.C. unique.

Patterson summed up his argument by stating that "the Eight Block Proposal does not solve the faculty problems it is supposed to, offers few improvements and has adverse consequences for the quality of C.C. education."

During the rebuttals, each debator was allowed a few minutes to respond to arguments raised. Prof. Johnson seemed concerned about how Prof. Weida had arrived at a 14% figure of faculty affected by the Eight Block Proposal, and when pressed, Prof. Weida raised the figure to 43% although he still argued that the costs of the proposal would be detrimental to the structure of the block plan as a whole.

Trevithick again stated that the Eight Block Proposal was better than the status quo or any other proposals, and believed that the proposal would give more flexibility while not stifling personal growth.

Patterson ended the debate by saying that the proposal does not address fundamental problems and cautioned the audience to consider the issues brought up carefully.

A question and answer session ther followed.

Nyiri from page 3

Professor Nyiri concluded the lecture with a quick summary of the interpretation of Dostoyevsky in France, Germany and England. he pointed out the disimilarities among the various interpretations and believed that the non-synchronous reception of Dostoyevsky's works in each country was the reason for this. France, he said, saw Dostoyevsky as a great metaphysician, while the British had little understanding of metaphysics. German philosophers saw Dostoyevski as a unique eastern philosopher.

"Backwardness created a mess..."

"Backwardness created a mess," said Nyiri, but the seemingly unfruitful backwardness of Eastern Europe produced a unique philosophical difference between the East and West.

Use your head.
Smart people recycle aluminum, paper and glass.

Give a hoot.
Don't pollute.

the Date Bar
a Restaurant
Serving UNIQUE HOMEMADE RECIPES

10% off with CC ID

Serving
Breakfast & Lunch
Mon.-Sat.
7 am - 4 pm
24 E. Kiowa 578-5693

Power to the people.

Honda CRX HF
$138.36 a month
60 Month Lease
1st Month Paymnent In Advance
Security Deposit
MSRP $7,848
W.A.C.

VIDMAR HONDA
6th & the Freeway, Pueblo, CO 81003
543-9705

Alberto's
Experience a Texas Tradition at the loop
MEXICAN FOOD
Serving the best margaritas in the west
LIVE MUSIC ON WEEKENDS
—CALL FOR HOURS—
963 Manitou Ave. 685-1368

the GUINEA PIGG
TAKE A TRIP AROUND THE WORLD IN OUR BOUTIQUE AND GIFT SHOP.....
ETHNIC CLOTHING AND HANDICRAFTS FROM SOUTH AMERICA, ASIA & AFRICA... 2510 W. COLO. OLD COLORADO CITY.
633-0584
MON-SAT 10-5:30

CC in the 50's

BY ERIN STRIFF

Colorado College in the fifties was quite different than today. In addition to no block plan and the absence of many buildings on campus, there were many different rules and rituals.

Students in the fifties were expected to sign in at chapel service every Tuesday morning. Repeated absence meant ineligibility to graduate.

In his book, "Colorado College - The First Century 1874-1974," J. Jaum Reid writes of "coeds knitting...an occasional student sleeping, and most others talking or reading."

ROTC on campus began in 1952. All physically qualified freshmen and sophomore male non-veterans had to enroll. It was optional for upperclassmen males.

No students were allowed in rooms of members of the opposite sex, be it in the dorms or fraternity houses.

House mothers lived in the fraternity and sorority houses and regularly gave reports to the deans of men and women. All on-campus gatherings required adult supervision.

Women were required to sign out of their residence hall after 8:30. Their curfew was 10:00, midnight on weekends. Men had no curfews.

In 1954, Slocum was built as an all-men's dorm, the first new building on campus in thirty years. Bemis and Taylor dining halls opened in 1956, Taylor being the first co-ed dining hall on campus.

Dinner was sit-down style with female students employed as "hashers" to serve the food. Seats were assigned, and a professor or upperclassman was at each table. Several alumni report that the food was excellent.

The school year always began with the Fall Sigma Chi Watermelon Bust. It had a carnival-like atmosphere and featured a watermelon-eating contest. Another highlight was the Watermellon Bust Queen, selected from a group of freshman girls.

In 1950 a fire threatened Fort Carson and the Broadmoor area. Several students helped combat the fire that raged for days. A Red Cross canteen service operated out of Bemis kitchen.

The drinking age in the fifties was twenty-one, and alcohol was prohibited on campus. However, a survey from the 1953-54 Nugget shows that the average CC student drank about once a week.

There was always a large bonfire Homecoming-eve and a four-block long pre-game parade the next day. Fraternities and Sororities prepared the floats for weeks. That night a Homecoming Queen was chosen.

There was both Freshman orientation and hazing in the fifties, including a freshman steakfry and bonfire. Freshmen were also required to wear beanies and paddles around their necks which stated their name. During this period of hazing, Freshmen might be required to carry an upperclassman's books.

Hazing in the fraternity and sorority houses was worse. A freshman might be required to be a slave to an upperclassman for a short period of time. Unfortunates had to scrub Palmer steps with a toothbrush.

Class of '56. Can you spot Katie's Uncle?

The Senior Column

Well for all you seniors who missed it, the mixer last Wednesday at Meadow Muffins was a smashing success! There were so many of us, the sole bartender could hardly keep up. It was a great time to mix, mingle and socialize.

If you missed this last one, or if you just couldn't get enough, the Senior class will be having another mixer next block. Free pizza, "discounted hot dogs," and drinks at regular prices will be served at McAlster's for an upcoming Monday Night Football Game. Even if you're not a Bears or a Rams fan, come and enjoy! Just keep your eyes on this column for the details.

Do you want to be heard? If you have been overwhelmed with great suggestions for the Class of '87, but just haven't known where to turn, fret no more. Below is a list of your Senior Class Officers and Agents. Please feel free to give any one of us a call. We want to hear your ideas!

Class Officers

Chris Christie, President	473-1065
Liz Moodie, Vice-President	635-0932
Jill Brasesco, Secretary	576-1592
Cheryl Hintergardt	X786

Class Agents

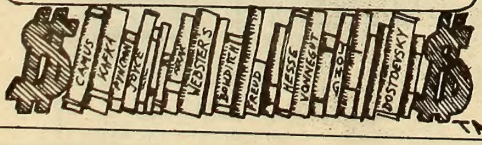
Linnea Aukee	X324
Sara Bratton	632-7273
Leslie Calvin	636-1975
T.J. Cole	X250
Anne Doud	632-3140
Arline Fernandez	635-3795
Michele Fisher	632-2058
Kari Gentry	X295
Julie Hoerner	475-2408
Bret McClanahan	X200
Bill Martinez	471-3751
Liz Neibauer	X251
Fred Owens	635-0932
Susan O'Hanlon	X323, X324
Laurie Pleiff	X326
Richard Poling	578-1143
Sas Strum	X
Gayla Sullivan	630-4
Anita Walls	475-4

We've been challenged...An unna trustee has agred to donate $2,000 to Class of '87—under two conditions. F 50% of our class must participate in activities. (This includes the sponsored mixers.) Secondly, we as a must raise a total amount of $2,000. Th and only then will the trustee meet sum. Based on the turn-out at Mead Muffins, we're doing great! But we n your help. At the next mixer, make effort to find our collection jar, and mak donation of any size. Make sure an offi or agent records your contribution, so t we can keep track of overall participati Let's show the trustee that the Class of has pride and enthusiasm.

Now for the bad news...Our first choi for this year's commencement speaker declined our invitation. President Riley currently in correspondence with second choice. So keep your finge crossed, and your eyes on this colum We'll let you know when the final selecti is made.

Have you heard about the Dance a Drama performance this weekend? Scen from an Execution sounds like it will both provocative and intriguing. Performances are tonight and tomorrow 8:15 p.m. in Armstrong Theatre. Ticke are free, so get out and support the theatrical seniors..

BUCKS FOR BOOKS
Used Book Buy-Back
October 21-22
Any title in usable condition that will be used in a future block
The Colorado College Bookstore
McGregor Basement
Buy-back list available on Monday, Oct. 20



It's for you!
Mention this ad for 25% off of old prints.

Jewelry
Furnishings
Clothing
Decorator Items
Search Service
Closed Tuesday
Manitou Springs Vintage Clothing and company
In the Promenade - 725 Manitou Ave. - 685-9077

Tales from the Darkside

The Golden Bee

Earlier this week a few CC students gathered at the Golden Bee, an English pub style bar at The Broadmoor. There is a ragtime pianist to play sing-along tunes. Beer is served in "yards"—yard high glasses—as well as the usual way. It's a mixed crowd, frequently full of conventioneers. As we drank some yards and got our little bees pinned on our chests, everyone told stories about previous Bee experiences and shared impressions of a place that never fails to get you really fucked-up.

- Freshman year some Russians bought us drinks.
- Once, being incredibly drunk, we shooted through every basket of crackers in the place and managed to come away with 33 packages of Wheatsworth. We woke up the next morning and couldn't figure out why we wanted 33 packages of Wheatsworth. We were going to steal a cheese [crock] too, but no one had a purse that was large enough.
- Once they were throwing Bees at us and it hit Jody right in the boob.
- I went to the Bee and drank five yards between two people the night before I had to go to court for a speeding ticket I got the time I went to the Bee before that.
- Well, I turned twenty-one about this time last year and, of course, it was a "Bee-kind-of-night..." There was a convention of ice-makers libating at the famous Golden Bee (yes, they make ice for a living). To make a long story shorter...the ice-men sent a grand total of fifteen shots to the Birthday Girl. What a celebration! (Of course I shared those shots with friends!) Oh, by the way, they gave me a stuffed banana, a momento from the convention jubilee.
- Excuse me...could I have a little more whipped, salted lard for my Wheatsworth?
- Guiness Stout reminds you of liquid meatloaf.
- A yard is so goddamn phallic I can't stand it!

Arts Editor Eric Breitbard puts his Catalyst stipend to good use. PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

The Annex

BY JULIE INGWERSEN

"It says on the door that it's a gay bar. If you can't deal with that, don't come in," remarks a waitress at the Annex, one of the more colorful examples of the Colorado Springs 3.2 bar scenes. There are gay people at the Annex. There are men in drag. There are no doors on the bathroom stalls. And as a social attraction, it is accepted by CC students on many levels. Among the various perspectives:

—"I like it because they have great dance music, and there aren't a lot of sleazes who try to pick you up."

—"The Annex is a place where boys and girls go who don't know what sex they are."

—"A lot of people go there for reactions...it's like they get this kick out of being picked up on by a gay person. Some just like to dress up and see who they can shock."

—"It's a place to dance, drink, play pool, and watch people. And one in which you are free to be whoever you are."

As a freshman being somewhat disillusioned with the off-campus nightlife options (I am classified as a "minor"), I first walked into the Annex with high hopes. My first reaction was one of awe, directed at the men I saw who could walk better on four-inch heels than I ever could.

My friends and I grabbed a table in back and checked out the scene. The dance floor was crowded, but I was content to sit back and take it all in, sipping my 3.2 beer casually and asking myself things like "Why is it that so many of these guys have better wardrobes than I do?" Maybe it was because my wild, non-stop freshman social life had left me a little run down. But all in all, it turned out to be a pretty passive evening of avid people-watching.

I tried to be objective about the fact that I hadn't been picked up on by anyone, male or female, and went home concluding that you get out of the Annex whatever you put into it.

However, continued harassment from anti-gay types outside the bar is still a problem. One night the bar was bothered by a group of Fundamentalists says an employee, "everyone's trying to change the way people are in [the bar]. Especially since the AIDS epidemic, gays have become a threat to some people...Some cab companies won't even drive to [the Annex]."

The employee added however, "CC students have nothing to be afraid of," especially on Wednesday, CC Night. With a CC ID, the cover charge is only $1 and pitchers of so-called "cheap cold wet stuff" go for $2. In addition, Thursday is Modern Rock Night and Sunday night features the B-Movie Beer Bust. Occasionally there are weekend floor shows and lip-sync contests.

With the exception of CC Night the bar tends to attract a significant crowd of regulars; probably because the Annex offers an environment which is unique to Colorado Springs. Said one enthused student, "It's one of the few places around where a guy can wear eye makeup and not be called gay. It's a place where two girls, or two guys, can dance together. You can dance however, and with whoever you want to."

Another adds, "Unlike some places in the Springs that I've been to, you don't have to fit in (at the Annex). You can wear whatever you want. On campus, people take clothes too seriously. I've seen guys at the Annex who look better in drag than not."

Feeling more than little bit jaded with the weekend frat-party scene? Looking for some really good dance music? Bored with students' attitudes toward gays on campus? Maybe you just need an excuse to paint your fingernails black. Take a walk on the wild side at the Annex, where individuality is the key.

Our precision haircutters will give you the most up-to-the minute look...a look that stands out and lets you be who you want to be. Great Prices too!

exciting hair styles

20% off all regular priced services

Mon. -Fri. 8-7
Sat. 8-5
Sun. 11-5

6 Southgate Road
(Southgate Mall)
520-9957

NO APPOINTMENT NECESSARY
GREAT EXPECTATIONS
PRECISION HAIRCUTTERS

coupon — coupon — coupon

CC
SAVE $2.00
Shampoo, cut, & blow style now only $8.95
(Reg. $10.95)

CC
SAVE $5.00
on any perm complete with shampoo, precision haircut, styling & our written guarantee.

CC
SAVE 20%
on any coloring, frosting or cellophane

DALE STREET CAFE

New American Cuisine
Specializing in lunch and dinner

Mon.-Fri. 11 am-9:30 pm
Closed Sunday 578-9898 Sat. Noon-3 pm Lunch; 5:30-9:30 Dinner 115 East Dale

FREE
Protective Vinyl
PHOTO ALBUM
PAGE

With every photo order you'll receive a coupon you can redeem for a FREE protective vinyl album page.

COLLEGE PHARMACY
833 N. Tejon 634-4861

It's All Greek To Us

Upcoming Sorority Rush Sparks Remarks

BY COURTNEY MURPHY & PATRICK CHISHOLM

"Sorority life is an exciting and important part of the total experience at the Colorado College. Membership in a sorority offers an opportunity to be an individual among a group of women banded together through friendship and the ideals that the Greek system's two hundred years of existence have brought about." These are the philosophies in the Rush catalogue distributed to freshwomen this year. These ideas of sisterhood however do not embody all the sentiments expressed by CC students toward the Greek system.

Sororities appear to have stepped into the CC limelight for the next two weeks while fall Rush is taking place. Inevitably at a time such as this, student's opinions are extremely vocal and varied. Both Greeks and non-Greeks are eager to express their opinions on sorority life.

Sam Johnston, president of the Sigma Chi fraternity, lent his opinion, "One thing about sororities that I don't like is that you can't tell who they are—they lack identity. This is probably because of their housing situation."

While blame for ambiguity cannot rely soley on the housing situation, several students agreed with this statement. One exception is Melinda Rees, a fall Rush counselor: "The sororities are not labeled and heard about constantly because we are not the ones getting in trouble all the time and throwing wild parties. Sororities follow strict bylines held by National Panhellenic standards and no alcoholic beverages can be served in our houses. Also, our houses aren't right smack in the middle of campus."

Freshman Erik Kas realized he couldn't identify all the sororities by name and surmized that "it's really a shame that sororities can't live in houses. It makes them less visible on campus."

Once again the housing situation seems to create problems for sororities. Apparently, the sororities themselves are not asking for deliverence from this problem. "On bigger campuses with residential housing, sororities are more secluded and inhibiting of outside friendships. Here we are isolated and segregated into groups," says sorority member Wendy Blethin.

"Over 50% of sorority women are Phi Delt Muff."

The most frequent criticism of the sororities was that "They (the sororities) are lame and virtually unnoticed." This opinion was that of a group of "anonymous admirers" who felt that the sororities have not distinguished themselves on campus with their parties or with their philantropies. The tricycle races put on by the fraternities are exemplary of active and vocal attention that the sororities need. They took place at a time and place in which the campus was much aware of their philanthropic activities.

Apparently the sororities are aiming to restore their visibility and inform the campus of their activities to a greater extent. Junior Patrick Kiernan felt that they really need to work on PR and enthusiasm. He stressed that "Rush is the climax of the year for the sororities. It's too bad that a lot of the enthusiasm for the Greek system, that is expressed during Rush is not spread throughout the year."

The lack of sororities' attention seems heightened by freshman Catherine Rees' comment: "I have a friend who really wanted to go through Rush with me, until I told him you had to be a girl!"

Bob Pelley, Greek advisor, feels that there is a high degree of "lack of communication between sororities and fraternities and the campus," and added that the sororities have "a lot to be proud of."

Sororities are receiving a full range of criticism from CC students. One student who imploringly asked to remain anonymous for fear of recurrances from the feminist coalition said—"over 50% of sorority women are Phi Delt Muff."

Senior Susi Willett rushed her sophomore year knowing she would not pledge, "just to see what it was like."

"I came home every day with a massive headache. There's a room full of a hundred girls all talking at once. They ask the same thing over and over again and it's always the same conversation:

'Hi, my name is Susi Willett and I'm from Evergreen, Colorado and I'm an English major.'

'Oh, Evergreen—I've driven through there...' And plus you're smiling the whole time. My face got sore."

Susi remarked that sorority life is good for certain people. "Some really thrive in that environment. On my (freshman) wing the girls who pledged are still all together and good friends."

However it does not appeal to her. "I think in some ways it's cliquish. What I really don't like is the secrecy (such as secret songs and rituals). Sororities may be fun but it seems the secrecy is immature. It makes me think of elementary sch[ool] secrets."

—Susi's roommate, Mia Cadmus, al[so] that sororities are a possible social ou[t] "It gives people an immediate circle friends where they can feel at home, b[e] away for the first time."

—Senior Scott Reznik is happy tha[t] Greek system is underplayed at CC. one resents you for not being in a fra[t] sorority). People even seem to apologetic for it sometimes."

Reznik has difficulty defining soror[ity] and fraternaties. "One thing that I really don't know is what they actually d[o] don't know why some girls say 'I want a Kappa and if not a Kappa I'll just d[ie]'

—Senior Dan Pierce views fraterni[ty] and sororities as destructive to the col[lege] environment. "Their ostensible benefit social one. In my experience, frat pa[r]ties are alienating rather than positive."

He thinks the Greek system on cam[pus] stands for "general rowdiness, the abus[e] alcohol and drugs, and the discouragem[ent] of independence and diversity."

When asked why he thinks fraterni[ties] attract generally conservative stude[nts] Pierce replied "frats don't seem to places where independent thinking reflection are encouraged. They're pr[o] conformist. The current Zeitgeist is 'l[ess] to conservatism,' and frat people conf[orm]

"...my face got sore."

Also, most of the people who join fr[ats] are part of a certain group at CC, mos[t] whose members will probably end up business careers. This group is typic[ally] conservative."

Pierce does not however say that Greek system is always negative. He s[ays] his father's fraternity at Stanford was " which the members helped each other and if a student fell behind, the oth[ers] would help him and pressure h[im] academically."

In conclusion Pierce said "as they now, frats encourage a mentality wh[ich] seems to me to be inconsistent with mentality encouraged by a liberal education."

For 25 Years, we've been exporting America's most valuable resource.

The men and women of the Peace Corps. Dedicated volunteers who help people in developing countries live better lives.

It's tough. And it takes more than just concern. It takes motivation. Commitment.

But for 25 years, being a Peace Corps volunteer has been a chance to stop dreaming about a better world and start doing something about it.

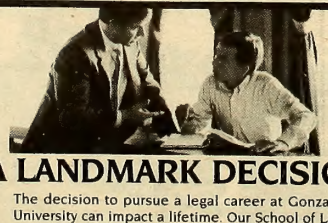
Peace Corps

The Toughest Job You'll Ever Love

Information Table Oct. 29-31
Armstrong Great Hall 9-3 p.m.

•

Film Seminar Oct. 30th
Armstrong 230 7:00 p.m.



A LANDMARK DECISION

The decision to pursue a legal career at Gonzaga University can impact a lifetime. Our School of Law is ABA/AALS accredited with both full-time and part-time programs. Please write or call for our catalog.

1-800-572-9658 Ext. 3736
Washington State Only

1-800-523-9712 Ext. 3736
Continental US outside Washington

GONZAGA UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF LAW
Office of the Registrar P.O. Box 3528 Spokane, Washington 99220-3528

Letters to Liz

Ronnie and SDI

Dear Editor:

Well, Ronnie really screwed us this time. He had bargained to remove offensive weapons from both sides entirely within a 10 year period. Then he throws it all away for SDI. Well, wasn't that the whole point of SDI in the first place, to remove the threat that the Soviets could attack us? Has Ronnie become so senile that he has forgotten the purpose to a project he proposed himself just a few years ago?

I have finally lost faith in Mr. Reagan, something people have been trying to get me to do for years. If he can lie to the American people about SDI, I have no faith that he or anyone in his administration is telling the truth about any issue currently facing the United States. If truth is not a virtue of higher value than any other, and recognized as such by the leaders of our country then we are doomed to a life where dishonesty, theft, and censorship are upheld as the highest values and the concept of a moral man that we have sought for centuries will now be considered the most base, undesired creature on the face of the earth. Honesty is the essence of a successful democratic society. How can we believe any politician and make intellignet decisions about who should lead this country if candidates won't tell us the truth? The American people do not need to be held in the dark for their own good. Presumably we are educated, intelligent people that are interested in the direction of our lives. Reagan's inability to tell the truth is indicative of a nation where ultimate control is derived through secrecy and the barrel of a gun.

Reagan has never wanted peace with the Soviets or any solution to the arms race. He thrives on maintaing power over the Soviets for narrow-minded reasons, the arguments which he has probably forgotten, at the expense of the safety of the World's people. He has become convinced through the first 70 years of his life that the Soviets are a nemesis to our way of life on a scale that makes Satan look like an angel. How can we ever expect someone like that to treat the Soviets as people instead of demons intent on the destruction of the American way of life? Attempting negotiations on this basis is making no attempt at all.

SDI should be renamed SOI, Strategic Offense Initiative. The program was never intended to protect even the American people.It is another step to continue the MADness that has faced us for the last forty years. The avenue to peace is not through strength, if it was we would have made peace with the Soviets in 1945. It is time for a change. We must approach the Soviets with the knowledge that we both want peace and that the conquest of the other guy is not to anyone's benefit.

You had a chance that might not come again. You blew it Ronnie.

Harold Vaderpool

Our Mistake

Dear Editor:

Perhaps your staff is appropriately embarrassed by the many glaring and careless errors that appeared in the article on Scenes from an Execution (The Catalyst, 10 October, 1986). The headline, caption, kicker, typesetting, and proofreading were clearly the work of people who lack resources and respect for writing.

I must, however, correct the impression left by two serious and possibly inapparent errors in a quote, incomprehensibly amplified by a large print kicker, and attributed to me. As printed, the quote read, "She has to lick the dog's crevices' just to get the materials for her rebellion." (In the text of the article, the same quote was mangled in slightly different fashion.)

The cavalier neglect of one letter ("dog" should be "doge") and one internal quotation mark ('lick the doge's crevices' is a quote-within-a-quote, taken from the script) renders the statement nonsense. Anita Cheng, who wrote the article, provided you correct copy. I saw it. Why someone would choose to reprint this garbled sentiment in jumbo type is beyond me.

Here is yet another chance to mutilate my words: I said, "She has to 'lick the doge's crevices' just to get the materials for her rebellion."

I urge all members of The Catalyst staff to take more seriously their roles in a public representation of this College. We should be hardpressed to muster anything much with materials from dog crevices.

Joanne Klein
Assistant Professor of Drama and Dance

The Environment: Kramer vs. Wirth

Dear Editor:

When it comes to environmental issues, Rep. Ken Kramer and Rep. Tim Wirth are as different as night and day. An examination of their voting records and positions on current issues is revealing. One has a consistently strong environmental record which includes leadership in initiating and pushing environmental legislation; the other has a record dominated by negative votes on environmental issues and sponsorship of damaging legislation. Based on the candidates' records on some issues (outlined below), see if you can match the two with their records.

The first candidate voted against the Safe Drinking Water Act (with only 23 other representatives), and against a law that would require companies to notify the public when toxic wastes or chemicals are released into the environment. This representative voted to make the Clean Air Act weaker when it was up for reauthorization. He supports the sale of millions of acres of undeveloped federal lands (de facto wilderness). The League of Conservation Voters has given him a 17% acceptability rating for his votes in 1985 on environmental issues. In 1984, his rating was only 11%, and it was a dismal 6% in 1983.

The other candidate voted for the Safe Drinking Water Act, for the toxic chemicals "right-to-know" law, and for reauthorization of a strong Clean Air Act. Earlier this year he cosponsored HR 4567, which would take multiple steps to reduce acid rain. The League of Conservation Voters gave this representative an 81% rating for 1985, and ratings of 79% and 80% for the previous two years.

The first candidate has been on the anti-environmental side of the wilderness water issue. He opposes federally reserved water rights for wilderness areas, which would help guarantee that streams in new Colorado Wilderness Areas aren't dammed and continue to flow. He supports a system in which wilderness stream flows would be controlled by Colorado's minimum stream flow program. This program regulates upstream water projects to make sure that the streams below have enough water to maintain fish populations; however, it fails to protect streamside riparian environments with adequate flows and allows water projects to completely dry up the streams below in times of drought. Because of the water rights issue, this candidate has opposed HR 34, which would permanently protect 774,000 acres of Colorado Wilderness.

The other candidate favors federally reserved water rights to protect wilderness stream and streamside ecosystems. This candidate supports HR 34, and was its sponsor in the House. He said in a Denver Post article (10/12/86) that at the other candidate's request, a study of the water rights issue was done. The study showed only two places in Colorado where reserved federal water rights would conflict with water development projects. Neither of those places has to interfere with the creation of new Wilderness Areas.

When the first candidate aired campaign ads saying that he is "working long, tough hours to clean up the environment," several Colorado environmental organizations sent him a letter asking for removal of the ads, which they felt were misleading the public about his poor environmental record. The other has rightfully earned the praise of Colorado environmental organizations for his hard work on behalf of the outdoors.

Like I said, Kramer and Wirth are miles apart in their views and records with respect to environmental issues. If you don't already know or aren't convinced that the negative record belongs to Ken Kramer and the positive one to Tim Wirth, investigate further for yourself. Give both campaign offices a call and ask for position papers and voting records. Also, ask what each office thinks about the other candidate's environmental record. The differences are obvious, and the choice is obvious. Be sure to vote on November 4th.

Eric Johnson

Sorry SAGA

Dear Editor:

When I came here, I thought SAGA was pretty bad. The cooks at West Point, for all that they're simultaneously feeding 4400 hungry caders, put out a spread that makes SAGA food look like the sorry crap it is. I was disappointed, to say the least.

That was three years ago. The food hasn't improved a bit since then. At least it hasn't gotten any worse, either. What has gotten worse is the service. I'm not talking about the servers, since they've always been good. What ticks me off is that the dining halls never seem to be ready when the management opens the doors.

Last year, if I was in the mood for ice cream, I'd show up early for the sundae bar on Sunday nights. There would always be at least three different flavors of ice cream, with the tubs sitting in ice, plenty of scoopers immersed in hot water, and lots of toppings nearby. Pig-out time. The ice cream might run short later on, but there would usually be two flavors remaining.

Now fast-forward, to last Sunday night in Bemis. Toppings at one end of the hall. Halfway across the room, one, count 'em, one tub of rock-hard chocolate, dumped on a table. One slimy scooper, sitting in a dirty glass. A dozen people trying to chip some of the ice cream out of the bucket. Half an hour later, some genius in the bowels of the kitchen decides — surprise, surprise! — that it's time to get out some ice cream. Three more tubs of ice cream dumped on the table. Still only one slimy scooper. It was the worst excuse for a sundae bar I'd ever seen.

It happens every Sunday. Why bother having a sundae bar? And it isn't just the sundae bar that's screwed up. If you want donuts with breakfast, don't come until 8:00. More often than not, the donuts don't appear until at least half an hour after Taylor opens. Ice in the Bemis lounge is an uncertain thing, at best. And then I find that new servers aren't even told to wash their hands before they go to work. Wonderful.

I get the impression that there is no management at Bemis and Taylor. Certainly, there's no managing being done, even if someone is drawing pay. What ARE the managers doing back there? Picking their noses? Toking up with the 12 year olds in the dishroom? If those kids are 17, then I should be collecting Social Security. I've never seen SAGA in worse shape than it is now. Is the management in psychic shock, now that they're cut off from their Rastall roots? What's the problem?

And who's responsible for those god-awful paintings in Taylor? I've never seen anyone actually put a brush to the wall. The wall "art" just seems to appear of its own accord. Is someone sneaking in at midnight to decorate Taylor? Why the anonymity? Some of us would like to know who's vandalizing Taylor. We'd also like to know if that person is getting paid for his/her crimes.

Quite frankly, I'd pay to have the wall painted over. It would be boring, but at least it would have some dignity. Between the "We Are The World" crap, the flags, and the ugly paintings, Taylor looks like some silly grade-school cafeteria. What's next? Do we get a Palestinian to hug? Vanessa Redgrave and Daniel Ortega to lead us in an AK-47 dance? A visit from Michael Jackson Himself? Can we flick matches at his hair? Why not cut little red, black, and brown dolls out of construction paper and stick them at all the tables? Why don't we just ship the perpetrators back to sixth grade, where they belong?

All in all, CC is a second-rate college, commanding a first-rate price. No matter how good the academics are, CC won't be a first-rank school until it cleans up its support services. The work in Beta, Sigma Chi, the Spanish and San Rafael houses wasn't finished when people started moving in. Getting a radiator fixed in McGregor is nearly impossible. The College has a habit of tearing down beautiful old buildings (like the old library), and putting up heaps so ugly and non-functional (i.e., Rastall) that they, in turn have to be torn down. The food is lousy. This is the school that bills itself as "the Harvard of the West?" Very funny. One expects more of a college that charges $11,000 a year. Thank god for Financial Aid. Once I've graduated into the ranks of CC alumni, I'm going to be more than a little reluctant to give money to a school that can't even get ice cream out on Sunday nights.

Scott Riney

A Revised Eight Block Plan Worth Reading

Within this edition we have included a special pull-out section on the revised Eight Block Plan proposal. CC's faculty will hold a pivitol meeting on this subject this Monday. We are now at a point where student input is more crucial than ever. The first step is understanding, which is why we have included this special section.

What To Do With Cascade Avenue

The Cascade Avenue hit-and-run accident of this past week (see News), to be sure, is not the first. Fortunately Diedre Smith was not injured seriously. However, others have been.

Nary a day passes when a car does not "screech" to a halt on Cascade Avenue in order that a CCer may cross.

The source of the Cascade Avenue problem lies in the laps of two parties: 1)The drivers who frequently speed through CC without consideration for the high population density herein between Cache la Poudre and Uintah and the corresponding high accident potential; and 2)pedestrians (mostly CC students) for adopting a dangerously high confidence in their road-using status.

Pedestrians may have the right-of-way
But cars are a lot bigger than they.

The answer is to close Cascade, period. "Easier said than done," the administration will tell you. Civic leaders of Colorado Springs feel that closure of Cascade would choke a vital transportation link between downtown and the northern/north-western commerce areas.

Come on you Civic sillies, it's only two blocks and with a few modifications of intersections on the eastern and western extremes of CC there would be no problem whatsoever.

Without attention paid to this matter and as construction on Worner Center and the new Olin wing come to completion, we'll still have a campus permeated by a four-lane boulevard where students are occasionally picked-off. Closure of Cascade Avenue would be CC's aesthetic icing on the cake.

In the mean time, a reduction of the speed limit (20 mph) indicated by large signs with flashing lights and oversized pedestrian warning signs should be installed immediately a la every other school zone in the country. One other aesthetic and effective addition would be construction of two archways proclaiming entrance to The Colorado College campus at the southern and northern-most points where Cascade bisects our campus. This in turn will alert motorists and moderately discourage them to tred on our stretch of Cascade.

—B.S. & D.K., EDITORS

CATALYST
Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado

DAVID KLEIN
BLAIR SANFORD
Editors

LIZ CHENEY, Opinions Editor
TED CRAIG & DAVID FITZGERALD, News Editors
PATRICK CHISHOLM & KATIE DALSEMER, Features Editors
KATHY MAHONEY & ALEC REKOW, Sports Editors
ERIC BREITBARD, Arts Editor
SUSAN GRIAK, Associate Arts Editor

JOHN KATSANIS, Photography Editor
MIKE FRATERELLI, Copy Editor
ANNE MANHART, Layout Editor

JEAN BOYER
Business Manager

LINDA SHIREMAN, Typesetter
LINDA IMHOFF, Typesetter

The Catalyst logo by JANE PATTERSON

The Catalyst is published by Cutler Publications, Inc., Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado 80903. Phone (303) 473-2233 extension 675. The Catalyst is printed bi-monthly from September to May, except during holiday periods.

Cutler Publications, Inc. does not discriminate on the basis of race, color, age, religion, sex, national origin, or physical handicap in its education programs, activities or employment policies in accordance with federal, state and local laws.

Editorials appearing in the Catalyst are the opinions of the designated author and not necessarily those of any other Catalyst staff member.

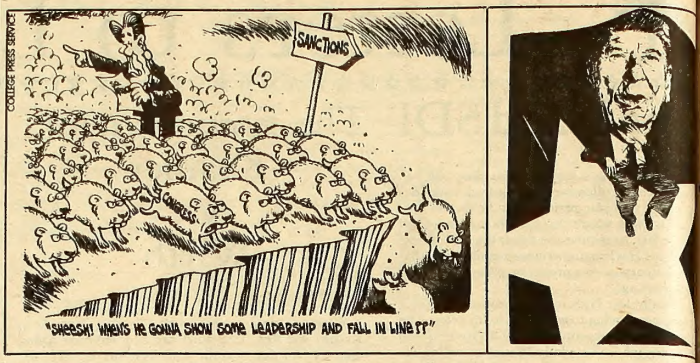
The Catalyst encourages the letters to the editor. Letters should be no more than 400 words in length and be typed or neatly printed. Address letters to the Catalyst, Rastall Center, Colorado College, Colorado Springs, 80903. Unsigned letters will not be printed.

A work of considerable length may be submitted as a guest commentary. Persons interested in submitting commentary should contact the Catalyst at 632-4999 or 473-2233 ext. 675.

The Catalyst reserves the right to edit or cut letters to the 350 and guest commentaries.



Can We Talk?

BY KATIE DALSEMER

This is a guide to some of those wonderful phrases one is bound to hear around the CC campus. It is especially relevant to the articles in this issue on local CC hang-outs because now students will be able to communicate with fellow drunks. Actually it would have been helpful if this were printed in the homecoming issue so Mom and Pop could have related to junior on a more intellectual level. Oh well, maybe there's still hope for some clueless (uninformed) freshmen.

BUMMED—Not moving to the wrong side of the tracks, but to the disappointed. Variations on this theme include: Bummer, totally bummin' and bum your high.

'CHOS—Nachos or more specifically those nasty things from 7-11 that you just have to have at 2:00 a.m. when you're heavily intoxicated.

DUDE—(one of my personal favorites) A hopelessly hip male or female CCer.

GRANOLA—Not only a natural food but also a somewhat derrogatory description of a student who looks like he or she's waiting for Woodstock II. This sixties let it all hang out kind of look is often labled "crunchy" (as in trail mix).

HARSH—Unpleasant, as in when you wake up face down on Nevada Avenue after a fraternity party and exclaim "Oh. harsh reality!"

LAME—A multi-purpose word. In the traditional sense it means physically mangled like many of the clueless jocks on campus. The common CC use, however, is "stupid" or not "in." Can you say dudes? (See DUDE)

PSYCHED—(one of my pet peeves) An over word that means "excited or overjoyed."

SPACE—The final frontier or a verb meaning to one's grip on reality which is a common occurrence. It also means to forget, as in what you to your professor: "Sorry, like I just totally spaced 20 page research paper." A terminally spaced person is often referred to as a SPACE CADET.

And speaking of cadets a ZOOMIE is a perso the Air Force persuasion. Need I say more?

Specific groups that have also had an effect on language are the fraternities. Now don't get me w I have nothing against fraternities but sometim marvel at the nicknames the brothers have themselves. I guess it's every frat. members nightmare to be doing something like studying biology, be spotted by one of the brothers and labled with the nickname "fungus" or "mold" f rest of his CC career.

Another language trend among students abbreviating everything especially the name classes. A couple of years ago someone told me he in Micro. Excuse me? How was I supposed to k right off that he was referring to Micro Econom For all I knew Micro could have been a new dorm an altered state of mind.

Well, I hope I've knocked down some langu barriers. If not let me know and I'll arrange an adj course.

No More Mr. Nice Guy

BY MARK THESING

I have always wanted to be famous. Perhaps more accurately, I have always wanted to be infamous.

My ambitions have left a trail of rubbish and bogusity. My high school teachers hated me and were greatly relieved when I finally graduated.

For the terminally obnoxious, a large public high school is paradise. In high school, I was, I thought, smarter than my teachers. I abused them.

I constantly reminded them of their inabilities to deal with the contradictions within the subject matter. I was able to make the class laugh during the few seconds when the teacher actually felt important because he was teaching something.

There is one or two of us in every class. Outside of our few friends, we are thought of as obnoxious and generally disliked. But a man who has no enemies truly has no friends.

My acceptance to the Colorado College was a miracle. Fortunately, my mother is a fine writer. Apparently in my admissions essay she was able to convince CC that my poor marks and scores were merely an indicati higher intelligence and sensitivity. Until this yea collegiate attempts to be tasteless have disappointing. All the Profs are much smarter than and my attempt to be clever, are generally inept largely misunderstood.

Being a great admirer of the offensive, I immediately attracted and felt comfortable in the Delt house. However I have been mildly disappointe the fact that regardless of how dishonorable I m there are Phi Delts who's tastelessness transcend so deeply that I can barely understand the significance of their actions.

Finally this year I have started to receive the attent I deserve. By vainly and haphazardly attacking doubting students, I am being read. Besides with boring and ridiculous issues such as contra-aid divestment filling the Catalyst, people can't help lower themselves to reading my column.

No more Mr. Nice Guy.

SPECIAL EDITION

CATALYST

Volume 20, No. 5 Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado 17 October 1986

Eight Block Plan Revised

Overview and Commentary

BY BLAIR SANFORD

This coming Monday, October 4, Colorado College faculty members will meet to discuss the newly revised, more flexible Eight Block Plan. The revised Plan, included on the following pages, is a product of input from both faculty, administration, and staff.

In the revised proposal the primary components of the original plan remain intact including the issue of raising the value of the CC unit to 4.0 semester hours and 32 units required for graduation.

The major difference between the original Eight Block Proposal and this newly revised proposal is flexibility. In the proposal to be formally presented to the faculty next Monday, the Academic Program Committee has spelled out the following curricular options:

1) That a symposium be instituted during the winter break where students could potentially be given academic credit.

2) That a summer readings course or summer school course be available for students, at no charge, with incomplete grades due to illness or family emergency or for summer matriculants.

3) That departments, where appropriate, introduce year-long seminars and make available year-long independent research and reading courses, each for one unit of credit.

These proposed options are in reaction to voiced student concern regarding the repercussions of a missed block. Granted they do add flexibility but several issues are raised: Will the College Business office approve any academic program provided to students at "no charge" as item two above suggests; and will CC's faculty be open to the prospect of teaching students who are under multiple academic commitments as item three suggests? Both questions should be answered Monday.

Two other vital issues will be discussed as well. Both of these, as well as the proposal, are included on the following pages.

The first is the Committee on Instruction's recommendations for Procedural Guidelines. These guidelines if approved ultimately slow down the Eight Block Plan decision-making process where the final, yes/no vote will not occur until December 15.

If these procedural guidelines pass and if the Eight Block Plan is approved on December 15, CC's Administration would discourage 1987-88 academic year implementation of the Plan. Vice President of Student Life Max Taylor expressed this opinion on President Riley's behalf as well as his own stating that December 15 would be too late to change existing admissions and view book literature to include information about the new academic plan. He also cited the complications potentially incurred by CC's varsity athletic planners. This would effectively slow the decision-making process and allow Eight Block Plan modifications before the ultimate yes or no vote.

Whether the Procedural Guidelines are passed or not, one other recommendation presented by the Eight Block Committee will be presented to the faculty:

*That the implementation of the new plan begin in the 1987-88 calendar year.

Esentially with this proposal, the Eight Block Committee is calling for rapid approval of the Eight Block Plan and subsequent modification of technicalities within the plan. The Eight Block Committee's rationale is the following: "As with our transition to the Block Plan, no one expects all the details to be settled before voting and instituting the proposal. Adjunct adjustments, plans for the winter symposium, etc., can all take place during the rest of the year." This would mean that Eight Block Plan modifications would be made after the ultimate yes or no vote.

The three major proposals regarding the Eight Block Proposal have been briefly presented herein. It is impossible to predict exactly which will pass and which will not. However, The Catalyst has prepared a decision flow chart including possible outcomes.

Whatever the outcome, it is time for another round of student input and commentary. Submit to The Catalyst directly or let your opinion be heard at upcoming Eight Block Plan student forums.

A Letter To Students From Students

Dear Colorado College Students:

We are the student members of the Academic Program Committee, which, in conjunction with the Eight-Block Committee, is responsible for the proposal printed here. We are part of the group that changed the proposal that you received at the beginning of the year to the one that you see now. We know that many of you are concerned about a lack of student input in the important decision about this proposal. It is essential that you realize that there is student representation, not only on the Academic Program Committee, but also in the Eight-Block Committee and the Committee on Instruction. Many of the changes that you notice in this proposal (i.e. the issue of flexibility) are due to your input, through us, to these committees. Although we do not claim that we have voiced every student concern, we do feel that we have raised some very important issues that otherwise might not have been considered by the committee.

There is one other student concern that needs to be addressed. Many of you are of the opinion that this proposal has been "sprung upon" you with no advance warning. This is not the case. For some time now, the faculty and its committees have been considering many similar proposals. This, however, is the first idea that has gained enough faculty support to be brought before the student body.

It is also essential that you realize the form of this proposal is not "set in stone." More revisions will be made after the faculty debate on Monday. We would also welcome any suggestions that you might have for improvement. Please remember that our faculty would never implement a program that would injure our education in any way—after all, our education is the reason that they are here.

Sincerely,
Debbie Cotten '89
Marin Millar '89
Ryan Walsh '88

The Plan...

I. The Committee on Instruction recommends the following procedure for consideration of the report of the Academic Program Committee concerning the Eight Block Proposal:

1. At the October 20 meeting, there will be a first reading of the proposal, with full faculty debate, a vote on whether to continue to step 2, and further faculty instructions to the Academic Program Committee. If the vote is negative, we would proceed to step 4.
2. If the faculty votes to continue, there will be a second reading of the proposal at the November 17 meeting. The faculty will hear further reports from the Academic Program Committee, faculty departments, and interested students. No vote on the full proposal will be taken at this meeting, but amendments could be offered and voted on. The faculty will then vote on whether to continue to step 3 or to modify the timetable for further action as it deems appropriate.
3. At the December 15 meeting, the faculty will have a final reading, debate, and vote on the proposal.
4. If the faculty does not vote to continue to step 2, the faculty will instruct the Academic Program Committee to continue a study of other possibilities.
5. All votes on the proposal of the Academic Program Committee will be by written ballot.

This procedure should be voted on before the substantive discussion of the Adacemic Program Committee report.

II. Motions for the Eight Block Year:

MOTION I

a) That the academic year consist of eight blocks with faculty normally teaching seven.

b) That the academic calendar year extend from Labor day to a graduation date in mid-May with an approximately four week winter break after block four and an eleven day spring break after block six.

c) That the C.C. unit be valued at 4.0 semester hours.

d) That the number of units for graduation be 32 with a normal student load of eight courses per year.

e) That the minimum number of courses required outside the department of the major be 19.

f) That a symposium be instituted during the winter break. And that the Committee on Committees appoint a committee to organize the symposium and to consider the possibility of awarding students credit for it.

g) That a summer readings course or summer school course, up to one unit of credit, be available at no charge for those students with excused grades, who miss a course due to illness or family emergency, and for summer matriculants.

h) That departments, at their discretion, introduce year-long seminars for one unit of credit. Faculty directing the seminar would normally not teach during one of the regular seven blocks.

i) That semester and year-long independent research and readings courses, each for up to one unit of credit, be made available at the department's discretion to students only after their first year.

j) That the number of units of year-long seminars and independent study courses taken as an overload which can be counted toward graduation be limited to two.

k) That during the transition period, all currently enrolled students be required to fulfill an equivalent of 119 semester hours and the equivalent in semester hours of general education and major requirements now in place. In no case should graduation be made more difficult than it would be under the present system.

l) That a review of the new calendar year be conducted two years after it is instituted.

Comments on the above motions:

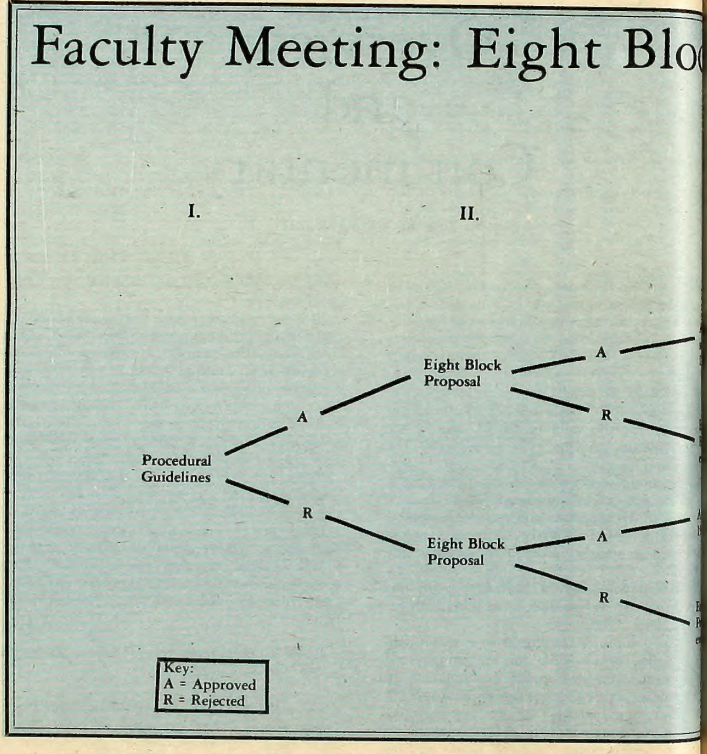
1) 32 versus 31 units for graduation

The joint Eigth Block Year and Academic Program Committee debated this issue in depth and opted, by a close vote, to recommend a 32 unit requirement. The main reason for preferring a 32 unit requirement was that there was insufficient cause to go to a 31 unit requirement. Those who favored 31 were essentially trying to provide more flexibility for students and make the proposal more acceptable to them. 31 out of 32 units might also reduce the demand for independent study courses. However, those who favored 32 believed that if flexibility could be provided by alternative methods, especially those that involved educational innovations, and if the demand for independent study courses could be regulated, then we did not need to consider a lower graduation requirement and risk the perception of lowered standards. In addition, a 31 unit rule would not be as effective in reducing the five-block senior problem.

Our recommendation for a 32 unit requirement, however, was based upon the following tacit understanding: that summer matriculants who have not been able to make up their missing one unit of credit in other ways may petition to graduate with 31 units. Similarly, students ... grades of excused or who miss a course d... illness or family emergency may also petit... graduate with 31. Such a procedure was typ... used by Colorado College prior to the Block ... and is in common use at other compa... institutions. Because CC currently requires on... equivalent of 119 semester hours, we have h... become inflexible on this issue. Requiring 32 ... (or 128 semester hours) allows us to be consid... in requests that come before the Adv... Committee to the Vice President for gradu... with less than the normal number of required ...

Finally, we understand that the Summer Se... Committee is presently reviewing the situati... summer matriculants in an attempt to pro... alternative ways for them to gain credit d... their first year.

Faculty Meeting: Eight Blo...



2) Major and Non-Major Requirements

It is possible that in certain fields ... specialization, students who want to at... graduate or professional schools may need m... than either the existing 14 unit maximum or ... proposed 13 unit maximum of courses permitte... the major. Currently with 36 possible cou... offered, highly qualified students have been abl... take one or two extra courses in the major, but ... count them towards their graduation requirem... With the addition of independent study courses ... year-long seminars, the same option would ... available under the eight block year.

3) Student Overload

At other educational institutions, stude... cannot fail, miss, drop, or take extra courses bey... the norm without taking an overload. Altho... our current nine block year makes it possible ... students to make up a few of these units without ... overlaod, it is done at the expense of ... extraordinarily heavy teaching load. As at ot...

Continued page

DISPARAGING

A Journal of Social and Political Thought

Volume 2 Number 2 October 17, 1986

Summit Nightmare: Reagan Freaks

BY DAVID LAZERWITZ

On September 30, amid hundreds of protesters including Carl Sagan and the American Public Health Association, the Department of Energy set off a nuclear bomb 2,000 feet below the Nevada desert. This should not come as a surprise to anyone. Though these tests are rarely publicised, this is the tenth underground nuclear test this year and the twenty-first since the Soviets declared a moratorium on nuclear testing on August 6 of 1985.

With the Icelandic summit meeting last weekend, the United States reaffirmed its position on nuclear testing. In the face of drastic reductions of long range missles and bombers, elinimation of medium range missles in Europe, and limiting nuclear testing, President Reagan layed his cards down. Reagan refused to give up the testing of his pet SDI project,

"The Soviet Union insisted that we sign an agreement that would deny...the right to develop, test and deploy a defense against nuclear missles," and, thus, ended any worldwide hope for an arms deal.

"It appears that building Star Wars is more important to the president than meaningful arms control," said Senator Gary hart. The Reagan Administration maintains that SDI is the free worlds only defense against a Soviet attack, while on the other side of the curtain, Gorbachev insisted that the absence of the missles would make defense against them unnecessary.

Twenty-seven years ago, president Eisenhower committed the United States "to proceed promptly to negotiate an agreement with other nations...for the suspension of nuclear weapons tests and the establishment of an international control system." This goal of implementing a comprehensive test ban was reaffirmed by successive presidents: President Kennedy's Limited Test Ban Treaty of 1963, Johnson's Non-proliferation Treaty of 1967, Nixon's Threshold Test Ban Treaty of 1974, and Ford's Peaceful Nuclear Explosions Treaty of 1976.

While President Carter actively pursued a test ban, the Reagan Administration has undone two decades of U.S. Soviet negotiations to stop nuclear testing by refusing to give up the testing for the SDI program. Last Monday, former President Carter told the American Public Health Association that "a ban on testing to match the Soviet initiative would be the most effective way to slow the arms race...the failure to do so was an embarrassment and a serious mistake."

Why the continued testing? "The United States should never agree to a test ban treaty that halts all nuclear testing," declared former CIA director and fefense secretary, James R. Schlesinger at the Colorado Bar Association meeting at the Broadmoor last week, "The U.S. has a large nuclear arsenal and the West continues to depend on the security provided by that arsenal...and occasional tests are needed to check the effectiveness of these weapons..."

On top of this, the United States has felt for years that the Soviets could cheat if a treaty were established. But with advances in seismic monitoring, scientists have proven that any nuclear detonation can be detected. Last summer, the Soviets invited a U.S. seismographic team to install monitoring instruments in the Soviet Union—that gurarantee is now in place.

The Soviets declared a moratorium on nuclear testing in August of 1985 and asked the Americans to do the same. The Soviet leader, Mikhail Gorbachev, said there should be no doubt that a Soviet-American moratorium on atomic tests would help curb the nuclear arms race. Reagan responded, as he often does, by calling the Soviet gesture a propaganda ploy.

"A comprehensive test ban would halt that aspect of the arms race that is most threatening, the qualitative improvements in nuclear weapons," says the former chair of the Atomic Energy Commission. Continued nuclear testing brings continued development of more advanced and deadly weapons, bringing us deeper into the arms race. The only way out, it seems, is to quit building more advanced weapons, and to start dismantaling the old ones.

The Reagan Administration had two choices last week to initiate the end of the so-called Soviet threat. The first option was the SDI program, a technological defense against offensive Soviet ballistic missles. The

Continued on pg. 8

A Word from the Wise

What's going on in the next month? Halloween, Thanksgiving break, four dollar movie nights, the list goes on. It should be a busy month at CC. We here at the Disparaging Eye realize that all of you are going to have a busy month with class and just leading the intellectual life. We would, however, like to bring one day to your attention. On this day you have an opportunity to influence decisions that affect all of us. Not too many people have taken this opportunity seriously in the past. Maybe they didn't know about it, so now we are telling you about it. Don't forget NOVEMBER 4 - ELECTION DAY.

Some big decisions will be made on the 4th. The future of our involvement with the South African struggle, proper appropriation of our tax money, war games in the sky, whether or not we openly support violence (oops—freedom fighters) in Nicaragua, all could be changed by the people who you can help elect. We know, a lot of other things are happening that day. It is dollar night, and maybe there is even a TEC, but just think if 15% more registered voters would have voted in 1984, the outcome would have been significantly different. Only 52.6% of eligible voters voted in '80, down 10% in 2 decades. Only 40% of students between 18 and 24 voted in 1984. Why do you cry about not having a voice in deciding on the school policy, when many of you don't even take the time to vote when you have the opportunity?

We have all seen the posters around campus, urging us to take this privilege more seriously. Not long ago people our age worked hard to give students like us this opportunity. When many of all ages around the world would die for a voice in government, why will many students choose instead to go see "Top Gun" for a buck? Think about it when the 4th rolls around.

In this issue we focus on some of the campaigns that could effect us here in Colorado. The race between Kramer and Wirth is a close one, with the balance of power in the U.S. Senate at stake. Michael Mehan and Prof. Dunham both have written articles on the significance (or lack of significance) of this off-year election. We also feature two articles on the Colorado gubernatorial race, as well as articles on the future of three prominent political parties. We hope you enjoy these, as well as other issues we have covered this month.

We always welcome new contributers to the Disparaging Eye, please send us a letter or give us a call if you are willing to contribute your time, creativity, and opinions.

—Munir Meghjee, Editor
Jean Maxfield, Associate Editor

New direction for Democrats

BY BRIAN SMITH

Ronald Reagan is a very popular president. There are many reasons for Reagan's popularity. To start, President Reagan possesses a very friendly personality; he stresses patriotism, family and traditional values, hard work, etc. One can hardly "oppose" Reagan's personality, his charm or his belief in the American Dream. Opposing or disputing these intangibles is like criticizing mom's apple pie or motherhood in general.

But on a more serious note, the feeling here is that President Reagan's popularity also stems from the fact that he projects a vision of leadership—President Reagan is not afraid to take a stand on an issue—nor does he lack skill in setting and implementing an agenda. The president has a vision of what kind of place America could and should be. These assets—vision and leadership—appear to be lacking in the Democratic Party.

Democrats on the national level (specifically those in the U.S. House of Representatives) are so preoccupied with pandering to special interests that they refuse to take concrete positions on real issues and make the tough but necessary choices. Immigration reform serves as an excellent example. A general consensus exists in this country that SOMETHING must be done about the problem of illegal immigration. Hispanics share this view as a group, in addition to the public at-large. Yet for the past five years immigration reform legislation has died in the Democratic-controlled House. (Recently, a watered-down, 'worthless' immigration bill did pass, however.) This is because House Democrats are so bent on courting Hispanic leadership in the Southwest that they refuse to meet the issue head-on.

But lack of leadership and initiative is not the only problem with the Democratic party. The Party's liberal, national leadership concerns itself so much with looking after the interests of the poor and minorities that they neglect the interests of everyone else. This bunch is still bent on reliving the outdated dream of the New Deal and the Great Society; the redistribution of wealth.

Fortunately, the Democrats' agenda and ideas may start changing. After losing four of the last five presidential elections (and taking a thrashing in the last two), the party has begun to re-examine itself. Many more moderate Democratic governors and legislators have begun to distance themselves from the ideas and agenda of the national leadership. In doing so, these moderates and "neo-liberals" have formulated some enticing policy proposals.

One member of the "forward-looking" breed of new Democrats is former Senator Gary Hart of Colorado. Hart has taken the time to formulate some rather substantive policy proposals. His ideas for the military include changing the emphasis in military power. The Reagan Administration has, at great cost, built a fleet of huge battleships. Hart has criticized the Reagan Administration's emphasis on battleships as not being cost-effective. Hart would instead put money into a smaller submarine fleet, which he feels is a more effective military investment.

On economic and fiscal issues Hart and others have come up with new ideas to solve some current problems. Senator Bill Bradley of New Jersey (original author of tax reform legislation) has developed a debt-repayment plan for Latin American countries. He feels that his plan would help reduce the American trade deficit because Latin countries would have more money to buy our products. Gary Hart has proposed a U.S. government policy to help bail out entire ailing industries. Hart's idea involves extending loan guarantees to uncompetitive U.S. sectors such as the steel industry. However, these sectors would obtain loans only on the condition that they present 'acceptable' plans for moderation. He would also institute a $7.6 billion retraining program for displaced workers. Unlike past Democratic policies however, Hart also has an come up with a method to pay for this ambitious program: institute $10 per-barrel oil import tax. He feels that such a tax would generate $90 billion over five years. It would also help the depressed U.S. oil industry.

The Democratic Party needs people like Hart and Bradley to exert badly-needed leadership and a new policy direction. I'm not advocating that the Democratic Party abandon liberalism or compassion. But why not embrace the liberalism, of say, John Kennedy (a president who believed in a strong defense and was pragmatic on fiscal matters), Michael Dukakis (governor of Massachusetts) or Bill Bradley, and abandon the liberalism of Tip O'Neill or George McGovern?

Democrats must not, and should not, completely abandon liberal ideals. On social issues—such as protecting the environment, protecting a woman's right to an abortion, backing the E.R.A., maintaining programs for the poor, etc.—Democrats should take a liberal stand. But the party must rid itself of its "tax-and-spend-anti-business-anti-defense" image. It must rid itself as the party of special interests and reassert itself as the party of true fairness; a forward-looking pragmatic party concerned with the public interest. The Democratic Party must take a stand; it must provide leadership and a vision for the nation. The time is now and the opportunity is there. Democrats can adopt enlightened fiscal and economic policies; Michael Dukakis' policies of welfare reform and business-government cooperation as governor of Massachusetts represent a perfect example. There are many issues that the Democrats can address which the Reagan Administration has not effectively addressed, such as job training, education, and the rebuilding of our infrastructure. These are all critical issues for the well-being of our country. Democrats should address these and other issues, providing a focus and direction for this country to take.

By moving itself to a more pragmatic, moderate stance on fiscal policy, foreign policy and economic issues the Democrats can solidify their majority party status in America. In fact, with the Republican Party becoming more and more influenced by its fanatical, ultra-right, uncompromising, religious-fundamentalist wing, Democrats can enhance their majority party status by adopting a more centrist image and attract middle-of-the road independents and alienated Republicans.

Libertarians: Keep Gov't Out

BY DAVE MAKARECHIAN

Governments are the leading cause of death in the world. The state squashes individual life, liberty, property and pursuit of happiness, and impedes growth and development of human potential. Society does not need a strong, powerful state to prosper because no conflict exists between civil order and individual rights. Every man should be his own government.

The Libertarian Party fights against the state and champions the rights of individuals. Since its founding in the early 1970s, the Libertarians have become the third largest political party in the U.S. In 1984 Libertarians teamed David Bergland and Jim Lewis against statists (a statist is a supporter of state power) Walter Mondale and Ronald Reagan. Alaska gave them 11.7% of the vote. Not enough to win. In fact, Libertarians have never won a gubernatorial or federal election. The 1988 campaign is likely to be no different.

The Libertarian philosophy rests on one fundamental principle: That no individual, group, or government may initiate force against any other individual, group, or government. This philosophy translates into policy suggestions for social issues, the economy, and foreign policy.

First, social issues. Statists debate the merits of school prayer, abolition of abortion, gay rights, and pornography—the list grows as demagogues try to out "moralize" their opponents. In their efforts to "clean up society" or to "make things right" smooth talkers who are hell bent on staying in office infringe upon our rights. None of these issues belong in politics.

Consider religion. Libertarians defend the rights of

Continued on pg. 7

Republicans at a Crossroads

BY ROB LYNCH

With Ronald Reagan finishing his last term in the White House and the Republican majority in the Senate being threatened this November, the Republican party must look seriously to the future. It must redefine its role in the public sector. What must the party of Lincoln do to maintain the Presidency and its majority in the Senate and strengthen its position in the House? The party must continue to move forward understanding its strengths and weaknesses. The key to the party's future success lies in how they can turn their ideals into reality. Without sacrificing their fundamental beliefs, Republicans must execute rational policies to strengthen their power base both on the national and local level.

In the domestic arena Republicans have been much more successful electing presidents than in winning Congressional seats. On the whole they've had a tough time getting elected to smaller constituencies that make up the House of Representatives. Historically the basic economic premise of the Republican party has been to minimize the role of government in the private sector and thus to promote private initiative through lower taxes. Within the framework of today's political scene, the manifestation of this policy is popular on the national level but unpopular when it comes to local constituencies. The public votes with its pocket book and thus is always supportive of tax reductions but at the same time strenuously resists any cut in its federal benefits at the local level. This problem of satisfying local interests encompasses from policies of free trade to deregulation. As consumers want the benefits of free trade, namely lower prices, they still want their local industries protected from supposed unfair competition from overseas. These are only some of the contradictions in the mindset of the American voter that the Republicans must deal with in order to be successful.

Republicans must also analyze their views on social issues. They must deal with the role of the church in politics. With the very emotional issues of school prayer and abortion, the party has never been able to stand united in its views. Considering the strong influence groups like the moral majority have had on many elections as of late, the Party has had to walk a fine line between maintaining fundamental support without alienating many other supporters. Once again the voting public exhibits a rebirth of religious enthusiasm while at the same time is skeptical about its place in politics.

Defense is another area of government where the Republicans must be very careful. In 1980 Ronald Reagan was elected on the premise that he would strengthen the military to increase deterrence from foreign aggression. After 1984, however, Americans are getting restless wanting the government to negotiate from this position of strength a verifiable arms control treaty with the Soviet Union. Reagan's stubborness on the issue of SDI has dimmed hopes that a meaningful agreement can be reached before the end of his term. This can do little but dampen popularity for Reagan's policies.

These are only some of the issues that Republicans must do some soul searching about before the party can strengthen its position. On the domestic end, Republicans must be more forceful in implementing meaningful tax breaks to give incentive for new businesses and for the expansion of present companies because jobs are the most important issue of any campaign. A system of enterprise zones is another great option for helping create jobs in depressed areas. These are just a few examples of how the Republican party must be more practical in dealing with local politics. It must be much more active in promoting private initiative in especially labor intensive industries in order to turn its ideals of a successful predominantly laissez-faire economy into reality.

In Social and Defense policy, Republicans must move away from radically conservative elements. Although they should never disenfranchise them completely, the Party cannot afford to lose its mainstream support by giving in to the Helmses and Falwells of the world. The Party cannot become stuck in the beliefs that the Soviets can never be trusted and that no meaningful accords can be reached. From this position of strength, Reagan must prove that he can slow down the arms race, or many will believe that his foreign policies have only stagnated and that he forced the Soviet Union to become more resolute in their distrust of the U.S.

For the Republican party to be successful in the future they must make their philosophies work to their advantage. In order for Republicans to strengthen their position, they must find innovative ways to create jobs through free market policies, and they must execute sound foreign policy which promotes stability.

Clean Up Your Act

BY SUZANNE LEAHY

Can the public be shielded from toxic spills, fires, and explosions? In 1984, the Colorado State Patrol, the Port of Entry and the Public Utilities Commission inspected 27,875 trucks and 91 percent were in violation of federal regulations, according to the Governor's Interagency Hazardous Materials Transportation Working Group research. Safety regulations of hazardous material transport have become a political issue, since Colorado's Democratic gubernatorial candidate Roy Romer and three hundred campaign volunteers put a twenty-four hour watch on fifteen highway and interstate sites within Colorado. Although Romer said, "We don't hold this out as an actual scientific study," he called attention to the problem because the issue is neither on Romer's opponent, Ted Strickland, nor the state's Congress immediate agenda, due to failure of several proposed bills.

"I believe very strongly that a twenty-first century state clearly has to have a better system of disposing and handling and regulating hazardous materials," said Colorado Governor Dick Lamm. Many of the regulated dumping sites are in New Mexico and Nevada; therefore, Colorado's highways will increasingly carry much of the hazardous material traffic, with over 500,000 shipments, 10 billion pounds of "hazmat," entering Colorado a year.

It has been two years since the initial incident caused Coloradans to voice their outrage. A truck loaded with Nave torpedoes rolled in Denver's mousetrap; if it had exploded it could have killed hundreds of people. Ignoring the "recommended" route, the driver took the shipment through the high traffic-accident intersection to save gas and time. The existing penalties are inadequate to deter potential violators: "It is currently cheaper not to comply with the regulations even if one gets caught," said CoPIRG's lobbyist Casey Padgett.

So, what has been done in the past two years to prevent incidents such as the one in the mousetrap and their increasing potential disaster? The state legislature has produced bill after bill, but each one Governor Lamm has vetoed, calling them hazardous material deregulation bills. Each bill has failed to adequately cover all of the "hazmat" transportation problems posed: designated routes, emergency preparedness, permitting, and enforcement.

In 1984, the governor's office revealed a study which demonstrated the unpreparedness of local agencies charged with protecting communities from "hazmat" accidents: 85 percent did not have the minimum training or equipment required to accomodate their communities. To add to the current impotent methods, only two federal inpectors, spending less than 15 hours a week, inspect the 10,000 shipments of hazardous material passing through Colorado. (A little worried?)

The last bill which Lamm vetoed failed to secure safety regulations for trucks carrying flammable materials; gasoline tankers represent two-thirds of all dangerous cargoes on highways and two-thirds of all "hazmat" incidents. Proponents of this bill contended that, without exempted such loads from the bill, convenience stores could not be reached. Of course, trips to convenience stores would not be eliminated; they would only be arranged so that these hazardous materials were driven by golf courses instead of schools, along less frequented roads to cut the risk of accidents.

In order to accomplish this, however, local authority is required to insure the safest routes are designated for the transportation of "hazmat." Nevertheless, proponents of this bill issued full responsibility to the Colorado State Patrol. Republican State Senator Martha Ezzard commented, "This bill is worse than no bill at all, because municipalities can enact regulations for local routing."

Not only have proposed bills lacked adequate coverage and local authority to insure the essential precautions, but also they have not escalated the penalties accorded to violators. State Representative Senator Al Meiklejohn accused, "Some people are trying to get the trucking industry to pay for the whole schmazo," pointing out that only twenty percent of hazardous material incidents are due to transportation. Unfortunately, the trucking industry has been one of the largest lobbyist groups influencing the state legislature's decisions.

"Suspension and revocation of permits and escalating penalties for repeated violations," suggested Padgett, "would help decrease the number of violators and also help pay for better enforcement." Anticipating political support, Romer manuevered directly to respond to the increasing public concern. CoPIRG stepped up the campaign to reduce toxic transport risks by canvassing and informing over 100,000 Coloradans about the issue. The public's interest and lives must be protected since the legislature is representing more than the monetarily threatened special interest groups.

Waiting for the Collision

BY JAMES B. LASKO

"...I just thought you might want to know." Thanks Mom, I did want to know. I put down the phone, grabbed my beer, and ran downstairs. My housemates had the TV warm and we all sat in reverent silence as The First Couple made a characteristic emotional appeal for "a national crusade" against the "epidemic" that is "killing America and terrorizing it with slow but sure chemical destruction." Our fight against drug abuse is "another war for our freedom" just like World War II.

Being a true American, and therefore a true freedom lover, I realized immediately that this crusade had my name all over it. Everybody needs a cause to fight for, and I have for a long time been in search of mine. Last year at this time I was plagued with the feeling of worthlessness and would have been happy to pledge alliance in any war for freedom, especially one with such a great historical parallel. Where was the war last year?

Last year Washington and our faithful leader seemed completely untroubled by this epidemic. As a matter of fact, Ronald Reagan proposed to cut the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration's budget by $12 million. This shocked me, but like any good writer of the bandwagon, I stayed on clutching my seat. What could have occured in the past year to cause Reagan to wage a war especially one of magnitude equal to World War II?

All the statistics I could find led me to conclude that the "drug problem" is no more serious in 1986 than it was in 1985. PCP, or "angel dust," use has gone down, heroin use has remained constant and so has alcohol abuse. Cocaine abuse which increased tremendously earlier in the decade has started to level off, and marijuana remains an entrenched institution among adolescents, but its popularity has been declining slightly since 1981.

Use of one drug has increased substantially in the past year and that is simply because it didn't exist last year. I am, of course, referring to "crack." But this drug surely does not single-handedly account for General Reagan's war. There is a common term among the D.C. gang which is used to explain the President's actions. It is "Nancyism." I jumped off the rapidly moving wagon and sat, causeless, as it picked up speed.

The nature of this roaring bandwagon should be considered. The drug crusade has reached unprecedented proportions, including a $1.8 billion budget, promises of military involvement, and increased drug testing. Both the House and Reagan have suggested that the death penalty be instituted, as well as mandatory life sentences for twice convicted dealers to minors. The most shocking of the House's proposals is the weakening of the exclusionary rule. This law prohibits illegally obtained evidence to convict defendents.

The budget increase is almost one billion dollars for the cause, quite a shock considering only a year ago that Reagan attempted making cuts. The military will be required, under the House proposal, to survey the boarders as well as "pursue and seize intruding aircraft." Considering the lack of success of Bush's South Florida Task Force, another attempt at using the military to curb drug traffic, one is forced to question the potential effectiveness of such action.

Drug testing would be stepped up. Employees found to be taking illegal drugs could be fired. On what basis? Employment, in the capitalist system, is based on the employee's production level. If a worker is able to do his job well under the influence of an illicit drug, then firing him undermines the premise on which our society is based. If one's production level cannot be recognized as deficient there is no basis for dismissing her. Drug testing doesn't measure production, but some sort of acceptible morality. Hiring and firing on ideological assumptions poses a serious threat to our freedom of thought and action.

The racing drug bandwagon gains momentum in its "was for our freedom," but in doing so it threatens the very freedom it fights to maintain. Certain aspects of the House's proposal will be challenged legally as unconstitutional. Revoking or modifying the exclusionary law makes way for such authoritarian measures as phone taps, illegal search and seizures, and many other violations of privacy. With the added consideration of mandatory life sentences and death penalties, it makes the prospect even more incredulously scary. I hate to be cliche, but I smell "Big Brother."

I do not pretend to say that there is no drug problem. I have seen too many people destroyed by illegal narcotics to do that. But it is imperative that we be careful not to let the wagon's momentum lead us blindly forward. The bandwagon speeds on and grows increasingly attractive. It has become a central issue in this election year and any aspiring politician had better be on it. Parents, movie stars, athletes, and basically any professional in the public arena are being forced to take a seat. But who is driving and when will they put on the brakes?

There was once another speeding wagon, it wasn't as big or as fast as this one, but it was cruising. They called it "prohibition." Besides being generally recognized as one of our greatest political blunders, it gave birth to organized crime and indirectly promoted the drug problem. The bigger and faster the vehicle the more dangerous it is, and the drug bandwagon is the biggest and fastest to date.

An anonymous CC athlete in happier days.

STAFF

Munir Meghjee ..... Editor In Chief

Art Editor: Peter Scott

Associate Editors: Lelia Deykin, Brian Smith, Rob Lynch, Jean Maxfield, Michael S. Mehan, Dave Lazerwitz

Layout Editor: Nina Farquhar

Copy Editor: Dean Cambell

Contributors: Suzanne Leahy, Norm Leahy, Elizabeth L. Cheney, Christine Dowell, Dave Makerechian, James B. Lasko, Steve Geraghty, Matthew Kite, Patrick Ledger Stacy Stanford

Typesetter: Linda Shireman

The opinions expressed herein do not necessarily reflect those of the Disparaging Eye staff. The Disparaging Eye reserves the right to edit letters to the editor and guest commentaries.

Wirth the Vote

BY MATTHEW KITE

For the good of Colorado and of the nation as a whole, Tim Wirth is clearly the better choice in the Senate race to fill Gary Hart's seat. From the environment to education to arms control, Tim has been extremely active and effective, while remaining consistent, in addressing the issues which concern Coloradans today.

Tim Wirth has been representing the 2nd district for the last twelve years. He was raised in a rural Colorado town in a modest upbringing, with both parents being teachers. He was able to attend Harvard undergraduate, and later for his masters, on scholarships. After Harvard, he went on to receive his Ph.D. in Education from Stanford, again through a scholarship grant. After finishing Stanford, in 1967 he began working as a fellow in the now dismantled Department of Health, Education and Welfare. He was first a special assistant to the Secretary, later earning the position of Deputy Assistant Secretary. He entered politics as a member of the freshman class of 1974 (the same year Gary Hart was elected to the Senate and Dick Lamm became Governor). As a active member of the newcomers to Congress, Tim was very much involved in the movement which made sweeping reforms in the power and election of committee chair positions in the House. Thus began his career illustrated by a willingness to fight for what he believes as right, even if it means going against his own party.

Over the years, Tim Wirth has had an outstanding record in terms of the environment. The League of Conservation Voters, a prestigious environmental organization based in Washington, D.C., rates Congressman on a yearly basis on how they vote on environmental issues. Tim, this year, as most years, received a rating of 89% (this is in contrast to his opponent's rating of 17%, up from 6% from last year). Since '74, he has fought for a strong Clean Air Act policy, with the "brown cloud" problem in Denver specifically in mind. When the act was in jeopardy of being weakened in '82 by the present Administration, Tim formed a coalition within the House which moved to strengthen the act instead. Also, presently threatening a great many people in the state are toxic waste dump sites which are seeping contaminants into the water tables from which these people receive their drinking water (particularly around Denver). To address this very serious problem, Tim was very active last fall in getting the Superfund Bill—which provides federal funding to clean damaging toxic waste dump sites up-renewed in the House, while also calling for the EPA to be much stricter in its observance and enforcement of the laws regulating the dumping of toxic waste. This year, Tim introduced tough legislation addressing the problem of acid rain. The bill is presently receiving very favorable action in the House. Tim has also worked extremely hard to preserve Colorado's wilderness. In 1974, he was responsible for organizing a coalition of citizens who worked for four years in preparing a proposal to establish the Indian Peaks Wilderness Area, a 73,000 acre area of land, as a federal reserve. In 1980, Tim worked with other members of the Colorado delegation to enact the Colorado Wilderness Act, making an additional 1.4 million acres federally protected.

Tim Wirth has also been a strong advocate for arms control, fighting to ensure that nuclear weapons are never used. Over the past twelve years, he has pushed for constructive arms control negotiations, calling for both the U.S. and the Soviet Union not to "undercut" important arms control treaties presently existing, such as SALT II and the ABM Treaty. He feels that if we have stronger conventional forces, the likelihood of the use of nuclear weapons would decrease, and that our defense budget should move more towards the improvement of these forces and weapons than our

Continued on pg. 6

Where Romer Stands

BY CHRISTINE DOWELL

The two most important issues facing Colorado in the next four years are the health of the economy and the maintenance of an adequate number of government services in the face of cuts of federal funding for state services, so believes Roy Romer, the democratic candidate for governor.

Romer hopes to attract new businesses and industry to Colorado, or as he puts it, "to get in there and fight for our state." By utilizing top prospectors from business here as "birddogs" to sniff out prospective businesses to be lured to Colorado, Romer hopes to aggressively market Colorado as a place for business and industry. With aggressive marketing Romer believes that he can draw new blood into the "soft" Colorado economy.

Romer also hopes to reform state taxes in the same manner as federal taxes were reformed. He plans to shut down long standing loopholes which benefit wealthy investors and businessmen. Through changing the laws Romer hopes to gain 29.5 million dollars of revenue from wealthy investors, and 5.1 million from individuals. Romer, however, claims that these changes will not effect the typical working man except to help pay for improvements in education and social programs.

Part of the 35.6 million would also go to improve and protect the environment. If elected Romer hopes to set up a governor's commission and a recreational round table to preserve Colorado's open space. Romer believes that protecting the environment and preserving Colorado's open space is not just a matter of aesthetics, but also a matter of economics. He believes that if Colorado invests in protecting open space that some years later the investments will be returned several times over. It is this policy that has won Romer the endorsements of both the Sierra Club and the United Sportsman Council of Colorado.

Romer feels that improving education in Colorado is of the utmost importance because a high quality of education is "a precondition to economic vitality." A great deal of the additional revenue he hopes to gain from tax reform will go to improve the quality of education in Colorado. An improved educational system will also add to what he dubs the "Athens of the West" image of Colorado. He thinks that Colorado is not only an economic center but an intellectual and spiritual mecca. By improving education Colorado would be investing in this image, and its own future.

Romer is pro-choice on the abortion issue. He also favors a get tough policy with crime, including the death penalty. If elected he claims he would reform the parole board so that it would be more difficult to release violent prisoners.

An interesting aspect of Romer's purposed policies is to unite the "five Colorado's" of metro-Denver, the front-range, southern Colorado, the eastern-plains and western-slope into a fairly economically if not spiritually homogenous community.

Romer views himself as a strong leader, willing to plunge into even local issues such as the relocation of Stapleton airport in Denver. As he said when debating Ted Strickland, his opponent, "Are you going to elect a governor who's going to sit on the sidelines and referee (between Adams County and Denver)? I think you need a governor who's out there quarterbacking and saying 'Let's take this team down the field.'" Romer supports the purposed Adams County side for the new airport.

Roy Romer's positions, on the surface seem to be reasonable. His no-nonsense leadership attitude combined with his purposed aggressive marketing of Colorado, an improved educational system, tax reforms and the vigorous protection of the environment seem to make Romer a very strong candidate for governor, and in fact, Romer is leading the race by ten percentage points, according to the latest Denver Post poll. However, there seems to be some possible holes in Romer's purposed policies. First of all, it seems unlikely that Romer can lighten the tax laws, protect the environment and lure industry simultaneously. His hopes of unifying Colorado under one economic and spiritual flag does not seem feasible considering the diversity of people, lifestyles and heritages in this state. The improvement of education statewide can not be completely funded by the additional revenue raised by the purposed tax reform, and any increase in taxes will certainly only strain the already "soft" economy of Colorado.

It would appear that Roy Romer is a man full of good (popular) but conflicting ideas for Colorado. Perhaps they just have not been fully thought through. Roy Romer may see himself as the strong leader that Colorado needs as its next governor, but where he may be leading is questionable.

Elect

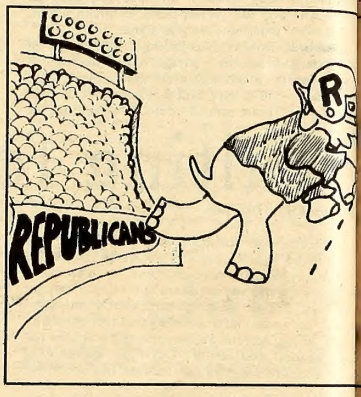
BY ANDY DUNHAM

Andy Dunham is a Professor of Political Science at CC.

Will the Democrats recapture the Senate? Does it matter?

Majority rule by the American people will not decide either of these questions. In the second largest democracy in the world over three-fifths of the population will not vote. Even those hardy souls who do vote will not get majority rule. In 1980, when the Senators running now were elected, Democrats received 53% of the votes for Senators—but won only 35% of the seats and lost 12 net seats and control of the Senate to the Republicans. But don't feel too sorry for the Democrats, since in the House of Representatives they regularly get a larger share of seats than of the popular vote.

22 of the 34 Senate seats that are up for election in 1986 are held by Republicans. Since the Republicans control of the Senate is only 53-47, this seems to give the Democrats a good chance to retake the Senate. In recent history the 'out' party has done well in off-year elections in a President's second term, gaining an average of 9 seats. The Democrats will not do that well



What's at

BY MICHAEL S. MEHAN

As fall moves into its later stages, we begin to settle in to our routines of the season. Leaves are raked winter clothing is recovered from closets and chests, students finally adjust to the routines of school and we begin to prepare for the approaching holiday season. However, this year, all across the nation, there is something else blowing on the cool autumn wind besides the scent of woodsmoke, and the whistles of football referees. It is politics. In every region of the nation candidates are out stumping away, trying to regain or attain office, and in no other election battle is the race heating up more than in the race for supremecy in the United States Senate.

Why is the Senate race so important? Because the Democrates now have a chance to regain control of the Senate and to reassert their political power across the country.

In 1980, the Democrats lost their 20 year majority in the Senate. In the new conservative wave that swept America in the early eighties, many old time, liberal Democrats were unseated by a new generation of young, conservative, Republicans. With Reagan's landslide victory over Walter Mondale in the 1984 presidential elections, and with the subsequent decline in the popularity of the Democratic party, the Senate elections are crucial for the Democrats. It is one of their last chances to reassert their party in national politics, to reverse the setbacks of 1980, and to halt the "Reagan Revolution" in its tracks, by controlling both houses of Congress.

For Republicans, control of the Senate is imperative to insure that Reagan does not become a lame duck in his last two years. Also, if the Republicans can hold the Senate now, it will increase their chances of strengthening their hold on it in 1988, thus weakening the Democratic party and pushing the Democrats into a deeper political crisis.

The Democrats have to regain only four seats to tip

tn '86

ımis year. The country is becoming less Democratic, the incumbent advantage is strong, there are no burning national issues this year (like Watergate in '74, or the recession in '58), and since the Republicans serve business and wealth they have an overwhelming monetary advantage and will be able to buy a few close elections. Two or three Democratic challengers, unable to raise the money they need to get their names and positions before the voters, will lose because of their lack of money. That is the Golden Rule of American politics: those with the gold, rule.

The party with the most Senators organizes the Senate. If there is a 50-50 tie, Vice-President Bush can vote, allowing Republicans to maintain control. The party that controls the Senate elects the majority leader, who controls what comes to the Senate floor for consideration and when it comes. The majority party also selects the chairmen of Senate Committees, where the real work of the Senate is done, and picks most of the Committee staff, who do the real work.

Thus control of the Senate matters, if the Democrats can do something with that control. Can they?

No. The elections of 1986 will not decide a great deal beyond the careers of a few politicians. If the Democrats regain the Senate fewer Nicaraguans will ke?

Continued on pg. 8

the scale in their favor in the Senate. The Republicans now hold a 53-47 majority. Over all, there are 34 seats up for grabs, the Republicans defending 22 and the Democrats only 12. At least 15 of the Republican seats being defended are of candidates who were elected in 1980, most of whom won by narrow margins, making their hold on these seats very delicate.

President Reagan has been on the road these past few weeks, hoping that his national popularity will add some momentum to needy Senatorial candidates. Though Reagan's popularity polls reach almost 60 percent, he has had little success in passing on his popularity to other candidates. He has appeared in California, Colorado, Missouri and New York, and has raised 12 million dollars for Senate hopefuls this year, including 1.5 for California Representative, Ed Zschau, $900,000 for Colorado Representative, Ken Kramer, $1.7 million for New York's Senator Alfonse D'Amoato and $700,000 for Republican Senate Candidate, Jim Santini in Nevada. However, the local characteristic of this election and large slumps in the farming, oil and textile industries have taken much of the impact out of Reagan's support in several key regions, especially the South and the Mid-West. In the states visited by Reagan, the candidates are still neck and neck.

In every region of the country there is at least one state where the campaign is going down to the photo finish. In the east, two liberals are trying to win the victory in Pennsylvania, both by running against Reaganism. Democrat Bob Edgar is hoping to unseat incumbant Republican, Arlen Specter. With 300,000 industrial jobs lost in the last year, and 800,000 more registered Democrats than Republicans in Pennsylvania, this state is far from Reagan country. Republican incumbant, Arlen Specter has history on his side: Pennsylvania has not elected a Democratic Senator in 24 years and recent polls have had Specter over Edgar from 8% to 22%. But Bob Edgar is an

Continued on pg. 6

Kramer: Best Choice

BY NORM LEAHY

The senatorial race in Colorado this year offers we the electorate a unique opportunity to decide whether or not we agree with the direction the Republican—controlled body has taken in recent years. The vulnerability of twenty-two Republican seats lends considerable importance to these elections. The loss of the small Republican majority could spell tough times ahead for the President and any policies he may hope to see enacted before his term ends. Thus we are given the choice between Ken Kramer (R) and Tim Wirth (D) as to how our state will comment on the course of the nation.

Needless to say, the choice is between two men who are worlds apart in politial ideology. For many people in the state who are moderate in viewpoint, the task is to avoid the evil of two lessers. Indeed, the major parties could not have served up more stridently extremist representatives of their respective organizations wings than these men.

On the left hand, we have Tim Wirth, a long-time representative from the second district, We are told he is a friend to the elderly, to labor, to the common man. His career is unremarkable except that he was a force in the ill-conceived breakup of AT&T. We realize that he has a liberal voting record compared to the mainstream of the House of Representatives. This is to be expected of a man representing a progressive district like the one he hails from. Yet we are also made aware of the fact that "Wirth has voted against me more times than Ted Kennedy..." (Ronald Reagan, Denver, Sept. 8, '86.) We also see that Wirth, in 1983, co-sponsored a bill that would have allowed conscientious objectors not to pay taxes to defend the country (H.R. 3032) This in itself puts doubts into your minds as to the legitimacy of this candidate's contacts with reality, not to mention plain common sense. But we also must give Wirth credit for supporting civil liberties and the causes of minority groups, as are his duties as an elected official.

But over this falls the shadow of doubt. Is he fiscally responsible? Will he keep the nation economically competitive? Is he committed to the national defense? Most generally, the answer is no. Twenty-three times in twelve years Wirth has voted to raise the federal debt ceiling. He has voted against a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution (Congressional Record Vote 70, 1984). He has voted to scrap the B-1, the Trident II and the MX (Congressional Record Vote 70, 1984). In a state as involved in military research and production as Colorado, Mr. Wirth does not seem to value our economic well being so highly as it would seem. In a state, too, where the budget is mandated to be balanced, and has lived with it for sometime, Mr. Wirth once again fails to see that governments can live within their means.

Ken Kramer believes in and has voted for federal fiscal responsibility by supporting the balanced budget amendment (C.R.V. 387, 1982) and by voting against tax increases. He supports a strong defense and has reaped for his district substantial benefits from the Reagan defense build-up (The Consolidated Space Command Complex and several SDI projects for example).

Kramer believes in growth and in prosperity. His district is a living example of this belief. But doubt about Kramer arises when we look at some of his votes in the realm of social issues: for school prayer, against the ERA, against abortion. Here too, we see that among some of his supporters are Phyllis Schlafly and Sen. Jesse Helms, two rather unsavory, if not looney, characters. Is it right for government to tread on some social grounds? No, never; yet Ken advocates some intrusions. He is especially fanatical on the drug issue and one wonders if he carries a urine sample around with him on the campaign trail.

But in the end, we the voters must decide which qualities we are willing to forgive that the others may shine through in Washington. De we want a fiscal conservative or a Civil Rights advocate? Ideally, a candidate would be both, but in the cruel world of political expediency, this can never be the case. Thus as an electorate we must decide: is our greater threat a corporate giant or government largesse? Apartheid in South Africa or the spread of Communism? And once we have decided, we will have found that it is with the harder stanced, Republican, Ken Kramer we stand, through necessity. If we are to maintain the economic and political integrity of the nation at home and abroad, we must stand with Ken Kramer. He's not slick, and on some issues he's not bright either, but for the health and well being of our nation, we must support him in the November election. In this race of political extremes, at least his is of a type that will not leave us a bankrupt and prostate federation that had a chance to save itself from itself.

Vote Strickland

BY STEVE GERAGHTY

For twenty years, Ted Strickland has served the state of Colorado as a member of its government. In 1966 he was elected to the Colorado House of Representatives for a two-year term. In 1968, he was elected to the State Senate, where he served until he was appointed Lieutenant Governor. When that term of office expired, he again was elected to the Senate. In 1978, he ran an unsuccessful bid for the governorship against Governor Lamn. His Senate career resumed, and in 1983 he was elected President of the Senate, an office he has held for the last three years. Outside of the Colorado State Senate, Ted is the Manager of Government Affairs for the Petroleum Information Corporation in Denver, a job he dutifully performs in the morning before his Senate responsibilities tie him up in the afternoon.

Ever since the Department of Education came out with its report on the current status of education, students, teachers, and schools have all been very hot topics. On this subject, Ted seems to have a three point plan—two points aimed at the teachers, and one aimed directly at the students. Ted believes there is a need to establish master teacher programs to encourage all teachers to strive for excellence in the classroom. Without effective teaching, the classroom becomes an unwelcome sight for the student. A master teacher program might provide just enough incentive to push the mediocre teacher upwards to establishing a better learning environment. The teacher must not only provide for a great classroom atmosphere conductive to learning, but must at the same time be able to provide the right information to students—and not only in the subject that the teacher is teaching. What this means is that the teacher must be sufficiently learned in all subjects. To ensure all Colorado teachers should be tested. Other states have already adopted similar plans, and they have been met with mixed feelings from teachers. However, these teacher should possess some knowledge. Ted is right in supporting a teacher testing program; the students have a right to have teachers who have retained fundamental facts. The third point to Ted's educational platform is that all high school students meet some minimum requirements before they are allowed to graduate. Colorado's public education systems should have some uniformity to their requirements. If public education is to continue as public education, then no one system should be significantly lower in their standards than any other; all public school students should be required to meet the same standards.

Another hot topic is that of abortion. Ted has taken a lot of heat from the press and other groups concerning his stand on abortion. Ted believes that abortion is a moral issue, and not a legislative one. Because of this stand, Ted has caused himself some trouble. He is personally against abortion because his morals say it is wrong. Therein lies the problem: abortion is morally wrong. In Ted's mind, morals belong to the individual. However, his words can be easily misinterpreted. Morally wrong has been interpreted to mean collectively wrong—no one should have an abortion. So he then gets himself into trouble when he tells groups with pro-abortion interests that abortion should be left up to the individuals involved. They attack him by saying that he stands on both sides of the issue to make everyone happy with his words. In reality, Ted has only one stand on abortion—it is a moral issue, with individuals capable of applying their own morals to make their own decision. And it is with this same attitude that Ted stood against state-funded abortions in 1984: abortion is an individual's choice that should be funded by the individual alone.

Now I turn my attention to Colorado's economy. Ted's main focus here is the establishment of more jobs for Colorado. To do this, he supports the selective underdog politician with a habit of coming from behind. He was the first Democrat since the civil war to win in his suburban Philadelphia district, and he has held onto it for five elections, winning all by narrow margins. In his most recent re-election he was behind by more points in the polls than he is now in the race for the Senate.

Continued on pg. 8

Mehan from pg. 5

Down south, we see heated races in Georgia, North Carolina, Louisiana, and Maryland

In Georgia, Senator Sam Nunn's support for Democratic hopeful, Wyche Fowler, has been described as "crucial." Fowler hopes to unseat Republican incumbant, Mack Mattingly, a member of the class of 1980. Fowler captured a surprising victory in the primary early this fall, and Democratic leaders hope Senator Nunn's big name will rub off on Fowler.

Recent North Carolina polls have Republican incumbant, James Broyhill, holding a narrow lead (43%-40%) over his competitor, Terry Sanford. Both men are long time political veterans, Mr. Broyhill having been a member of the House of Representatives for 24 years and Mr. Sanford, a former governer. The race lacks the brutality of the 1982 Senatorial elections when Senator Jesse Helms defeated former Governer, James Hunt. In the Broyhill-Sanford race both candidates are quietly campaigning and looking eagerly to election day.

The big battle of the south is in Maryland, where Democratic Representative, Barbara Mikulski and Republican, Linda Chavez, are fighting for the empty seat of retiring Republican Senator, Charles Mathias. With Mathias retiring, this state is one of the most vulnerable for Republican defeat; registered Democrats outnumber Republicans three to one. Miss Mikulski is a lively liberal. A gifted orator, she has fought unceasingly for her neighborhood, and women's rights. Opposing her is Republican conservative, Linda Chavez. This is truely the race of opposites. Chavez is a Reagan conservative who supports the Administration's domestic and foreign policies. However, Miss Chevez was a Democrat up until two years ago and her conservative base in Maryland is seen to be rather shallow. Miss Chavez is expected to do fairly well against Mikulski in the affluent suburbs of Montgomery County, but in the working class districts of Baltimore, Mikulski's political base, she will probably not win over many blue collar votes.

Across the mid-west, where in 1980, the Republicans unseated many Democrats, it looks as if several of the Republican victories will remain. In this region where the number one issue is the farm crisis, many Republican incumbents are funding political success by distancing themselves from the very man who helped get them elected, Ronald Reagan. Among those expected to win again in November are: Wisconsin Senator, Robert Kasten, Iowa's Charles Grassley, Indiana Senator, Dan Quayle, and Oklahoma Senator, Don Nickles. However, class of '80 alumnus, James Abnor, of South Dakota, found himself on the wrong side of the farm issue and is now fighting an uphill battle against Democratic hopeful, Tom Daschle. Daschle has attacked opponents by reminding voters of Abnor's support of the President's unsuccessful farm bill of 1985, and statements made by Abnor to the effect that farmers should sell below cost for a while; near fatal blows in a state that is 16 percent farmers, the highest percentage in the nation. While South Dakota Republicans hold a slight edge over the Democrats in numbers, Abnor is trailing behind Daschle by six to ten points in the polls.

Other class of '80 farm belt senators in trouble are Idaho's Steve Simms and North Dakota's Mark Andrews. Simms has taken much of the blame for Idaho's recent economic problems and is facing possible defeat from Democratic Governer, John Evans. In North Dakota, Andrews tried to take credit for a supposed rise in grain prices and lost his 12 point lead in the polls, when it was discovered he had nothing to do with the rise in prices.

In Missouri, one of the six states up for grabs, the mud slinging campaign between former Republican Governer, Christopher Bond and Democ Lieutenant Governer, Harriette Woods, is still close to call. This campaign is one of the several ac the country where the issues have all but disappea and TV commercials, with each candidate attack each other have become the norm.

In the old west, the shoot out in Colorado betw Democratic Representative, Tim Wirth, and Republican Representative, Ken Kramer over abandoned seat of Democratic Senator, Gary H catching the eye of both parties. Colorado is on three states where successors will be elected to re a retiring Democrat. The other two, Missouri Louisiana are still up in the air, so it is important the Democrats to hold onto Colorado. Both pa are playing an active role in this campaign, with Democratic and Republican Senatorial Camp Committees donating up to 200,000 dollars to respectfull candidates.

Another hotly contested western state, is Nev Here, Republican Jim Santini and Democ Congressman, Harry Reid are slugging it out for seat of retiring Senator, Paul Laxalt. Santini solicited the help of President Reagan in making Nevada stays Republican. Santini has used a m blitz of commercials featuring Reagan, appealin Nevada voters to keep the Senate Republican. Sa has tried to label Reid as a "Tip O'Neal liberal" "spend-happy" Democrat. Reid, has, in turn tri depict Santini as the tool of the Washin establishment and big business. The two are run neck and neck.

Who will be the big winner in a few weeks? As m political analysts are confidently saying, who kn With the races either tied or in the Democrats fav Colorado, Nevada, South and North Dak Missouri and maryland, the Democrats have a st chance to regain the Senate. The Republicans, on other hand, are pulling all stops in their defense o Senate. With neither side far ahead of the other i key states, victory, by whatever party, will not landslide.

With all the noise being made over the Senate r just how important is it? For Reagan and his last years, the results may not matter all that m Reagan's first priority of his second term, tax revi has already passed. Many of the remaining bill not as important, though Congressional oppositio Reagan's policy in Latin America, could be a prob for the President. The structure of the Senate, Committees and their chairmen will not change drastically. Domestically a Democratic Senate c mean budget headaches for the President. Reagan have to fight extra hard to push through more cu domestic spending, and increases in the mili budget. Also, he could lose out on deficit-fighting increases in the next two years.

The significant consequences of the elections month do not altogether involve Ronald Reagan this election it is do or die for the Democrats. If the not regain the Senate now, the Republicans will h the chance to solidify their hold on it in '88, when Republican seats will be up for grabs. A Republ victory over the Democrats would have gr consequences for the Democratic party, not would it mean the Democrats have lost the suppo many American voters, but it would present them an uphill struggle to regain their lost polit supremecy.

Kite from pg. 4

nuclear arsenal. For example, he opposed the MX missle citing it as a "vulnerable and destabilizing" system. He subsequently proposed a measure which would direct $1 billion from the MX budget towards our U.S. forces in NATO. He has pushed hard over the years for a bilateral, comprehensive ban on nuclear testing and a verifiable moratorium on anti-satellite (ASAT) weaponry. As for the latter push, Congress recently acted this way, approving a one-year moratorium on testing of ASAT as long as the Soviets observed it as well. Tim supported the $2.4 billion funding for research of the Strategic Defense Initiative purely for the technological spin-offs that will surely result from the research. He is against the development and deployment of the system though. His concern is that further development beyond research will undermine our extremely important arms control accords presently existing, including the ABM Treaty. He was also an original co-sponsor of a bill calling for a bilateral, mutually verifiable freeze on further development and/or deployment of nuclear weapons.

On some of the more important foreign policy issues of the day, Tim differs greatly from the positions held by the present Administration. He played a significant role in the passage of the bill which was recently passed imposing sweeping economic sanctions on the government of South Africa. The bill was passed despite the President's veto, and despite the convenient absence of Tim's opponent in this race from the vote. He was also an original co-sponsor of a bill which provided emergency food and medical relief to famine stricken African nations. Tim fought to make sure that not only were the supplies provided for the people, but that they actually made it to the intended recipients. On another recent foreign policy vote in which he was in opposition to the Reagan Administration, Tim voted against the bill providing aid to the Contra's (or otherwise known as "freedom fighters") in Nicaragua. He voted against it arguing that increased military support and intervention is counter-productive to the democratizing of the region. he feels that we should instead pursue aggressive diplomacy through the Contadora negotiations in turning about a change. These negotiations, he cites, have been endorsed and encouraged by all of our allies and every latin American nation except for the Cubans.

Throughout his legislative career, again and again has Tim sought and proposed measures with the purpose of balancing the budget and/or reducing the defecit. In 1978, he was personally responsible for cutting $20 billion from the budget of his own party's president. In 1979, he was elected to the House Budget Committee where he immediately, with four others (known as the "Gang of Five"), began efforts to cut low-priority or ineffective programs. In a few seperate instances, Tim has worked to bring together a "bipartisan budget summit" in an effort to make significant cuts in the budget. He voted for Gramm-Rudman last year. Through all of these efforts to make budget cuts through, Tim has battled to ensure that the benefits are still provided for the elderly and truely needy-not wanting to cut what he sees as our "basic investments in our people and economy." For Social Security recipients, he has opposed measures in past which would have cut, delayed, or frozen CO In November of last year, Wirth, with 15 of colleagues, reacted to the Reagan Administration's of the Social Security Fund to pay for ge operational expenses of the government successfully filing suit in U.S. District Court to those funds replenished.

Education is another area which is of partic concern to Tim Wirth. The present Administration proposed to make drastic cuts in many fede funded educational programs. Wirth is concerned not only would these cuts have an impact on quality of education in this country, but it would mean that many would not have the opportun attended school for financial reasons. Subsequently has opposed proposed cuts in the student aid pro in an attempt to make sure that the opportuni higher education is provided for all. Maintai quality education for all in the grade school leve been the cornerstone of Tim Wirth's efforts in his prop and sponsoring of many pieces of legislation i area of education. Due to his record and concer terms of educational issues, the National Educ Association (NEA) as well as the Colo Educational Association have both endorsed W bid for the Senate.

Clearly Tim Wirth concerned with the main is which affect Coloradans today. His record re that concern. If elected to the Senate, he w certainly carry on that concern, and the peop Colorado will only benefit from it.

In Defense...

BY DEVON PENA, CHAIRMAN
ACADEMIC PROGRAM COMMITTEE

Introduction

President Riley, in his "Report to the Colorado College Community" (September, 1986), states, "I believe that Colorado College should seek to be the preeminent center of 'creative teaching and inspired learning' among the national colleges." Certainly, this goal is deserving of our attention as a faculty committed to academic excellence. How will the Eight Block year contribute towards the fulfillment of this worthy goal? We would like to summarize the educational merits of the Eight Block Year in light of President Riley's Report.

1. Quality versus Quantity

The features of the block plan which have made Colorado College unique among liberal arts colleges will remain intact. Intensive, dedicated teaching and study will continue as will the promotion of independent initiative among both faculty and students. In fact, the educational benefits of each block under the Eight Block Year plan should increase since: (1) faculty will strengthen scholarship in the service of teaching, (2) faculty will have more energy and time to dedicate to the development and strengthening of existing courses and to offer the cutting-edge of knowledge to students, and (3) students will become more serious in their choice of courses and in their level of participation and study.

A shorter academic year, overall, implies faculty will have considerably more energy and time to devote to curricular and pedagogical innovation and the regeneration of the capacity to teach effectively. The more time for faculty development, the more creative and inspired our teaching and research will be. Let us dispel one misconception about this proposal: it will not mean that faculty will work less hard; it will establish a more productive balance among faculty responsibilities.

This issue merits further elaboration. One of the most difficult problems facing our faculty is the challenge of keeping abreast of the most recent developments in our fields. The information age has increased the overall rate of knowledge production in all fields of scholarly and scientific endeavor. Some estimate that professional educators must devote at least 50 to 60% of their time intensively reading and studying on-going developments in their fields in order to keep up with the pace of knowledge production (see Mike Cooley, Architect or Bee? The Human?Technology Relationship, 1980). The current nine block academic calendar greatly reduces the faculty's ability to keep up with this pace. The Eight Block Plan should allow us to stay with the frontline of scholarship. Our courses will be qualitatively improved since students will benefit from exposure to the very latest theoretical, empirical, and interpretative developments in all fields of inquiry.

It has been said that there is no clear connection between a professor's time for preparation and study, on the one hand, and the quality of teaching on the other. Admittedly, the connection is subtle and can only be observed over a long period of time. The negative short-run results of teaching too many courses can be observed in reduced assigments, shorter comments on student papers, shifts from essay exams to multiple choice quizzes, less time with individual students, and a general lowering of standards. The long-term results are faculty loss of vitality and competence. That is why strong institutions dedicated to teaching have moved to a better balance between the immediate demands of the classroom and provision for long-term development. What the Eight Block Year would add up to is an overall strengthening of academic standards as called for by President Riley in his report.

2. Independent Study and Collaborative Research

Second, President Riley argues for greater emphasis on independent study for students and for faculty-student research collaboration. As the Eight Block Year proposal states, "...semester and year-long independent research and readings courses....(will) be made available." The addition of independent studies opportunities will strengthenthe diversity and versatility of the Block Plan. The educational value of independent studies and faculty-student research collaboration was recently underscored by Elizabeth Hayford, President of the ACM. In a report entitled, "The National Science Foundation's Undergraduate Research Participation Program," Hayford notes the views of ACM students regarding the educational merits of undergraduate research and independent study:

—it encourages self-reliance and curiosity;
—it teaches organization, self-motivation, multidisciplinary problem solving, and professional scientific communication;
—it expands education from a passive to an active role and provides the opportunities to develop close relationships with faulty sponsors;
—it allows students to learn first-hand the nature of the research process (its uncertainties and frustrations, its joys and challenges, its long-term nature and relationship to applications and policy).

One of the outstanding qualities of Colorado College as an academic environment is its size: classes are small and there is an overall sense of closeness and community. The Eight Block Year, by promoting independent study and undergraduate research opportunities, would further this sense of community and close rapport between and among students and faculty. The development of collaborative research opportunities would enhance the faculty's nurturing and mentoring roles. Under the current nine block system, faculty find their time and energies for fulfilling such roles severely limited. If implemented, the Eight Block Year would promote the establishment of semester or year-long independent study and research courses within departments.

Greater opportunity for independent study and student-faculty research would add flexibility to the Block Plan. We have placed too much reliance on full-time one and two block courses. The original idea behind the Block Plan was to have a variety of course formats to accomodate different kinds of subjects and learning. In this respect, more independent study and research adds a dimension of "creative teaching and inspired learning" and further adds flexibility to the block system.

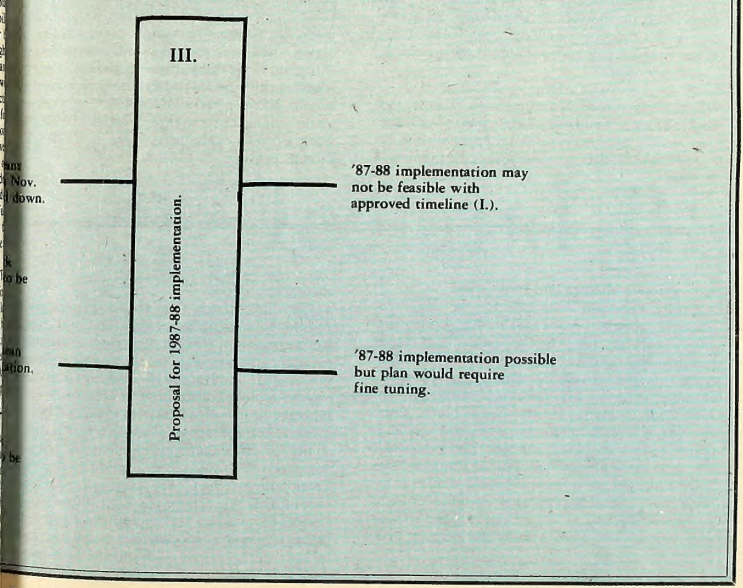
There is another reason why the Eight Block Year would have a positive effect in this area. Given more opportunities for collaborative work, students and faculty would participate in the generation of new knowledge. The current system seems to rely too much on a textbook and classroom orientation. Irrespective of one's personal views about the research/teaching link, freeing students and faculty to conduct on-campus and field research results in the creation of a more exciting and active participation in knowledge generation.

3. Institutional Values: Diversity

Third, President Riley talks about the importance and desirability of diversity, i.e., a diverse faculty and student body, a varied curriculum, and diverse ideological and philosophical outlooks are integral components of academic excellence. If diversity is a central institutional value, how will the Eight Block Year contribute to diversity? A report by the Association of American Colleges (AAC), Integrity in the College Curriculum: A Report to the Academic Community, suggests how we might go about clarifying and strengthening institutional values. The ACC report identifies some major components of an integrated curriculum; among these are: (1) historical consciousness, (2) values, (3)

Continued page IV

genda, Possible Outcomes



III.
Proposal for 1987-88 implementation.
'87-88 implementation may not be feasible with approved timeline (I.).
'87-88 implementation possible but plan would require fine tuning.

Dunham from pg. 5

die and fewer billions will be spent on Star Wars. A Democratic Senate might block Supreme Court appointments late in Reagan's lame-duck term. Given the limited options of current American politics, this seems important and worth struggling over. So vote.

But do not expect this election to allow the people, or even the voters, to have a great effect on government policy. As James Madison said, the genius of the American Constitutional arrangement could help to "secure the public good and private rights against the danger of a [majority] faction." American government was designed to make it difficult for the government to act, and hence it limits the majority's ability to act. Voters were not supposed to be able to influence the government easily, and we can't. On top of the constitutional roadblock to positive action, the Democrats face other serious problems.

First, the Senate with 100 members has too many 'chiefs' to act as a leader. The American political system has centralized to the point where, "The President proposes, the Congress disposes." So while a Democratic Senate could modify, delay, obstruct, and frustrate President Reagan's program, it would have a hard time enacting a program of its own. In the last 6 years a Democratic House and a Republican Senate have increased Reagan's budget expenditures an average of $16 billion over his requests, and cut taxes $18 billion less per year than he asked for, but that is just a trivial modification: the rest of the thousand billion dollar debt ($1,000,000,000,000), give or take a few billions, enact in the last six years comes from President Reagan's own budget requests (approved by the House and Senate of course). He blames "liberal big spenders." But then Truth must just get in the way of being a Great communicator anyway.

Second, one could say of the Democratic Party what Gertrude Stein said of Oakland: "There's no there there." We can not expect coherent leadership from a party that not only includes both Ed Zorinsky and Teddy Kennedy (let alone Lyndon LaRouche) but would give them both leadership positions if they recaptured the Senate (actually, Zorinsky might switch parties, again, if the Senate balance was close and the price was right).

The final problem for the Democrats is really the root cause of their disarray. The New Deal policy and voting coalition that gave Democrats dominance in national politics since the coalition was put together by Franklin Delano Roosevelt is finally collapsing from its own successes and internal contradictions.

The Democrats got votes from labor and financing from internationalist corporations. The end of American world economic dominance shattered that alliance, since corporations that must compete with Japanese, Korean and other producers can no longer afford high domestic wages or the high taxes to finance both the Welfare and the Warfare state. Something has to go, and the New Deal Democratic coalition is going with it. The coalition began to unravel in the 1960s when, after 30 years of including both northern blacks and southern racists, the Democratic Party (with the Republicans) acted for decency and civil rights. While it may be gratifying to Democrats, and even true, to say they have increased economic security and civil rights in this nation, it no longer helps them much either at the polls or in trying to govern.

Indeed, given the problems of governing America in the last decades of the 20th century, one has to wonder why the Democrats would want to regain control of the Senate (and be blamed for all America's ills in 1988 by the Great Communicator). The problems of the country seem well beyond their ability to even face, let alone resolve. The huge federal deficit remains, unemployment of 7% has become normal and acceptable (to the other 93%), American corporations and people are buying $150 billion more from foreigners than we are selling to them, average American families are no better off financially than they were in 1973, several hundred thousand Americans die every year from nicotine while both parties rant about (other) drugs, and America has lost, forever, the economic and military world dominance enjoyed for a generation after World War II. Worse, at least from the viewpoint of the Democratic Party, the policies that maintained the New Deal coalition and hence Democratic control no longer work. One wing of the Republican party claims that it is Morning in America, that America is back (how far back?), and denies there are any problems, while others seem to believe all problems can be resolved by prayer in school. Unfortunately, Republican blindness does not give Democrats sight.

It seems foolhardy to predict an outcome which, by just waiting a few weeks, we will know. It is especially foolhardy when the result depends on the decisions of millions of citizens, on whether it rains on election day (reducing turnout), and on whether voters choose Senators, who will make decisions for the nation, on the basis of ads claiming an incumbent is "Fighting for Pennsylvania" or ads criticizing an opponent for being supported by Jane Fonda. Politicians in campaigns have such an instinct for the capillary that it is no wonder voters stay away in droves. But Americans love to predict (and bet on) other great spectator sports, like football, so here goes: Democrats will regain control of the Senate, 51-49.

But whether the Democrats or the Republicans win the Senate, the American people will lose.

Correction

In Tom Cronin's article, appearing in last months edition, we mistakenly credited President Madison of nominating Harrold Carswell to the Supreme Court. It was actually Richard Nixon who made the choice. Our apologies to Professor Cronin.

NEXT MONTH:

A tribute to the Gods who walked the earth as men and gave the world "The Disparaging Eye."

Morrison from pg. 7

—While working as a clerk for Justice Robert Jackson, Rehnquist stated "that segregation in education was right and should be affirmed" (N.Y. Times, June 15) and "I think Plessy vs. Fergusson" was right and should be reaffirmed." (N.Y. Times, July 27.)

—He was the only dissentor in the 1983 case which upheld a denial of Federal tax deductions to the racially discriminatory Bob Jones University. (N.Y. Times, June 19.)

—He was the only dissentor in the 1982 case which ruled that Massachusetts could not let churches veto the awarding of local liquor licenses. (N.Y. Times, June 19.)

—In a dissenting opinion that an Alabama "moment of silence" law was unconstitutional, Rehnquist said, "The notion that the Constitution requires a 'wall of seperation' between church and state "should be frankly and explicitly abandoned." (N.Y. Times, June 19.)

—Rehnquist wrote the 1984 majority opinion which made the first major exception to the 1966 Miranda rule, thus permitting police to question suspects without reading to them their rights when in the interest of the loosly interpreted phrase "public safety." (N.Y. Times, June 19.)

The list of Justice Rehnquist's opinions against the rights of minorities and of individuals continues but is too long to be fully stated here. The evidence leads one to wonder about his opinions on fundamental Constitutional amendments concerning these issues.

Justice Rehnquist has the right to disagree with parts of the Constitution. He also has the right to be prejudice against those parts. In fact it is disagreement over the Constitution which makes the document great. Errors can be corrected, injustices errectified and necessary additions made. This is a continuing process which makes the Constitution the great enhancer of our democracy. It is because of disagreement over the interpretation of the Constitution that politics should not play a part in the confirmation of Presidential nominations in the Supreme Court.

Rehnquist, however, has exceeded the politics of interpretation. He has openly disagreed with parts of the Constitution because of prejudice. This is dangerous for two reasons. First of all it has led him to actions in the past which openly violated certain amendments of the Constitution. This in turn makes one wonder if such involvement will continue as Chief Justice. Will votes be made disregarding the law of the land but conforming to this man's ideas? Secondly, prejudice should play no part in the interpretation of the Constitution. Justice Rehnquist's actions have shown that he would like to see above mentioned amendments changed or dropped. As a Justice he can do neither. However, he can ignore them under the interpretation clause.

It is the job of a Justice to review cases coming to the Supreme Court and decide on that basis whether the defendent has been wronged by the laws and that those laws are unjust. This is the process of Constitutional reformation in the Supreme Court and Justice Rehnquist has no right to apply prejudice to the interpretation of this document and thus to the future of our land. Justice Rehnquist should not have been confirmed as Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court.

—Hugh Morrison

recruitment of new businesses to diversify economy; he wishes to create an "Invest in Colora program that will help small businesses find capital by pairing investors with Colorado's busi people; he supports setting up a foreign trade offic Japan in an aggressive pursuit of new over markets for the Colorado farmer and rancher. To stabilize the markets here in the state, Ted encourage the five major food retailers in Colorad buy only Colorado products when Colorado prod are available.

The economy also includes taxes. In the past has worked to bring about a 25% reduction in Colorado income tax, reductions of the state sales and severance tax, and the repeal of the unitary The new federal tax law may create a windfall Colorado amounting to as much as $250 mill which Ted has recommended returning to the pe of Colorado to stimulate and promote growth in economy. Yet at the same time, Ted realizes sometimes taxes must be raised for some gre purpose, even though it may be unpopular with people. He supported an increase in the state gas because 40% of it would go to the repair of both roads and the Highway Department itself. The gas was increased, but I doubt that anybody really not any dramatic increase in gas prices. Yet the w roads upon which we drive in Colorado immediately begun to be fixed, and are still be repaired with enthusiasm—and money. Within gas tax increase bill was the consideration that Highway Department would become leaner and efficient. He also underscored the need for more ca planning, an issue that I believe deserves seri thought. Ever noticed how often a new road is b and surfaced—and then torn up three months late put sewer pipes underneath. Careful planning co alleviate this all too common problem, and I think Ted will push the Highway Department on this iss

Other problems that Ted has addressed that I merit attention: he is in favor of the tort refo currently in the legislature to control and/or pl limits on monetary damages awarded in liabi insurance cases, and he will diligently work for guarantee and protection of Colorado's water rig Liability claims have severely damaged the insura field (actually the payer of insurance rates), particular mention going to medical malprac claims. Limits must be placed on these claims bef insurance rates become too much for everyo Colorado's water rights must be protected to prev the federal government from taking control of water resources and making us entirely depend upon them for our water. If Colorado is allowed control its water resources, then we can successfu develop a plan to ensure that the Western Slope, Front Range, and Eastern Colorado will each hav adequate water supply to meet their demands.

In his years of public service in the government, Strickland has shown his abilities to both get th accomplished and to effectively lead his fell legislators. He has clear stands on many of the issues in this campaign. His knowledge of the worki of Colorado is strongly founded by twenty-plus ye in both the legislature and the business world. A since we can't have Governor Lamm anymore, let's Colorado's future in the hands of Ted Strickland second choice was drastic limitations of the Europe nuclear arsenal and land based forces. One choi would cost U.S. taxpayers an undetermined amou somewhere around 20 or 30 billion dollars to buil new defense system (which might not even work), other choice, slightly less expensive, probably arou a couple of million, would have gone towards t dismantling of weapons and the withdrawal offensive weapons in Europe. The choice sec obvious to me, how about you?

Lazerwitz from pg. 1

While our governmnent continues to develop SDI program and blow up bombs in the Nev desert, we have a new era to prepare ourselves fo the arms race in space. The Reagan Administra and the Pentagon are now ready to test the first sta of SDI. More than a dozen major antimissile tests already planned for the next five years, according the 1986 report to Congress of the Strategic Defe Initiative Organization. The media hype around events makes it seem as though the testing is more "futuristic laser" show for the Administration t actual proving grounds for SDI.

The Reagan Administration has contended t SDI is a bargaining chip, but yet they have also sw to fully deploy the system despite huge costs and m technological barriers. As of yet Reagan has cashed in his chip; is he holding out or does he th this multi-billion dollar project can actually work

The future of the arms race is yet to be determin For a short time last weekend, the world held breath, only to have President Reagan walk a from the table with a refusal to give up his S program. So much for Iceland. Maybe next time, Ron?

In Search of Fine Viewing

BY EVAN WILLIAMS

In a city dominated by commercial theaters, whose over-riding concern is to make as much money as possible, Poor Richard's Cinema is one of a small few theaters that commit themselves to offering films simply for their entertainment value only, rather than exploit that entertainment value as a means to gain money.

Poor Richard's appreciates that the inherent power of film as a compelling, enlightening art form justifies its continued presentation, regardless of a film's potential as an abstract economic commodity.

In evidence to this commitment, Poor Richard's Cinema rarely offers films whose entertainment potential has been refined, or manipulated, towards the creation of a purely commercial, money-making film. Instead, Poor Richard's offers unusual films, films in which the power of cinema to create an art work, a piece of pure entertainment and expression, has been utilized. These films, then, while entertaining and expressing, may not be guaranteed box-office hits.

Notably, therefore, as a consequence of their commitment to the integrity of film art, Poor Richard's Cinema will never make very much money, despite their surprisingly high admission price of $2.75, and despite their being the only local reportory theater with any pretense to making a profit from film.

Since the films which Poor Richard's offers were not designed as commercial ventures, their potential to win for Poor Richard's any substantial profit at all must be slim.

In an economic society which ordinarily prioritizes profits before integrity, Poor Richard's Cinema's commitment to imaginative and thought-provoking films makes their film series an admirable venture indeed, but tenuous and vulnerable for its departure from the dominant economic paradigm. I would hope that anyone who has attended a film at Poor Richard's appreciates their commitment.

However, my admiration for the intentions of Poor Richard's Cinema is not without some ambivalence.

Despite Poor Richard's commitment to offering quality films, their projection facilities are so deplorable that they reduce many fine films to a genuinely mediocre cinema experience. I might well tolerate the mediocrity of their projection facilities, hoping that the innate quality of a given film might transcend the inadequacies of its technical projection.

However, because Poor Richard's charges a comparatively high admission price, the mediocrity of their projection facilities becomes for the regular film aficionado a costly and intolerable annoyance. The mediocrity of the cinema experience at Poor Richard's Cinema does not justify their unreasonably high admission price.

Under proper conditions, film can be a sensorially engrossing, compelling, art form. The capacity of a film to absorb its audience with stunning visual and audio images, combined with the ambiance of a fine old theater, perhaps in the company of a close friend, makes cinema an undeniably unique and pleasant experience.

At Poor Richard's however, the quality of a good film can be seriously compromised. To begin with, the projector at Poor Richard's does not project an especially clear visual image. Furthermore, the screen at Poor Richard's is small, and because of several defects occasionally distorts the visual image. Next, the projectionist sometimes commits distracting mistakes. The sound system is not very good. Finally, Poor Richard's Cinema lacks an adequate ventilation system.

Unlike the CC Film Series, whose projection facilities are similarly mediocre, Poor Richard's Cinema charges a lot of money for their films, almost three times as much as the CC Film Series.

True, the Film Series receives a generous subsidy from the school, whereas Poor Richard's probably loses money even with their present admission price. The fact remains, however, that the price of admission and the quality of cinema experience at Poor Richard's do not correspond.

I have not attended a film at Poor Richard's for many months because I cannot justify spending $2.75 for such a mediocre cinema experience. I jokingly tell my friends that I am boycotting Poor Richard's Cinema. However, I am uncomfortable with the implications of a boycott: a calculated and righteous manipulation of consumerism designed to reduce Poor Richard's to acquiesence does not interest me.

I respect what Poor Richard's is trying to do; I wish merely that the quality of cinema experience offered by Poor Richard's would correspond fairly to the price of admission there. I wish that Poor Richard's would invest in some quality projection equipment, lessons for their projectionist, and a new ventilation system. I wish they would do this soon, because I am equally uncomfortable with missing so many fine films.

Recently, Poor Richard's must have heard about the boycott, and sensing the danger, they are this fall testing my conviction, seducing me into resignation by offering a series of films which they know I want to see. In particular, they feature a film called Sherman's March, a film I am especially anxious to see. I remain firm in my resolve however.

Besides, I have devised a solution which will permit me to attend the film without paying for it—certainly an agreeable price, corresponding nicely to the quality of cinema experience there. As part of my plan, if one of you readers does not object to the high admission price at Poor Richard's, and if you have some extra money, please consider buying me a free ticket to Sherman's March this weekend.

We can attend the film, enjoy it, and afterwards we can suggest to the management that they improve their projection facilities. Please consider this proposal seriously. I will remember you at Christmans.

Iceland Blues

BY T. JOHN CALDWELL

Ronald Reagan is a double-agent. Nothing else can explain the spate of diplomatic reversals suffered by the United States of late. Our president is purposefully trying to discredit his own government; ineptitude cannot explain away recent events.

A plane crashes in Nicaragua revealing obvious government complicity in aiding the contras (at a time when U.S. law prohibits this); Bernard Kalb quits over a "disinformation" campaign; and Ronnie sets himself up for a P.R. fall in Iceland. Who's in charge in Washington?

What's odd about all this is that Ron stormed into the summer of '86 in great shape. I waved my flag a bit after the Libya raids, cheered initially at the passage of tax reform, and beemed at the happy transition in the Philippines. Instead of leading his party to a sure victory this November, however, Republican chances to retain the Senate appear shaky.

Somehow tax reform proved a bit of an anticlimax; continued trade deficits, a stagnant economy, and an entrenchment federal debt overshadowed its passage. Now a double-dose of "disinformation" has threatened to snip the President's coattails even moe. Although the public's initial reaction to the summit impasse has been to rally around the nation's leader, this sentiment will likely fade by November 4; a botched chance for arms control could carry more weight by then.

Whether or not one agrees with President Reagan's commitment to never bargain away his "Star Wars" dream (and this writer does not agree with that dangerous commitment), it was suprising to see Ron duped so easily. Iceland gave Michael Gorbachev a chance to appear conciliatory (he did do some serious bargaining) and make Ronald Reagan appear unnecessarily unbending (a posture popular with conservatives in this country but hardly so with a large portion of the American public and certainly not with our European allies). Certainly Mr. Gorbachev should be made to concede more; real bargaining on Mr. Reagan's part could perhaps work to achieve this. But as long as our President holds on to his improbable and destabilizing vision, Gorbachev (for domestic political reasons alone) cannot be expected to give away much.

Ronald Reagan, of course, is not a Soviet agent. More accurately, Mr. Reagan is doing what he has always done—namely, stick to a few basic principles and persuasively push them on the American people. That his simplistic notions are beginning to get his administration into trouble is not suprising; that he has lost his political sense as well is.

The Niceties of Diversity

BY SHANNON WHEELER

The fall season has come and is quickly leaving. My teacher this block is full of puns, which is refreshing. Any type of humor is refreshing if not necessary. While sitting in the fishbowl writing, several students complained of the live performance being given by the choir. At this I laughed. They said it was distracting and how could they be expected to work, the choir should move or shut the door etc... What a crock.

If the singing is a distraction then it is a healthy one, however I'd prefer to think that my work distracts me from listenting to the music. For my state of mind while listening to the music and watching the leaves fall certainly seems far superior to the stressed and unnatural state of finding coherent words to put on paper. Maybe the role of the computers is to fulfill our basic needs of food and such while allowing us to pursue those activities that make us happy, but there must be a better color than this nasty green.

Speaking of computers and in relation to my last article I am one of those people who learns just enough about this thing to get by. If this thing starts giving me trouble I just move to the other one or get a new "system disk." And if it starts doing strange things or if I think I've pushed the wrong button my reaction is to get my disk out of the silly machine, quickly.

Thank somebody for dogs, who else would raise the significance of fireplugs to such a level. The Springs should get some first time offenders to decoratively paint the fireplugs as a type of community service. Just because things are purposeful doesn't mean they can't be artistic too, and visa versa. Is art still art if it has a purpose beyond the aesthetic?

Monday a friend got me hooked on this video game at 7-11, it is called "Spy Hunter." With a small five dollar investment I've surpassed the scores of my addicted cohorts and gained "status" and some admiration. I've befriended the salesperson while requesting change, and I've become aware of a different society. The 7-11 world is very unlike the old-folks-home for us young-folks that is the CC world. It is certainly more diverse and often more entertaining.

Today while playing "the game" these two teenagers approached the game next to us, they began to play and giggle uproariously with various exclamations. Soon I detected the smell of pot and made the association between it and the silly behavior of the young men. After a few minutes of play they left, it wasn't till then that I noticed that they hadn't even inserted a quarter. Next week I think I'll take up a new hobby, maybe dragging on Nevada in the evenings that would certainly open up new horizons of experience.

"It's a sky blue sky," and the choir has gone back to scales.

institutions, students who feel that they cannot handle an overload always have the option of taking summer school or summer readings courses.

4) Faculty Overload

The proposed independent research and readings courses should not be viewed by the faculty as mandatory. They should be instituted only in those departments which deem them educationally appropriate. Individual instructors should feel free to limit themselves to a manageable number. The intention of this option is that it be truly an independent study opportunity for students and not involve time-consuming tutorials on the part of the faculty sponsor. Speaking realistically, while we want to encourage these alternative types of educational experiences, we must not exaggerate student demand for them. The fact is that students now are taking, on average, 32½ units or 8.09 blocks per year and there is likely, given the typical profile of CC students, to be a proportionate reduction under the new plan. Nonetheless, those of us who take on these independent projects will be committing ourselves to a more intense eight blocks. We recognize this, because of its educational and practical value, to be a necessary cost.

5) Adjunct Program

The joint committees debated the proposed review and expansion of the adjunct program suggested at the September faculty meeting and decided, due to the number and complexity of the questions involved, to defer the issue to a later date. We recommend that this discussion take place in the near future.

6) Development Blocks

We see no reason at this point in time to make any judgments about the possible status and number of Mellon blocks under the new plan. Not only do we not know the exact impact of the change on student demand for courses, but it is even difficult to predict the faculty's future demand for Mellon Blocks. If the number of Mellon Blocks offered should come into question for any department after the eight block year is in place, we strongly encourage the administration to fund a higher level of replacements for Mellon blocks, rather than reduce their number.

7) Faculty Size Increases

If some large departments experience increased pressures on enrollments, despite statistics that indicate that this will not be the case, the administration has indicated that a limited number of additions to the faculty would be considered. On the other hand, some smaller departments are pleased at the possibility of increased enrollments in their courses and of a more equitable distribution of the teaching load among the faculty. It should also be kept in mind that faculty additions are never merely a function of enrollment numbers; curricular needs, the structure of a department are other considerations that affect faculty increase decisions.

8) Guidelines for Alteringf Departmental Offerings

Each department should review its current offereings and assess the balance between: introductory courses, general studies and interdisciplinary courses, intermediate level courses with prerequisites, and advanced courses primarily for majors. Departments should, within reason, keep a comparable balance in their offerings under the eight block year by making proportionate adjustments in the number of courses offered yearly in each category. The Committee on Instruction should take an active role in this process by helping departments make these changes and reviewing each department's course offerings.

III. A motion on implementation proposed by the Eight Block Committee. This motion was not discussed by the Academic Program Committe.

The Eight Block Committee makes the following motion:

That the implementation of the new plan be in the 1986-88 calendar year.

Comments on the Motion:

a) The only immediate activity required by proposal is for departments to plan next ye schedule by January 12. Why wait till this time year to make these same adjustments.

b) As with our transition to the Block Plan, one expects all the details to be settled bel voting and instituting the proposal. Adj adjustments, plans for the winter symposium, can all take place during the rest of the year.

c) The literature of the College will have t rewritten anyway. Why not do it this year? Whi means sending revised materials to prospec students who have already been contacted, we h incurred such additional expense before in the past and, more importantly, we do not believe a student's decision to come to CC depends on th being a ninth block. The main reasons stude choose CC, as anyone who has sat on Admissions Committee knows, are the Block P our size, location and a quality education. Non these will have changed under the new systen

d) Some scheduling conflicts for current jun might occur. However, if we are all prepare extend ourselves for one year, we should be abl respond to their needs effectively.

e) More time for parents, students and alu to become accustomed to the change would benefiial. However, a curriculum decision suc this one is ultimately the responsibility of faculty; it is we who must decide, act, and mak work. The sooner we act and commit ourselves easier it will be to convince others of the meri this plan. If we think it is a good plan, one thi educationally sound and effective in restorin balance between research and teaching, then le institute it next year so that we can do the neces work and reap the benefits of our new calendar soon as possible.

In Defense, from page III

(3) international and multicultural experiences, and (4) study in-depth.

The Eight Block Year could provide a number of opportunities for strengthening diversity as an institutional value. In college-wide sympsia we could examine the diversity of historical consciousness, of values, and of cultural differences to a degree not possible within blocks. One of the drawbacks of the current block system is that many faculty often have to sacrifice breadth for depth or vice-versa. The Eight Block Year, by adding more semester and year-long independent study and collaborative research, would provide a better balance between intense, concentrated blocks and longer-term, contemplative learning and research.

4. Curricular Reform and Innovation

Finally, President Riley calls for the faculty to promote constructive changes in the Block Plan and overall curriculum. The faculty has been working ahrd to achieve a consensus about calendar and curricular issues but until this proposal appeared we clearly did not have the makings of an agreement. Moving to an Eight Block Year calendar will challenge us to think creatively and urgently about curricular matters. The individual and departmental adjustments that a shift to the Eight Block year will demand should inspire us to think anew about such issues and in the process perhaps improve morale, especially since it will represent a nw consensus about the calendar and curriculum.

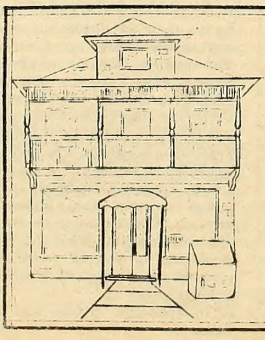
The Eight BLock Year proposal is designe promote curricular reform and innovati Revitalization of independent study, collabora research, adjuncts, and symposia curriculum w invite such innovation. We as a faculty m assume a more consistent and active role in process and show a willingness to experiment pressures of the current nine block year reduc ability for curriculum development and chang also tends to encourage delegation of curric development efforts to specifically design committees. We believe the Eight Block Ye encourage on-going and widespread particip by the faculty in curricular reform and innova

LEVIATHAN

A Journal of Arts and Politics

Coming To Your Doorstep Oct. 30

Deadline for Issue 2, Nov. 15



The Egg House

So close...
So good...
Anything you could want

Come by and see us

1216 N. Nevada

In Search of Fine Viewing

BY EVAN WILLIAMS

In a city dominated by commercial theaters, whose over-riding concern is to make as much money as possible, Poor Richard's Cinema is one of a small few theaters that commit themselves to offering films simply for their entertainment value only, rather than exploit that entertainment value as a means to gain money.

Poor Richard's appreciates that the inherent power of film as a compelling, enlightening art form justifies its continued presentation, regardless of a film's potential as an abstract economic commodity.

In evidence to this commitment, Poor Richard's Cinema rarely offers films whose entertainment potential has been refined, or manipulated, towards the creation of a purely commercial, money-making film. Instead, Poor Richard's offers unusual films, films in which the power of cinema to create an art work, a piece of pure entertainment and expression, has been utilized. These films, then, while entertaining and expressing, may not be guaranteed box-office hits.

Notably, therefore, as a consequence of their commitment to the integrity of film art, Poor Richard's Cinema will never make very much money, despite their surprisingly high admission price of $2.75, and despite their being the only local reportory theater with any pretense to making a profit from film.

Since the films which Poor Richard's offers were not designed as commercial ventures, their potential to win for Poor Richard's any substantial profit at all must be slim.

In an economic society which ordinarily prioritizes profits before integrity, Poor Richard's Cinema's commitment to imaginative and thought-provoking films makes their film series an admirable venture indeed, but tenuous and vulnerable for its departure from the dominant economic paradigm. I would hope that anyone who has attended a film at Poor Richard's appreciates their commitment.

However, my admiration for the intentions of Poor Richard's Cinema is not without some ambivalence.

Despite Poor Richard's commitment to offering quality films, their projection facilities are so deplorable that they reduce many fine films to a genuinely mediocre cinema experience. I might well tolerate the mediocrity of their projection facilities, hoping that the innate quality of a given film might transcend the inadequacies of its technical projection.

However, because Poor Richard's charges a comparatively high admission price, the mediocrity of their projection facilities becomes for the regular film aficionado a costly and intolerable annoyance. The mediocrity of the cinema experience at Poor Richard's Cinema does not justify their unreasonably high admission price.

Under proper conditions, film can be a sensorially engrossing, compelling, art form. The capacity of a film to absorb its audience with stunning visual and audio images, combined with the ambiance of a fine old theater, perhaps in the company of a close friend, makes cinema an undeniably unique and pleasant experience.

At Poor Richard's however, the quality of a good film can be seriously compromised. To begin with, the projector at Poor Richard's does not project an especially clear visual image. Furthermore, the screen at Poor Richard's is small, and because of several defects occasionally distorts the visual image. Next, the projectionist sometimes commits distracting mistakes. The sound system is not very good. Finally, Poor Richard's Cinema lacks an adequate ventilation system.

Unlike the CC Film Series, whose projection facilities are similarly mediocre, Poor Richard's Cinema charges a lot of money for their films, almost three times as much as the CC Film Series.

True, the Film Series receives a generous subsidy from the school, whereas Poor Richard's probably loses money even with their present admission price. The fact remains, however, that the price of admission and the quality of cinema experience at Poor Richard's do not correspond.

I have not attended a film at Poor Richard's for many months because I cannot justify spending $2.75 for such a mediocre cinema experience. I jokingly tell my friends that I am boycotting Poor Richard's Cinema. However, I am uncomfortable with the implications of a boycott: a calculated and righteous manipulation of consumerism designed to reduce Poor Richard's to acquiesence does not interest me.

I respect what Poor Richard's is trying to do; I wish merely that the quality of cinema experience offered by Poor Richard's would correspond fairly to the price of admission there. I wish that Poor Richard's would invest in some quality projection equipment, lessons for their projectionist, and a new ventilation system. I wish they would do this soon, because I am equally uncomfortable with missing so many fine films.

Recently, Poor Richard's must have heard about the boycott, and sensing the danger, they are this fall testing my conviction, seducing me into resignation by offering a series of films which they know I want to see. In particular, they feature a film called Sherman's March, a film I am especially anxious to see. I remain firm in my resolve however.

Besides, I have devised a solution which will permit me to attend the film without paying for it—certainly an agreeable price, corresponding nicely to the quality of cinema experience there. As part of my plan, if one of you readers does not object to the high admission price at Poor Richard's, and if you have some extra money, please consider buying me a free ticket to Sherman's March this weekend.

We can attend the film, enjoy it, and afterwards we can suggest to the management that they improve their projection facilities. Please consider this proposal seriously. I will remember you at Christmans.

Iceland Blues

BY T. JOHN CALDWELL

Ronald Reagan is a double-agent. Nothing else can explain the spate of diplomatic reversals suffered by the United States of late. Our president is purposefully trying to discredit his own government; ineptitude cannot explain away recent events.

A plane crashes in Nicaragua revealing obvious government complicity in aiding the contras (at a time when U.S. law prohibits this); Bernard Kalb quits over a "disinformation" campaign; and Ronnie sets himself up for a P.R. fall in Iceland. Who's in charge in Washington?

What's odd about all this is that Ron stormed into the summer of '86 in great shape. I waved my flag a bit after the Libya raids, cheered initially at the passage of tax reform, and beemed at the happy transition in the Philippines. Instead of leading his party to a sure victory this November, however, Republican chances to retain the Senate appear shaky.

Somehow tax reform proved a bit of an anticlimax; continued trade deficits, a stagnant economy, and an entrenchment federal debt overshadowed its passage. Now a double-dose of "disinformation" has threatened to snip the President's coattails even moe. Although the public's initial reaction to the summit impasse has been to rally around the nation's leader, this sentiment will likely fade by November 4; a botched chance for arms control could carry more weight by then.

Whether or not one agrees with President Reagan's commitment to never bargain away his "Star Wars" dream (and this writer does not agree with that dangerous commitment), it was suprising to see Ron duped so easily. Iceland gave Michael Gorbachev a chance to appear conciliatory (he did do some serious bargaining) and make Ronald Reagan appear unnecessarily unbending (a posture popular with conservatives in this country but hardly so with a large portion of the American public and certainly not with our European allies). Certainly Mr. Gorbachev should be made to concede more; real bargaining on Mr. Reagan's part could perhaps work to achieve this. But as long as our President holds on to his improbable and destabilizing vision, Gorbachev (for domestic political reasons alone) cannot be expected to give away much.

Ronald Reagan, of course, is not a Soviet agent. More accurately, Mr. Reagan is doing what he has always done—namely, stick to a few basic principles and persuasively push them on the American people. That his simplistic notions are beginning to get his administration into trouble is not suprising; that he has lost his political sense as well is.

The Niceties of Diversity

BY SHANNON WHEELER

The fall season has come and is quickly leaving. My teacher this block is full of puns, which is refreshing. Any type of humor is refreshing if not necessary. While sitting in the fishbowl writing, several students complained of the live performance being given by the choir. At this I laughed. They said it was distracting and how could they be expected to work, the choir should move or shut the door etc... What a crock.

If the singing is a distraction then it is a healthy one, however I'd prefer to think that my work distracts me from listenting to the music. For my state of mind while listening to the music and watching the leaves fall certainly seems far superior to the stressed and unnatural state of finding coherent words to put on paper. Maybe the role of the computers is to fulfill our basic needs of food and such while allowing us to pursue those activities that make us happy, but there must be a better color than this nasty green.

Speaking of computers and in relation to my last article I am one of those people who learns just enough about this thing to get by. If this thing starts giving me trouble I just move to the other one or get a new "system disk." And if it starts doing strange things or if I think I've pushed the wrong button my reaction is to get my disk out of the silly machine, quickly.

Thank somebody for dogs, who else would raise the significance of fireplugs to such a level. The Springs should get some first time offenders to decoratively paint the fireplugs as a type of community service. Just because things are purposeful doesn't mean they can't be artistic too, and visa versa. Is art still art if it has a purpose beyond the aesthetic?

Monday a friend got me hooked on this video game at 7-11, it is called "Spy Hunter." With a small five dollar investment I've surpassed the scores of my addicted cohorts and gained "status" and some admiration. I've befriended the salesperson while requesting change, and I've become aware of a different society. The 7-11 world is very unlike the old-folks-home for us young-folks that is the CC world. It is certainly more diverse and often more entertaining.

Today while playing "the game" these two teenagers approached the game next to us, they began to play and giggle uproariously with various exclamations. Soon I detected the smell of pot and made the association between it and the silly behavior of the young men. After a few minutes of play they left, it wasn't till then that I noticed that they hadn't even inserted a quarter. Next week I think I'll take up a new hobby, maybe dragging on Nevada in the evenings that would certainly open up new horizons of experience.

"It's a sky blue sky," and the choir has gone back to scales.

The Economic Roots of Apartheid and the role of American investments

BY ANNABEL LERMER

The second in a two-part series.

A turning point in South African history is the 1948 election of the Nationalist Party. This transformed power from the hands of the English-speaking to the Afrikaan-speaking (a language stemming from Dutch) population. The Nationalist Party set about strengthening the already existing patterns of racial discrimination, marking plans for total segregation of races and programs of "seperate dvelopment." Those plans forbid different races to live together—blacks are denied residence in urban areas and are forced to live in the black 'homelands' which account for 13% of the land in South Africa.

While total segregation of races has been maintained as an aim. The white rulers of Apartheid recognize the undesirability of this aim; total segregation would devastate the white Apartheid economy which depends on cheap black labor for its survival. White South Africa is entirely reliant on this black labor—thus blacks are allowed into white areas, but only to work. For blacks to be allowed into white areas they must already be employed—blacks must return to their designated homelands upon losing a job where they await a new contract. Thus these homelands serve as physical reserves of cheap labor for the white economy.

To enforce this, a "pass law" system was designed which enables the government to keep tabs on the movement of all South African blacks. All blacks over 16 must carry passes at all times. Failure to do so results in immediate arrest.

One of the recent 'reforms' revealed by the Botha goverment under the weight of world pressure is the abolishment of passes; instead Botha claims that all residents of South Africa will be required to carry I.D. cards. It remains to be seen how many whites will be arrested or even challenged for their I.D.'s. The pass system restricts free movement—in 1978 alone 30,000 blacks were arrested for pass law violations and there have been countless demonstrations and severe opposition to these laws.

Migratory labor, the pass laws, and the control of blacks in the white economy are integral parts of the Apartheid system, which, like all social systems, is based on an economic system. These laws forbid the majority of population from owning land and conducting business—thus ensuring that the countries wealth, power and priviledge are maintained in the hands of the white minority.

After the war South Africa's cheap labor economy and mineral wealth attracted millions of dollars of American investment. Between 1943 and 1978 investments grew from $50 million dollars to $2 billion dollars—an increase of 4000%. This was despite protest from students, T.V. organizations, the UN General Assembly, and a number of other international and religious organizations.

Growing criticism provoked US corporations to prepare an agreement in defense of investment in South Africa. While attraction to South Africa was based on high profit margins, corporations in South Africa claimed they serve as a "progressive force" for change. This argument is based on an idea that by strengthening the national economy, benefits "trickle down," more jobs are created, wages rise, and political and social change will follow.

Yet historical facts prove the fallacies in this argument. The Gross Domestic Product of South Africa has increased by 2000% since World War II, yet this has failed to trickle down to blacks. Most of the black population continues to exist in poverty. In 1976 blacks, constituting 71% of the population, took home 23% of the national income while whites, 16% of population, pocketed 67% of the we... Just as economic growth has failed trickle down to black, political and s... rights have failed to materialize. E... before the current state of emerg... thousands of blacks have been impris... every year. A University of Johannesb... study found that over 75% of th... imprisoned reported being tortured.

Such measures as the Sullivan Princ... of employment serve to strengthen white minority rule in South Africa. U.S. government favors the South Afr... regime as a moderate stabalizing for... regime that is anti-Soviet and happ... play the Western policeman in ... Southern Hemisphere and content... supply the US with important mine... Yet this has placed the US on the wr... side of a liberation struggle. The ... government is quite happy to implem... cosmetic changes in South Africa in ... same way that the 1960's civil ri... legislation implemented cosmetic cha... concerning economic racial inequality.

Unlike the problem of racial unequ... in the US, the Apartheid regime ... unreformable. Quite simply the e... system must and will be dismant... Employment codes and punative sanct... have yet to prove themselves a progres... force in change in South Africa.

A large scale withdrawal of capitol fr... South Africa would however ha... enormous effects on apartheid; ... Apartheid is, at its most basic, an econo... system. It is one thing to show disapp... as the US is currently doing, yet it is ... another to use the fiscal power ... American corporations clearly have ...

The opinions here are not necessa... those of the Catalyst.

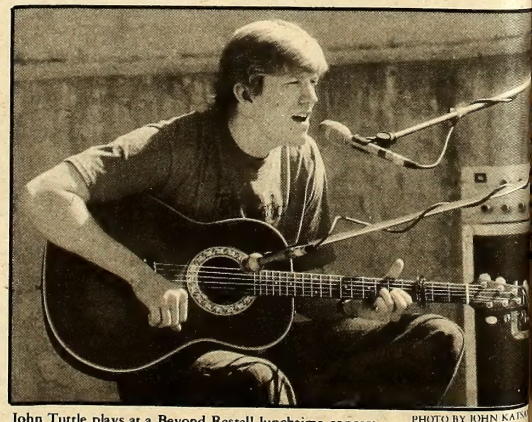
Do you know of an interesting ... person, or happening that you would ... to share with the CC community? Com... the Catalyst (held) in the basement ... Cossit and we'll see what we can ... Meetings are Sundays at 7:00, Monday's ... first week of the block.

by Rob MacKinlay

ARTS

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Sabia played in Packard last Saturday night. The CC community enjoyed their Latin style music, and may or may not have appreciated the political overtones of the L.A. group's songs.



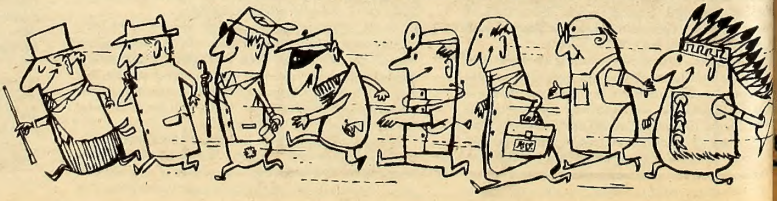
John Tuttle plays at a Beyond Rastall lunchtime concert. PHOTO BY JOHN KATS...

☆☆☆☆☆☆☆☆☆☆☆☆☆☆☆☆☆☆☆☆☆☆☆☆☆☆☆☆

Run, Don't Walk to See

Scenes From An Execution

This Weekend



MoviesMoviesMoviesMovie

Bizarre Experiences On Film: Peggy Sue Got Married and Blue Velvet

BY NINA DE GRAMONT

O.K., who's had this dream? You're nocently going about your life when all of sudden...Wham!...you're back in high hool. Walking through the halls meone grabs you and places you in one of ese chairs with the little desk attached to Then that math teacher, the one with e polyester blazer and the brown socks, arts handing out an ALGEBRA TEST. obody told you there was a test today, you n't even remember being enrolled in this ass, but still YOU HAVE TO TAKE IT. ancis Coppola's Peggy Sue Got Married sort of an extended version of this eam, only a little less harrowing and a lot ore fun.

The movie starts out as Peggy Sue, layed by Kathleen Turner, heads to her th High School reunion. Once there, she is to tell all her old classmates that her arriage to high school sweet heart icolas Cage is ending in divorce. derstandably, she's a wreck. "We got arried too soon," she confides to a friend, nd ended up blaming each other for erything that went wrong in our lives." ddenly, with no explanation, she finds rself back in 1960. Apparently, Peggy Sue s the chance to live her life over, owing everything she knew in 1985.

Despite the tempting comparison, ggy Sue Got Married is not another Back the Future. There's no flashy time achine, no mad scientist, no bad acting. ggy Sue finds herself in a world she loves th another chance at life, and she makes most of it. She has a romantic, starry ening with "the one boy in high school I sh I'd gone to bed with." She hands the ank math test back to Mr. Polyester ker and says "I happen to know I'll have use for Algebra in the future and believe e. I speak from experience." Most portantly, she has to decide again ether or not to marry Nicolas Cage, who really loves, knowing the marriage will in divorce.

If nothing else, see Peggy Sue Got rried for the performances. Kathleen rner is funny and endearing as the placed Peggy Sue, and Nicolas Cage is nderful as both the slick eighteen year prom king and the middle aged pliance salesman. The acting, the story d the production come together to make ggy Sue Got Married a worthwhile and rtaining movie.

BY JILL MAZURSKY

David Lynch's Blue Velvet brings new meaning to the word sleaze. The question isn't what's the movie about; the question is what isn't it about. It's got everything; love, romance, violence, drugs, and plenty of sex. Not that any of those elements make this a good movie. It's an interesting movie, it's an experience. If you thought Walt Disney had imagination, wait until you see what David Lynch can think up.

Unlike other cultish, off beat films, Blue Velvet has a relatively simple story. A preppyish homeboy, Jeffery Beaumont (Kyle MacLachan of Dune) finds a human ear and after bringing it to the local small town detective who treats him with a highly suspicious vagueness, Jeffrey decides to investigate the situation himself.

Blue Velvet is not your typical movie experience

The detective just happens to have a beautiful ivory-girlish daughter Sandy (Laura Dern), who too, is psyched to find out what is really going on. In the process of falling love, Jeffery and Sandy go beyond the underworld of America and into a world of ultimate sleeze and nastiness. Jeffery witnesses things that make him question his entire existence. He wants to know more and more and finally he is involved in the most ultimately complex drug/sex scandal ever. One thing leads to another and just as I would say to myself "wow, that was really gross," something even far more startling would happen.

Blue Velvet is not your typical movie experience. Lynch has used every cliche in the book and simply made Barbie go to the Hide and Seek Complex and open her eyes to a world that exists and creeps into people's lives when they least expect it. Now maybe that's interesting, but powerful art it is not. You've got to laugh at Dean Stockwell in drag and at Dennis Hopper doing Nitrous Oxide to the song "Blue Velvet" and having an oediply orgasmic experience. Wholesome this movie is not. I won't give away any more. All I have to say is Whaaaaoooooo what a bizarre experience.

60's Folk Singer to Play at CC

BY KATIE DALSEMER

Tonight (Friday, October 17) at 8:15 Livesounds will present folksinger extraordinaire Jean Redpath in Packard Hall. Now, I've never been too big on folksingers. That is, until now.

Redpath, who hails from Scotland, launched her career in the United States in the early '60's during the emerging folk music revival. Since that time she has received much recognition and has become, according to Stephen Holder of the New York Times, "an unequaled vocal technician among contemporary folk interpreters."

During her 25 year career Redpath has recorded about 14 albums on various labels. Four of these are part of a project to record all 323 songs of Robert Burns. Burns was an 18th century Scottish poet. Although the poetry is well-known, Burn's numerous songs lay in obscurity till Redpath started her musical detective work in the mid '70's.

Redpath, however, is best known for her exceptional live performances. Throughout her career she has played in all 50 states and various spots around Europe. In 1977 she was one of only four performers commanded to appear before the royal family at Edinburgh Castle during the Queen's jubilee.

Her performances include selections from her 250 song repetroire which range from childhood and drinking songs to classic ballads and many of the works of Robert Burns. Redpath delivers the songs with a voice that superlatives such as beautiful, clear, rich, and vibrant don't do justice to.

Though her voice needs no accompaniment, she also plays the acoustic guitar during her concerts.

Although Redpath is an exceptional entertainer she is also a teacher. And this is another special plus of her shows. As quoted in The Boston Globe, she explains that she is "always tryin' to widen audience's horizons with Burns, with any kind of Scottish image people may have, and with Scottish music and Scottish songs in general.

When not touring she makes radio and television appearances and teaches classes on Scottish and other traditional music at Stirling University in Scotland. However, we are lucky enough to have her here at CC to perform her magic tonight at 8:15 in Packard Hall. This promises to be a great show. Tickets are $7.00 for the general public, $2.00 for CC students and are available at the Student Center, 931 North Nevada.

Correction

The quote by Joanne Klein in last week's play preview should have read "She has to 'lick the doge's crevices' just to get the materials for her rebellion." The Catalyst regrets the error.

Hair Designers for Men & Women

RAPUNZEL

Style cuts, Cellophanes, Perms & Color.

Nexus, Redken, and Tri products available for sale.

Stop in or make your appointment:

827 N. Tejon at Cache La Poudre 632-3532

THE COLORADO SPRINGS FINE ARTS CENTER

OCTOBER CALENDAR

30 West Dale Street / 634-5581 / Tuesday - Saturday: 10 am to 5 pm / Sunday: 1 pm to 5 pm

Gallery Admission:

Members Free Adults 2.50 Students & Seniors 1.50 Children 1.00 Under Five Free Sundays Free

Oct 17, 18	Ikebana International Flower Arranging Exhibitions. Admission free. Call 634-5581 for demonstration times.
Oct 19	1986 Collector's Showcase Public Opening. Art exhibition and sale co-sponsored with the El Paso Civic & Arts Foundation. Artwork by significant regional artists. Through November 30.
Oct 19, 20, 21	The Five Suns Of Mexico, narrated by Jon Luc Sterckx. World Horizons Travel Film series. Call 634-5581. Times vary / $4.75.
Oct 21	Falstaff / Chimes At Midnight. Classic Film Series. 8:00 pm / $2.50.
Oct 30	Martha Graham Dance Company. Performance plus reception with principal company dancers. Call 634-5581. 8:00 pm / $75.

From Russia With Love

BY LISA LANE

Collectively, America knows the nation. A bunch of alcoholics wearing fur hats. Slimy bolshevik pigs. Nyet. Fat women who do laundry and beat rugs. Moscow girls really blow my mind; they leave the West behind. Vodka. Raskolnikov's room. Quening for bread. Vodka. Better dead...! Go to that summit and let 'em have it; they'll be back down. Free Afghanistan. Vodka.

Last Wednesday, Emanuil Sheynkman and his wife, Ksenia, sipped tea with a group of students in the Russian House and described the act of smuggling his balalaika and mandolin out of the Soviet Union. On Friday night, he demonstrated to the audience that the struggle was trivial compared to the enjoyment and beauty generated at the concert.

On Saturday a small group of students listened to Ukranian music, watched Ukranian dancers, and ate Russian torte. The excitement increased: these students also learned three Russian dances to share with the family on Christmas break.

A few short excursions into the rich history of the Soviet Union may prove harmful to those misconceptions we cherish. The histories of the balalaika and mandolin, for instance, expose a humble people with a real knack for living. So too do Ukranian dances display a certain wit and passion that must, somewhere, still exist despite the perpetual grey cloud of depression that hides the U.S.S.R. from the rest of the world.

In order to remain detached from that country with a satisfied prejudice, stay away from the Russian House this year. A real love for this stuff may result from any dealings with these people.

Are these boots available in the U.S.? PHOTO BY LISA HEMPSTEAD

CAFE BIJOU
DINING & SPIRITS
• serving • lunch & light dinners, exquisite desserts & coffees
• first floor •
jazz, cocktails & hors d'oeuvres
• second floor •
Trip the night fantastic in a turn of the century home
411 East Bijou 632-9640
Bring in this ad for a free specialty drink with your lunch or dinner

ConcertsConcertsConcert

Steve Winwood: An Enduring Legend

BY THE VOICE

Truly great performers possess a certain spirit that gives them the ability to create special moments. Images like Reggie Jackson's third 1977 World Series Game 6 homerun soaring into the October night haze or Judy Garland captivating her audience in "The Wizard of Oz" distinguish these performers from their peers. Steve Winwood is such a performer, and his concert Monday at Denver's McNichols Arena (with Level 42) illustrated both his mastery of piano and guitar and his unequalled songwriting talent.

Level 42 opened the show with a very professional and surprisingly talented forty-five minute set. Strong vocals and impressive bass and guitar work highlighted the set, which included an excellent performance of the band's current hit "Something About You."

Winwood began his set with an abbreviated solo piano version of "Low Spark of High Heeled Boys" that quickly established his tremendous stage presence and instantly captivated the audience. He followed this Traffic number with "Take it as it Comes" from his new album, an upbeat song that featured a searing guitar solo from Winwood. The remainder of his nearly two hour performance encompassed Winwood's entire career from Spencer Davis Group (1965) to his various solo albums, excluding any music from his days with Eric Clapton in the 1960's supergroup Blind Faith. Winwood continuously shifted from guitar to various keyboards, and even played mandolin on "Sundown" from his "Arc of a Diver" LP and the title track from his newest offering, "Back In The High Life." Stevie's versatility and energy belied his advancing age and kept the audience enthusiastic throughout the show.

Winwood's band did an impressive job of bridging the gap between the different musical styles that have characterized his twenty one year rock and roll career. From a rousing version of Traffic's "Glad" to an equally dynamic "Higher Love," the band offered crisp, enthusiastic drumming and solid performances on bass, guitar, horns and percussion. Especially gratifying was an extended version of Spencer Davis Group classic, "I'm A Man," that featured fine solos from each band member.

The obvious highlight of the show, despite this excellent backup support, was Winwood. At thirty eight, he displayed energy and power that solidified his position as rock and roll's most prolific enduring performer. Winwood's voice was clear and strong, and his music was similarly impressive, indicative of his status as a truly great performer.

Lazy Congenial R.E.M. in Boulder

BY J. REED

You read the review of their album a little over a month ago in the paper. And, if you were smart, you bought the album. And, if you were adventurous as well as smart (as well as tolerant of poor acoustics of the CU Events Center) you bought tickets to their concert and ventured up to Boulder last Thursday. Then again, maybe you didn't buy the album and opted for Pub Club instead of the concert.

So, your loss. They are R.E.M., and what you missed was an opportunity to see one of America's most original up and coming bands. Their latest album, Life's Rich Pageant, is at the top of Rolling Stone's college chart, and the first single from the album, "Fall On Me," is receiving more airplay than anything they have previously released.

The selection of songs for the concert ran the gamut from oldest to newest and featured a few notable cover tunes. The show A slow beginning was blamed on the air by vocalist Michael Stipe, but the band picked up with the Venture's classic "Walk—Don't Run" (familiar to sports fans you due to its popularity in the Pit basketball house). Favorites such as "Can't Get Much From Here," "Pretty Persuasion" and "Catapult" kept the crowd on their feet for most of the show.

Stipes demeanor throughout the performance was one of lazy congeniality and he paused often to share some of his personal anecdotes. Usually under the cover of an introduction to the next song these stories basically had nothing to do with what the band ended up playing. The audience was extraordinarily well behaved with a few exceptions, but a well placed "Shut the fuck up" from Stipe served to quiet the dissentors. A video backdrop accompanied several of the songs and added a sort—of home movie—surreal touch to the show.

I'm not going to bore you with a review of what they played and how well they played it. I was told that R.E.M. wasn't any better on concert after their Fables of the Reconstruction tour. I beg to differ. The show I saw was a highly entertaining show by a very talented band. And yes, sometimes you can understand Michael Stipe when he sings. And even if you can't, the entertainment enough that he is not like a leprauchan. And no, they didn't play "Radio Free Europe."

EVERY WEDNESDAY IS COLORADO COLLEGE NIGHT!
$1 COVER with your CC student I.d. only
+CHEAP COLD WET STUFF
8 until 12
18 ID Required
ANNEX
632-7251

What's On Your Turntable

Danny Riorda—Sophomore—Art
The B52's, "Bouncing off the Satellites"

Dave Lieberman—Senior—Political Science
Steely Dan, "Greatest Hits"

Tanya Chaffee—Junior—Biology
Simple Minds, "New Gold Dream"

David Evans—Senior—Political Science
John Prine, "Sweet Revenge"

Marc Rosenbach—Sophomore—Undecided
Grateful Dead, "Red Rocks '85: Second Set"

Katie Hodges—Sophomore—Art
Jimmy Cliff, "The Harder They Come"

ootball Blasts to 3rd Win

Fans freeze in stands while they watch the Tigers roar.

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

BY JAMES S. GRANTZ

The CC Tigers evened their record at 3-3 last Saturday after easily handling the Trinity Tigers from Texas 20-3, at cold and snowy Washburn Field. The loss was the sixth straight for Trinity.

CC dominated the line of scrimmage throughout the afternoon both offensively and defensively. CC scored on their first possession of the afternoon when QB Charley Lorimer found SE Matt Holmes alone in the end zone for an 11 yard TD. Trinity came back on their only sustained drive of the afternoon. Trinity advanced to the CC 27 before settling for a 37 yard field goal. That would be Trinity's last score of the day. CC freshman RB Rob Seims scored on a 1 yard run giving the Tigers a 14-3 halftime lead.

In the second half the Tiger defense shut down Trinity's comeback attempt. The Tigers allowed only 6 complete passes for 67 yards while knocking down 7 and intercepting 1. In all CC forced 3 turnovers. The CC offense did its fair share in the second half as well. They turned the ball over just once and had sustained drives that kept Trinity in poor field position. Senior HB Phil Apodala scored the game's final TD by diving over from the Trinity 1 yard line.

The Tigers are idle next week. They will come back Oct. 25 versus Trinity College (ND) at 1:30, on Washburn Field.

Rob Doyle toys with rodent.

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Turtle Necks, Tights, and Cheers

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Shelly Separovich survived biting to help team beat Cortland.

Gophers Drop CC

pening the season against a team that been picked to win the division is not easy way to start the year. And the orado College Tigers found that out last kend when the hockey team hosted the nnesota Gophers. The Tigers are now 0- after the first weekend of HA/Hockey East play with a rtbreaking 7-6 loss Friday night and an contest on Saturday to the University Minnesota.

t one point Friday, the Tigers led 5-4 scoring three goals to overcome the cit. The Gophers tied it up at 5-5, then as Minnesota took advantage of a er play in the last twenty-two seconds he third period. That ended the Tigers' es of a first game victory.

opes were high Saturday night and the ers came out skating hard. In front of ger crowd. CC scored early and held a lead for twenty minutes.

The game plan changed in the second period though when Minnesota went on a rampage scoring four goals. The Tigers answered a couple but the Gophers blasted back with more, for an 8-5 victory.

Seniors Rick Boh and Rob Doyle are once again the leaders in points for the Tigers. As juniors, they led the team with 59 points a piece and so far this year have posted 6 points each. Doyle had three goals and three assists while Boh assisted four goals and tallied two of his own. Sophomore Tim Budy scored two goals and set up one and Doug Clarke also chipped in three points with one goal and two assists on his return to CC hockey.

This weekend the Tigers are on the road for a two-game series against Northern Michigan University (1-1). They return the next weekend for a home/away series with Denver.

1986-87 WCHA STANDINGS

	GP	W	L	T	PTS	GF	AVG	GA	AVG
North Dakota (2-0-0)	2	2	0	0	4	13	6.5	3	1.5
Denver	2	2	0	0	4	12	6.0	6	3.0
Minnesota	2	2	0	0	4	15	7.5	11	5.5
Wisconsin (1-1-0)	2	1	1	0	2	8	4.0	7	3.5
Northern Michigan (1-1-0)	2	1	1	0	2	7	3.5	8	4.0
Colorado College (0-2-0)	2	0	2	0	0	11	5.5	15	7.5
Michigan Tech (0-2-0)	2	0	2	0	0	6	3.0	12	6.0
Minnesota-Duluth (0-2-0)	2	0	2	0	0	3	1.5	13	6.5

BY KAREN WILLOUGHBY AND ANNA SHORT

The C.C. womens soccer team defeated S.M.U. and S.U.N.Y. Cortland by the scores of 5-0 and 4-2 (OT) last weekend. Fine individual performances combined with traditional C.C. teamwork gave the C.C. women their 10th win and 9th shut-out of the season against the S.M.U. squad. Jennifer Murphree's hat-trick speared the offensive attack. Goals were also scored by Kerri Tashiro and Ann Cernicek.

The S.U.N.Y. Cortland game, however, proved to be a different experience. In this game, only after their frozen toes had thawed, could these exhausted teammates smile with each other. This happiness, however, came 30 minutes later than head coach Dang Pibulvech anticipated. Two goals by leading scorer Kerri Tashiro gave C.C. a comfortable 1st half lead, but periodical "mental lapses and confusion," according to Pibulvech and assistant Austin Daniels allowed Cortland to recover from this half time lead, and send the game into overtime. In fact, for the first time on the Stewart Field, the opponants were also taking shots on the keeper. However, CC'S own Janine Szpara was in goal. The OT period brought forth the Tigers true test of character. The CC women rose to the occasion. They dominated every phase of the game. Within minutes, defender Anna Short's cross connected with attacking striker, Karen Willoughby for the 1st overtime game winning tally. Jennifer Murphree also scored after single-handedly beating several defenders in route to the Tigers 2nd overtime goal.

The Tiger's record now stands at 11-1. Their national ranking moved up to 3rd. Only U.N.C. Chapel Hills and Cal-Berkely are ranked ahead of CC, but the quality and competition of all of the top 15 ranked teams is impressive. Anything can happen in the upcoming games. Pibulvech views the 3rd place ranking as a "good incentive" to do well. He stresses, however, the minute differences of quality between CC and upcoming opponents. The Tigers will face five of the top 10 teams in the nation over the next 3 weekends. Anything could happen, but the Tigers have enough confidence in their teamwork and tactical ability to view these games as a challenge . . . they are ready. Their final week of regular season play begins at 3:30 today versus 7th ranked William and Mary. The game promises to be a clash of similar styles and ability. Games are also on Saturday, versus Texas Christian at 3:00 and Sunday against Somona State at 12:30. Free kegs for the first 500 fans. Come rant and rave. Come on, be radical - for your 3rd ranked C.C. Tigers!!!!!!!

CC forwards in recent action vs. Trinity. PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

CC Survives Mud Battle

The CC men's soccer team's attempt at earning a sixth straight NCAA playoff berth ended unceremoniously last weekend on a rain-soaked field in Grinell, Iowa. Needing to win both games on the Iowa road trip, the Tigers could not find the good fortune or the finishing ability to fulfill their lofty goal.

After an 800 mile bus trip, CC had four hours to shake out the kinks before they took on St. Mary's College, a big, hustling squad with players that look like they've played soccer for three days at most. The Tigers have a history of performing very poorly against this type of team, but not on this day. Early goals by Alec Rekow and Ricky Garcia dispelled any notions of a St. Mary's upset. Todd Walker, Chip Sagal, and Mike Blaxill each contributed a goal apiece while Matt Slothower effectively shut off the St. Mary offense and CC drove to a 5-0 victory.

Innundated with a week's worth of rain, the field for the contest between Wooster college and CC was virtually unplayable. In the second half, ankle deep mud prevented the ball from even rolling on CC's offensive half of the field—generally that is not condusive to scoring goals. At halftime the game was tied 0-0 even though CC had some scoring chances. In the second half though, CC's season long misfortune continued. Mike Fraterelli was forced to save a Wooster shot with his hands and the penalty shot was converted. Mike Blaxill was sent off soon afterwards by an incompetent and paranoid referee. Two bogus defensive mistakes allowed Wooster to ice the game 3-0.

This afternoon the Tiges take on tough Regis College at 4 o'clock on the football field. Sunday number one ranked Scranton comes in to test the Tigers. It should be a great game.

Ed McMahon Misses Winter Fun Club

BY CAROL AND RYAN SHAFFER

Spectators thought it was the first congregation of the Pikes Peak Winter Fun Club. Who were these masked men and women? This wasn't my beautiful wife! But no, it was those crazed runners of CC's Cross Country teams, freezing their tights off. The women's and men's teams co-hosted the most exciting annual event at CC last Saturday morning—the CC Cross Country Invitational.

Sophomore harrier Jeff Brazil commented that "besides 99.5% of the CC student body, the only spectator missing was Ed McMahon." Ed didn't know what he was missing, with junior Scott Kang winning the collegiate title and placing third overall with a 26:49 for 5 miles. Freshman Terri Grzybowski (grub-owski) paced the women's team with a 20:16 for 5k, placing 5th overall.

Mary Armijo (rumored to be Ed's personal friend), Carol Shaffer and Liz Pryson were separated by only three places in 24th, 26th, and 28th respectively. Rounding out the women's team were Captain Teresa Ellbogen, Emily "Oh My" Godfrey, Mia Cadmus and Lara Fedor, running her first race of the year. Mia ran a gutsy 23:47, a personal record for the year. Captain Ellbogen said "I think the team did really well in adverse conditions, too bad our home course isn't in Hawaii."

The men's race started at 9:00. "The NCAA wouldn't even test for dru early," commented junior Pat Kie wouldn't have mattered if they did, they couldn't have caught Erik Bro placing 15th in his first collegiate two years. The Reverend Ben H placing 39th, ran a screamin catching walk-on Ted Perkings (41s only a half mile to go. Vic Red Ryan Scheaefffier and Paul "Feelin Koch finished 43rd, 44th and rounding out the varsity squad. "Th couldn't have finished 5th with Reverend's prayer," rejoyc anonymous frosh.

The men's J.V., consisting of Se Scott "Marathon" Gorthy, Steve Pat Kiernan, Matt Meuller, and Peters, dueled it out for the qualifying places on next week's tr team. Seb, Scott and Steve took th trip behind curtain #3. The highl J.V. had to be Steve Miller show displeasure concerning Saga breakfa messy finish. CC's only unattached was Tom Peterson.

Because coaches Bonnie and Tef know the wingspan of an African Sp both teams will be thrown into the of Hayes, Kansas next weekend, the the Fort Hayes State Invitational.

Seb Suhl summed up the feelings teams in wishfully stating, "I hope be there."

Sport Shorts

Attention: There is a new super glue on the market...Very exclusive...Can only be purchased at the World Arena on Friday and Saturday. This new glue seems to be holding ones derriere firmly on the seats at the Hockey Games. It has only been tried by students of CC. The name I'm sure all of you are waiting to here is, Apathetica Studentcia. It would be nice if we could find a solvent to get rid of this adhesive. I'm sure the team would find this gratifying.

A Hockey Fan

Volleyball: Hosting the annual Classic, Colorado College won its fi matches on Friday to gain a be Saturday's semifinals, where the lost to eventual tournament ch Wisconsin-La Crosse. LaCrosse d Bethel College in the title matc defeated Ft. Hays State in the thir match, going 5-1 overall in the tourn to improve its 1986 record to Freshman hitter Cathy Costel junior setter Amy Smith earn tournament recognition.

This Week's Schedule

Friday, Oct. 17
Women's soccer vs. William & 3 p.m.
Men's soccer vs. Regis, 4 p.m.
Hockey at Northern Michiga p.m.

Saturday, Oct. 18
Women's soccer vs. Texas Ch 2 p.m.
Cross country (men and women Hays (KS) Invitational
Hockey at Northern Michiga p.m.

Sunday, Oct. 19
Women's soccer vs. Sonoma, 1
Men's soccer vs. Scranton, 2 p.

Tuesday, Oct. 21
Men's soccer vs. Grinnel, 4 p.m.

LSAT began Oct. 5

Still Accepting Registrations

Stanley H. KAPLAN Educational Center LTD.

CLASSES HELD AT DOWNTOWN RAINTREE INN I-25 & BIJOU

Call 761-8904 Now!

WE'LL DO YOUR LAUNDRY!!!

WASHED
DRIED
FOLDED

Suds 'um Laundry & Cleaners

1931 W. Uintah (across from Uintah Garden 473-3756

Special student offer w/C

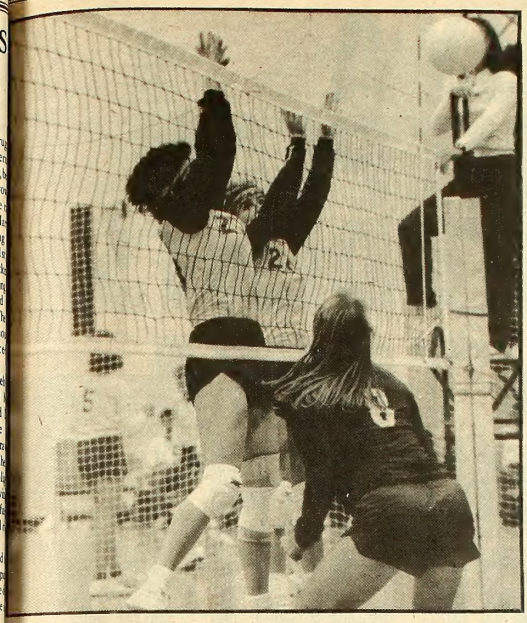

PHOTO BY ANJ GARDNER

Julie James, Lisa Korte, and the rest of the CC volleyball team fly to California during block break for the Occidental College Tournament.

Liberal-Arts Athletes

BY DEAN CAMPELL

With the onset of autumn comes the rites of passage for all of CC's non-varsity athletes: Intramural sports. Characterized by an intensity not always equalled by certain varsity teams, CC's Intramurals provide an opportunity for lay athletes to vent their academic and personal frustrations and experience the pride and comraderie that are the hallmarks of team sports. On the fields of flag football and soccer, and the volleyball courts, epic battles take place that entrench these stellar athletes as legends in their own minds.

Flag football generally offers the most exciting viewing, and usually the most volatile situations. Traditionally separated according to fraternity or dormitory, there is no love lost between any of these teams, and tempers inevitably expand. Besides the ripping of clothes and pawing and scratching that normally accompany the game, more than one contest this year has ended with the letting of blood or at least serious intentions to do so. Fortunately, cooler heads eventually prevail, and the combatants act reasonably civil toward each other until their next chance to batter and maul their despised opponents.

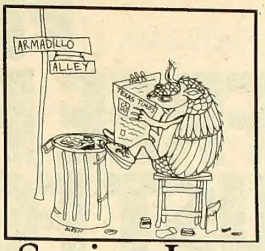
This year, the team to beat seems to be the elder Kappa Sig squad, with each Phi Delt, Beta and Fiji fielding their customary strong teams. Relying on height, strength and hard work, the Sigs should manage to avenge the ghost of Tom De Herrera by dethroning the Fiji dynasty of the past two years and earn the shirt De Hey never could. But the Phi Delts, led by Arnie "Don't You Ever Push Me In The Back" Strifel, Mike "I Don't Need My Knee To Throw" Evans and J.B. "Not Too Lean But Plenty Mean" Behrens, could steal the title with superior athleticism.

Soccer is also hotly contested on the intramural fields, and this year's favorites have no less than four former varsity stars on their team. Led by Dickie "Schniedlewuts" Hertel, Jim "Don't Open Your Legs" Grice, Lisa "Mitzi" Seaman and Sarah "Muffy" Flynn, SWFC boasts a squad that lists six fifth year seniors on their roster. Though perhaps not the swiftest team (literally or figuratively) on the pitch, their collective skill is unmatched in either upperclass division, and they are confident that this season will end with them on top (SWFC; Shirt Winning Football Club). The team has been challenged however, winning 5-1 over a team that was unfortunately victimized by a referee mistake, assuring SWFC of the winning goal. Other strong teams lurk in the event SWFC should slip, most notably undefeated Murph's Law, so the season's remaining games should prove exciting. Games are played Monday through Thursday afternoons on the Slocum field, so come watch your favorite stars and have a true kick in the grass.

On the women's intramural soccer scene, freshman combatants Undecided and Swim Team engaged in a rousing battle that ended with Undecided winning, 3-2. Undecided jumped out to a 3-0 lead behind Cathy "Short and Sweet" Evanston's amazing hat trick, and appeared to be coasting toward an easy victory. But Swim Team crawled back, closing the gap to 3-2 behind the aggressive play of Bonnie "Silent But Deadly" Chadwick, and nearly pulled out a tie before the game's final whistle. The Swim Team's courageous effort was recognized by a resounding chant of "Chad-wick, Chad-wick" from the Kappa Sig dining room that significantly reddened the Swim Team star's face.

The upperclass volleyball season should end with Ed "Mayberry, R.F.D." Opitz's team and John "I'm Good And I Know It" Sacha's team battling it out for the title. Supported by Toler "We're Pretty" Goodwin, Marks Douglas and Gilmore, and star assist man Troy Benevidez, Opie's team has rolled early on, winning all their matches in two straight games. Sacha's team, bolstered by all-star Kent "I Like You" Tooman, has enjoyed similar success, and will seriously challenge the purely Kappa Sig squad. A match with CC's women's team is in the works for the eventual champions, but at the risk of career-ending embarassment will probably not occur.

Armadillo's Alley



A Series Journey

Life slowly ebbed out of the Armadillos body. The Astrodome scoreboard told the story: New York Mets 7, Houston Astros 6. As Kevin Bass went down swinging to end the game, my prehistoric friend Amos the Armadillo took his own life. I sat, in a state of shock, my living room strewn with empty Lone Star bottles and my buddy's dead body.

The Mets 16 inning 7-6 victory earned them the National League pennant. I could sympathize with my friend, a diehard Astros fan, correction a dead Astros fan. The Astro's won both their games behind the dazzling Mike Scott 1-0 and 3-1. The Met's Bob Ojeda handcuffed the Astros 5-1, but that was the only routine New York victory. In the third game the Astro's blew a 4-0 7th inning lead, came back, led 5-4 going into the bottom of the 9th, and lost 6-5 on Lenny Dykstras two run homerun. Poor Astros.

Game Five: Astros leading 1-0 in the bottom of the fifth, Nolan Ryan on the mound pitching a no-hitter, Daryl Strawberry lines a homerun that clears the fence by two feet and is fair by less than a foot, and it is a tie ball game. Gary Carter's squibber up the middle gives the Met's a 2-1 win in the 12th inning. Sorry Houston.

Game Six: Astros blast out to a 3-0 lead in the bottom of the 1st inning. Cut to the top of the ninth inning Astros still leading 3-0 behind the brilliant pitching of Bob Knepper, however Knepper gets into trouble, Dave Smith fails to put out the fire and once the smoke clears it's 3-3 and we are headed into extra innings. In the top of the 14th the Met's score a run and it appears to be all over, but Billy Hatcher blasted a homerun that was fair by inches and the Astros have a new lease on life. Moving to the 16th, New York busts it open, scoring three runs to take a 7-4 lead. Amazingly the Astros did not give up, scoring two runs and stranding the tying run only ninety feet away. Final: Mets 7, Astros 6. strike three!!! Y'all are out of there Astros!!! The cruelty of the situation for the Astros is that a win in either the fifth or sixth game would have forced a final seventh game which, with Mike Scott on the mound, the Astros in all probability would have won, however it was not to be.

New York will face the Boston Red Sox in the World Series. The Red Sox staged the best comeback of all time, to win the American League Championship. Flashback to Sunday October 12, 1986. Top of the ninth California leadind 5-2. Mike Witt their main man is on the mound. The Red Sox appear to be Dead Sox. Bill Buckner singles up the middle, an out later Don Baylor belts a two run shot and it is a 5-4 ball game. Witt is gone. Lucas is brought in to face Rich Gedman, a man he has owned all season, but he hits him. Donnie Moore, the Angles bullpen ace is brought in to face Dave Henderson. The count works to two balls, two strikes and two outs, California is one strike away from their first A.L title. The partisan crowd is on their feet, Moore delivers the pitch, Henderson swings, and danged if the tater don't land in downtown Malibu. 6-5 Boston leads, the Angels tie it up in the bottom of the ninth. Boston works their way out of a couple of jams and in the 11th Mr. Henderson drives in the winning run with a sacrifice fly. Calvin Schraldi slams the door on California and the teams head to Beantown. In a couple of anti-climatic games the BoSox clobber the Angels 10-4, and 8-1 to win the pennant. An amazing comeback!!!

Some playoff tidbits: The New York Mets became the first team to win a playoff series with a batting average below .220, their batting average was approximately .175. Never in the history of baseball had a team come from more than two runs down in the ninth to win during a post season game (a total of 648 games). The Angels, Red Sox, and Mets all staged miraculous comebacks during the 1986 playoffs. Nice relief pitching, dudes. Did Y'all know that in addition to blowing a 3-1 lead this year they led Milwaukee two games to zero in 1982 and lost three straight to blow the pennant!! Well, thats all for the Dillo, the playoffs plumb wore me out.

Make Fun Of The Road.

With the Honda Spree™, you never have to settle for just getting there. You can have a good time along the way.

This is our most affordable scooter. Push-button starting and no shifting make it easy to use. And it's almost maintenance-free.

So come see the Spree yourself. Because the road never ends. Neither should the fun.

HONDA

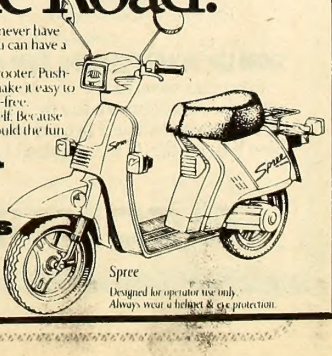
SCOOTERS

don's cycles

HONDA MOTORCYCLES - ATC'S

739 E. Pikes Peak Ave.

475-2437



Spree

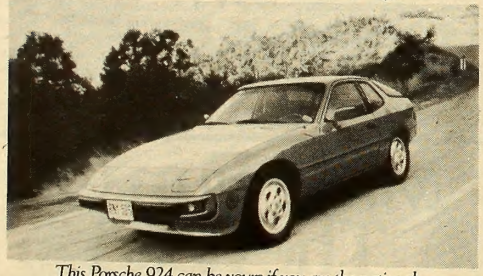
Designed for operator use only.
Always wear a helmet & eye protection.

FINALLY A FREE FLIGHT PLAN JUST FOR STUDENTS.

YOU WON'T GET A BREAK LIKE THIS ONCE YOU'RE OUT IN THE REAL WORLD.

INTRODUCING COLLEGIATE FLIGHTBANK, FROM CONTINENTAL AND NEW YORK AIR.

If you're a full-time student at an accredited college or university you can join our Collegiate FlightBank.℠ You'll receive a membership card and number that will allow you to get 10% off Continental and New York Air's already low fares. In addition, you'll get a one-time certificate good for $25 off any domestic roundtrip flight. Plus, you'll be able to earn trips to places like Florida, Denver, Los Angeles, even London and the South Pacific. Because every time you fly you'll earn mileage towards a free trip. And if you sign up now you'll also receive 3 free issues of BusinessWeek Careers magazine.



This Porsche 924 can be yours if you are the national referral champion.

SIGN UP YOUR FRIENDS AND EARN A PORSCHE.

But what's more, for the 10 students on every campus who enroll the most active student flyers from their college there are some great rewards: 1 free trip wherever Continental or New York Air flies in the mainland U.S., Mexico or Canada. Or the grand prize, for the number one student referral champion in the nation: a Porsche and one year of unlimited coach air travel.

And how do you get to be the referral champion? Just sign up as many friends as possible, and make sure your membership number is on their application. In order to be eligible for any prize you and your referrals must sign up before 12/31/86 and each referral must fly 3 segments on Continental or New York Air before 6/15/87. And you'll not only get credit for the enrollment, you'll also get 500 bonus miles.

So cut the coupon, and send it in now. Be sure to include your current full time student ID number. That way it'll only cost you $10 for one year ($15 after 12/31/86) and $40 for four years ($60 after 12/31/86). Your membership kit, including referral forms, will arrive in 3 to 4 weeks. If you have a credit card, you can call us at 1-800-255-4321 and enroll even faster.

Now more than ever it pays to stay in school.

SIGN ME UP NOW! (Please print or type) ☐ 1 Year ($10) ☐ 2 Years ($20) ☐ 3 Years ($30) ☐ 4 Years ($40)
Must be submitted by 12/31/86.

Name_____ Date of Birth_____

College_____ Address_____

_____ Zip_____

Permanent Address_____ Zip_____

Full time student ID #_____ Year of Graduation_____

$_____ ☐ Check/Money Order Enclosed PLEASE DON'T SEND CASH
☐ American Express ☐ Visa ☐ MasterCard ☐ Diner's Club

Account Number_____ Expiration Date_____

Signature X_____

FOR MEMBERSHIP APPLICANTS UNDER THE AGE OF 18: The undersigned is the parent/guardian of the membership applicant named hereon, and I consent to his/her participation in the Collegiate FlightBank program.

Signature X_____

Send this coupon to: Collegiate FlightBank
P.O. Box 297847
Houston, TX 77297 168

Complete terms and conditions of program will accompany membership kit.

CONTINENTAL & NEW YORK AIR

Some blackout periods apply for discount travel and reward redemption. Complete terms and conditions of program will accompany membership kit. Certain restrictions apply. Current full time student status required for each year of membership. To earn any prize a minimum of 12 referrals is required. All referral award winners will be announced by 8/1/87. 10% discount applies to mainland U.S. travel only. Students must be between the ages of 16 and 25. Porsche 924 registration, license fees, and taxes are the responsibility of the recipient. © 1986 Continental Air Lines, Inc.

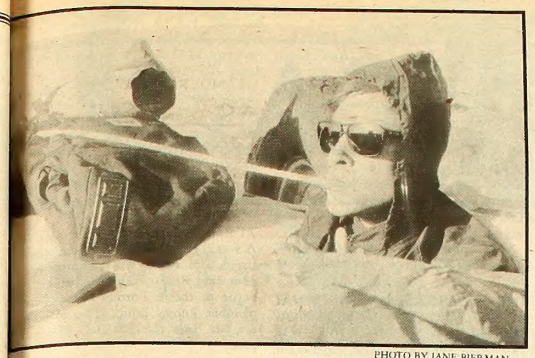


PHOTO BY JANE BIERMAN

The missing link. This man retains a long rod-like tongue in order to catch insects.

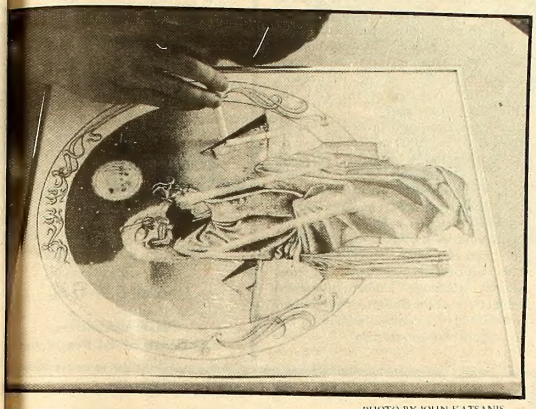

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Nameless person demonstrating one of the one hundred practical ways to use a Grateful Dead mirror.

Please Recycle This Paper

Hüsker Dü

Do You Remember?

BY AARON SHURE

Today I present an interview with Dick Lecksick, a well reputed memory expert. Dick has a well preserved hair line that is still just a quarter of an inch above his single eyebrow. He is given to wear dark tweed jackets over wool sweaters that are unraveling.

Dick: The key to all memory is association. We must associate whatever information we wish to retain with an image, in order to better internalize the desired data. Take your name for instance. I just envision the Statue of Liberty and associate that with your face.

I envision Miss Liberty's raised arm and that immediately invokes the image of a Nazi salute and a commercial for antiperspirant. From the Nazi image I get the idea of the revered Aryan race, and from the commercial I get the words "Raise your arm if you're sure." Thus I will never forget your name is Aryan Sure.

A: Dick there is quite a bit of controversy concerning the memory of students taught on the block plan. How well does the retention of a CC grad compare to students on the conventional curriculum?

Dick: It seems that CC students would tend to forget faster, because of the limited time in which they must absorb information. But, Aryan, the strongest mnemonic sense is smell. If a potent smell is linked to some information you are more likely to remember it. The administration has cleverly allowed SAGA to be the campus food service.

I have found that even students that are as far away from SAGA as Mathias Hall are able to remember as well as students in other schools. And the women in Bemis have close to photographic memories.

A: So what you're saying is that SAGA helps us retain information.

Dick: Among other things, yes.

A: Are there any other memory tricks you could pass on?

Dick: Well, I have found that severe embarrassment is a potent memory agent. Most of us can recall minute details of painfully embarrassing moments. Embarrassing memories are so powerful they can cause us to double over in mid stride, suddenly moan for no apparent reason, or sit up in bed and start banging our head against the wall.

A: So if you want to give someone a memorable experience—

Dick: I wouldn't go so far as to suggest you should expose your grandmother's underwear when she comes over for Christmas dinner, but, you know, nudity can often evoke great chagrin.

A: What then would you recommend as the ideal situation in which a student should commit things to his memory.

Dick: Well, you'll never forget if you study nude inthe SAGA dishroom during dinner time.

House of
YAKITORI
Japanese Restaurants

Every Tuesday

5 pm - 9 pm

ALL THE YAK
YOU CAN ATTACK
$6.30

on the #17 dinner

*not available on to go or delivery orders

YAKITORI

Also try our Sushi Bar

DOWNTOWN ONLY

Downtown
16 E. Bijou

578-0915
M-Thurs 11 am-3 pm 5-9 pm
Fri & Sat 11 am-3 pm5-10pm

A College Degree and no plans?

Become a
Lawyer's Assistant

A representative of the University of San Diego, and the National Center for Paralegal Training

LAWYER'S ASSISTANT PROGRAM

will be on campus
Monday, October 20, 1986 at 11:00 am to discuss details of the Program and career opportunities for college graduates in this growing, new field.

. . . You may qualify for this intensive 14 week, post-graduate course, which enables you to put your education to work as a skilled member of the legal team.

Please contact your Career Center at 473-2233 ext. 424 for more information.

For Free Brochure, contact:

UNIVERSITY OF SAN DIEGO
Lawyer's Assistant Program
Room 318, Serra Hall
San Diego, CA 92110
(619) 260-4579

The University of San Diego does not discriminate on the basis of race, sex, color, religion, age, national origin, ancestry, or handicap in its policies and programs.

PIKE'S PEAK WEAVERS' GUILD will present the 11th Annual Fiber Arts Festival in November. Dates and times are as follows:

Gala Opening with Fashion Show of handwoven wearables and wine & cheese refreshments will be open to the public on Thursday, November 13, from 6-9 p.m. in the Music Room, upstairs in the Colorado Springs Fine Arts Center, 30 W. Dale, Colorado Springs. Admission to the Gala Evening will be $2.00. In the same location on Friday & Saturday, November 14 & 15, from 10 a.m.-5 p.m., and on Sunday, November 16 from 1:30-5 p.m., will be a public show and sale of handwoven wearables, home furnishings, art textiles and handmade Christmas decorations.

Note to all handweavers: Anyone interested in selling handwoven items at the sale should contact Jean Pollard, Festival Chairwoman, at 548-1992, mornings.

SEMESTER AT SEA IS NOT MERELY A TRIP AROUND THE WORLD. With the combination of thought-provoking courses and field trips, the program can educate and change those who take part in it.

Departing from Nassau, Bahamas, the Spring 1987 voyage will begin on january 27, and the Fall 1987 voyage will begin on September 11.

Costs for the 100-day voyage range from $8,945 to $10,575, depending on cabin accomodations. Certain types of financial aid may transfer, and work-study positions are awarded each semester.

For more information about attending Semester at Sea, phone 800-854-0195, or write to Semester at Sea, 2E Forbes Quadrangle, University of Pittsburgh, Pittsburgh, PA 15260.

OCTOBER 21—MEDITATION—Shove Chapel, 8:00-8:30 a.m. Music, silence, mystical and/or other writings (enter by northeast door).

'83 RED FIREBIRD, 35k mi., transferable used car insurance. $5,200.00 O.B.O. Must sell! Shak 598-3191.

NOTIFICATION OF LEAVE OF ABSENCE AND WITHDRAWAL POLICIES—Applications available in the Dean of Students Office, Armstrong Hall, Room 213. The deadline for requesting a leave of absence is November 1 for a leave which begins in the spring semester. Students are encouraged to apply for a leave even if they are awaiting word of their acceptance to a program. On formal application, a leave of absence will be considered for one of the following reasons: financial or personal emergency, ACM programs, the Washington Semester, or study abroad programs.

The deadline for requesting a withdrawal for the spring semester is also November 1. All students who decide to interrupt their education at CC, and who do not qualify for a leave of absence, or who wish to transfer to another institution, are expected to withdraw formally from the College.

NEW SCHOLARSHIP AVAILABLE—The Colorado Teacher Encouragement Program (CTEP) has been established by the State of Colorado to create a merit-based program to encourage students to enter the teaching profession. CTEP awards are available to outstanding Colorado residents attending colleges and universities in Colorado who agree to teach in Colorado.

Applications and more details for this program are available at the Financial Aid Office (Armstrong Hall) and at the Education Department (Mierow House). All applications must be submitted to the Education Department by October 27, 1986.

OCTOBER 20—C ROOM, Cossitt Hall—7:30 p.m. "Modern War: Invest or Divest?" Different perspectives from the Christian tradition. Discussants: Stephen Handen, Bijou Community and Captain Kenneth Kemp, Philosophy Department, A.F.A.

HANDBALL PLAYERS (not team handball, real handball): Does anyone else play this sport on campus? Call Chris Bell, ext. 327.

STUDY IN LATIN AMERICA—ACM's program in Costa Rica, for a semester (either fall or spring) or a year, gives you immersion in Latin American culture and in research problems in biology plus most of the social sciences. Fall semester 1987 concentrates on the impact of multinational corporations on a dependent political and economic structure. Spring semester devoted to research in your major field. Cost little different than staying in Colorado Springs. Fall is a thematic minor.

Next application deadline November 15. See Paul Kutsche, Palmer Hall 11, ext. 359.

THE UNDERGRADUATE JOURNAL OF THE SOCIAL STUDIES IS NOW ACCEPTING SUBMISSIONS FOR THE SPRING 1987 ISSUE. The Journal, established three years ago by a group of students at Wesleyan University, is a national publication of undergraduate essays in the general area of the social studies (history, government, economics, philosophy, sociology, and psychology). The 1986 issue features work from students at Wesleyan, Princeton, Haverford, Northwestern, and the University of Georgia.

Undergraduates are invited to submit essays 2,500 to 10,000 words in length to: The Undergraduate Journal of the Social Studies, College of Social Studies, Wesleyan University, Middletown CT 06457. Two typed copies of each essay are required, as well as a $5 processing fee. Submissions are due by November 1, 1986. The Journal offers undergraduates a unique opportunity to be published in an national, academic annual. Interested students are encouraged to submit their work as early as possible, because no late submissions will be accepted.

IF YOU HAVE NOT picked up your 1985-86 Yearbook yet—please call Jo Patterson x222 or drop by Jackson House Room 205 (evenings).

GLAMOUR MAGAZINE is once again organizing the annual Top Ten College Women Competition. We are looking for ten outstanding young women from colleges and universities throughout the country. Winners are selected on the basis of their achievements in academic study and/or their involvement in personal, campus, or community activities.

TURN C's INTO B's AND B's INTO A's—CC grad (Phi Beta Kappa, distinguished thesis, dept. award) will tutor on all aspects of writing. Research, drafting, editing. Beeper to thesis. Former Honor Code member knows limits. Two blks. from campus. Reas. rates. Call 635-7374 after 5 p.m.

"Cycles Peugeot"

The French Manufacture of the World's finest bicycles since 1882!

jay's BICYCLE SHOP SINCE 1905

19 E. Kiowa • Downtown
(7 blocks south of campus)
Phone: 634-4733

RICK WAGER—
"CC Class of '64 Proprietor"

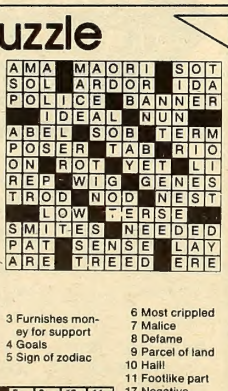
The Puzzle

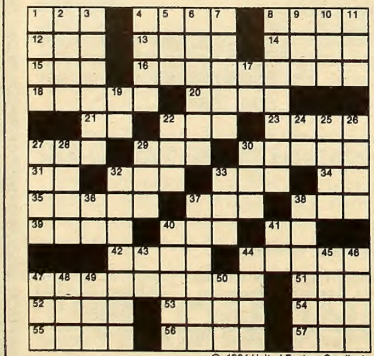
ACROSS

1 Simian
4 Cloth measure: pl.
8 Strike
12 Electrified particle
13 Kind of tide
14 Affection
15 Conducted
16 Rules
18 Ceases
20 Short jacket
21 Pronoun
22 Employ
23 Hard of hearing
27 Existed
29 Skill
30 Climbing species of pepper
31 Sign on door
32 Transfix
33 Preposition
34 Sun god
35 Begin
37 Bespatter
38 Marsh
39 Nimbus
40 Permit
41 Spanish article
42 Chicken house
44 Classify
47 Cascade
51 Witty remark
52 Toward shelter
53 Group of three
54 The self
55 Dispatch
56 Cook slowly
57 Lair

DOWN

1 Is ill
2 Bard
3 Furnishes money for support
4 Goals
5 Sign of zodiac
6 Most crippled
7 Malice
8 Defame
9 Parcel of land
10 Hall!
11 Footlike part
17 Negative
19 Hebrew letter
22 Vase
24 Latin conjunction
25 Danish island
26 Pennant
27 Desire
28 Pilaster
29 River island
30 Cut short
32 Go
33 Obese
36 Man's nickname
37 Leave
38 Reproached
40 Attics
41 Teutonic deity
43 Either's partner
44 Shine
45 Venetian ruler
46 Kind of collar
47 Existed
48 Beverage
49 Playing card
50 Falsehood





COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE
© 1984 United Feature Syndicate

COVER DESIGN BY R.M. KOHEN

PIZZA SHUTTLE

PIZZA SHUTTLE COMING AT YOU!

ANNOUNCES THE

"PRICE WARP"

ANY LARGE 16" PIZZA FOR A

TOTAL OF $10.00

THAT'S RIGHT! Any amount of items for only TEN DOLLARS
Tax is included in this price. No need to worry about change.

BONUS! 2 FREE Drinks With This Special
Please Ask for The "Price Warp" By Name

CALL 578-8686

Special Expires 10/31/86
Sorry No Coupons With This Special

FREE DELIVERY
In 30 minutes or less.
Anywhere in our service zone.
Road conditions permitting.

2573 Airport Rd.

CATALYST

Volume 20, No. 6 | Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado | 31 October 1986

Faculty Passes Eight Block Proposal

BY DAVID A. FITZGERALD

In a special faculty meeting on Monday, ...ober 28th, the Colorado College faculty ...ed to change the structure of the nine ...k academic year to an academic year ...taining only eight blocks. The faculty ...ded three amendments to the recently ...vised eight block proposal before ...entually passing it. Student's flexibility ...der the eight block proposal remained ...e major issue of debate in the faculty ...eetings prior to the proposal passing by ...a 82-30-2 vote.

The special meeting was called to discuss ...e substantive details of the revised eight ...ck proposal. At the October 20th ...eeting faculty voted to disregard the ...ocedural timetable for discussions and ...ning recommended by the Academic ...rogram Committee. Many faculty ...embers advocated a vote on the proposal ...s that the Board of Trustees could discuss ...e proposal at the November 14th ...eeting. The procedural timetable ...commended by the Academic Program ...ommittee would have delayed faculty ...ting until December and subsequent ...nsideration by the board of trustees until their March meeting.

The faculty did not instigate a vote without exhaustive discussion and debate on the proposal. Many faculty members expressed concern about the seminar courses. Some faculty members showed concern for those students who either failed a class or received an excused grade for legitimate reasons.

Some of the faculty felt that the seminar courses would intensify the teaching load at Colorado College and thus defeat the intentions of the eight block proposal. Chemistry professor Nate Bower stated that the faculty would "cut their own throats" by teaching a seminar course in addition to the regular seven block course load. Some faculty simply stated that they would not teach a seminar course due to the increased constraints on their time.

"We offer too many courses at Colorado College."
—Owen Cramer

Many faculty, however, felt that the

Continued page 4

CC Outlasts DU

BY KATHLEEN MAHONEY

Could it be that preseason hopes are ...ctually becoming a reality for the ...olorado College hockey team?

The Tigers, now 2-3-1, beat defending ...estern Collegiate Hockey Association ...hampions and longtime rival Denver ...niversity last Saturday 4-1 and battled to ...3-3 tie Friday night. This lifts CC to a ...ourth place tie with DU in the WCHA ...tandings.

Friday night's tie came without the help ...f six regulars who were benched due to ...he previous weekend's fight at Northern ...ichigan University. Starting goalie ...erek Pizzey also sat that game, still ...nhibited by his ankle injury.

CC started strong, scoring all three goals ...n the first period. Sophomore Guy ...adowsky got his first of a pair capitalizing ...n the rebound of a Scott Campbell ...apshot in the opening three minutes. DU ...ied it up, however, two minutes later ...ampbell got himself back on the board in ...he middle of the period with his first goal ...ince his sophomore season. Denver ...natched that goal but Gadowsky put the ...igers on top again with skillful ...ckhandling and a backhander between ...he Pioneer goalie's legs.

It was a scoreless second period and ...ppeared to be a goalless third period until the Pioneers evened the score, slipping the puck past sophomore Matt Gilbreth with 8 minutes left.

Gilbreth had an outstanding game stopping 46 Pioneer shots. But the wear and tear on the team without a full squad, proved to be too much for the length of the game.

At the Broadmoor Saturday night, a full Tiger team was dressed including starting goalie Derek Pizzey.

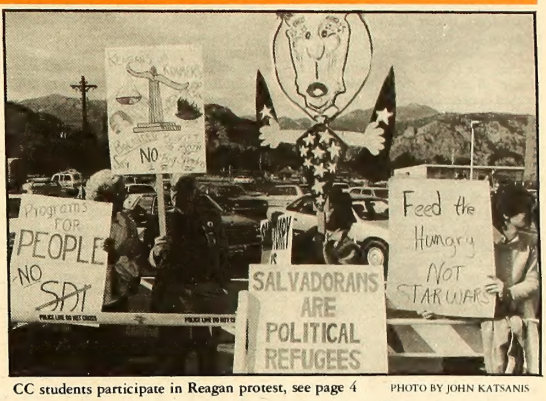
After a 0-0 first period, the Tigers exploded in the second with Doug Clarke, Doug Kirton, and Mark Olson each posting a point.

The CC defense anchored by Pizzey and Campbell kept the Pioneers at bay for more than 50 minutes. But with less than seven minutes remaining the Pioneers crushed the shut out bid.

CC added security to its lead in the last 12 seconds with a Gord Whitaker power play goal to ice the victory.

Overall it was the most successful series against DU since 1982 for the Tigers. And it was the most successful weekend for senior defenseman Scott Campbell. His strong defensive play, with consistent body

Continued on page 13



CC students participate in Reagan protest, see page 4 PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Reagan Stumps for Kramer

BY MICHAEL S. MEHAN

The Broadmoor World Arena did not look quite the way it does, at CC hockey games. There were several thousand more people there than usual. The walls were covered with campaign slogans and "Ken Kramer...Without a doubt" posters. It had all the trimmings of a classic political rally: a marching band, children's choirs, pom-pom girls, plenty of red, white and blue banners and American flags, a Master of Ceremonies (dressed like Uncle Sam) and lots of cheering and flag waving.

Republican Senatorial candidate Ken Kramer, however, was not the only man of the hour. The person in the spotlight yesterday was the political wizard himself, President Ronald Reagan, who stopped off in Colorado Springs to attend the rally as part of his last ditch effort to lend some "coat tail" to Republican Senatorial hopefulls around the nation.

To the deafening roar of the thousands who had gathered to see him, President Reagan walked out onto the dais, thanking everyone for their warm welcome, and from the excitement one could feel in the arena, it was obviously sincerely meant.

The President began his speech by praising the United States Air Force Academy, calling it one of America's finest institutions of higher learning, and quipping that it was also one of the only ones younger than he. He praised its members, saying they had "the right stuff."

The President covered many areas in his speech, but all were drawn back to the man he was there to support, Ken Kramer. The speech was intended to be a political slap on the back by America's favorite politician, and Reagan spared no praise or support in letting it be know that he wanted Ken Kramer to win the election.

He praised Kramer as a "man in the finest tradition of the GOP," which he then said stood for, "Growth, Opportunity and Patriotism." He said not to refer to Kramer as the "Congressman from Colorado Springs," but as "the next Senator from Colorado Springs." Reagan then told the crowd how important he felt it was to have Kramer in Washington, and asked everyone, "can I count on you to get him re-elected?" To which the response was an uproar of cheers of support.

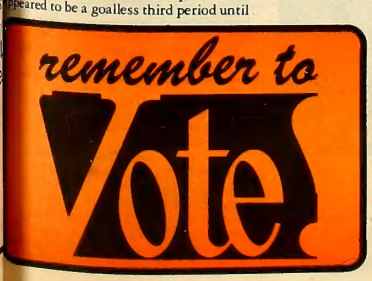
Addressing the young people at the rally, of which there were many, Reagan relayed a message from his "roommate." "When it comes to drugs, for yourselves, for your family, and for the future of the country, just say, 'no,'" was Nancy Reagan's message to the youth of America.

Reagan then launched an attack against his favorite target, Congressional Democrats. He said the era of "tax, tax, spend, spend," policies was over. When the Democrats were in power, we had the highest interest rates since the civil war, we had high unemployment and inflation, said Reagan. Reagan then cited the significant improvement in the economy under his administration. The prime rate is down two thirds, inflation is running at 1.8 percent, 11 million new jobs have been created in less than four years, "more jobs than Japan and Europe created in ten years," according to Reagan.

Reagan continued to praise the economy by citing the rise in the recent growth of the Gross National Product, the 30 percent decrease in the trade deficit, and the rise of purchases of single family houses in September.

Painting a rosy picture of future

Continued page 2



CCers Protest Reagan
Student Arrested
See Page 4

Reproduced from 1939 "Tiger"

Seniors

BY ANITA WALLS

Hello seniors!!! Hope your block break went well, and that you took advantage of this beautiful autumn weather.

And a special thank you to Joanne Klein for her assistance and patience.

Are you ready for another party?! The Senior Class will be hosting a mixer at McAllister's Tavern on this coming Monday, November 3rd. We will be watching the Chicago Bears battle the Los Angeles Rams on the Monday Night Football game. Drinks will be sold at regular prices ($1.50 for a draft and $2.00 for a well drink). Of course, there will be plenty of great food! Polish hot dogs will be available for $1.00 and the pizza will be free. I hope to see all you seniors there.

A point of clarification...There seems to be a bit of confusion on the trustee's offer reported in the last column. The trustee will only donate the $2,000 gift if 50% of our class participates, that is, makes a donation toward our $2,000 goal. In other words, we as a unit must meet two goals:

1) 50% of the class must participate, by making a donation, and

2) the class must collect a total of $2,000. Only then will the trustee match that $2,000 with an equal gift. So don't forget to look for our collection jar at the coming mixer. Make sure an officer or agent records your contribution, so that we can keep track of the overall participation.

Until next week...

Put a little art in your life

Colorado College Bookstore
McGregor Hall

FREE
FLAVORED CORN

Bring this coupon with you the next time you buy a 30 oz. bag of Vic's popcorn. You'll get a FREE medium bag of the flavored corn of your choice.

- buttery caramel
- zesty cheese
- spicy cinnamon

Good at Uintah location only. Limit one per coupon.

Vic's CORN POPPER

1864 W. Uintah 520-9129
Mon-Sat 10-7 Sun 12-6

Reagan continued from page 1

economic conditions, Reagan confidently said, "We are heading for more prosperity," adding, "I give you my pledge, that neither Ken, nor I, will be satisfied until every American who wants a job, has a job."

Once more pointing his barrels at the Democrats, Reagan defended what has been considered the top priority in his second term, tax reform. He accused the Democrats of wanting to "break faith" with the new tax code, and turn tax reform into a tax increase. "The Democrats never saw a tax they didn't want," said Reagan, and using his famous wit, he added, "The Democrats act as if they have your credit card in their pocket, and believe me, they never leave home without it."

Reagan moved from the economy into another controversial area, judicial appointments. He again turned to the Democrats, accusing them of trying to block his appointments, who he defended as being "tougher on criminals," citing longer jail sentences and more convictions as proof. He asked the crowd if they wanted Senator Edward Kennedy, a "liberal from Massachusetts," appointing the justices to the Federal courts. The crowd's answer was highly unfavorable for Senator Kennedy. Here Reagan made clear the importance of keeping the Senate Republican, saying the "Democrats have tried to torpedo our appointments."

President Reagan then moved into the much debated area of defense, and the especially heated issue of strategic defense.

He stated his pride in America's armed forces and thanked congressmen like Kramer for supporting his military buildup. Reagan vowed to give our armed forces, "the finest weapons we can produce."

According to Reagan, America used to wear a "kick me" sign, now we wear a sign that says "don't tread on me." He continued to praise America's new military might by asserting "every 'nickle and dime' dictator knows, if he messes with us, he will have a price to pay."

"Not one square inch has been lost to communism and one small one, Grenada, has been saved," Reagan boasted to a cheering audience.

Of course no speech would be complete without mention of Reagan's pet project and dream, the Strategic Defense Initiative.

He called the concept of deterence, mutual assured destruction, "flimsy," and said the United States was committed to the development of "a shield that we believe and scientists believe can protect America from incoming missles."

SDI, according to Reagan, would keep us strong, protect our territory, and eventually make intermediate and strategic nuclear missiles obsolete, allowing their removal. It would also protect us from accidents, breakdowns in Soviet agreements, and "madmen;" Reagan here referred to Colonel Khadafy of Lyb

Asking whether we should b American technology or Soviet pro Reagan answered that "each have own track record...I'm going to b American technology every time."

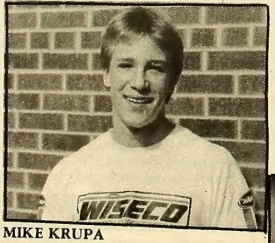
Reagan praised Kramer for stand to big government, being concerned the environment of Colorado, an supporting defense spending and noting that it was Ken Kramer convinced the Administration to pl new SDI research center in Co Springs, research which would open new fields of development and in according to Reagan.

In the end, Reagan gripped the p and looking out somberly int audience, used his patented coat appeal, "I'll never appear on a ballot if you want to vote for me again, you it by voting for Ken Kramer," and crowd responded enthusiastically plea, he dug down into the Reagan rhetoric and, stating it like only R can, said "when you go to the polls, w for Ken Kramer, win one for you and your future, and...win one fo Gipper." The balloons came p down, the band struck up a Sousa the crowd went wild, and Ronald R went galloping off over the mounta Nevada on his cross country "ke Senate Republican tour," there to for yet another Republican Sena candidate.

A Selection of Pre-Election Reflection

Students were asked "who are you going to vote for in the Senate race, and why?" All photos were taken by Peter Maurelli.

SAMANTHA SILVERS
Tim Wirth because Ken Kramer is a Nazi and wants to give the death penalty to drug dealers.



MIKE KRUPA
Ken Kramer because I like his platform. It seems more sensible overall.

A Sample Poll of CC Students

All Students		Registered Colorado V
Kramer	27.5%	Kramer
Wirth	45%	Wirth
Undecided	27.5%	Undecided

This random sampling was taken in mid September and may not reflect current opi

DELORES HAINES
Ken Kramer because he's more down to earth.

HELEN DURANY
Tim Wirth because Ken Kramer is for Star Wars and I'm against it.

HELMI SHEPARD
Tim Wirth because he is for educ Ken Kramer is not.

BRANDON WARING
Ken Kramer because we need conservatives in Washington.

Cutler Board is currently accepting applications for Catalyst Editor and Disparaging Eye Editor for the Spring semester 1987.

Applications are available at the Student Center on Nevada. Application deadline is Nov. 19.

Honor Council Trial O to Campus Community

An Honor Council Appeal Hearin be held Wednesday, November 5-F November 7 at 7:00 p.m. This hearin be held in Armstrong Hall, room 30 is open to all CC students, facu administration.

Rainbow Jam

BY CAROLINE BRYAN

The time of the year has once again rived for the Rainbow Jam. The party, hich will take place at the Phi Delta eta house on November 1 from 9:00 m until 2:00 a.m., will be hosted by a alition of all of the minority groups on ampus.

The presidents of Chaverim, MECHA, SU, ASIA, NASA, and ISO have panneled their efforts into this festive ccassion to promote campus awareness of he existence of their various rganizations. The Extra Curricular ommittee, CCCA, Pan Hellenic, and the C have shown a great deal of interest in he project and have aided the groups in eating the necessary funding for the roject.

With the PACC house transformed into he Hub, and the temporary minority udent center located in a residential area, problem arose in finding a location for e annual event. But the socially conscious hi Delta Thetas donated their house in he name of campus awareness.

The party will feature dancing with usic by DJ Gene Gallegos of Monster roductions. The music will be mplemented by an assortment of ethnic ods and of course the main Colorado ollege party staple: beer. The party annot help but be a success with all of this reful planning. "In the past years," Becky erby the president of Chaverim observes, he party has always been a great success. I ave always had a great time." All of the residents and members of the rganizations are anxiously looking rward to the inevitable success of this ear's party.

The groups also wish to stress the fact at their organizations are open to anyone who is at all interested in sharing experiences and expanding their understanding and acceptance of others.

The minority groups here on campus are indeed a very important feature of life at CC, so give the fun-loving person inside yourself a chance to reach out. Most of all just have a great time at the Rainbow Jam.

BACCHUS Sponsors Alcohol Awareness Week

BY GREG GRIFFITH

Next week, November 3-8, BACCHUS (Boost Alcohol Consciousness Concerning the Health of University Students) will be sponsoring the annual Alcohol Awareness Week, a program designed to promote responsible drinking habits for CC students. This year's agenda is filled with activities and events designed to provide the CC community with a chance to learn about alcohol in a fun and enjoyable atmosphere.

The week starts off with a unique drinking experience, in which CC administrators Maxwell Taylor, Laurel McLeod, and David Ives will drink 3.2% beer until the are proven drunk by a breathalyzer. "Drink with the Deans" will be held in Loomis Lounge on Monday at 3:00 p.m. On Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in Loomis Lounge the Colorado State Police will provide a presentation entitled "Driving Under the Influence . . . What You Need to Know" which will be followed by an ice cream social study break and an instructional session on "How to make a Mocktail." Mocktails, non-alcoholic mixed drinks, will also be served at dinner in Bemis on Monday and Wednesday.

A panel discussion entitled "Wednesday at 11" will be held in Packard Hall, addressing the current issue of the 18 versus 21 year old drinking age. At 3:30 p.m. Wednesday the NCAAW (National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week) 5K Fun Run will be held. To enter the race, register at Bemis or at the race. The cost is $2 and all participants will receive a long-sleeve 100% cotton T-shirt. On Thursday at 6:00 p.m. a presentation and film entitled "Happy Birthday Ray" will address situational drinking and a "Pizza party" that promises to provide all the pizza that the crowd can eat. The week's festivities will end with a bang as "Rocky Horror Picture Show" will be shown on Friday and Saturday at exactly midnight, in a true demonstration that a good time can still be had without the use of alcohol. The show will take place in Olin Hall on Friday night and in Armstrong on Saturday.

CC's Alcohol Awareness Week is part of a national movement on college campuses to promote the responsible and informed use of alcohol. BACCHUS, a student run organization headed by Adam Burke, is concerned with educating students about the use of alcohol and challenging them to examine the role it plays in our social lives. Only from a position of knowledge, as Doug Gertner, Coordinator of Alcohol and Drug Awareness at CC put it, can we make responsible choices with alcohol. Mr. Gertner emphasizes that both the CC administration and BACCHUS view alcohol as an integral part of the social life on campus. It is the abuse of alcohol that they are trying to prevent by raising students' level of awareness. This educational approach, claims Mr. Gertner, is the best way of trying to keep alcohol a part of life at CC. A drinking age of 21 would greatly restrict the learning process that the Alcohol Awareness Week promotes.

Alcohol Awareness Week is only part of the school's commitment to alcohol and drug education. BACCHUS plans to hold a Coors sponsored seminar on "beertending" on December 6, and, in hoping to create a social atmosphere relying less upon alcohol, plans to offer a "BACCHUS Bar," providing food (not just chips), and non-alcoholic beverages, that will be available to fraternities and other groups throwing parties.

AIM HIGH

PUT YOUR COLLEGE DEGREE TO WORK.

Air Force Officer Training School is an excellent start to a challenging career as an Air Force Officer. We offer great starting pay, medical care, 30 days of vacation with pay each year and management opportunities. Contact an Air Force recruiter. Find out what Officer Training School can mean for you. Call

(303) 528-1751 collect

AIR FORCE

DOMINO'S PIZZA ®

TWO 12" ONE TOPPING PIZZAS FOR $9.14

(TAX NOT INCLUDED)
Please see below for other selections.

Limited Delivery Area
Our drivers carry less than $20

SUPPORT THE HEART ASSOCIATION SWIMATHON

FREE PIZZA PARTY FOR CONTESTANTS

Call x494 for details.

30 minute guarantee

If your pizza does not arrive within 30 minutes, present this coupon to the driver for $3.00 off your order
One coupon per pizza.

Fast, Free Delivery
Good at listed locations.

DOMINO'S PIZZA

One of the greatest offers ever from Domino's Pizza—two 12" pizzas for the price of a large! Twice the pizza for one low price!

For a limited time, order any two 12" pizzas (they don't have to be the same), and you'll get them for the price of one 16". The price will be determined by the pizza with the most toppings.

Two 12" pizzas will only cost you:

Superb cheese	$7.95
1 topping	$9.14
2 toppings	$10.33
3 toppings	$11.52
4 toppings	$12.71
5 toppings	$13.90
6 toppings	$15.09

Twice the pizza for one low price—two 12" pizzas for the price of a large!
And, hot to your door in 30 minute or less, GUARANTEED!

Offer expires Nov. 1, 1986.

635-1511

DOMINO'S PIZZA DELIVERS ® FREE.

All Pizzas Include Our Special Blend of Sauce and 100% Real Cheese.

Our Superb Cheese Pizza
12" Cheese $5.65
16" Cheese $7.95

Additional Items
Pepperoni, Mushrooms, Ham, Onions, Green Peppers, Black Olives, Pineapple, Sausage, Ground Beef, Jalapeno Peppers,
Extra Cheese (1 item)
Double Cheese (2 items)
Thick Crust, Extra Sauce
Each Item
12" item $ .79
16" item $1.19

Ask about our Group Discount (on 5 or more pizza orders).

We accept checks.

Prices do not include tax.
Our drivers carry less than $20.00.

Open for Lunch Every Day
11 am - 12 am Sun.-Thurs.
11 am - 1 am Fri.-Sat.

Justice To Speak At CC

BY BLAIR SANFORD

Colorado Supreme Court Justice William H. Erickson will deliver a speech entitled "The Future of the Law" at the second annual McHendrie-Spurgeon Pre-Law Dinner to be held Thursday, November 6 in the Tutt Alumni House.

Justice Erickson was appointed to the Colorado Supreme Court in 1971 and served as Chief Justice from 1983-85. A graduate of the Colorado School of MInes, graduate of the Colorado School of Mines, he earned his law degree from the University of Virginia. He is a member of the American Bar Association, The Colorado Bar Association, The Denver Bar Association, Order of the Coif, and many other national and international associations.

The dinner and speech is in honor of two graduates and longtime College supporters Dougles McHendrie '27 and Robert Spurgeon '26 for their dedication and contribution to Colorado College.

Mr. Spurgeon, who died in March 1986, served as Trustee of the College from 1954 to 1984. Mr. McHendrie is still very close to the college and served as a Trustee from 1964 to 1970. Both gentlemen have made notable contributions to the law profession.

The honorary dinner and speech is in lieu of a plaque or trophy and is intended for students with interest pursuing a career in law. Students interested in attending must contact Turt Alumni House and make a reservation.

WE'LL DO YOUR LAUNDRY!!!

WASHED
DRIED
FOLDED

Suds 'um
Laundry & Cleaners

1931 W. Uintah (across from Uintah Gardens)
473-3756 Special student offer w/CC ID.

It's for you!

Stuff for Halloween from two dollars

Manitou Springs Vintage Clothing and company
In the Promenade - 725 Manitou Ave. - 685-9077

Last Chance For Eight Block Dissent

BY CHRISTINE M. LLOYD

Although the eight block year plan was recently passed by the faculty, it still must be implemented by the Board of Trustees. Thus, CCCA is offering the student body one last chance to question the flexibility of the plan. They will hold three Forums concerning this issue on November 4th-6th in Mathias, Slocum, and Loomis lounges. Max Taylor will set the times and memos will be sent out to the students concerning this matter.

It is up to the students to participate in these discussions. CCCA will act as an intermediary between the students and the Board of Trustees. That way both students and faculty will have a voice in the matter.

CCCA realizes the compromises the faculty has made on the students behalf. They made the plan more flexible to fit the students' needs as well as their own. Yet, in the process they may have made the plan more ambiguous. Through these Forums CCCA hopes to clear up the uncertainties concerning the eight year block plan.

This is the students last chance to pose questions concerning possible flaws in the plan. These questions will not be answered at the Forums nor will there be any faculty present during these discussions. CCCA will compile the questions posed by the students and send them to the Board of Trustees before it decides to implement the plan on November 14th.

In sum, CCCA is giving the students an opportunity to address the ambiguous nature of the eight block year plan before its implementation. It is up to the students to take full advantage of this opportunity. Otherwise, it is likely that the eight-block year plan will be implemented in 1988-89 as is.

Students Arreste At Protest

BY JORGE BUSTAMANTE A SYLVIE MARTINEZ

The campaign for Ken Kram Colorado) was spurred on by the p of President Ronald Reagan ye morning. However, violence at th tarnished the event for ma attendance.

Some seventy CC students atte Republican rally, and approximate of them joined in a protest organi committee of minority supporters Reagan's policies.

A number of banners displayed protesters expressed their concern SDI, Kramer, exploitation of min Apartheid, United States involve Central America, and other current Authorities at the Broadmoor protesters to leave the property hotel and move to a designated are the street.

One CC student, Valerie Fede arrested for "failure to desi disperse." The charge against her d disputed, since "[I] did actually resp the order to move across the protes Feder states.

A small group of CC students op the support for the President violently harassed by Reaganites. Reagan appeared on stage, banner held up denouncing the Rep platform. Two members of the au approached the students holding th and tore them out of their hand student, Wendy Garnett, was injure ensuing struggle when one of them her in the face. The surrounding watched the assault and applaud approval of the scene. No action wa against the assaulter.

Eight block continued

reduction of a block in the academic year would not alter the value of the CC education. Philosophy professor John Riker stated that eight good blocks a year were sufficient for any CC student. Classics professor Owen Cramer stated that the 11% reduction in offered courses would not harm the CC student, beause "we offer too many courses at Colorado College."

Student opinion, however, was not excluded from the discussion. Senior Mike Fine stated that the eight block plan would fail to create more faculty research time, would not stimulate more student research, and will not revitalize the lethargic block plan. Junior Steve Geraghty stated that the seminar courses would not give the flexibility to take courses outside a declared major.

The seminar courses were the subject of two amendments before final voting. The first amendment changed article H proposal to include semester long in addition to year long cours seminars offered by indiv departments at their discretion second amendment added to the p requires the Registrar or permission to take a seminar course student who has failed a course. Th amendment to the proposal mandat implementation of the eight block 1988-89.

Philosophy professor Judy Gen vocal advocate of the eight bloc strongly expressed CC's need to re the block plan. She felt that the eigh plan will help attract more qu teachers and help CC compete in the for qualified teachers. She also felt th overwhelming majority of faculty i of the proposal would encourage the to vote in favor of the proposal.

the Stagecoach Inn

MID-WEEK SPECIAL
every Wednesday night
Roast Prime Rib of Beef
Complete dinner for 2 $24.95
includes
Salad, Choice of dressing
Roast Prime Rib of Beef Au Jus
Vegetable and Potato Du Jour
Dessert
Choice of Beverage

RESERVATIONS 685-9335

CC After Hours: A guide to wining and dining at Murph's

"Just say no." PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

BY MICKEY LOBE

On north Nevada next to the dirty book store (D.B.S.) and across the street from motels (with hourly rates) sits Murphy's Tavern. Behind a neon clover and whitewashed adobe walls is perhaps the bar most popular with CC students.

Any night after about 10:00 you are likely to find a score of CC students sitting drinking and discussing in the green vinyl booths lit by a glow described by one student as "greenish, creamish, yellowish."

Over the indistinguishable murmur of the jukebox Hedy, the main waitress asks in a thick German accent, "What do you want?" Contrary to popular belief she is not Mr. Murph's wife. Murph's wife only works during the day.

After ordering a few of what senior McRae Wilde calls the "best real beers ever" a special Catalyst task force set out to investigate why Murph's is so popular.

Ancel Martinez 25, a recent arrival to Colorado Springs says, "The first time I came to Murph's was two weeks ago, I never expected fo find such a fun drinking bar in Colorado Springs. I think I'll come back tomorrow."

A senior art major says of Murph's, "This place isn't cheezy," while another senior comments, "When you're writing your thesis this is the best place to go. You forget about everything."

Noticing that their beers had diminished considerably (evaporation?) the special task force called over Hedy to replenish. When asked to describe Murph's in a few words or less she called it "a very, very nice unique place."

Besides ordering 80 cent drafts, the task force took advantage of the inexpensive food available: Pickled Eggs (eggs in a jar of formaldehyde) - properly eaten with Tabasco Sauce, pepper, and crackers; Red Hots also in a jar of formaldehyde eaten with mustard, crackers, and beer; Tombstone Pizza heated up in a special oven next to the coffee machine; beef sticks, assorted chips and beer nuts.

"You haven't lived until you've done the egg," says a current CC senior. Senior Tim Talbot is drawn to Murph's by the carefree attitude of the people but says, "I also like the red hots."

Well, it's been another relaxing, contemplative evening at Murphy's Tavern. It's time to call the Fijis for a ride home. Besides the lights are out and Tom the bartender is chanting: "Last call fellas, what'll it be?"

Beyond the Far Side

ond Halloween Memories

BY KATIE DALSEMER

The other day I spotted it in the toy department. (Okay, I admit I was browsing in the general area.) I tried to resist, but I just had to have it. Yes, my prayers have been answered. Slime is back! You know the gross green stuff that used to come in the little green trash can. It's now officially called Masters of the Universe Evil Horde Slime, but it's the geniune article. Oh rapture!

And speaking of all things cold and slimy (Sorority Rush maybe?) It's Halloween! Even though I don't mind being a mature (cough, cough) college student sometimes I wish I were a little kid again especially around this time of year. Do you realize how good we had it?: going around raking in all that candy for free.

Of course there were some prices to pay. I always dreaded trick or treating at houses of my parents' friends. You know how it went. You'd go up to a house with a bunch of crazy friends, ring the bell, open your bag and go in for the kill. I'd usually get a few teeth rotting substances and prepare to exit when inevitably I'd hear: "Katie, is that you?" I'd sheepishly turn around and reply "Uh, yeah, it's me Mrs. so and so." Then I'd hear her yelling into the house, "Oh, look dear, it's Katie. Come see how cute she looks in her Halloween costume." By this time of course my friends were laughing so hard that they were practically falling in the bushes. All the while I'd be thinking that I'd gladly give back the candy if this whole ordeal could be avoided. I also seriously considered wearing a Hefty trash bag over m head the next year.

At the end of the night which always came too soon, I'd go home and compare my loot with my brother's. I was always so happy when I came home with more candy than he did and boy did I let him know it. Occasionally I'd even come home with some loose change from people who had run out of candy and felt guilty. Yes, young capitalists in the making.

I never wanted to stop trick or treating but my being taller than a lot of the parents did start to look suspicious after a while. So, I chose the natural alternative and started handing out candy at my front door. Ha! Now the shoe was on the other foot. It's amazing how much control you can have over children with a big bowl of M&M's.

I suppose trick or treating hasn't changed that much since I was younger. Do many kids trick or treat in the neighborhoods around CC? I guess it could be pretty scary with all the CC students living off campus. I can just see some poor little munchkin yelling trick or treat getting a response like "Sure kid, have a brè ' and getting a bottle of Pilsner Club hurled at him. Children should be warned to stay away from all houses blasting "Louie, Louie."

Well, trick or treating may be out of the question (or is it?), but Halloween is still fun. Who doesn't enjoy getting dressed up in weird costumes or at least drinking enough to think that they're another life-form. Enjoy!

Oops!

In the Oct. 17 article "It's All Greek To Us," sorority member Wendy Blethin's comment should read "...Here, we (sororities) are not isolated and segregated into groups."

Do you know of an interesting person, story, or happening that you would like to share with the CC community? Write about it, and the Catalyst will print it. Or just tell us about it and we'll write it up ourselves. Meetings are Sundays at 7:00 and Mondays the first week of the block, in the basement of Cossitt.

KEN KRAMER . . . ARE YOU KIDDING???

Compare the candidates for U.S. Senate. Decide for yourself whether Tim Wirth or Ken Kramer better understands YOUR concerns about the future of Colorado:

STUDENT ISSUE (HOW CONGRESS VOTED)	KEN KRAMER	TIM WIRTH
1. FINANCIAL AID: Reauthorize funding for Guaranteed Student Loans, National Direct Student Loans and Pell Grants. (Passed 350-67, 12/4/85)	NO	YES
2. ENVIRONMENT: Provide funds to protect underground drinking water from toxic pollutants such as lead and uranium. (Passed 382-21, 5/13/86)	NO	YES
3. CENTRAL AMERICA: Prohibit funding for the introduction of U.S. combat troops into El Salvador or Nicaragua. (Passed 342-64, 5/23/84)	NO	YES
4. WOMEN'S RIGHTS: Constitutionally prohibit discrimination on account of sex (ERA). (Failed 2/3 Passage 238-147, 11/15/83)	NO	YES

YOU HAVE TOO MUCH AT STAKE TO SIT THIS ONE OUT!

VOLUNTEER FOR WIRTH ON ELECTION DAY

— —For more information call Toni at 520-5815— —

Paid for by the Committee for Tim Wirth

Images of War at CC

Ex-Newsweek editor speaks

BY KATIE WELCH

From the time that humans learned to pick up and hurl stones, war has remained a means of dealing with conflict. Colorado College and the Harry Frank Guggenheim Foundation brought 11 conferees together two weeks ago to discuss the "Images of War."

"One of the questions we're asking is, to what extent is the experience of war the same, and how might it be different," said William Broyles who participated in the three-day conference. Broyles, a former editor of Newsweek, is a Vietnam veteran and has recently published a book on his war experiences.

"Images is one of the things we're talking about. How do you remember war? How do you remember it accurately—because it is such a tumultuous and confusing experience." He continued, "it is a confusion of the noble and the horrible. Some concentrate on the noble, some on the horrible, and the truth is some measure of both."

Discussion on the nature of war reality and experience opened the Oct. 15 conference. "War is like an enduring condition of man. So long as man has been civilized, there has been tension between civilized values and war. No one will disagree that war is horrible and that we shouldn't have it, but we've always had it."

Since the buildup of nuclear arms, many consider modern war impossible to fight. "War today is obsolete in the sense of World War II where we did everything we could to win," Broyles said. "If we fought like that today, we would not simply destroy our enemy, we would destroy ourselves."

Still, a recently released Associated Press survey estimates at least 43 countries are at war this year. As Broyles sees it, the main problem with war today is "how you project force and power for national ends short of risking that (global nuclear destruction)."

The following day of the conference concentrated on the remembrance and expression of war through literature, art and teaching. "War is such a total experience that it takes everything we have to describe it: books, paintings, music, etc."

He stressed that one need not have fought in a war in order to understand it. "The people here at the conference have a different backgrounds. Some fought in World War II, some in Vietnam, some are astute readers and students of war."

"On the other hand, the actual knowledge of war—I don't think you really understand it. When I went I'd read all the histories and war novels, and it didn't really help. And what I experienced is probably different from what anyone else experienced."

The media, especially television, has played an increasingly large role in shaping attitudes towards war. "The experience of war up until Vietnam was seen only by the soldier. Television brought it into everyone's living room. It was not the same as being there, but it had an impact. For some people it hardened their support, and made other people seriously question what we were doing."

"During the Falkland crisis, the British kept all TV out. In a sense that is good, because if we did that here, the President has to be all the more certain that the cause is one in which the American people believe in," he added.

Concerning the press, Broyles believes that it "by and large tries to do a fair job. The cameras tend to go out and take a picture of a soldier lighting a hut on fire rather than helping to build a dam, but things in war are so constant and varied, it's hard to say 'this is it.'"

"The press became critical starting in 1968-1969 when it became clear to people that the war could go on forever. We were either fighting for no good purpose, or else that purpose could not be achieved. I think we could have won by keeping troops there forever, but that is a very high price to pay."

Broyles recently completed a book about his Vietnam experience: Brothers in Arms—A Journey to War and Peace. It chronicles his return to Vietnam in 1984.

"My enemy had been a mystery to me throughout the war and I wanted to go back and see who they were," explained Broyles. "The idea of an enemy is crucial to war, even more so than weapons I wanted to confront them as human beings and I wanted them to see me. It was a journey I took for myself, and for others who couldn't."

The conference concluded on G with discussion of the creation of an towards images of war from dif angles.

"Attitudes toward fighting have become different. I hope Reaga Gorbachev know that war is n option," Broyles said. "This is th time in history that the great power had to believe that. One superpow been at war with someone in the p years, just not each other. We have to both to eliminate this and manage."

"When you look at the world as it have to look at how it is. People wanted peace for centuries, but it happened. The nuclear issue gives luxury of thinking we can't have a wa there are many levels of war."

"Conflict is part of the hu experience and war is the unfortunat conflicts are dealt with, just as viole the way it is dealt with betw individuals. Though we would hope would take their differences to a medi we still have police and we lock our do night. Similarly, we have to be prepar the political arena as well."

For 25 Years, we've been exporting America's most valuable resource.

The men and women of the Peace Corps. Dedicated volunteers who help people in developing countries live better lives.

It's tough. And it takes more than just concern. It takes motivation. Commitment.

But for 25 years, being a Peace Corps volunteer has been a chance to stop dreaming about a better world and start doing something about it.

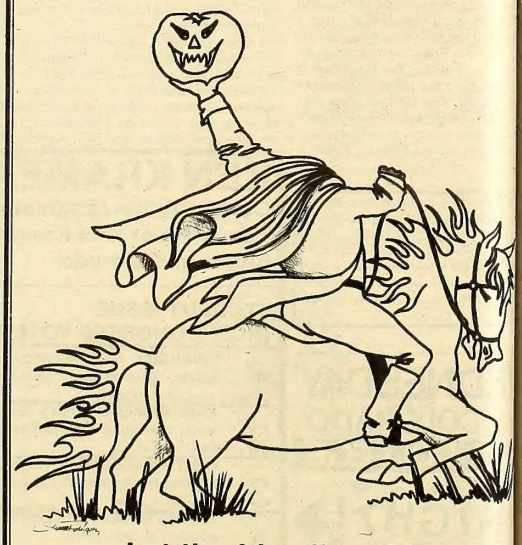
Peace Corps
The Toughest Job You'll Ever Love

Information Table Oct. 29-31
Armstrong Great Hall 9-3 p.m.

•

Film Seminar Oct. 30th
Armstrong 230 7:00 p.m.

Don't Loose Your Head Over Airfares!



Let the friendly spirits at Taylor Travel watch out for you

818 N. Tejon St. 636-3871

Your Campus Travel Agency

"Here Comes Rocky!"

The Dog Races: A CC Hangout

BY NORM LEAHY

The night air was crisp, but still somewhat summery, perfect weather for the dogs to run at Rocky Mountain Greyhound Park.

The track is a place where a person like myself who has been somewhat insulated from the realities of the working class world meets true culture shock. The place is mostly, grubby, yet solid, like the clientelle. Its a place where the reality of middle American lust for a quick buck hits you in the face with the first glimpse of the betting lines.

People here want to win, desperately.

Those who are the hardcore dog followers can be found crowding the rail near the finish line. From here, they can get the best look at the Greyhounds in hope of picking up that certain something which will indicate the hound destined to win.

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

The methods for choosing the winners are as arcane as anything one could possibly conceive of. Some are studious and methodical in their approach. They study the race form looking at records as minute in detail as possible. Won-lost record, times in previous races, were these races at sea level or higher up? (Reasoning that the canine can run faster at sea level due to greater oxygen content in the air and this may skew the data.) Other factors are weight, record in various starting positions and the comments on each race the dog has been in ("strong showing, faded fast"). These are the primary considerations made by the bulk of the betters and are what determine the odds. But on a different level of mentality is the psycho-superstitious considerations.

These bettors lurk at the fringe of the betting and real worlds. For them, statistics are nifty, if you don't know what you're doing, but if you do know something more, then these are you're criteria for blowing the paycheck: If the dog riddles or takes a dump on the parade lap, this is a dog to eye with dread. If at all possible, see if you can get a good look at the biscuits. If they don't look right, the dog is drugged up and will probably freak out before the end of the race. If it looks okay or not is not really important as this is the indicator that the beast ate before the race and will lose anyway.

What color is the dog? Solid color dogs are uniform in body and spirit and will win, while mottled dogs are jumbled and confused and should not race to begin with.

Does the dog jump around before the race? Depending on who you talk to this is either good or bad. Good in that the dog is psyched and will blow away the rest of the field or bad in that the dog is distracted and will fall apart early on.

On opening day this fall at RMGP, I came across another method for betting. While watching one of the races, an old man walked up to the rail where I was and said to me, "See that dog there? I bet on him." Not knowing what to say to this bald, toothless old codger, I simply turned, nodded and smiled. Little did I know that now I had a friend for life in this man.

"He looked at me, he did," he said.

"Really?"

"Always bet on the dog that looks at you."

"I see," obviously a bit touched, I thought.

"Bet on a dog that looked at me once and doubled my money."

Mercifully the race started and the old coot turned his full attention to the dog who had vaguely glanced in his general direction. He cheered mightily for his hound to pull it out in the home stretch. But we could not tell what happened because the race ended in a photo finish. Disgruntled, the old man tore up his ticket and cast the pieces to the wind.

He had committed a cardinal sin. Never rip up the tickets in your hands before the official finish is posted. You may be sorry if you do.

As it turned out, his dog finished second, paying a few dollars. He was crushed. He couldn't believe he had done it. We searched the ground in vain for the shreds. After a while, the old guy put his hands on his hips, hung his head down and melted into the crowd. In the times I've been back since then, I've seen him, still wearing the sweatshirt, slacks and running shoes he wore on the night the big one got away.

But he keeps going back to the track to inspect the dogs, just like a lot of the people one finds there do. They tramp through the turnstiles and littered walkways to take up their spots on the rail in hope of one day hitting a gigantic trifecta. And someday it might happen. Until it does, they will smoke like factories, yell like birthing mothers and curse the luck they have that night.

You almost have the urge to tell them the only sure winners are the owners of the track and Rocky, the wooden rabbit who zips around the track enticing the hounds to chase. But that would only spoil the fun. And if any of them are like the old man, it's the closest they'll ever come to having a fleeting chance at the big time.

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

NATIONAL COLLEGIATE ALCOHOL AWARENESS WEEK

NOVEMBER 3 - 8

Sponsored By: The Dean of Students Office; The Office of Residential Life; IFC/Panhellenic Council; BACCHUS; and The colorado College Alcohol and Drub Education Program.

Funding Provided By: Old Chicago; Jose Muldoon's; Finn's; Northport; SAGA Food Service; Anheuser-Busch/Miller Brewing Co.; Adolph Coors Co.; High Country Sales; Pikes Peak Distributing; Rampart Distributing; Domino's Pizza; Pepsi-Cola; Service Typographers; and Fittje Bros. Printing.

MONDAY
NOVEMBER 3, 1986
3:00 p.m. in
Loomis Lounge

"Drink with the Deans" & Coffee-House Showcase. See how 3.2% beer affects 3 CC administrators featuring:

Maxwell Taylor, Vice-President for Student Life; Laurel McLeod, Dean of Students; and David Ives, Assistant Dean of Students.

The Colorado Springs Police Dept. Breathalyzer and your favorite live music & entertainment! Sponsored by Miller Brewing Co. & High Country Sales.

During Dinner in Bemis/Taylor

"Mocktails" — A special selection of non-alcoholic beverages to enjoy with your meal! Sponsored by SAGA Food Service. Hosted by IFC/Panhellenic Presidents.

TUESDAY
NOVEMBER 4, 1986
7:30 p.m. in
Loomis Lounge

"Driving Under the Influence...What you need to know." Sponsored by the Colorado State Police.

"How to make a mocktail/ice cream social study break." Instruction provided by The Bartending College of Colorado. Sponsored by Coors/Rampart Distributing.

WEDNESDAY
NOVEMBER 5, 1986
11:00 a.m. in
Packard Hall

"Wednesday at 11"—Panel discussion on 18 versus 21 year old drinking age at law.

3:30 p.m. at the
CC Track

NCAAW 5K Fun Run—Sponsored by Anheuser-Busch/Pikes Peak Distributing/Domino's Pizza/Pepsi-Cola. Register at Bemis during lunch Monday & Tuesday or at the race.

During Dinner in Bemis/Taylor

"More Mocktails"—The return of those delicious drinks to top off your midweek meal!

TUESDAY
NOVEMBER 6, 1986
6:00 p.m. in
Loomis Lounge

"Happy Birthday Ray"—a presentation and film screening on situational drinking by Tom Ratterree, candidate for Colorado House seat.

"Pizza Party"—The pies keep coming as long as the people do! Sponsored by Pikes Peak Distributing/Domino's Pizza.

For More Information Contact: Doug Gertner, Assistant to the Dean of Students at extension 228. Or Adam Burke, President, BACCHUS, at extension 213.

JOSE MULDOON'S

MEXICAN STYLE & AMERICAN DISHES IN A CASUAL ATMOSPHERE

SPECIAL NIGHTS

JOIN US FOR DINNER SUN-WED 5-10PM

SUN. FIESTA SUNDAY FOR FAMILY & FRIENDS
This platter serves 4 or more "family style" includes: The salad bar, cheese crisp, salsa & chips, guacamole, sour cream, chimichangas, beef tacos, cheese enchiladas, rice and beans (USUALLY 7.25 pp) EVERY SUNDAY!
 $6.95 PER PERSON / KIDS 12 & UNDER $2.95 *

MON.  2 FOR 1 **
On all Mexican Dinner Entrees (except fajitas)
BOTH ENTREES INCLUDE SALAD BAR
- you buy one, we'll buy other of equal or lesser value -
(For each two persons, Jose will buy one entree)

TUES. DUO DYNAMICO DINNER FOR 2
* * ONLY $13.95 PER COUPLE *
EVERY TUES. A DIFFERENT MENU — includes a Margarita or Sangria per person, appetizer, salad Bar, entrees & dessert

WED. * SANTA FE NIGHT!
FREE BLUE CORN NACHOS OR SPECIAL APPETIZER WITH PURCHASE OF ANY TWO SELECTIONS FROM SANTA FE SECTION OR SPECIALS BOARD!
BLUE MARGARITAS $1.95!!

222 N. TEJON • DOWNTOWN • 636-2311

Battle Between God and School

Fundamentalist Christian families in Hawkins County, Tennessee took their schoolboard to court because they found works of literature such as Cinderella, The Wizard of Oz, and The Diary of Anne Frank offensive to their religion.

The plantiffs charged that the school violated students' religious freedoms by suspending them for their refusal to read books that went against the teachings of their fundamental religion. The parents objected that the above books present ideas such as humanism, feminism, and vegetarianism. Heaven forbid! Last week the families won.

The parents who brought the suit are entitled to their beliefs and to raise their children as they see fit, but they have misunderstood the purpose of public education. From their actions it would seem the parents see education as indoctrination (i.e. anything put in front of a student is right and should not be questioned).

However, education is a presentation of various ideas and theories which the student may choose to believe or question. These parents are subjecting their children to a totalitarian state where there is only one source of information that is always correct. It is a form of mental child abuse.

The social ramifications of this ruling are broad and, if not overturned, could undermine our country's public education system. If the ruling stands, religious sects could pick and choose at what they wanted taught—and what books are to be banned—until the educational system could no longer carry out its primary functions due to severe subject-matter limitations.

This precedent is nothing short of frightening and exhibits parental distrust in the judgment of their own children.

—D.K. & B.S., Editors

• • •

Did you find last week's Catalyst? Stacks of the 17 October Catalyst mysteriously disappeared from the major residence and dining halls. We the staff knew it was a hot issue, but for them to go that fast seems too incredible. Reward for information regarding the whereabouts of those missing stacks.

CATALYST
Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado

DAVID KLEIN
BLAIR SANFORD
Editors

LIZ CHENEY, Opinions Editor
TED CRAIG & DAVID FITZGERALD, News Editors
PATRICK CHISHOLM & KATIE DALSEMER, Features Editors
KATHY MAHONEY & ALEC REKOW, Sports Editors
ERIC BREITBARD, Arts Editor
SUSAN GRIAK, Associate Arts Editor

JOHN KATSANIS, Photography Editor
MIKE FRATERELLI, Copy Editor
ANNE MANHART, Layout Editor

JEAN BOYER
Business Manager

LINDA SHIREMAN, Typesetter
LINDA IMHOFF, Typesetter

The Catalyst logo by JANE PATTERSON

The Catalyst is published by Cutler Publications, Inc., Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado 80903. Phone (303) 473-2233 extension 675. The Catalyst is printed tri-monthly from September to May, except during holiday periods.
Cutler Publications, Inc. does not discriminate on the basis of race, color, age, religion, sex, national origin, or physical handicap in its education programs, activities or employment policies in accordance with federal, state and local laws.
Editorials appearing in the Catalyst are the opinions of the designated author and not necessarily those of any other Catalyst staff member.
The Catalyst encourages the letters to the editor. Letters should be no more than 400 words in length and be typed or neatly printed. Address letters to the Catalyst, Rastall Center, Colorado College, Colorado Springs, 80903. Unsigned letters will not be printed.
A work of considerable length may be submitted as a guest commentary. Persons interested in submitting commentary should contact the Catalyst at 632-4999 or 473-2233 ext. 675.
The Catalyst reserves the right to edit or cut letters to the editor and guest commentaries.

Letters to Liz

☆☆☆

Are the Soviets Marxists?

BY COREY ABEL

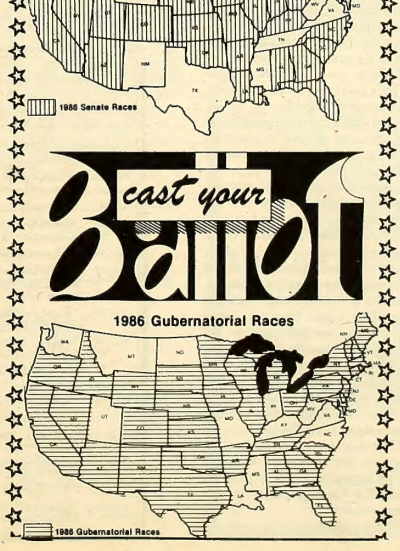
In light of the recent superpower talks and the oft-spoken dissatisfaction with the results, it appears to me unfortunate that many Americans lack an understanding of the thought of Karl Marx. If more people understood Marx, I think more people would understand Soviet foreign policy, the structure and characteristics of Soviet government and leadership, and the difficulty, perhaps even the futility, of 'bargaining' or 'negotiating' with the U.S.S.R. The Soviet Union is founded explicitly upon the ideas of Karl Marx, and its end (in accordance with Marxist thought) is the achievement of a world communistic society. There is a widespread belief though, that the U.S.S.R. is not really Marxist, that it is an aberrant and unfortunate development in an otherwise "humanitarian" scheme. I believe that this is a mistaken view, and if several primary tenets of Marx's thought on the generation of Communism are considered, it is clear that Soviet expansionism and internal occurrences such as Stalin's "purges" and the abundant use of gulags for purposes of political and social control are perfectly consistent with Marxist ideology. Of course, this by no means legitimates such activities in any larger moral or political context.

First, for Marx the state is linked (as is everything else) to the current economic system; and the one he is concerned with is capitalism. The state is seen as the protector of bourgeoisie interests, and this precludes a peaceful resolution "within" the system, for to do so is merely to be 'coopted' and remain oppressed by the capitalist system. That a revolution must occur is seen not only as a stage in a (supposed) historical process, but also "...because the ruling class cannot be overthrown in any other way (and) also because the class overthrowing it can only in a revolution succeed in ridding itself of all the muck of ages and become fitted to found society anew" (German Ideology). The "way" the bourgeoisie are to be overthrown is unabashedly violent: "The Communists...openly declare that their ends can be attained only by the forcible overthrow of all existing social conditions. Let the ruling classes tremble at a Communist revolution" (Manifesto, italics added). Thus far, we are confronted with the "spectre" of a violent revolution which overthrows, but does not work within the boundaries of, "the existing social and political order of things." But the real danger is to think that this is a domestic or isolationistic proposal. Marx appeals to the "working men of all countries" (Manifesto, italics added) and explicitly rejects a merely national movement in favor of an international one. Is it any wonder that the Soviets sponsor revolutionaries the world over who declare themselves enemies of the bourgeoisie?

But also, the Soviets have been known to encourage Marxist expressions of indigeneous rumblings (i.e. subversion) and to trounce nations which think themselves capable of handling their own affairs. These manipulative and paternalistic tendencies are outgrowths of Marx's view of the role of the "Communists" (i.e. party/theoreticians) as leaders and catalysts to revolution. The proletariat may find itself in an "undeveloped" or unenlightened state as regards their own plight, therefore the Communists "...never cease, for a single instant, to instill into the working class the clearest possible recognition of the hostile antagonism between bourgeoisie and proletariat, in order that...the fight against the bourgeoisie itself may immediately begin" (Manifesto). Thus, political propoganda and Lenin's "vanguard" are not things Marx himself wouldn't have considered necessary and legitimate. But to introduce a leadership elite contradicts the "classlessness" of communism. (That this contradiction is ignored by Marx and presented as a necessary element is indicative of a broader contradiction in Marx's thought between economic determinism and the free will necessary to initiate a revolution.) However, this power elite, which leads the revolution and sets the project of social reconstruction on course is legitimated by Marx under the dubious guise of a temporary or "transitional" socialist state, which in Engel's words, would "wither away."

On this count, Marx, who is usually considered a great economist, made a rather blatant error. Aside from any possible misconceptions of "human nature" which may have led Marx to believe that communism would develop "inevitably," he dumped the concept of scarcity. It was upon this concept that the entire history of capitalism was based and out of which the evils (substantive inequities) of capitalism were derived, but Marx proclaimed that the wealth produced by capitalism, if properly distributed, would be sufficient to free mankind from economic necessity. However, any degree of maintained (or increased) wealth depends, in any society, upon continued production, for whatever is produced is consumed. And in any large modern society (a world society in particular) production will occur on a mass scale in the context of industrialization, if any significant degree of wealth (freedom from economic necessity) is to be secured. This being the case, a communistic society is stuck with the same problems of alienation that faced a capitalistic (i.e. privately owned 'capital') society. Since communism rejects private property and individual liberties in favor of the "common good" and communal ownership (if it can be called that), it also rejects the possibility of independent (individual) production, and the competition that this implies, in the economy. Instead, communism must retain the apparatus of the state, led by those few qualified to do the leading (i.e. the 'vanguard'), and it must place in the state's hands the responsibility of creating and maintaining economic wealth. In other words, the state, far from "withering away," remains. It remains out of the ongoing and unresolvable problem of scarcity, and takes the form of an oligarchic, ideological government with "social planning" as its policy centerpiece (at least domestically).

The vanguard lead in a government which ignores the importance of individual initiative at home, and seeks global domination abroad; a government guided by an ideology of violence and conflict, which sees the United States, or any capitalistic society, not as a partner with whom to cooperate but as an enemy to be defeated. The application of Marx's ideas in a given society (which Marx hoped for and recommended) establishes a system which can justify the persecution of political "dissidents" and wanton censorship of the press domestically, and political subversion and military invasion of countries all over the world, as necessary steps in a supposedly inevitable historical process (But if it is inevitable, why the need for revolution, vanguard, etc.?). I am not interested, though, in Marx's intentions and aims, for that is irrelevant. Given his thought, and all its implications and fallacies, it is important only to recognize that the Soviets are Marxists, faithfully executing in practice their chosen doctrine. And it is crucial to realize the implications of that doctrine for our own political activities. We are on the defensive against a revolutionary regime, and in their eyes, we are the enemy.



Wirth the Gamble

BY T. JOHN CALDWELL

I have a double-wish: I hope that the Republicans maintain control of the Senate this November 4th, and I hope that they do so without Ken Kramer.

Why a Republican Senate? Now it may seem odd that this columnist still supports his GOP after bashing them for moralistic politics, ludicrous deficits, S.D.I., and the recent craze to line up at urinals for scrutiny. Despite such backsliding, a Republican Senate is a must for several reasons. The first is leadership.

The GOP committee leaders have proven pragmatic, innovative and effective since they assumed power in 1980. Bob Dole has displayed great skill in managing the chamber, while men like Richard Lugar, Bob Packwood and Pete Dominici have run effective and influential committees. There are, of course, exceptions: Jesse Helms is a meddlesome, frightening paranoic.

Beyond leadership is the issue of policies. Much of the Reagan program has been good for the country, and the Senate has helped see it through. At important times, the Senate leaders (all of whom entered the Senate before Reagan's election) have shown their independence. Richard Lugar, sensing a President out of touch with the people, led the successful campaign to override the President's veto of South Africa sanctions. Dole and Dominici have fought a rearguard fight against deficits throughout the Reagan years. Whatever one may think of the Gramm-Rudmann law, it was at least an attempt to address the issue when the President chose to push the positive but hardly vital issue of tax reform.

A final consideration is insuring effective government. Unlike parliamentary systems, the American government divides the executive and legislative branches, a recipe designed to insure slow federal action. This can be dangerous in the twentieth century. While unable to override the permanently Democratic House on several occasions, a Republican Senate has insured a fair amount of executive-legislative coordination. If the Senate goes to the Democrats we will have an ugly two years in store for American politics. The nation will be at a political standstill. The Senate should stay in Republican hands.

Why Tim Wirth? Two reasons. One, Tim Wirth is not a free-spending ultra-lib but rather an independent democrat with sound ideas. Two, Ken Kramer is a Reagan hack who represents all that has gone afoul in today's Republican party.

SDI, as always, stands out in my mind. While Wirth has unfortunately softened his opposition to Star Wars due to the issue of Colorado jobs, the choice remains clear. Kramer has proudly labeled himself the strongest supporter of an initiative which can only be effective enough to destabilize superpower relations and accelerate the arms race, busting the bank in the process. Kramer wants to see one trillion dollars spent on SDI over the next 20 years (preferably in Colorado). Is this the Ken Kramer who thinks he can balance the budget? SDI is dangerous all by itself, but its financial cost could very well gut American conventional forces.

And on deficits, Mr. Kramer continues to advocate the illusory balanced budget amendment. Since $200 billion cannot conceivably come out of domestic spending, he is implicitly calling for either drastic cuts in defense or a substantial tax increase (two things he would hotly deny). Mr. Wirth's record on deficit reduction is strong. He has advocated the more practical, gradualist approach of Gramm-Rudmann.

Finally, two things strike me from the television campaign. First, the Congressional pay raise which Mr. Kramer has chosen to harp on. Congressmen simply need higher saleries if we are to attract qualified individuals to serve this nation. Wirth's vote for a pay raise was a wise attempt to keep good Congressmen from jumping into the private sector or into lobbying.

Second, AT&T. To blame Tim Wirth for the AT&T breakup is ridiculous. Moreover, the breakup was good economics. Injecting competition into the telephone industry will only benefit consumers in the long run. True Republicans support efforts to make the market competitive. Mr. Kramer's national economy seems to center on fat, non-competitive defense contracts.

The Gamble. My double-wish may or may not be contradictory. I would vote for Tim Wirth and hope that Republicans can hold or pickup seats in other states. It is risky, but Ken Kramer is simply not the man Coloradans should send to the U.S. Senate.

Regardless of your choice, exercise a unique American right, vote this Tuesday.

PLAYSPLAYSPLAYSPLAYSPLAYSPLAYS PLAYSPLAYSPLAYSPLA

Serious Performances at CC:

Welcome Home, and Scenes from an Execution

PHOTO BY JIM MALCOM

Clockwise from top left to bottom: Tijani Cole, Dean French, Michael Antonucci, Rob Madison, and Bill Hulings.

BY PRISCILLA PERKINS

A trivia question: which twentieth-century war saw a member of Britain's Royal Family go into combat?

The answer is the 1982 Falklands War. The royal personage was Prince Andrew and Britain's enemy was Argentina. Britain won. If you're an American and you knew the whole answer, you're a real trivia buff. If you're British, you're merely a patriotic citizen.

Americans look at the war in the Falklands as a kind of counterpart to our 1983 invasion of Grenada — both were quick and fairly clean, and, in the grander scheme of things, pretty inconsequential.

The British, on the other hand, looked at the Falklands as a proving ground for military skills that had not been needed for about 35 years. At the end of the war, Margaret Thatcher boasted, "Great Britain is great again."

Young British playwright Tony Marchant wrote a play, Welcome Home, about the less-famous veterans of this war and their problems re-adjusting to civilian life. When he wrote this play, which was produced by C.C.'s Theatre Workshop October 27-29 in Armstrong 32, he assumed that his audience would be familiar with the details of the Falklands War.

With such a discrepancy between American and British views of the Falklands War, how does a British play about the struggle survive on an American stage? Can Americans, with the spectre of Vietnam still before them, understand the difficulties of these little-known British vets?

The most important thing to know before seeing the play is that these British soldiers won their war, but came back home to the familiar old problems of unemployment, boredom and personal doubts about the meaning of their "heroic" acts.

In short, Marchant's theme is as universal as it is specific — almost entirely because of his carefully-drawn characters. The five veterans in Welcome Home provice a whole spectrum of possible feelings toward the war; the funeral of one of their friends gives them the opportunity to examine their memories and emotions away from the battlefield.

On one end, Walters (Michael Antonucci) and Sharp (William Hulings) represent a chauvinist, Rambo-esque view of British patriotism. Antonucci is very physical as Walters, the loud-mouthed paratrooper who hates homosexuals and loves stupid practical jokes. Huling's Sharp is frighteningly efficient—all brain and no heart — and he is not above cruel corporal punishment to keep his group of men in line. Both of these actors put in convincing performances.

Two less aggressive soldiers are at the other end of Marchant's scale. Goldy, played by Tijani Cole, is more interested in books and his girlfriend than in reliving the war. He misses their dead friend more than anyone. Rob Madison plays Dennis, the soldier caught between his memories of the war and of the baby he has to leave behind in England. Cole and Madison may play less flambuoyant parts, but their portrayals are thoughtful and believable.

Between these two extremes lies Polo, played to near perfection by sophomore Dean French. Polo may have the physical stamina of a British paratrooper, but he is mentally and emotionally unequipped for battle. After the war, he retreats into a world of popular music: when the situation gets tense, he cites statistics from the British Top 40. He is the first of the men to break.

French's performance as Polo provides a focus for Welcome Home. He is the one soldier who can say what the others are thinking; every character in the play must react to Polo's pain in a different way. French's ability to portray a child trapped in a man's body gives the play an enormous amount of emotional power.

Theatre Workshop downplays the setting for Welcome Home in order to highlight the emotionally-charged words of the characters. For the most part, the scenery consists of four wooden benches; in a couple of scenes, the men carry on the the coffin that holds their dead friend. Between scenes, the audience hears snatches of Pink Floyd's The Wall, a modern anthem to British despair that was familiar to most of the American audience.

The actors in Welcome Home dress and speak like Americans. Director James Malcolm probably decided to have his characters speak like Americans because it would have been too hard for them to keep up a believable British accent for two hours. But this tactic has another important effect: it makes these characters seem completely accessible to an American audience. The war may be unfamiliar, but the feelings are not. In the end, Welcome Home succeeds because it recognizes the tension between fear and heroism that almost everyone feels.

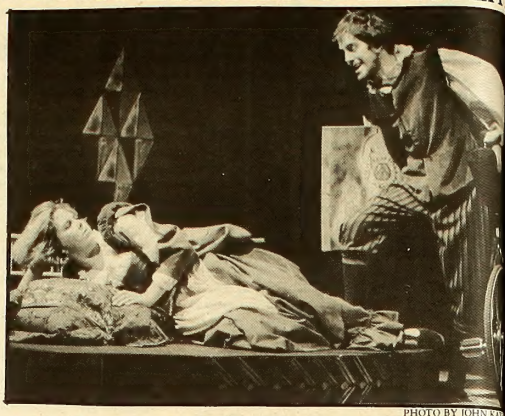

PHOTO BY JOHN KA

Catherine Rees and Andrew Scudder in Scenes from an Execution.

BY COURTNEY JANAK

The first drama department production of the year, "Scenes from an Execution," a play by Howard Barker, was presented October 16th-18th in Armstrong Theater. It was an impressive and powerful performance thanks to the combined and coordinated efforts of the stage crew, lighting and sound technicians, and actors. Joanne Klein, who directed the play did a fine job of bringing together the various elements of production to create a complete and unified picture on stage.

The play is about an artist, Galactia, living in sixteenth century Venice, who is commissioned by the State to paint the Battle of Lepanto. Conflict results when Galactia chooses to paint her realistic version of war as violence and suffering and death. She stubbornly refuses to paint war as an image of Venetian triumph and nobility as the State and Church request. She is thrown into prison for her rebellious nature, but no other artist has her talent. In the end, she is released from prison and her painting is displayed for all to see.

The play was written as a radio play, and Klein handled the challenging problems of transferring it to the stage with grace and innovation. The conflict between the warm, crude, informal realism of Galactia's world and the cold, formal, decorated artificiality of the court was clearly defined by the costumes, the set, and even the rhythm and movement of the characters.

Though the show did have some problems, the problems were few and relatively minor. The prison scenes might have had more variety in movement Galactia needed more visual emphas these scenes.

The representation of the pai while being effective, perhaps could been even more effective had representation been more obscur left more up to the imagination.

The actual painting, however, wa most difficult concept to materializ stage, and the use of the sails and g ensemble actors was a very creative w solving the problem. Most importan worked.

The acting was outstanding. Cath Rees (Galactia) shows great talent a actress. She was confident on s believable, and brought the passion character to life.

She could have gone even further the character by exploring differen of Galactia's complex personality varying her level of intensity so it gradually build to its maximum Considering, however, that Gala such a difficult and challenging role is to be praised for her fine perform

Andy Leman did an amazing j portraying the obnoxious, flamb childishness of the Doge. The rest cast was equally impressive, and the of the ensemble actors contributed entire mood and rhythm of the sho

Congratulations once again to th and crew of "Scenes From an Exec on a truly spendid and powerfully p performance.

The Colorado Springs Fine Arts Center

November Calendar

30 West Dale Street / 634-5581 / Tuesday - Saturday: 10 am to 5 pm / Sunday: 1 pm to 5 pm

Gallery Admission:

Members Free Adults 2.50 Students & Seniors 1.50 Children 1.00 Under Five Free Sundays Fr

Nov	Collector's Showcase on exhibit through November 30.
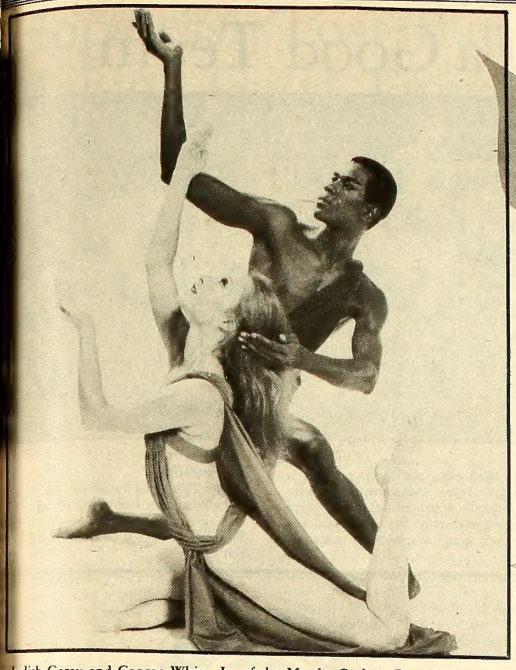
Nov 01, 02	Martha Graham Dance Company at the Pikes Peak Center. 8:00 pm Nov. 01 and 3:30 pm Nov. 02. Tickets: $11 - $25.
Nov 04	"Wages Of Fear" — Classic Film Series. 8:00 pm / $2.50.
Nov 05	Jazz In The Galleries — H30 with Alan Joseph, 5:00 - 7:00 pm. Free to FAC and Jazz Society members; general admission $1.50. Sponsored by Colorado National Bank Exchange.
Nov 08	"Painting The Figure" — Bemis Adult Workshop. 9:30 - 3:30 pm / $25 plus $5 model fee. Call 475-2444 to register.
Nov 09, 10, 11	"Egypt: Land Of The Pharoahs" — World Horizons Travel Film narrated by Frank Carney. 2:00 pm each day, 4:30 pm show on Nov. 09, 8:00 pm show on Nov. 10 $4.75 adults, $3.00 students.
Nov 11	"Jezebel" — Classic Film Series. 8:00 pm / $2.50.
Nov 18	"El Cid" — Classic Film Series. 8:00 pm / $2.50.
Nov 19	Jazz In The Galleries — Laura Davis & Friends. 5:00 - 7:30 pm. Free to FAC and Jazz Society members; general admission $1.50. Sponsored by Colorado National Bank Exchange.
Nov 22	"Appalachian Hen Basket" — Bemis Basketry Workshop. Call 475-2444 to register. 10:00 - 4:00 pm / $25 plus materials.
Nov 25	"The Story Of Alexander Graham Bell' — Classic Film Series. 8:00 pm / $2.50.
Nov 30	"Queen Elizabeth II, Down Under" — World Horizons Travel Film narrated by Douglas Jones. 2:00 and 4:30 pm / $4.75 adults, $3.00 students.



Judith Garay and George White, Jr. of the Martha Graham Dance Company perform in Acts of Light this Saturday at 8:00 p.m. and Sunday at 3:00 p.m. at the Fine Arts Center. Tickets are $11, $17, and $25.

Real Live Fear

BY NINA DE GRAMONT

Nothing's scary anymore.

I mean nothing's scary in the fun sense. The only really scary thing about this upcoming Halloween is the thought of little kids Trick or Treating in Colorado Springs, derelict capital of the world. It would be nice to feel afraid of a good wholesome ghoul or goblin, but frankly I'm more worried about the little guy who collects cans. So I haven't been thinking along the horror movie lines these days.

But I got this message on the answering machine my housemate just brought home. Right after some lunatic left a heavy-breathing message that said "I'd really like to get naked with you," Eric "Arts Editor," Breitbard came on and told me to see a horror movie. Halloween week, you know. "There's one call Friend, Enemy or something like that," Eric said.

The movie Eric was talking about is called Deadly Friend and I'll tell you right now I didn't see it. What I did do was look through the newspaper and find out what it was about. Some scientific genius of a teenager puts a microchip in his girlfriend's skull after an accident leaves her a vegetable. His experiment goes awry, and I guess the girl ends up chopping all their friends to pieces. Something like that, anyway. Not being one to have microchip nightmares, I doubted that this movie would have much effect on me.

"I have to see a horror movie," I told E.J.

E.J. told me that there's one out about a rock star; "His fans won't let him die—and he won't let them live." This musician goes around electrocuting fans with his guitar; I didn't bother finding out the title.

There's one more scary movie out called Trick or Treat. I don't know anything about this one, except none of my friends want to see it. Whatever doubts I may have had about the movie's ability to really scare me, I wasn't about to go see it alone.

So sorry Eric, no Horror Movie review. If any of you want to be scared on Halloween, just leave your doors and windows unlocked after dark and thumb through the Gazette Telegraph. Or you can always go to Pop'N'Go or 7-11 and rent Halloween. That's a really scary movie—it's about an insane psychopath running around a town breaking up parties by murdering teenagers. Now there's a story line we can all relate to.

Fear the Living Dead

BY JANE FOX

See the mall crawl without actually having to go to Boulder. Universally renowned as "the best film ever made in Pittsburg" Night of the Living Dead is the touching story of a cute little deer named Bambi who loses his mother in a tragic forest fire...well actually its about flesh-eating zombies activated by radiation from a space rocket who ravage the countryside. A Halloween must see. Olin 7, 9, and 12 Friday night.

U.S., 1968, 98 minutes, B/W, directed by George Romero.

Beta Band Unmasked

BY KATIE DALSEMER

This group made its debut at a Beta Pub Club a few weeks ago and can often be heard jamming in the basement of the French House. I know you're thinking that the name of the band is on the tip of your tongue, but just can't remember it. Well, actually the band didn't have an official name until recently. But after much consideration (a coin toss) during the interview the members decided on the name Order and Progress. For all you intellectuals out there that is the motto on the Brazilian flag.

Now, I admit I'd never seen them perform because I didn't go to Pub Club due to the fact that I was slaving away in the Catalyst office, but I had heard good things about these guys and decided to check them out. So, the other day I crawled down into the depths of the French House and sat in on a practice session.

I didn't know what to expect, but hoped it would be good since the room was very small and the amps were looking bigger by the minute. After some final setting up, Order and Progress started playing. Although the group has only been together a few months it did a surprisingly polished job on most of the songs I heard. Some of my favorites included "Evil Ways" and "Black Magic Woman" by Santana and "Lowrider." A couple of the songs like one Sade tune needed a little work, but overall I was quite impressed.

So who are these mystery men? The members some of which were in the band Top Sid last year included Richard Walker on lead vocals, Nick Nesbitt on guitar, Justin Reinhardt on keyboards, Ed Keely on synthesized guitar, Jim Garrison on bass guitar and Ted Miller on drums. Some of the members also take turns on various percussion instruments and on backing vocals.

Out of curiosity I asked what year each one is. They went as far as to say that there are three sophomores and three seniors and then remarked that they "don't like labels." (Quite the Liberal Arts attitude, eh?) I guess not wanting to be classified also pertains to their music. When asked what type of music they like to play best Order and Progress replied that they want to be known as a band that plays a diversity of music such as Van Morrison, Stevie Wonder and The Talking Heads. Some original tunes are also in the works.

So, what does the future hold in store for Order and Progress? Good things I suspect, but we'll just have to, as the band explained, "wait and see."

What's On Your Turntable?

Bob Leigh—Junior—History/Political Science
The Blues Project, "The Blues Project"

Michelle Stewart-Fauts—Sophomore—Economics
Ray Lynch, "Deep Breakfast"

Anna Eder—Sophomore—Undecided
Crazy 8's, "Law & Order"

Mary Eiberger—Sophomore—Biology
John Michael Talbot, "The Bride"

Brian Buckner—Freshman—Undecided
R.E.M., "Toys in the Attic"

Carol Neel—Professor—History
"We Sing" (A tape for babies)

HEAR TODAY...
HEAR TOMORROW.

Warmth. Wit. The sound of wide-open spaces from the heart of the city. The second album from Beat Rodeo.

I.R.S.

ONLY $6.99 ALBUM OR CASSETTE

Features the single, "The Future's So Bright, I Gotta Wear Shades"

Where priceless treasures turn up in unlikely places. Where the techno-dirt sound is uncharted terrain but feels like home. This isn't just rock and roll, but a total mental health plan.

Music with integrity.
Not just one hit single surrounded by filler, but complete albums.
The kind of records you will play over and over again.
Year after year.

I.R.S. RECORDS: PROVIDING CONSISTENTLY SOUND INVESTMENTS.

Budget Tapes and Records

327 N. TEJON

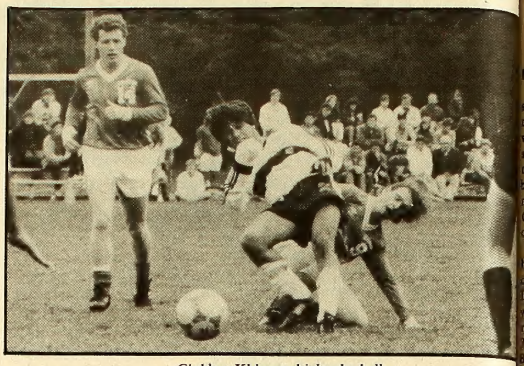
471-4419

The Rise and Fall of a Good Team

The CC men's soccer team continued to follow their erratic path through a very tough schedule over the past two weeks. Unfortunately two excellent performances against Claremont and Scranton probably won't be able to offset three embarrassing displays of soccer ineptitude against Regis, LaVerne, and Air Force in the minds of the NCAA playoff selection committee members. Coach Richardson's streak of five straight post-season appearances will most likely end this year.

A very flat Tiger squad took the field against Regis College (nationally ranked in the NAIA) and was pounded mercilessly 7-0. The Tigers mounted no serious offensive threats and gave up many foolish goals. Being publicly humiliated is no way to enter a match against the number one ranked team in the nation, but those were just the circumstances for CC's contest against Scranton. The Tigers responded with a dazzling performance in which they outplayed their esteemed foes. Unfortunately the offense could not find the net and the game ended in a 0-0 draw. Two days later the Tigers dispatched the Grinell Pioneers 3-0. Paul Schmidt scored all three goals while Scott Reynolds tallied two nice assists.

Over block break the squad traveled to California for three must-win matches against division 3 opponents. An inspired LaVerne club ambushed the travel-weary Tigers on a small, poorly lit field. The carnage ended in a 4-1 rout and CC was virtually eliminated from the playoffs. A demoralized team faced lowly winless Redlands. The Tigers struggled to a 3-2 victory. Todd Walker talliedhis second goal in as many games while Paul Schmidt and Chip Sagal also contributed. CC then traveled to Claremont to take on the nationally ranked Stags. Once again CC gave a sterling performance in the face of adversity. Paul Schmidt scored a brilliant goal from a tough angle in the first half, beating three defenders and the Stag goalkeeper. The Tigers appeared to be headed for an upset victory but Claremont scored a scrappy goal with 18 minutes remaining, sending the game into overtime. Todd Walker smashed a 35 yard free shot by the Claremont keeper in the first overtime period to apparently give CC the victory, but with only one minute remaining in the game Claremont tied the contest on a nice shot from 25 yards.



Clubber Khlonen kicks the ball.

Last Wednesday the Tigers traveled to the Air Force Academy and were systematically destroyed 5-0. CC mounted no serious threats on the Falcon goal and gave their grateful opponents numerous opportunities.

The Tigers end the season this week at home against Denver on Friday at and against Metro State Sunday at Both games should be hard fought contests.

Freak Us Out!

Wear a Costume to Mountain Chalet and get a $4 treat

Mountain Chalet
CC's Outdoor Connection
226 N. Tejon
Downtown • 633-0732

FRESH
OLD CHICAGO
PASTA & PIZZA

CC Student Special
Bring in this ad
Any Night Through Nov. 30 '86
2 FOR 1 PIZZA TO GO!
Valid on large or medium only
Not good with any other coupon or promotion
11 am - 11 pm
Mention coupon when ordering •1 allow 1 hour
118 N. Tejon • downtown • 634-8812

Hot Bods
More Cards Than Ever Before
Adult Cards Discreetly Displayed
Lots Of New Jewelry
All Sorts Of Plushed Stuffed Animals

Mon.-Fri. 10-6 pm Sat. 11-5 pm

THE LOTUS EATER BOUTIQUE

Downtown on Platte Between Tejon & Cascade

phone: 635-2118

Hopelessly Lost, But Making Good Time

Dear Mr. Letterman,

There is something that I have never seen covered on your show before that I think would be extremely entertaining. It would be much more stimulating than stupid pet tricks and far less dangerous than throwing furniture off a five story building. Of course I mean watching the men's and women's cross country teams of Colorado College run on plush, green golf courses.

What would be more appropriate than having the man who spontaneously combusted after winning the Fort Hays Invitational and the Wartburg Invite on your show? Okay, so Scott Kang didn't really explode, but he did win both races, in 25:34, and 25:32 (a PR for Kang). Erik Browning came in fourth in both meets (26:22 and 25:53), and I have arranged for him to blow up on your show. He is extremely flammable due to a diet of only bananas, armadillo meat and Lone Star Beer.

This is high drama, Dave. Picture this — the Reverand Ben Harrison solemnly giving the Team Prayer before the Hays meet ("Oxygen rich, let's win the bitch"), and then running a gutsy 27:38. The CC men came in 3rd at this race, with Ryan Shaffer (27:56), Paul Koch (28:10) and Ted Perkins (28:13) all ran their PRs, along with Kang and Harrison.

But wait, there's more. The CC women were in Kansas, also. They placed 2nd in the meet, led by Carol Shaffer, 6th place in 19:54. Liz Payson ran a blazing 20:91 for 12th, followed by Emily "is there a" Godfrey (18th), Mia Cadmus (20th), Brigid McBride (21st), Teresa Ellbogen (30th), and Lara Fedor (25:04). "It was all for Larry "Bud," commented Mia Cadmus after her race. Isn't everything though, Dave?

The men performed an incredible feat the next weekend, driving 32 hours total to compete in Waverly, Iowa. Dave, some people think the Happy Chef is called Skyscraper because it's so tall, but I think it's because of his stories (uhuuh). Maybe we can get the Happy Chef on your show, maybe we can get it to explode. The team didn't explode in this preregional race, with the Reverend running 27:47, Vic Reckmeyer (27:52) and Ryan Shaffer (28:02) coming in close after, and Paul Koch (28:13) and Ted Perkins (28:44) rounding off the team.

The women have incredible feet, too, Dave, but they stayed home last weekend, running the CSU Invitational. This was a Division I meet and was really irrelevant except to keep the women conditioned. A good chance to see the women perform will be in a dual meet this Saturday, 10:00 a.m. at North Monument Park.

Well, Dave, I hope you'll take all this into consideration and let the CC C-C teams on your show. Wayne is sending you a petition that every member of the Denver Technological Institute at Colorado Springs has signed, saying they all want to see the team on your show.

Excuse me now — my friend Johnny has just exploded.

Sincerely yours,
Ed

Tigers Triumphantly Top Trinity

BY JAMES S. GRANTZ

The CC Tigers struck early and often in route to a 45-8 massacre of the Trinity Bible College Crusaders (ND) last Saturday at Washburn Field.

On the second play of the game senior Co-Captain LB Mark Gorman recovered a Trinity fumble at the Crusader 22 which set the stage for the whole afternoon. Three plays later QB Charley Lorimer found split end Matt Holmes in the end zone for a 9 yard TD pass. The Tigers would score twice more on a Shawn "Jimi Lee" Hold 4 yard run and a 27 yard Mike Ukropina Field Goal. While the offense was scoring points. The defense was dominating the line of scrimmage. The Tigers did not allow a first down until midway through the second quarter. The Tigers scored twice more in the second quarter on a 1 yard run by Holt and a 6 yard blast by senior Phil Apodaca. Trinity came back and scored with less than a minute in the half when QB Roger Willis found Dan Owens in the CC end zone for a 10 yard TD pass. It would be the only score of the day for the crusaders as the Tigers yielded only 124 yards in total offense to their guests.

With a 31-8 advantage to start the second half, the Tigers substituted freely and every player saw action. CC scored a TD in both the third and fourth quarters. Freshman RB Rob Seims scored on a 1 yard run to cap the opening drive of the second half. Freshman RB Robert Bachicha scored on a 1 yard dive that was set up by freshman QB Bob "D-Jello" Digallonardo's 60 yard run.

The win pushed the Tigers record to 4-3. It marks the first time CC has been over 500 in over 4 years. Trinity Bible dropped to 2-5.

The Tigers will travel to Golden, Colorado to face the Colorado School of Mines. CC versus Mines is the oldest football rivalry west of the Mississippi River.

Sport Shorts

Women's Soccer—It was rough on the road for the Tiger booters when they went back east dropping two games, one to the University of Massachusetts 1-0 and the other to the University of Connecticut 2-1. Their record dropped to 13-3-1 but the team should still receive a playoff bid; last week the Tigers were ranked third nationally. This weekend the team went west looking for victories over Berkeley and Wisconsin at Santa Barbara, CA to sustain their playoff hopes.

Volleyball—The women headed west last block-break placing fourth out of 16 teams at the Occidental Invitational Tournament in Los Angeles. The competion included many teams from last year's NCAA Division III top ten.

Men's Club Hockey—The men's club hockey team opens it's season tomorrow, Saturday at 4 p.m. They travel up the highway to face the Air Force Falcons Junior Varsity.

Women's Ice Hockey—The women's club team opens the 1986-87 season at Honnen Ice Palace tomorrow, Saturday, at 11:15 a.m. The Tigers face the defending Colorado Women's Hockey Association champions, the Denver Bandits. The team would appreciate all support.

THIS WEEK'S SCHEDULE

Tuesday, October 28
Volleyball vs. Southern Colorado, 6 p.m.
Wednesday, October 29
Men's socer at Air Force Academy, 3:30 p.m.

Thursday, October 30
Volleyball vs. Air Force Academy, 7 p.m.
Friday, October 31
Men's soccer vs. Denver University, 2 p.m.
Women's soccer vs. Wisconsin at Santa Barbara, Calif.
Hockey vs. Minnesota-Duluth, 7:35 p.m.
Saturday, November 1
Women's cross country at Monument Park
Football at Colorado School of Mines
Women's soccer vs. Cal-Berkeley at Santa Barbara, Calif.
Men's cross country at Canon City 5K
Hockey vs. Minnesota-Duluth, 7:35 p.m.
Sunday, November 2
Men's soccer vs. Metro State, 2 p.m.

Continued from page 1

checks and ability to keep the puck on the right side of the blue line, along with his offensive attacks, earned him the WCHA Player of the Week.

This weekend the Tigers hope to continue their winning ways when the team hosts WCHA cellar dwellers Minnesota-Duluth. The games will be at 7:30 Friday and Saturday nights at the Broadmoor.

Armadillo's Alley

BY ARMADILLO

The 1986 baseball season is history and as predicted the New York Mets are World Champions. "World Champions" ya gotta love our vanity, in the '86 World Series there has not been a single representative from outside the continental United States, but we still refer to our top team as Champions of the World! Is this all due to an inferiority complex? The only true World Championship is soccer's World Cup and we can not even make the final 24. We were eliminated from the 1986 World Cup qualifying by Costa Rica. Talk about giant killing, Costa Rica has all of 2.4 million people. Whoops, once again I digress. Back to the Mutts, pardon me Mets.

Granted, the 1986 Mets were an outstanding baseball team, but their attitude left one with a bitter taste. All season they compared themselves to many of the best teams of all time, who are they kidding! A great team does not hit below .200 in a six game playoff series, whine about a pitcher scuffing the baseball, or take all seven games to win.

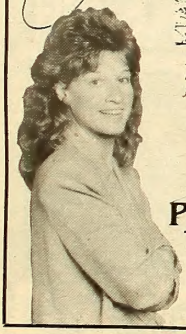
Prime time television exposure places unbelievable pressure upon the athletes. Some, like Reggie Jackson, thrive under the pressure and become forever revered in sports lore. Others such as Boston reliever Calvin Schiraldi, experience the flip side crack under the intense spotlight and are cruelly labeled chokers.

Poor ole Schiraldi was useless during the final two games of the Series. Baseball's dominant reliever during August and September, he fell apart under pressure. I don't know if he had ants in his pants, chiggers in his brain, or Drain-O in his veins, he was weak! In the tenth inning of game six, he had a two run lead, two outs, and two strikes and could not end it and bring the Red Sox their first title since 1918. He entered game seven when it was 3-3 and immediately gave up the tie breaking home run to Ray Knight. When ya give up a homer to a panzie like Ray, it is not your day.

Fellow collegiate creatures, I want to share a recent revelation of mine with y'all—we ain't young no more. I'm serious, our bodies are no longer indestructable. Ya don't believe me? Ok, borrow a skateboard, find one of those hills so steep ya can't see the bottom, jump on. Enjoy the unavoidable hellacious wreck, and I'll bet instead of peeling yourself off the pavement, cussing about how ya ripped your favorite obnoxious T-shirt and merrily cruising off in search of new adventures, you will wake up in a hospital bed. Pressing the remote control to the extent of your bodily functions

No more racing your buddies to the cactus (light pole for you despicable slickers). I'd pull every muscle in my and then some, if I engaged in juvenile pursuit. Additonally, when last time y'all wimps climbed Expeditions while in an altered state not count. Face the facts folks, fogeys.

DALE STREET CAFE



End the study blues head over to the Dale St. Cafe for an unforgettable evening with

TO

PERSON PERSON

Thursday thru Saturday 8:00 to 11:00 PM

New American Cuisine
115 East Dale St.
578-9898

Halloween
FILM DEVELOPING SPECIAL

We use Kodak PAPER for a Good Look

COUPON
COLOR PRINT FILM DEVELOPING
(C-41 process only)

12	Exposure Roll	$2.29
15	Exposure Disc	2.99
24	Exposure Roll	4.49
36	Exposure Roll	5.99

Offer good on single set of standard size prints. Limit one roll with this coupon (not valid with any other coupon). Limited time offer. Ask for details. Coupon redeemable at this store only.

#225

College Pharmacy
833 N. Tejon • 634-4861

Hair Designers for Men & Women

RAPUNZEL

Style cuts, Cellophanes, Perms & Color.

Nexus, Redken, and Tri products available for sale.

Stop in or make your appointment:

827 N. Tejon at Cache La Poudre 632-3532

RAINBOW JAM

Saturday
November 1
9pm-2am
Phi Delta Theta house

Come and enjoy great food, dancing music and beverage!!

Sponsored by: ASIA, BSU, Chaverim, ISO, MEChA and NASA
With help from: Interfraternity Council and Panhellenic Council
House donated by: Phi Delta Theta fraternity
Funds from: CCCA and Extra-Curricular

Ellipses and Hyperbole

BY AARON SHURE

Ah yes, I remember it like it was yesterday, my application to Harvard. The application form was quite thick, but I was optimistic. Questions like the following wanted to dampen my enthusiasm:

1) In the past month how many novels have you written and in what language?

2) Using the Feoder-Bunker model for cognition, describe the one problem you almost got wrong on the SAT.

3) Describe your ambitions in a few short equations.

Despite the intimidating questions, I completed the application. The main theme of my application was, "no, I haven't revised the Special Theory of Relativity lately, but I'm a real nice guy." In my personal essay, I wrote about how my pit-bull terrier was the primary intellectual influence in my life.

I waited, hoping to receive the telltale thick envelope that contained acceptance material. The letter that arrived was indeed thick, but that was only because of Harvard's new policy of providing tissue paper along with a rejection letter, in order to console the inconsolable. I didn't mind the rejection so much as the direction manual on how to use the tissue paper.

I was angry and certain that the only reason I wasn't accepted was my less than spectacular SAT scores. How was I supposed to decipher analogies like, MALADROIT:PULCHRITUDE::HEDGE-HOG:ARACHNID. Perhaps I made a mistake, when I told the interviewer that I hated preppy snobs, and volunteered to demonstrate some Tae Kwon Do in her office.

What ever the reason they didn't want me, I decided I shouldn't cry over sour grapes. All that was left was to find a fitting way to take revenge. They say that success is the best revenge, but I wanted to pursue something a little more active. I considered losing my intellectual Pit-Bull loose in the admission office, but decided that was a little too direct.

Then, I envisioned myself writing polite treatises about how most people who go "back east" have never been there before, and how "back" refers to a chronological and evolutionary regression, in the sense that one might say "I am going back to Feudalism," or, "I am going back to the anal stage."

Or, perhaps I would invent the cure for the common cold, and anyone who had even thought about going "back east" would have to write an extensive application to prove they deserved their health. I would ask questions like:

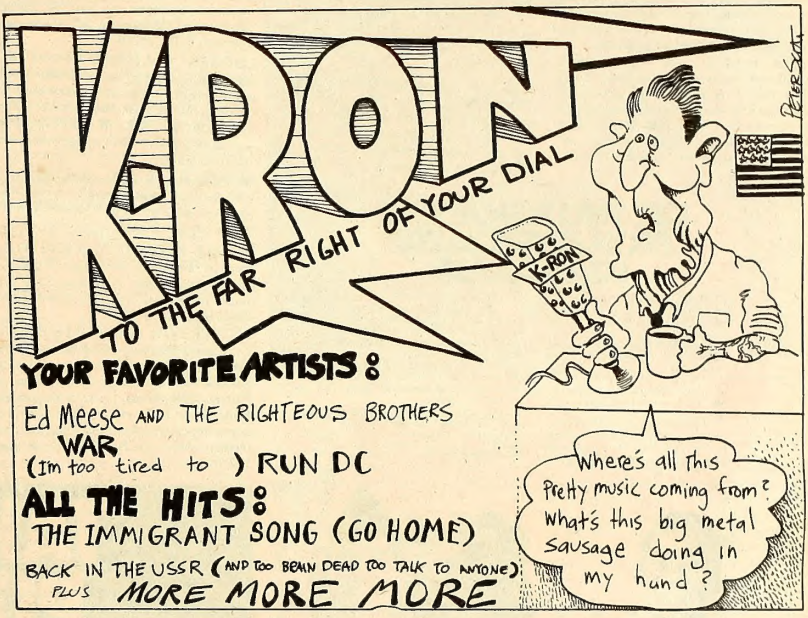
1. In the past months, how many pit-bull terriers have you raised.

2. In 300 words or less, debase, deface and humble yourself.

With time, my anger calmed. Now I just take vicarious pleasure in seeing how other snubbed applicants vent their frustration and reclaim their sense of worth. Take, for instance, the story of Ralph Shmendrick. Ralph was rejected by CC. Many years later, after becoming an architect, he developed the different architectural styles that have been epitomized by Rastall, Olin and Armstrong Halls.

Ralph, somewhat of a twisted man, was quoted as saying, "I was striving for buildings that captured the essence of recreational colostomy."

Jason Peelpuck was rejected by CC during the turn of the century. He later managed to get into the Colorado Springs historical society. At that time, each member of the society was supposed to choose an item to place in the time capsule that is located in Tutt Library and scheduled to be opened in the year 2000. Jason decided that the CC dignitaries of the next century would be most enriched by two squirrel carcasses and a quart of cottage cheese, which he promptly sealed in the capsule.



K-RON
TO THE FAR RIGHT OF YOUR DIAL
YOUR FAVORITE ARTISTS:
Ed Meese AND THE RIGHTEOUS BROTHERS
WAR
(Im too tired to) RUN DC
ALL THE HITS:
THE IMMIGRANT SONG (GO HOME)
BACK IN THE USSR (AND TOO BRAIN DEAD TOO TALK TO ANYONE) PLUS MORE MORE MORE
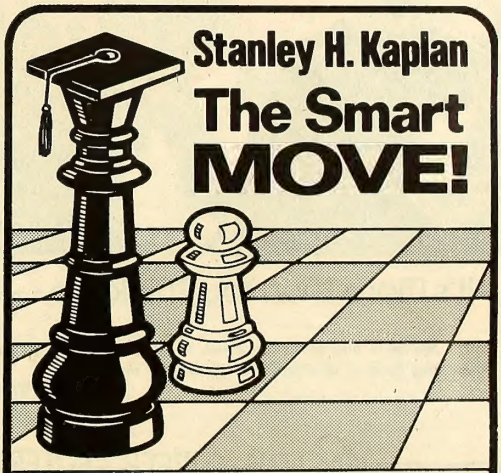
K-RON
Where's all this Pretty music coming from? What's this big metal sausage doing in my hand?
PETER SCOTT

Whoever reads this first, notify Blair Sanford and he will treat you to a FREE dinner.

House of
YAKITORI
Japanese Restaurants
Every Tuesday
5 pm - 9 pm
ALL THE YAK YOU CAN ATTACK
$6.30
on the #17 dinner
*not available on to go or delivery orders
YAKITORI
Also try our Sushi Bar
DOWNTOWN ONLY
Downtown
16 E. Bijou
578-0915
M-Thurs 11 am-3 pm 5-9 pm
Fri & Sat 11 am-3 pm5-10pm

Stanley H. Kaplan
The Smart MOVE!



GMAT begin Nov. 16
Stanley H. KAPLAN Educational Center LTD.
CLASSES HELD AT DOWNTOWN RAINTREE INN I-25 & BIJOU
Call 761-8904 Now!

HOME FOR SALE, North end, classic 2-bed cottage, 2 blocks north of CC, $147,500; call 634-0223.

NOTIFICATION OF LEAVE OF ABSENCE AND WITHDRAWAL POLICIES—Applications available in the Dean of Students Office, Armstrong Hall, Room 213. The deadline for requesting a leave of absence is November 1 for a leave which begins in the spring semester. Students are encouraged to apply for a leave even if they are awaiting word of their acceptance to a program. On formal application, a leave of absence will be considered for one of the following reasons: financial or personal emergency, ACM programs, the Washington Semester, or study abroad programs.

The deadline for requesting a withdrawal for the spring semester is also November 1. All students who decide to interrupt their education at CC, and who do not qualify for a leave of absence, or who wish to transfer to another institution, are expected to withdraw formally from the College.

YOU HAVE A CHANCE TO MEET representatives from two of the engineering schools that CC is associated with. Lloyd Tredwell, who is in charge of transfer admissions at Rensselear will be here to meet with you on Monday, Nov. 3 at 1:30 in the Olin Lounge and Dean Clarke Howatt from the University of Southern California will be here on Tuesday, Nov. 4, again at 1:30 in the Olin Lounge.

"ADULT CHILDREN OF ALCOHOLICS" will meet Wednesday, Nov. 5th in Boettcher Basement from 1:30-3:00 in small classroom. Any questions call x384.

THE ROMANCE LANGUAGES DEPT. is now taking applications for the 1987-88 program in Perpignan, France. Applications are available at the Humanities Secretarial Office, Armstrong 120, ext. 635.

STUDY IN LONDON AND FLORENCE: The deadline for applications for next semester's ACM program has been extended to November 7. You can pick up application forms from Judy McClow, Palmer 213.

SEMESTER AT SEA IS NOT MERELY A TRIP AROUND THE WORLD. With the combination of thought-provoking courses and field trips, the program can educate and change those who take part in it.

Departing from Nassau, Bahamas, the Spring 1987 voyage will begin on january 27, and the Fall 1987 voyage will begin on September 11.

Costs for the 100-day voyage range from $8,945 to $10,575, depending on cabin accomodations. Certain types of financial aid may transfer, and work-study positions are awarded each semester.

For more information about attending Semester at Sea, phone 800-854-0195, or write to Semester at Sea, 2E Forbes Quadrangle, University of Pittsburgh, Pittsburgh, PA 15260.

LOOSER WANTED—Need 87 overweight people to try new herbal based weight control programs as seen on TV. No drugs. No exercise. Call Cliff 289-6205.

HOMEWORKERS WANTED—Top pay, work at home. Call Cottage Industries, (405) 360-4062.

IF YOU HAVE NOT picked up your 1985-86 Yearbook yet—please call Jane Patterson x222 or drop by Jackson House, Room 205 (evenings).

FEMALE ROOMMATE WANTED to share 4 bedroom, furnished Victorian home 5 blocks west of campus. $200 per month includes utilities. Call: 634-4733 or 471-0786. Ask for Rick.

LECTURE ON ACM COSTA RICA—Dr. Alonso Benavides, field director of the two ACM Costa Rica programs, will describe the programs, with slides, in Palmer Hall, Room 17, at 3:30 p.m. on Friday, Nov. 7. He will also be available to answer questions about the programs. For further details, see Paul Kutsche, Palmer Hall 11, ext. 359.

TURN C's INTO B's AND B's IN A's—CC grad (Phi Beta Kappa, distinguished thesis, dept. award) will tutor on all aspects of writing. Research, drafting, editing, paper to thesis. Also test taking and exam prep. Former Honor Council member knows limits. Two wks. from cancellation. Reas. rates. Call 635-7374 after 6 p.m.

RESEARCH ASSISTANT—Library work, editing work, 12 to 15 hrs. per week, Nov. to Feb., work with Prof. Tom Cronin, Political Science Materials; qualifications: excellent student, research and editing abilities. Apply with letter of interest, resume, Box 6, Armstrong.

CLIMBERS—Ice climbing equipment: SMC crampons, Forrest Aeve axe, Footloose Mjollnir axe. $110.00. Call Steve, 574-6000 (days), 591-6095 (nights).

GET TWO EDUCATIONS FROM ONE COLLEGE SCHOLARSHIP.

An education in your chosen major. And an education in becoming an Army officer. You get both with an Army ROTC scholarship.

Army ROTC is the college program that trains you to become an officer, a leader and a manager.

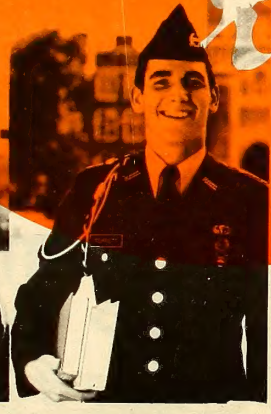
You take ROTC along with your other studies, and graduate with both a degree and a second lieutenant's commission.

Best of all, you can put both of your educations to work right away. In today's modern high-tech Army, we need engineers, communications experts, computer specialists, and other professionals.

Our scholarships cover full tuition and required fees. They also provide an amount for books, supplies and equipment, as well as an allowance of up to $1,000 each school year they're in effect.

So if you think all scholarships just provide you with a college degree, look into an Army ROTC scholarship. You'll be in for quite an education.

MILITARY SCIENCE SCHOLARSHIP SEMINAR
DATE: Wednesday – November 5, 1986
TIME: 6:30 – 7:30 p.m.
LOCATION: Room 230 Armstrong Hall
FOR INFORMATION CALL: 593-3236



It's More Than You Think It Is

It's too hard, and life is too short, to spend your time doing something because someone else has said it's important.
—Isidor I. Rabi

THE CAREER CENTER
Ticknor Hall, South 473-2233, ext. 426

STUDY IN EUROPE

The University of Louvain (est. 1425), Leuven, Belgium offers Complete programmes in Philosophy for the degrees of B.A., M.A., and Ph.D plus a junior year abroad programme
All courses are in English
Tuition is 14,500 Belgium Franks (±$250)
Write to: Secretary English Programmes
Kardinaal Mercierplein 2, B-3000 Leuven, Belgium
K.U. Leuven

"Cycles Peugeot

The French Manufactur of the World's finest bicycles since 1882

jay's BICYCLE SH SINCE 1905

19 E. Kiowa • Downtown
(7 blocks south of campus)
Phone: 634-4733

RICK WAGER—
"CC Class of '64 Proprieto

TAKE A PIZZA BREAK

PIZZA SHUTTLE

THE GEMINI PROGRAM
TWO PIZZAS FOR ONE LOW PRICE

Special
may expire anytime
Two 10" Cheese Pizzas only $5.89
Two 14" Cheese Pizzas only $8.89
Two 10" Pizzas - $1.25 per item Two 14" Pizzas - $1.49 per item

CALL 578-8686

THE ORBITER
Pepperoni, Sausage, Green Peppers, Onions and Mushrooms
(5 items for the price of 4)

Single Pizza Prices:	12"	16"
Cheese	5.00	7.20
Additional Toppings	.75	1.10

16 oz. Bottled Drinks 60¢ each

CATALYST

Volume 20, No. 7 | Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado | 7 November 1986

Honor Council Decision Appealed

BY CAROLINE BRYAN

The past week has been a landmark occasion for the students, the Honor Council, and the Honor Code. The first documented appeal of a decision handed down by the Honor Council in the history of the school was heard by a jury of twelve students.

Trust and honesty are very important principles of the Colorado College. The Honor Code, which was implemented in the late 1940's, was a very controversial policy at the outset. Over the years the policy has earned a great deal of respect. This respect has stemmed both from student awareness, and from the seriousness with which each and every offense is treated.

There have been many varied offenses to the Honor Code since its implementation. On an average, seven or eight students per year are brought before the Honor Council to have their violation reviewed. The Honor Council then debates the issues of each case and hands down a decision.

Obviously, because of the nature of the Honor Code, much of the information in each hearing is based upon conjecture and many cases probability, but each student is given the chance to defend their position and clarify the facts.

As provided by the Constitution of the Honor System, each student has the right to appeal the decision of the Honor Council. In the case of such an appeal, the Honor Council assumes the role of the prosecution and a jury of twelve randomly selected students is assembled to hear the case.

The two sides battled it out courtroom style in Armstrong 300 on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings. The hearing began with a restatement of the exact circumstances of the classroom situation during the exam earlier this semester.

The student in question, initially accused of "collaboration" on a computer course final exam, was found guilty of copying information from a fellow student.

As provided by the constitution of the Honor System, each student has the right to appeal the decision of the Honor Council.

Their answers on two problems in particular were identical both in the correct and incorrect aspects. A third student's answers were also found to be similar. The prosecution established that the students were seated together during the exam. The defense retaliated by substantiating the fact that the three students had studied together on previous occasions and therefore were given to a similar thought process. The defense then asked the two students who had found identical answers to work the problems out in the courtroom and to vocalize their thought processes.

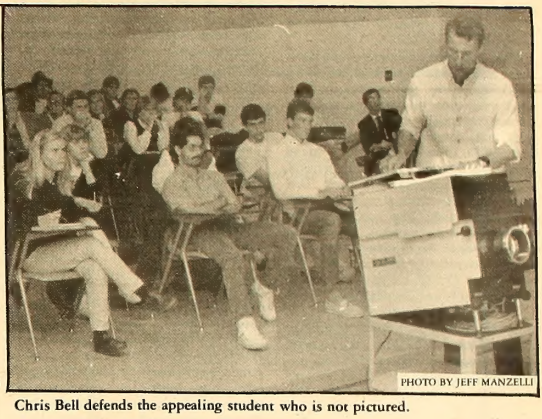

PHOTO BY JEFF MANZELLI

Chris Bell defends the appealing student who is not pictured.

During the initial hearing the defendant was unable to solve the problem. The counsel for the defendant attributed this to anxiety. On the second try, however, both students were able to solve the problem and both achieved identical answers.

The prosecution then established the fact that both students had been given access to the test on at least two separate occasions since the final exam.

After concluding statements from both the defense counsel, Chris Bell, and the counsel for the prosecution, Tom Ori, the student jury adjourned to make their decision.

The student jury debated the issues for an hour and fifteen minutes, at which time they returned to the courtroom and handed down a "guilty as charged" verdict.

Because it was the student's first offense, the student will not be dismissed from the college. Judgment as to whether or not the student will receive credit for the course will be up to the professor.

Reagan Faces New Opposition

Democratic Senate Creates Uncertainties

BY MICHAEL S. MEHAN

With an optomistic Tip O'Neal declaring, "If there was a Reagan revolution, it's over," the Democrats claimed victory in the 1986 congressional elections. Democratic victories in the House of Representatives, furthering Democratic control of that chamber and Democratic victories in key Senate races will give the Democrats control of both houses, putting a possibly lame-duck President Reagan and the Republican party on the defensive. The victory of the Democrat was crucial for the future of the party. It not only boosted the morale of the Democrats, soul searching due to setbacks in 1980 and 1984, but the Democratic wins, especially in the Senate race, proved that the Democratic Party is still a powerful political contender. The results have caused many Democrats to look optimistically at the future, specifically the 1988 presidential elections.

Though a great setback to the Reagan Administration and the Republicans on Capitol Hill, Reagan's political agenda is unlikely to change. He will go forward with his current agenda, trying to get his projects, such as Star Wars, through the Democratically controlled legislature. However, his style in dealing with Congress will have to change. Reagan will find it harder to go on the offensive in pushing his bills into law. He will have to adopt a more conciliatory position, using the famous Reagan ability to compromise, in order to reach agreements with Congress. No longer will phone calls to Republican Senatorial leaders or last minute charges up Pennsylvania Avenue to Capital Hill be as successful as these methods have been in the past. The President is going to have to sit down and do some head to head negotiation with Senate and House leaders in order to pound out legislation that is favorable to him and the Congressional Republicans.

News Analysis

The Democrats did everything they had to do in order to win back the Senate, they upset the incumbant Republicans in crucial states, they won the Republican seats up for grabs due to retiring Senators, and they held onto their own political turf in states where Democratic seats were at stake. The election cast a new light on the so called "Reagan revolution" and conservative movement, by proving that the "coattail class" of 1980, those Senators who defeated Democratic incumbants by riding Reagan's coattails in his landslide victory were not politically strong enough to hold onto their seats without the Gipper on the ballot. Even with the help of President Reagan, many of the class of 1980 Republicans lost their seats.

In the House of Representatives, the Democrats were able to gain six seats, giving them a 259-176 majority. However, it was not as sweeping a victory as the Democrats would have like. It was the second lowest gain by the House majority party in an off-year election in this century. While bolstering the Democrat's majority, the results showed that the Republicans are right on the Democrats heals, trying to reverse the situation in the House.

The real victory lies in the Senate race. In the Campaign to recapture the Senate, the Democrats, despite the fact that they were outspent by Republicans and in the face of heavy Presidential campaigning for Republican candidates, were able to win in the many neck-and-neck races around the country.

The Democrats picked up seats vacated by Republicans or defeated Republican incumbants in Georgia, North Carolina, Florida, Alabama, maryland, both Dakotas, Washington, and Nevada. Only Missouri went from Democratic to Republican representation, creating a net gain for the

Continued pg. 2

CC Underwater

See page 8

CC Gets Stuck Up

See page 14

Reproduced from 1959 "Ager"

Women's Roles in the Third World

BY AKLILU DUNLAP

"We are the forces of change, not the helpless women the media paints us to be" remarked Tanzanian journalist Fatma Alloo referring to women's roles in initiating reform in Third World Africa, in a lecture titled "The Role of Women in Development in Tanzania and Uganda," Alloo addressed the media's protrayal of women. The Tuesday, Nov. 4 forum was sponsored by the Leisure Program as part of its study on women of Third World countries.

Alloo informed an interested audience of the two types of media in her native Tanzania, formal and alternative. She explained that the formal media, radio and written publications, are tools of the one-party, male-dominated government. And since public concerns cannot be voiced openly, it is through the alternative media that the populace expresses itself. This mode takes the form of theater, dance, folklore and song. She said that these communicative instruments, which have survived fascist and other repressive regimes, are part of a medium dominated by women. Unlike conventional types, these popular forms can address any issue.

The speaker credits African women for being the major initiative force in reform. This, she explained, is all too possible considering the African woman's dominian over land labor. "Land is a very important factor in Africa," she elaborated. Continuing, she added, "Women are quite powerful in cashcrops as they are responsible for 80% of the land work." Alloo pointed out that it is with this power that African women have pushed for change. She used the overthrow of Uganda's Idi Amin as a perfect case in point to exemplify this role.

Having developed radio programs to better the media's portrayal of women, Alloo is currently working with the Tanzanian Media Women's Association in bringing about the publication of a woman's magazine. She feels this is a very bold and non-traditional step considering the repressive nature of her government. "We are trying to develop another media," she explained. Legal publication in Tanzania requires governmental registry. After years of campaigning, the woman's group received this necessary registration, marking an unprecedented achievement in the women's cause in that part of Africa. Not yet titled, the progressive magazine is scheduled for a March 8 printing to commemorate International Women's Day.

There is a division in the popular medium, and it is easily evidenced in the theater which raises many social issues said Alloo. She added that where rural plays provide a solution to the dramatic struggle, urban plays leave this burden with the viewer. And the latter, adopted from Western styles, makes it possible to carry the discussion outside the theater.

Alloo continued, "We have been sold a self image by the West, and so, there is now an active movement to define our own issues through our African eyes." She pointed out that this is crucial to her people's ultimate goal, control of their own lives.

Educated in Tanzania and England, Alloo has worked in these two countries as well as Uganda. She credits the liberation movements of southeastern Africa as playing a significant role in what she is today. Alloo is currently touring the college circuit to inform others of the liberation movements circulating southeastern Africa and to raise funds for the publication of the woman's magazine. Anyone interested in contributing to the trust fund being set up for this publication can call David Ives at x765. Copies of the publication will be sent to Ives upon distribution.

Election continued

Democrats of eight seats.

In many regions, the indicators of party allignment were unclear. All six tight races in the South went to Democrats. At the same time, the Republicans picked up three Southern governorships. In the midwest, the Dakotas went Democratic due largely to the farm crisis, while in Missouri, where the same issue loomed large, the Senate seat went Republican. Both coasts saw a similar mixed bag of results.

The Democratic control of the Senate will mean a shift in senate leadership as the Republicans hand over the chairs of the Senate committees. Reagan will face a new Senate leadership as Patrick Leahy of Vermont takes over the Agricultural Committee from North Carolina conservative, Jesse Helms, Sam Nunn takes over the Armed Services Committee from Barry Goldwater, Clairborne Pell takes over the Foreign Relations Committee from Richard Lugar, and the Democrats move into leadership possitions on the other committees. Reagan will have lost valuable allies in key positions, meaning he will face greater opposition to his policies, such as funding for defense research and trying to roll back the threat of communism in Central America. Maybe most important for the Reagan legacy will be tougher screening by the Judiciary Committee, likely to be chaired by Edward Kennedy, of Reagan appointees to the federal judiciary and possibly the Supreme Court. Reagan will not find much sympathy on a Democrat-controlled Judiciary Committee for his ultra-conservative nominees.

Reagan invested a lot of political capital in the Republican senatorial candidates, and has received no return on his investment.

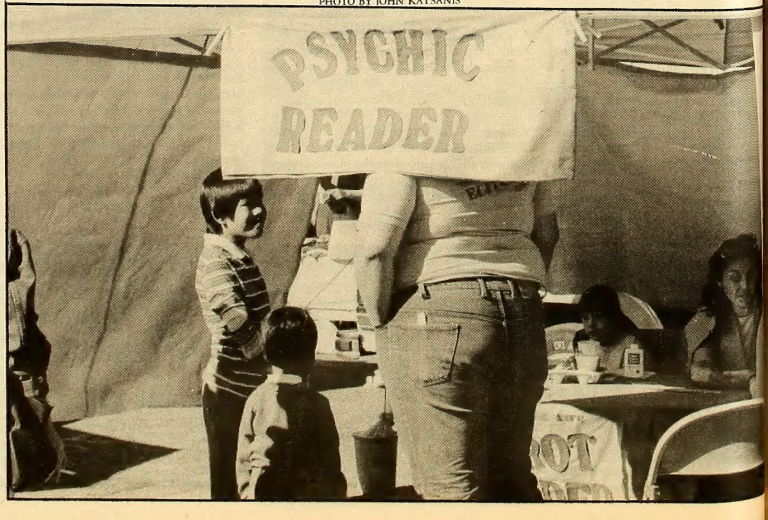
Reagan invested a lot of political capital in the Republican Senatorial candidates, and has received no return on his investment. He campaigned harder than any President in memory, covering 22 states and logging 25,000 miles. He used the same theme that was so successful for him in 1984, asking whether people are better off under the Republicans than they were under the Democrats. He reminded people of the strong improvement in the economy due to lower interest rates, lower inflation and lower taxes, warning that the Democrats would only return to "tax, tax, spend, spend," policies, undoing the economic improvements under the Republicans. He also tried to rally around America's renewed standing in the world, but the result standing tall rhetoric, and his eq boasting, was his coattails dragging dust. Even his final appeal, of people to vote for him by vot Republican candidates, did not pull votes. Reagan, while holding a 67 approval rating in the latest poll New York Times poll) could not m popularity rub off. Reagan's appe overshadowed by individual candida regional issues such as farm crises Dakotas, failing textile industries in Carolina and Maryland, a slump industry in Louisiana, and the conti over establishment of nuclear waste in Nevada and Washington. The elections have sent a message t Republicans that they do not h national mandate. For the first time years it is the Democrats who a celebrating victory, while the Repu retreat to lick their wounds.

The Democrats did not sweep elections, however, and the Repu may claim victory, however small gubernatorial races around the co The GOP picked up eight gubern seats from the Democrats, narrowi Democrats lead from 34-16, to While the Democrats still main slight majority, the loss of so many shows that for the first time Republicans have been able to spre popularity from the national level towards the local level. The capt these statehouses may help Republicans nationally in 1988, exp the party's base of support.

However, in this election the Dem were aiming to regain their n credibility. After six years of floun the Democrats may once again hav in the political door. A loss i gubernatorial level may be an acce sacrifice. Not only do the Democrats chance to halt the Reagan revolution tracks, but also to impose their will Congressional agenda, putting Republicans on the defensive establishing a position from whi launch a strong bid for the Presid 1988. Of course this depends o Democrats' ability to organize their successfully. For the past few years factions and disunity in the Demo party have become even more evid the party struggled to find its identi design a new course for the rest eighties. Fortunately for them, wh seemed like a never ending pe humiliation, may have turned it favor. How successful they are on wh or not the Democrats can create part to counter the powerful persuasive the President.

Photo of the Week

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

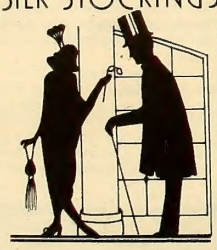


Homemade
Sandwiches
Soups &
Salads

Orders to go 633-8588

823 N. Tejon
(3 min. from campus)
And yes
we have Roses and
Baloons too!

SILK STOCKINGS



A NOSTALGIC
BOUTIQUE
Antique Costume Jewelry
Equisite Clothing
Unique & Fun Accessories
126 N. Nevada Ave.
636-9640

Use this for 10% off

Understanding Domestic Violence

BY BILL PORTER

rmed with a multitude of disturbing, revealing, facts, Linda Enerson of the rado Springs Domestic Violence vention Center spoke to a small ering of CC students on the battering women and alcoholism Wednesday t.

he lecture, sponsored by the Feminist ective, focused primarily on the ices provided by the center, as well as latest domestic violence statistics and conclusions drawn from them. estic violence, as defined by Enerson, ls "violence within an intimate tionship."

nerson began her presentation by nsively describing what exactly the vention center does. Its biggest service provide a twenty-four hour "residence women who are battered or need to e home immediately," explained rson. In addition to food and clothing, shelter also sponsors a variety of pport services." Counseling (though therapy, Enerson stresses) and help on practical matters as finding an rtment, getting on welfare, and ning interview skills are provided. e help people with the question of 'how you start your life again?'," said rson. "Most of the women are really ng—right out of high school. They're young and inexperienced; they're ting over from scratch. Many of them 't even write checks." Women can tact the center through a twenty-four ir hotline (633-1462 or 633-3819); the ation of the actual shelter is nfidential...not even a lot of cops know ere the safe house is."

Besides this primary aid to battered men, the center supplies a victim's vocacy service, which, Enerson elaborates, "helps women with such legal issues as filing restraining orders and pressing charges," a male counseling group (Men Opposed to Violent Encounters—MOVE), a volunteer group, and a community education program. Enerson especially stresses the importance of this community outreach with kids in school. "That's where it [the tendency towards domestic violence] starts; that's where you have to begin. Further, because children in domestic violence cases are "completely uprooted" from their home and normal way of life, Enerson asserts, the center has also established a children's program. "We help kids act out their own internal problems; we show them it's okay to feel angry," explains Enerson.

Approximately half the women who stay at the shelter are white, while the other half is comprised of minorities; one-third of them are from military families. Unfortunately, "there's a whole crew that never come to the center," Enerson reports. Further, about fifty percent eventually return home to the abuser—"probably more," she sighs. "You realize how difficult it is" for the women to permanently break away from their husband. The center is annually forced to turn away 200 contacts, and although other shelters do exist in Colorado Springs, they often do not provide for women with children.

In addition, Enerson highlighted several new conclusions recently advanced about domestic violence. Beginning with an explanation of the "cycle of abuse," she showed the process, varying in time from two to three times a week to every six months, that leads to domestic violence. Through time, Enerson warned, "the cycle gets smaller and the battering gets more violent...The potential for fatalities becomes greater." She then cited facts showing one in five homocides in El Paso County are from domestic violence. Additionally, recent studies show "men are more in control than people have originally thought. There is a pattern of injuries in how he wants her to be battered. It's violence as a means of control." To illustrate, Enerson used the example of a wife a husband believes to be too "friendly" with other men; he hits her in the face to destroy her beauty, and thus make her less attractive to others.

Tying all these domestic violence figures to alcoholism, Enerson suggested that it has recently been shown "the relationship between the two is much less than most people assume. There is no casual relation between men drinking and men battering their wives." Only thirty percent of wife beaters are alcoholics as well, she claimed. On the other hand, sixty percent of the women are indeed alcoholic—but only after being battered. However, she did stress that "a lot of people use alcoholism as an excuse for battering." The true reason, though, is that they simply want to control another person. "

London School of Economics and Political Science

A chance to study and live in London

Junior-year programs, Postgraduate Diplomas, One-Year Master's Degrees and Research Opportunities in the Social Sciences.

The wide range of subjects includes:- Accounting and Finance • Actuarial Science • Business Studies • Economics • Econometrics • Economic History • European Studies • Geography • Government • Health Planning • Housing • Industrial Relations • International History • International Relations • Law • Management Science • Operational Research • Philosophy, Logic & Scientific Method • Population Studies • Politics • Regional and Urban Planning • Sea-Use Policy • Social Administration • Social Anthropology • Social Planning in Developing Countries • Social Work • Sociology • Social Psychology • Statistical and Mathematical Sciences • Systems Analysis •

Application forms from: Admissions Registrar, Room 10, L.S.E., Houghton Street, London WC2A 2AE, England, stating whether undergraduate or postgraduate.

LSE

DOMINO'S PIZZA

TWO 12" ONE TOPPING PIZZAS FOR $9.14

(TAX NOT INCLUDED)
Please see below for other selections.

Limited Delivery Area
Our drivers carry less than $20

SUPPORT THE HEART ASSOCIATION SWIMATHON

FREE PIZZA PARTY FOR CONTESTANTS

Call x494 for details.

One of the greatest offers ever from Domino's Pizza—two 12" pizzas for the price of a large! Twice the pizza for one low price!

For a limited time, order any two 12" pizzas (they don't have to be the same!), and you'll get them for the price of one 16". The price will be determined by the pizza with the most toppings.

Two 12" pizzas will only cost you:

Superb cheese	$7.95
1 topping	$9.14
2 toppings	$10.33
3 toppings	$11.52
4 toppings	$12.71
5 toppings	$13.90
6 toppings	$15.09

Twice the pizza for one low price—two 12" pizzas for the price of a large!
And, hot to your door in 30 minute or less, GUARANTEED!

Offer expires Nov. 14, 1986.

DOMINO'S PIZZA DELIVERS® FREE.

All Pizzas Include Our Special Blend of Sauce and 100% Real Cheese.

Our Superb Cheese Pizza
12" Cheese $5.65
16" Cheese $7.95

REAL®

Additional Items
Pepperoni, Mushrooms, Ham, Onions, Green Peppers, Black Olives, Pineapple, Sausage, Ground Beef, Jalapeno Peppers,
Extra Cheese (1 item)
Double Cheese (2 items)
Thick Crust, Extra Sauce
Each Item
12" item $ .79
16" item $1.19

Ask about our Group Discount (on 5 or more pizza orders).

We accept checks.

Prices do not include tax. Our drivers carry less than $20.00.

Open for Lunch Every Day
11 am - 12 am Sun.-Thurs.
11 am - 1 am Fri.-Sat.

30 minute guarantee

If your pizza does not arrive within 30 minutes, present this coupon to the driver for $3.00 off your order.
One coupon per pizza.

Fast, Free Delivery
Good at listed locations.

DOMINO'S PIZZA

635-1511

Greek Update

BY KIM RACE

Sorority rush was a great success over block break with 98 new pledges joining the Greek System. The Panhellenic Council is now working with IFC and the Residential Life staff on a danceathon to help raise money for the Muscular Dystrophy Association. The danceathon is scheduled for February 13th and should be a lot of fun! Now for House updates:

DELTA GAMMA

The D.G.'s have 17 new pledges this fall with a very busy schedule. Formal pledging was Wednesday and the pledge retreat is Friday night. The anchormen and new pledges were introduced to the house with a great Halloween dinner last Friday. D.G. fall formal is set for November 15th at the Hilton Hotel featuring the Leftovers. Finally, the D.G.'s are headed for a Time Warp party at the Sigma Chi house with the Kappa Sigs and Gamma Phis.

KAPPA KAPPA GAMMA

The Kappas are celebrating their 27 new pledges. The Kappa pledges are also busy with the pledge retreat on Friday and formal pledging is Monday the 10th. The Kappas will be socializing with the Fiji's Friday night.

KAPPA ALPHA THETA

The Thetas have welcomed 27 new pledges to the house. The new pledges have been busy with a thank-you tea they put on for the alumns on Thursday. The Thetas also have been excited about their involvement with the sponsor a child program. They have sponsored a young girl from Argentina by raising money and sending her letters and pictures. The Thetas will be Boxer party bound on Saturday.

GAMMA PHI BETA

The Gamma Phi's are making their 27 new pledges feel welcome with mom-daughter week already in full swing. Formal pledging was Wednesday and the pledges are headed for their retreat on Friday. Last Friday the pledges made dinner for the actives and the Betas. The Gamma Phi fall formal will be held November 14th featuring the Auto-No. The Gamma Phis are Time Warp bound Saturday at Sigma Chi with the Kappa Sigs and D.G.'s.

David Fitzgerald says "Please Recycle Your Beer Bottles and Cans."

the Stagecoach Inn

On Fountain Creek in Manitou

SUNDAY BRUNCH

A GREAT EXPERIENCE

For Reservations
685-9335

LUNCH • DINNER • BRUNCH

Banquet and Catering Facilities

Watson Nominatio

BY AKLILU DUNLAP

The four CC nominees for the 1986 Watson Fellowship were announced October 18. They are Christopher Dunn, Anthony Lopez, Stuart Martz and Soyong Park. The stipulations of the competition dictate that chosen students use the awards ($11,000 for singles, $15,000 for married couples) to conduct year-long independent projects upon graduation in cultures and countries outside the United States. The Watson Foundation, sponsor of the national competition, will announce this year's winners on March 17.

Four nominations for the awards are made open to fifty private institutions throughout the country. Of these 200 nominees, 75 will be chosen to receive the fellowship. Winners are mandated to present quarterly reports, a record of expenditures and a final account of the study in the course of the year. The selection process examines personal merits as well as the potentiality of the project. Points of scrutiny include the academic record and extracurricular profile of the applicant; the quality of interest, conception and significance, creative strength and extent of cultural difference of the proposed project. These criteria are very similar to those set by the CC nominating body.

History major Dunn proposes to study two Afro-Brazilian religions and their present politicization. He hopes to travel to Salvado da Bahia and Recife to examine the Candomble and Xango faiths, two Yoruba African practices introduced to sixteenth century Brazil through the slave trade. "I want to look at the Brazilian culture from a grass-roots, spiritual, lower class perspective," said Dunn. He explained that these religions are practices of the sub-economic Black and Mulatto community, a proletariat that has been isolated from a higher economic level. He elaborated, "Raised as a Protestant, I looked at religion as being formalistic and rational, unlike these totally spiritual and irrational religions." Dunn also mentioned his general love of the Brazilian culture and the aesthetics of these religions as being other motivating factors. Fluent in Portuguese, Dunn plans to accomplish his study through religious participation and oral history.

Lopez offered to do a comparative study of the Birdtail and Oak Lake reservations in Canada with those of the Sioux reservations in South Dakota. The Sioux Nation split in 1862, one group remained in the U.S., the other two moved north of the border. His hope is to use this study as a "lever of critique" in his examination of the condition of the Sioux Indian under U.S. and Canadian policy. Through this historical study, Lopez hopes to attain a level of understanding of indigenous people (focusing on those of Northern America), people who have held fast to ancient traditions. He explained, "In order to take care of your future, you have to know your past - its mistakes, virtues and so forth." The Sociology major stressed that this knowledge of one's origi to shaping the future. Lopez, hi American Sioux, intends to con U.S. facet of the study prior to Canada.

Martz' proposal is to study Sean old Gaelic style of singing in Ireland. Said he, "The citizens of speak English only as a foreign la A self-taught Gaelic speaker, Mart to sharpen these language skills a Sean Nox, the only form of Gaelic hasn't mastered. The Ethno-Mu major is specializing in the musi British Isles, Sean Nox being th difficult of these music sorts. Sea also at the root of all Irish folk mu Martz believes this research will major study together.

The proposition to study the social system on the island of Ch Korea, was submitted by Park. In matriarchal society, women have bread winners, and men have resigned to do the domestic chores from early adolescence, these wom for long periods of time for sea life food in their diet. Yet the modernis mainland Korea threatens to destr old tradition. The waning conflict b this matriarchal tradition and Con ideals is evidenced by the decision young girls from the island to re school instead of learning the old Soyong feels a similar tension. A woman, she is torn between traditio modern values.

The Colorado College has upheld standing in the competition over th Usually placing two of the four no it has on occasions been succes having three or all of the appli chosen. Sociology Professor Ma Duncombe, member of the nomi committee, feels this reco "attributable to the type of studen has - more adventurous and origin at most institutions." Last year's w were Eduardo Martinez and Jeff Ja Martinez is studying the Turkish Workers in Germany and Jacobo urban-health situation in Mexico C

The Thomas J. Watson Foundati founded by Mrs. Watson in honor husband. Its goal is to "provide Fel opportunity for a focused and disc Wanderjahr of their own devising which they might explore thoroughness a particular interes their aspirations and abilities, vie lives and American society in perspective, and concomitantly, de more informed sense of interna concern." The Foundation has more than 9.5 million dollars in its history.

Need a date this weekend? Rea rates, complementary rose. Call ex 339 and ask for "Date s by Fitz."

The Guinea Pigg. IN OLD COLORADO CITY
633-0584
PRIMITIVE & ETHNIC ART, CLOTHING & JEWELRY
FROM SOUTH AMERICA, AFRICA & ASIA
2510 W. COLORADO AVE. COLO. SPGS.
MON-SAT. 10-6
SUNDAY 12-6

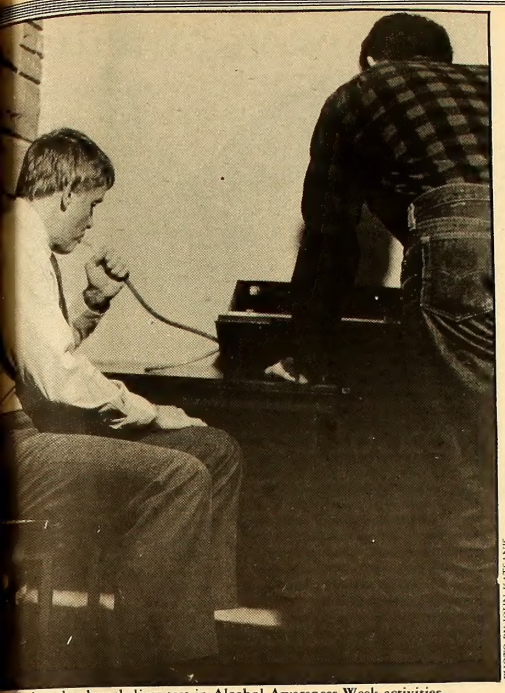

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

an Taylor takes breathalizer test in Alcohol Awareness Week activities.

rinking Age Debate

BY LIZ NEIBAUER

s part of National Collegiate Alcohol areness Week, a "Wednesday at 11" el discussion on the 18 vs. 21 drinking as law was sponsored.

n support of raising the age was Mrs. ncis Taylor, a representative from the s Peak Chapter of MADD, while rel McLeod, Dean of Students, favored intaining the age at 18. Opening narks were made by Doug Gertner, sistant to the Dean and Director of mis Hall. He pointed out that Colorado lose 9.1 million dollars in highway ds this year and 20 million next year if age is not raised. Therefore, there is a ing chance that legislation to raise the will pass. But he contended that there ill debate on whether or not raising the nking age is a wise idea.

The discussion opened with Mrs. Taylor o stated that MADD's position is a sult of the drinking and driving enomenon. She stated that alcohol is olved in 60% of the nighttime fatal car shes among the 16-21 age group and t 18 year olds are more likely to rchase liquor for the 16 and 17 year olds an a person that is 21. Taylor went on to that during Viet Nam when the nking age was lowered there was a bstantial increase in fatalities in the 16- age group and that due to this trend the mpaign to raise the age began. The slation to raise the age to 21 passed in 84. She also stated that raising the age uld contribute to reducing the "blood der" that exists between New Mexico, ere the drinking age is 21, and Colorado. lor concluded by pointing out that we e restrictions every day—when we can ve, how old we must be to be president senator. A new drinking age is just ther restriction, but it has the ability to ve lives.

Dean McLeod stated that she was ased to raising the age for three ons. Firstly, that it poses an nsistency in the definition of adult. 18 olds can vote, be drafted, marry, and o to jail, but cannot drink. Secondly, egal drinking the administration, as tors, can "take students propensity to me and channel it positively" through guidelines and such. If the law raises the age, drinking "will go under ground" or off campus where driving will be involved. And thirdly, she commented that it does not seem right that a small part of society must be punished for a problem that is large-scale. In short, McLeod felt that raising the drinking age should not be a first resort, but that education must take precedent. It is important that drinking be kept legal so that peoples' level of awareness about alcohol use can be heightened.

In her rebuttal, Taylor contended that not all youth are fortunate enough to attend college and are not informed, creating a large problem that could be partially solved by raising the drinking age. McLeod countered by saying that if Colorado raised the age, youth would drive over the borders into Mexico or get phony I.D.'s to get into bars, therefore raising the age would still prove to be futile. Across-the-board education, according to McLeod, still appeared to be the most viable solution to the problem of careless drinking.

College Shoe Shop
9 West

632-6161
831 N. Tejon

CCCA Fields Eight Block Questions

BY CHRISTINE M. LLOYD

In light of the recent passing of the Eight Block Plan by the faculty, CCCA held three forums discussing the flexibility of the plan. The first of these was held on Nov. 4, 1986 in Mathias Lounge at 7 p.m. Only six students showed up, not including myself, to discuss this matter with CCCA.

As previously stated in the Oct. 31st edition of the Catalyst, CCCA will present the students views on the eight block plan to the Board of Trustees on Nov. 14th. At that meeting, they will stress the students dissatisfaction with the flexibility of the plan. Also, they will bring up the impracticality of a "winter symposium" and a "summer school course." These issues were two of the four major points brought up at the Forum. The workability of the "winter symposium" was questioned first, in light of the fact that only a third of the faculty support this idea. Since the majority of students work during the summer. The "summer school course" was also considered an impractical solution to this dilemma. The students neither have the time nor the money to take an extra course during the summer.

The other two major points discussed were the Mellon block and our parents' right to have a say in the matter. First, the questionable nature of the Mellon block was pointed out. Several students did not know what it was or why it was part of the new plan. CCCA explained that it was a development block designed to give professors the opportunity to do research in their field. They questioned the overall necessity of this block. The second point concerned the parents' right to know about and have a say in the implementation of the eight block plan, considering the fact that they pay the college $11,000 a year in tuition. CCCA once again pointed out the fact that the faculty runs the academic portion of the college.

Finally, according to CCCA, the Board of Trustees probably will not vote on the implementation of the plan until March. They will, however, review it on Nov. 14th. At that time, CCCA will present the students' views concerning the eight block plan which they compiled from these forums.

Birth of an Investment Club

BY WAYNE D. RUDNER & DANIEL WEISKOPF

Recently chartered by the CCCA at Colorado College, the Investments Club is now at the forefront of the CC community and the financial world at large.

Students remembering last year's Investor's Club (disallowed due to financial aspirations) are excited that Wayne D. Rudner and Daniel Weiskopf have not given up their dream of educating students about the intricacies of the investment world. This year, though, the club is entirely devoted to teaching without the utilization of currency to augment the learning. According to Mr. Rudner, in order to meet the requirements of the CCCA, the use of money for the purposes of the club are prohibited on campus. Students are invited to participate in the club and may listen to well respected speakers while perusing informative articles concerning the investment arena.

On Thursday, November 13, the Investments Club will be introduced by the Business-Economics Student Advisory Board for its first meeting. Gates Common Room will be the site for the "Topics and Issues Forum" to present this newly chartered club and speaker. Refreshments will be provided free and the meeting is open to all students. Publicity will be posted around campus indicating the exact time for the upcoming event.

FREE
FLAVORED CORN
Bring this coupon with you the next time you buy a 30 oz. bag of Vic's popcorn. You'll get a FREE medium bag of the flavored corn of your choice.
- buttery caramel
- zesty cheese
- spicy cinnamon

Good at Uintah location only. Limit one per coupon.
CORN Vic's POPPER
1864 W. Uintah 520-9129
Mon-Sat 10-7 Sun 12-6

1987
COLORADO
COLLEGE
CALENDAR
$3.95
NOW AVAILABLE
Colorado College Bookstore

General W.J. Palmer

A Rocky Mountain empire builder

BY ALEC REKOW

Many Colorado Springs residents may remember William Jackson Palmer as an early settler and city planner, but few realize the part he played in the United States' settlement and the industrial expansion of the Rocky Mountain West. In the summer of 1869, Palmer first visited the Pikes Peak region on a railroad survey expedition. He wrote in a letter to his future wife, Queen Mellen: "Just before sunset we came in sight of the mountains—Pikes Peak, Spanish Peaks, and the Greenhorn Range. A thunderstorm came on and the clouds threw themselves into grand and fantastic shapes, blending with the mountain peaks...Charming Colorado!, the supreme felicity of motion—involved in the canter of a good horse over the soft turf of the boundless plains of Colorado, with sky and earth meeting on every hand."

Enraptured by the area's rugged grandeur, the Quaker poet, railroad industrialist, and former Civil War general built a castle just north of the Garden of the God's tilted sandstone that he named Glen Eyrie. With the support of powerful financial backers and friends, Palmer formed the Fountain Company of Colorado which laid the plans for Colorado Springs (advertised as New London) to become "the most attractive place for homes in the West, a place for schools, colleges, science first class newspapers, and everything which the above imply."

Palmer encouraged Colorado Spring's development. He oversaw the city planning, built the original Antler's Hotel and established a local newspaper called "Out West," which later became the Gazette. He also donated one hundred acres to The Colorado College, which opened its classrooms in 1874, and offered suggestions and money as the infant college struggled to its feet.

Palmer's mind was everywhere in the development of Colorado Springs and the Rocky Mountain region, and he himself was almost omni-present in the development. He knew what sort of town he wanted: "No wild, mushroom frontier town, but a place of carefully chosen settlers from the Eastern states and Europe." While Palmer encouraged industrial growth in the Southwest, he was careful to keep the mills and factories out of his "New London." As a result, many of Colorado Spring's genteel citizens worked their factories or mills elsewhere, such as Pueblo.

As a product of the industrial age, Palmer recognized the Southwest's potential resources. Earlier Anglo explorers had found copper, gold, silver, and coal in the deep canyons. They eyed the pine forests that blanketed mountain hillsides. But "after the first excitement died down and pockets of gold-bearing sand were becoming exhausted, people of Colorado faced the fact that large amounts of capital and machinery were needed to develop the mineral and other resources of that area," said ex-CC History Professor George Anderson in a 1969 speech. The Southwest seemed isolated, as pioneers wagoned onward to the Pacific Coast's fertile valleys. However, Palmer the railroad engineer envisioned a rail system linking the mountain towns to the growing city centers like Denver and St. Louis. The narrow gauge trains that whistled through high mountain passes brought the capital and technology needed to extract the resources.

Without a doubt, Palmer's ideas and actions influenced the development of the Rocky Mountains. Much of what he admired, however, was lost because of the subsequent population and industrial explosion. The buffalo and longhorn Palmer once rode beside were shot from train windows by wealthy sportsmen who settled in Colorado Springs. The brilliant blue skies that attracted settlers to Denver are now blanketed by smog. The water table has been severely depleted by the Southwest's population explosion. It seems ironic that many of the Rocky Mountain's natural features that so captivated Palmer and other early settlers have been damaged or completely eliminated.

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Palmer's plans for Colorado Springs and the southwest often ignored the native inhabitants' rights. While declaring himself a Quaker pacifist, (he fought in the Civil War to abolish slavery and re-unite the country) Palmer battled against the Arapaho and Ute Indians, two tribes soon restricted to reservations. In the and other valleys, many Anglo se choice land from Mexican farmers who had worked the land years. While Palmer probabl approve of this land fraud, his enabled Americans to settle Southwest, and enforce their tech power and western values inhabitants.

The conquering of the We western expansion against both inhabitants and the natural envi Western expansion won. The been settled. The judgement of contributions to Colorado Spring Southwest, however, depends up perspective.

The Corps of Peace

BY PROMITA CHATTERJI

Rich Arndt, a Peace Corps representative from the Denver office, is interviewing interested CC students on Thursday, November 6 and Friday, November 7. Arndt was also here last week answering general questions and showing a film on the Peace Corps. He cites the interest level at CC as high with 26 students present at the film, 30 taking applications, and 14 being interviewed.

For students wanting to join the Peace Corps, Arndt described the "competitive" application process. Most of the positions require a four-year degree for areas of work including education, English, science, math, health, Agriculture, and engineering. However, Arndt pointed out that a degree is not always necessary; people with outside experiences in skilled trades such as agriculture, or business are also in demand.

Students who apply are interviewed by a Peace Corps representative. At that point, the representative looks at the student's educational background and hel student to choose a particular interest. If the student is nominate representative, then he or she un an evaluative process which takes eight months. Accepted students trained for two to three months, language and in health. Finally, th work experience in a developing lasts for two years.

The Peace Corps provides volun developing nations all over the According to Arndt, the majority Corps workers are in Africa wit Latin America, and the Middle Eas the other main areas.

Arndt added that CC student quality Peace Corps workers bec their "excellent communication cross-cultural interests, and language abilities."

Although he recruits at CC once Arndt stressed that interested stude apply anytime. For more infor students can call the Peace Corps office collect at (303) 866-1057.

GIVE PEACE A DANCE

COME DANCE FOR PEACE!

To the great tunes of

"LIP SERVICE"

on

Sunday, Nov. 9th

8 - 11 pm

Cossitt Hall

Tickets only $2.00 w/CC ID

All proceeds go to UCAM

(United Campuses to Prevent Nuclear War) and Amnesty International

A great study break and a great time!

CAFE BIJOU

DINING & SPIRITS

• serving •

lunch & light dinners, exquisite desserts & coffee

• first floor •

jazz, cocktails & hors d'oeuvres

• second floor •

Trip the night fantastic in a turn of the century ho

411 East Bijou 632-9

Bring in this ad for a free specialty drink with your lunch or din

CC in the 70's: A reflection of social and political change.

BY GREG GRIFFIN

Imagine the small liberal arts college as an extraordinarily exact microcosm of the society of which it is a part. It's not that difficult. Take CC as an example. In the decade of the 1970s, CC reflected many of the social and political changes that were occurring in the United States and the world at the time.

The period from 1969-1975: CC went through a transformation, the likes of which it had never seen before and has not seen since. Amidst the upheaval of Social Norms and political values, CC underwent a series of basic structural changes that disrupted the lives of students and faculty, and paved the way for CC as we now know it.

The Vietnam war provided the college community with more than ample reason for political involvement and activism. CC students participated vigorously in the general rejection of the country's leadership by young people all over the nation. In September 1969, the first issue of The Catalyst (formerly the Tiger) was printed, the pages within reflecting this strong movement toward liberal political involvement.

The first year of the Catalyst addressed the main issues of concern in the world, country, and, of course, CC. Nixon, Vietnam, drug usage, co-educational housing, and the Block Plan proposal all topped the headlines. The Block Plan was still up for approval, provoking students and faculty to express their opinions to a degree that puts the 8-block proposal to shame. This issue was finally settled by the next academic year and the result, as we all know, has made history...

Next on the list of important CC issues was that of co-educational housing. An experiment was made in 1970 in which women lived in the east and west houses of Mathias while men lived in the core units. The conductors of the experiment commented that "Both men and women that...they would study together, do laundry together, share happiness and frustration, and most important, be able to talk without social barriers about things that really count. It would allow men and women to become better friends rather than merely datable material. "The plan failed, however, as locked fire doors with black paper over the windows separated the male and female wings. Eventually, however, such problems were worked out enabling males and females to be emancipated from their social bonds in order to live together (by wing, at least) in harmony.

Drug usage was another topic of great concern in the early seventies. Everyone, of course, used them, they were just scared wittless about getting caught. And with good cause. The local authorities had, on more than one occasion, reminded the CC community that it was aware of drug usage and was prepared to raid the campus and make arrests if it felt this was necessary.

As the seventies progressed, students became increasingly frustrated with the lack of effect their well meant political experamentalism had made upon their government. Students became less and less concerned with political activism and became more concerned with their own lives and futures. In the late seventies those spaces in the Catalyst which had been filled with political commentary and critique were often being replaced by speculation upon the economy and the CC student's present and eventual place within this structure. The late seventies saw less change than did their predecessor. Certainly the events and changes of the earlier period had left their mark upon the character of life at CC.

Such a view of life at CC in the previous decade invites one to guess at how we as the students of the eighties will be viewed in the eyes of our future counterparts. certainly CC is constantly changing and transforming as both a reflection and, it can be said, percursor of American Society.

In the Stretch

Colorado College Students round the final turn in last week's library streak. The twelve participants shucked their clothing among the second floor stacks and dazzled onlookers as they headed for home at the Phi Delta Theta House. The incident highlighted a week of streaking activities in which dozens of CC students bared all in a belated attempt to keep pace with the nationwide streaking trend.

PHOTO COURTESY OF THE MARCH 15, 1974 CATALYST

Ask Erin Striff

She knows the scoop

Dear Catalyst:

I am a freshman with a very big problem. Here I am at college and I don't want to drink. Praying to the porcelain god is not my idea of fun. Neither is a crowded room with loud "music." My social life is the shits. Am I beyond hope? I've heard that the frat parties are a cross between Heavy Metal, The Twilight Zone and The Far Side. Is this true?

—A Confused CC Frosh

Dear Confused:

You're young, you're innocent, you're in college for the first time. You've seen raging parties before, but never like this. This is a college fraternity party, and God help you if you want to remain sober. To enjoy yourself you should be either a) incredibly social; b) someone who absolutely loves to dance; c) drunk, or d) well on your way.

Other requirements include: you must be able to speak as if there was a bullhorn held to your lips, except without the bullhorn. Otherwise, you'll participate in conversations such as, "Hi, my name's-"

"What?"

"Erin, what's-"

"Freida? Nice to meet-"

"No, Erin. What's your-"

"What?"

"What?"

Music is amplified loud enough to be heard in some third world countries, so party-goers must therefore shriek in order to be heard. Could this be because, as Michael Caine once said, if you turn the music loud enough, people will talk louder and think that everyone is having a good time? Let's hope not.

Dancing is a must at some of these parties. The real fun begins when the hard floor is coated with a thin layer of beer, and you can use the floor like the slip-n-slides of our childhoods. This also makes the floor ideal for breakdancing, and the winter months, speed and figure skating. Also gone is the top forty music of our stupid high school dances. Now we get neat-o stuff like the Stones, the Police, and sometimes even a little Rod Stewart number. Diversity is the key here, but the music is usually good.

As for the more social aspects, we freshman girls usually get a lot of attention from guys. Gosh, I really don't understand why. One thing to remember—if you meet a guy who says he lives at the Omega Alpha Beta house and who's hair is cut quite short around the ears, chances are he's an Air Force cadet. Trust this person. There are many girls at the Air Force Academy, so he rarely goes off campus to meet members of the opposite sex. Cadets are also very honest, and will never tell you any lines that are quite nice, but not necessarily true. They're a fun bunch of people with high moral standards.

Speaking of high moral standards, being slightly sozzled at a Frat party can be fairly interesting. This is especially true if you're at a house in the fraternity quad at the time. Not being especially well-acquainted with the campus, you may be in for a shock as you begin your trek homeward. The three houses on the quad are obviously clones of each other, and disorientation is a definite possibility. Rumor has it that in past years, some have walked nearly to Pueblo, thinking that Slocum should be coming up any minute. Bring a map or perhaps a compass, and you're in the clear.

Of course, I don't see myself as the last word (or much of any word) on the fun-filled frolicsome Frat party. I do think that the parties are a real experience, even if they're not the type to write home and tell Mom about. Enjoy.

—Erin

Cutler Board is currently accepting applications for Catalyst Editor and Disparaging Eye Editor for the Spring semester 1987.

Applications are available at the Student Center on Nevada.
Application deadline is November 19.

the Date Bar a Restaurant
Serving UNIQUE HOMEMADE RECIPES
10% off with CC ID
Serving Breakfast & Lunch
Mon.-Sat.
7 am - 4 pm
24 E. Kiowa 578-5693

DALE STREET CAFE
End the study blues head over to the Dale St. Cafe for an unforgettable evening with
TO PERSON PERSON
Thursday thru Saturday
8:00 to 11:00 PM
New American Cuisine
115 East Dale St.
578-9898

The Greenhouse Effect

Sci-major foretells a wet future

BY PAT CHISHOLM

Sometime in the next century, "pretty much all of Dixie, the central valley of California, large parts of the eastern seaboard, (and) almost every coastal city could have to be evacuated," says CC bio-major Paul Weiss.

He is referring to the Greenhouse Effect in which polar ice caps melt resulting in a 3-6 meter rise in the sea level. Any tract of land near sea level would become flooded, which includes several countries and US states. "There have been very few things scientists have agreed on as firmly as the Greenhouse Effect and its consequences."

Since the Industrial Revolution, people have been burning fossil fuels such as oil, coal, and peat. This is producing a significant rise (25% thus far) in atmospheric carbon-dioxide which prevents certain sun rays from being reflected into space. The predicted result is a rise in global temperature.

"As the Earth warms, the polar icecaps will melt, and if the polar ice-caps melt, the amount of water in the oceans will increase. Then a lot of coastal cities will be flooded." He adds "we're going to live to see this. Certainly our children will."

"This one is a hard one to fix." Weiss says the only possible way to prevent global warming would be to replace fossil fuels with other forms of energy such as nuclear or solar power. "Nuclear fission would certainly create some other problems, but it would probably solve this one."

He says there is a possible technical solution based on pumping dust into the atmosphere to produce a cooling effect. Such a plan would be "hideously expensive"—were it in fact possible to carry out.

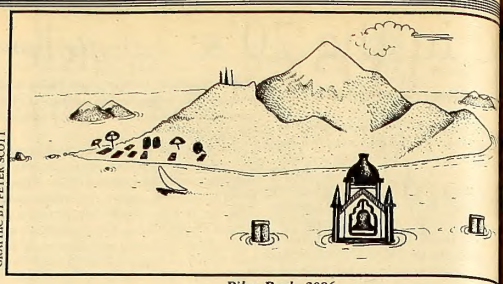
Another solution would be to cover large areas of the earth with a white mineral such as chalk to reflect the heat.

"These concepts are not simple. It's not as easy as making a little dust or painting the roof of your house white—your talking big problems." He continues, "burying the Sahara in two feet of chalk could conceivably reflect enough light to reverse the effects," but this is not technically simple. "Even if it were, there're people who live there who might not eating chalk."

We're going to live to see this. Certainly our children will.

Weiss suggests implementing a tax on fossil fuels to encourage alterna energy sources. "The fact that se American states will likely be under is an important enough problem warrant dealing with. It's something has to be dealt with now instead of w until they're under water."

Should these solutions fail in preve our cities from becoming exceed damp, trade in your car for a p submarine.



GRAPHIC BY PETER SCOTT

Pikes Peak, 2086

25 Years Ago This Month At CC

The three fraternity houses were dedicated during homecoming.

Charles Leaming Tutt died at the age of 72.

Construction on Tutt Library reached the half-way mark.

Students could:
- —try a 12" cheese pizza for $.90 at J's Drive-In at 119 E. Cache la Poudre,
- —see Bill Hochman play the role of Oedipus,
- —join Walt Hecox as volunteer student guide to conduct campus tours.

50 Years Ago This Month

CC Students were offered an opp tunity to ski for the first in history of the college. (Official guess.)

Students could:
- —see "The Charge of the Light Bri with Errol Flynn and Ol de Haviland at the Chief Theatre
- —subscribe to the GT for 35¢ per
- —purchase silver and gold satin eve slippers for $4.85 "with the hose for dress occasions" at Vo on South Tejon,
- —attend a lecture and dance re by Miss Hanya Holm at the Colo Springs Fine Arts Center.

We mean business.

Columbia University's location in New York City makes it the ideal place for graduate study in business. A representative from Columbia Business School will visit your campus to speak with students from all majors who are interested in the M.B.A. and Ph.D. programs in Business as well as joint degrees with Law, International Affairs, Public Health and other disciplines. If a graduate degree in Business is part of your future, start planning for it now by talking with our representative. Contact your undergraduate placement office for further details.

Date of visit: November 14, 1986

Columbia Business School

Going Places for Thanksgiving?

Call Taylor Travel

for the best fare

"Your Campus Travel Agency"

818 N. Tejon 636-3871

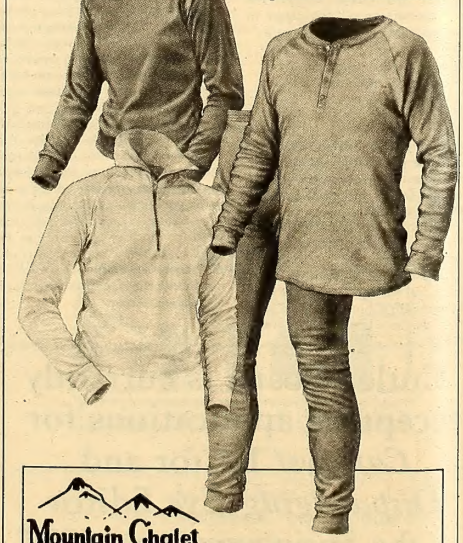
patagonia®

Capilene® Underwear



Mountain Chalet

CC's Outdoor Connection

266 North Tejon 633-0732

Downtown

Letters

The Greek System: Rewards that Last a Lifetime

ar Editor:
The Greek system at Colorado College has been a part ampus life for almost as long as the school has been existence. The 17 October 1986 issue of the Catalyst ured an article by Courtney Murphy and Patrick itholm entitled "It's all Greek to us." The Inter-ternity Council feels compelled to respond to such a -sided, negative article.

reek life has been overwhelmingly popular. For any en year approximately 30% of the student body omes active in a Greek organization. Each fraternity sorority is unique in the sense that each organization racts to it people who share similar characteristics. e resulting group of poeple are bound together for a time.

From the article Dan Pierce, like many non Greeks, is he impression that the Greek System is destructive to college environment. This is difficult to understand light of the fact that almost every activity or anization on this campus has fraternity or sorority mbers involved. CCCA, sports, choirs, Saga, theatre, more all have Greek members. Greek organization mbers also major in every field offered at CC.

Mr. Pierce also states that the only positive aspect of Greek System is that the fraternities provide a social for the campus, though Dan also feels these parties alienating. When a fraternity hosts an open party re are many non-Greeks who attend. These non-eeks are just as welcome as a Greek member is. Any enation felt is purely an individual's problem.

Dan's final point is that his father's fraternity was e which the members helped each other out, and if a dent fell behind, the others would help him and ssure him academically." Dan implies that fraternity mbers here do not do the same for each other. Dan is course badly mistaken. There is a bond in every ternity and sorority. As part of being in a Greek anization, a member pledges to his brothers or her ters to help in any way. Greek organizations help to ter friendships that in many cases continue forever. so it is unbelievable that Dan would make such a mment in his status as a non-Greek.

Susi Willett dislikes the secrecy of fraternities and orities. She feels that secrecy is childish, and that it minds her "of elementary school." The secrecy and uals each Greek organization have are part of the anization's uniqueness. Secret sayings and rituals lp to unite the fraternity or sorority members. After cussing this subject with graduate members it became ry apparent that it is deeply gratifying to meet a fellow ternity or sorority member later in life and mediately establish a bond because a secret handshake s recognized and returned.

Many individuals quoted in the 17 October article felt at the Greek system does nothing more than omote loud parties and the abuse of drugs and alcohol. must be noted that while CC students were reading the ticle, several members of Phi Delta Theta fraternity re in Boulder painting elderly persons' homes. The is are raising $6,000.00 for the YMCA's Bowl-A-on. The Betas are having an Ice Cream Social Pub ub for Alcohol Awareness Week. The Sigma Chis are sting parties to benefit Wallace village. The sororities raise money and complete projects for their ilanthropies. The inter-fraternity council and the hhellenic Council have also voted to host the annual DA Dance-A-Thon at Colorado College. The Greek stem at CC is committed to the community of olorado Springs.

Greek life is not for everyone. But for those who rticipate there are rewards that last a life-time. Those o are not part of Greek life have no basis of opinion r what goes on within the Greek system. Members of eek organizations respect those who choose not to come involved in the Greek System; it is time that the n-Greeks reciprocate. Open-minded examination is e real goal of a liberal arts institution.

Sincerely,
J. Tim Smith
Public Relations Office,
The Interfraternity Council.

Additional Assistance:
David Burnstein

Under the Moon & Stars

Dear Editor:

For a long time, I never knew what astronomers did until I went to the 98th annual meeting of the Astronomical Society of the Pacific at the Colorado University in Boulder. I had the opportunity, thanks to a venture grant from CC, to attend this meeting. Here I found a little of what astronomers are learning from the heavens. Before the meeting, my impression of astronomy research was that people were just taking data for the sake of data. As it turns out, astronomy is quite alive with fabulous theories about the history and nature of the universe.

The theme of the meeting was very young stars. Astronomers are looking in our galaxy as well as distant ones for vast clouds of gas. In these clouds, astronomers believe stars are being formed. Astronomers are proposing theories about what kinds of conditions need to be met for new stars to form. The research that is going on now is basically testing these theories. One problem in observing new stars is that they form in clouds of very hot gas thus some new techniques have been developed to see the baby stars. For example, one technique uses the reflection of the young star off of the encompassing gas cloud to get information and to "see" the young star itself.

Astronomers are also looking for Black Holes and believe they have found some. One is suspected to be at the center of our galaxy. Astronomers are also collecting data about our neighborhood by researching things like comets and the planets. There are even astronomers who keep an ear out for extraterrestrial life.

My thanks to CC for this opportunity. One thing to remember, astronomers may be weird for keeping such terrible hours and perpetually nervous for drinking gallons of coffee at a time, but they certainly are in an exciting and expanding business.

Russell Shipman

8 vs. 9

Dear Editor:

I have always liked the number eight more than the number nine. Eight has a bolder tone and is more pleasing to the ear. It is also a full bodied number, shaped and curved, like a woman.

Nine is a whimpey number. Say it! It kind of sticks to the tongue, afraid to leave. It is a boring number. Why was it ever invented in the first place?

Eight has more letters and is more meaningful than nine. After all, nine is just one more than eight and is less than ten. It is useless and unneeded. Eight is a quality number. Nine is merely an extension. A wasteful extra appendage.

Eight is pleasing to the eye. It has symmetry. It is subtle and smooth, like a woman. Nine looks like a stick with a balloon at the end, how ugly! It should never have been invented in the first place!

Michael Fine
Social Science Representative
Committee of Instruction

The Zero Factor

BY NORM LEAHY

"I like streaks, then again, I like Ronnie. I really don't know which to pull for."—Steve Geraghty.

As you may or may not know, every president since William Henry Harrison who has been elected in a year ending in zero has met with death while still in office. This is explained by the story that an Indian chief laid a curse on the then president Harrison for some wrong he had done to the chief. Harrison promptly kicked off a few months into his term, dying from pneumonia.

1860 saw Lincoln, and we are all familiar with his demise.

1880 brought James Garfield, who was gunned down by a disgruntled civil servant.

1900 gave us William McKinley who was shot by a psycho in Buffalo.

1920, Warren Harding, a paragon of good government, died of a heart attack.

1940. FDR dies of a stroke in the midst of his fourth term.

1960. JFK dies in Dallas.

1980. Ronald Reagan wipes the floor with Jimmy Carter, ushering in era of growth, renewed confidence and good grooming. Will Ron, too, fall to the ravages of the curse? Or will he break the string?

As it stands now, there are a little over two years left in the Reagan dynasty, plenty of time for the numbers to catch up with him. But can he pull it off and be the man who transcends it all and skunk that lousy curse?

If you're a knee-jerk liberal, you want the numbers to catch up with old Ron and thus end your nightmare. Of course then George Bush assumes the mantle of leadership and once again the horror begins.

But if you're a good Republican, you don't even speak of the curse. It's not cooth. But it's always in the back of your mind and you hope against all hope that Ron beats the odds and becomes an even greater man in the eyes of the world.

Anyway you look at it, Ron has history against him. He's already survived one attempt to keep the streak alive and he seems to be going strong, cancer notwithstanding. Can he do it? Stay tuned.

Voting to the Beat

BY SHANNON WHEELER

Having nothing better to do the other night after work I decided to go to the "Rainbow Jam." An event that used to be in the PACC house and as a result of its moving has lost some of its meaning and became a "frat" party with food. True, there were more minorities there than one would see at the average fraternity party. It was a fun party and I ate as much as possible, living off campus has made me sort of a food bum. After gourging I ventured to the dance floor.

When I was a freshman I danced like a madman, with anybody or nobody, with reckless abandon. I have always thought that dancing is one of the stangest of human activities. Oh I think it's natural and "in our blood" to move to the music but it is still strange. There we were, fifty people with various amounts of alcohol in our systems, bouncing along on the floor. There is no way to look cool and dance, none.

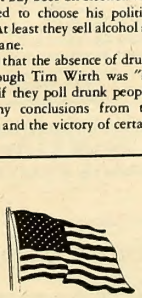
John Travolta thought he looked cool, wrong. The more cool someone tries to look while swaying to the beat the more foolish the look. It's like trying to look suave while pulling underwear out of your ass. If your worried about appearance while dancing, just relax, you look silly. It can't be helped. If you act like you know you look silly then you look less silly. Wipe the intense look off your face and give that stupid grin.

John Travolta, thought he looked cool, wrong.

I've always thought that visitors to earth would think that music is some strange disease that affects the nervous system and causes lack of control of the neck and spine. Heads bobb around while people drive. It looks like some spinal attack with rhythm.

Speaking of silly things, I was shocked yesterday to find that I couldn't buy beer on election day. If a person has to get sloshed to choose his politician then he probably should. At least they sell alcohol after the polls close. That's humane.

It doesn't seem that the absence of drunk voters had much effect, although Tim Wirth was "behind in the polls." I wonder if they poll drunk people. I'll refrain from drawing any conclusions from the supposed absence of drunks and the victory of certain democrats. Oops.



Coverage Would Reinforce Honor Code

This past week the campus community was provided a rare opportunity to witness a session of the usually hushed and secretive proceedings of the Honor Council. Although the Catalyst does not advocate a policy of full disclosure and open proceedings in cases of Honor Code violations, we do believe that once a solid case has been established and formal charges filed such trials should be public.

The Honor Code relies on voluntary student participation. When the college community sees the system in action not only is awareness heightened and familiarity increased but the severity of a violation is also stressed. Such exposure would add weight to the Honor System and the gravity of its breech. It would also lead to greater student compliance. The Catalyst encourages the Honor Council to adopt this policy in its proceedings.

• • •

A controversy has recently surfaced over the atmosphere in the temporary HUB. The complaint: noise from a stereo system and television are disruptive to a relaxed atmosphere in which patrons can reflect, study, or converse. Granted that the old HUB was an often quiet and empty place where students and faculty could go to study, get a late snack, or take a study break, the new HUB serves a different purpose. In this transition year the social meeting places eliminated with Rastall Center—Benny's and the off-campus lounge and TV room—have not been replaced except by the new HUB.

The diversified needs of the entire college community cannot be seperately met. There are ample places on campus for students to quietly study or meet: Palmer, Armstrong, Olin, the remodeled lounges in Slocum and Loomis, and even the library. Until the facilities in the Worner Center are available, the HUB is appropriately a social meeting place for the campus (unless SAGA plans to start serving Bengal Burgers in Tutt and we move the card catalog to the PACC house).

—J.B.
Editor Emeritus

• • •

Beginning Next Week The Catalyst will be running a column dealing with issues of alcohol and drug use. The column will be edited by Douglas M. Gertner, Coordinator of Alcohol and Drug Education [at CC] and drawing on experts throughout the community. Address your questions [to the column] in care of The Catalyst box at the student center.

The Catalyst would like to credit Jeff Manzelli with the photos of Roy Romer (Vol. 20, No. 4), Bill Story (Vol. 20, No. 5), and Gresham Riley (Vol. 20, No. 5).

CATALYST
Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado

DAVID KLEIN
BLAIR SANFORD
Editors

LIZ CHENEY, Opinions Editor
TED CRAIG & DAVID FITZGERALD, News Editors
PATRICK CHISHOLM & KATIE DALSEMER, Features Editors
KATHY MAHONEY & ALEC REKOW, Sports Editors
ERIC BREITBARD, Arts Editor
SUSAN GRIAK, Associate Arts Editor

•

JOHN KATSANIS, Photography Editor
MIKE FRATERELLI, Copy Editor
ANNE MANHART, Layout Editor

•

JEAN BOYER
Business Manager

LINDA SHIREMAN, Typesetter
LINDA IMHOFF, Typesetter

The Catalyst logo by JANE PATTERSON

The Catalyst is published by Cutler Publications, Inc., Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado 80903. Phone (303) 473-2233 extension 675. The Catalyst is printed tri-monthly from September to May, except during holiday periods.
Cutler Publications, Inc. does not discriminate on the basis of race, color, age, religion, sex, national origin, or physical handicap in its education programs, activities or employment policies in accordance with federal, state and local laws.
Editorials appearing in the Catalyst are the opinions of the designated author and not necessarily those of any other Catalyst staff member.
The Catalyst encourages the letters to the editor. Letters should be no more than 400 words in length and be typed or neatly printed. Address letters to the Catalyst, Rastall Center, Colorado College, Colorado Springs, 80903. Unsigned letters will not be printed.
A work of considerable length may be submitted as a guest commentary. Persons interested in submitting commentary should contact the Catalyst at 632-4999 or 473-2233 ext. 675.
The Catalyst reserves the right to edit or cut letters to the editor and guest commentaries.

'86: A COLLECTION OF

Fear and Loathing on the Campaign Trail: 1986

BY FLETCHER NEELEY

I've never been a member of any organized political party, I'm a Democrat.

—Will Rogers

Politicians are usually slobering power junkies, like predatory beasts going in for the kill. Journalists are usually a lot like crazed photographers straining at very weird angles to get every possible gory detail they can. So, during election years, there are usually a lot of zany, blind, frothing, belching convention orgy/vortexes around somewhere, with all of it caught in color. This election was no exception.

When I walked into Democratic Festivities H.Q. in Denver around 10:00 P.M., I was almost crushed to death by a demonaical gaggle of Yuppiedom's finest. It was a veritable Yuppierama. They fiendishly circled in telling me that they'd sell their Saab with only 13% on the amoritization table, compounded daily, and balloon payment in three months. I barely escaped alive. I had been severly vocabubeaten.

However, as I preambulated and perused the seeming insanity, I noticed something of an anomoly. There were also Cowboys, various ethnic groups, inner-city sophisticates, and suburbanites.

Fear and Loathing on the Campaign Trail: 1986.

This was a gathering of Colorado's democratic elite. Everybody could feel the pervasive, collective power of our state's duly elected officials, and all the potentiality thereof. It was no wonder that this renegade band of ex-hippie Yups were more excited and verbose than usual. And it wasn't just the inordinate amount of dry, arid, dying of thirst martinis that had been consumed.

On that single stage was a considerable proportion of the Democratic Party's "new cutting edge." By their very persons, they gave a pretty accurate representation of just what this "new" party is all about. The list is pretty impressive.

Denver Mayor Federico Pena is one of the many Hispanic individuals who have been elected to this position in major Southwest population centers, Denver being one of the most important cities in this area of the U.S. Black D.A. Norm Early has far exceeded his predecessors in scope and effectiveness of activity. Both of these men represent a rapidly expanding and increasingly vocal participation of minorities in American Politics. Perhaps the most dramatic example of this is Harold Washington of Chicago, the man who beat the Daily power machine, not to mention Mario Cuomo.

Next on the block is Pat Schroeder, one of the diehard Democrats who has withstood the crunch of the Reagan Era and has been one of the leading proponents of the Feminist Movement.

Tim Wirth was one of those young idealist/activists who got involved in the '68 Kennedy Campaign that ended with a striking and sickenly recurrent tragedy. It is obvious that Wirth has retained a great deal of this liberal idealism, yet it is also evident that he has developed a considerable amount of political sophistication. He predicted at the beginning of the race that the outcome would be extremely close.

Next on the chopping block was retiring Governor Richard Lamm. Lamm has been termed "Dr. Gloom" by many in the Media. It is clear that Lamm has been a sobering influence in the Party since 1980. Thus he has also been one of the catalysts in "reorganizing" the same after the disastrous '70's. What now for Lamm? He's going to some Ivy League teaching position somewhere.

Roy Romer, the governor on the block, speaking objectively on his record, is simply one of the most prophetic and competent politicians the State of Colorado has ever seen.

Last but not least, we have Gary Hart. He is current Democratic frontrunner (admittedly this means very little) for the U.S. Presidency.

To quote Romer, "Elections are a reflection of what we value most." There is more to this statement than meets the eye. In order to elucidate I'm going to have to go off on some pretty weird tangents. I hope you can bear with me.

Let's face it, the '60's were a pretty important decade. We began to see a new and tenacious outcropping of idealism, especially from the younger generations. This liberalism was first organized in the form of the Kennedy Campaign, and was maintained as much as possible after his death by McCarthy. The potential victory was there, but the entrenched opposition was much too strong. In '72 George McGovern might conceivably have become president (Hart was one of the young shakers and movers in this miraculous campaign had it not been for the Eagleton Affair. If McGovern had been elected, one of this nation's most malicious demeaning memories might have been avert Watergate.

By 1976 this granola idealism, combined with disillusioned conservatives, finally overwhelmed the Republican Establishment. It can only be said that the Democratic Party was not truly ready to hold the Presidency. Carter was a deplorable president because he lacked the qualities of a statesman. Even his most notable achievement, the Camp David Accords, has been marred by the continuing debate between Israel and Egypt as to just exactly what was agreed upon. With Carter's weak response to events such as the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, the Iranian Hostage Crisis, inflation increase, it is no wonder that America reverted back to conservatism.

What we are seeing now is the Democratic Party revitalizing itself and returning from the brink of the Carter Administration. The Democrats have concretely redefined their platform to suit today's political climate. Naturally, their sharpest minds have come out on top, many of whom are veterans of that nutty Party ideal of the late 1960's, and the disappointment thereof.

To be sure, Ronald Reagan is one of the most charismatic chiefs this nation has seen. However, elections are a reflection of what we value, or what we think we value most, then it would follow that perhaps the U.S. public is becoming a tad dissatisfied with Reaganism. Although Ron has certainly had a measure of success as far as some of his foreign policy is concerned, a couple of his stances on this subject have some potentialy volatile consequences, namely support of the Contras and the Khmer Rouge. Many of Reagan's internal policies have turned his consitutency against and can only be described as egrigious and detrimental to the nation in general, i.e. demoralizing decay of the family farm, the appointment of a seemingly reactionary chief justice, and the National Deficit, or the Black Hole.

It is a definite maybe that this election may seemingly be a somewhat accurate measure of what might conceivably happen in '88, but no-one can really know where the White House will go. Right now, who really cares anyway? I've seen so many goddamn political ads that I have been sorely tempted to compromise the physical integrity of my T.V. set with a high-velocity projectile. Yes, the victory party was nice, but it was an anticipatory kind of zany. All I know is that as I sat there consuming liberally with Tom and Scott, I thanked Lono that the Party had been kept in the Governor's Mansion.

This is Fletch Neeley saying adios amigos from the National Affairs Desk.

MoviesMoviesMoviesMovi

The Color of Sap

Children of a Lesser God

BY NINA DE GRAMONT

William Hurt usually plays someone sort of deviant. He was an impotent drug peddler in The Big Chill, an incarcerated transvestite in Kiss of the Spider Woman, a tripped-out scientist in Altered States. In Children of a Lesser God, however, Hurt abandons his funkier side to play a straight up LEADING MAN. The result is a perfect portrayal of a very nice and sensitive guy in what becomes a very nice and sensitive movie.

Children of a Lesser God takes place in a school for deaf children, where Hurt is a hearing speech teacher. The beginning of the movie is fascinating as we watch classes and Hurt's unorthodox methods of teaching his students to speak. But the real story begins when Hurt spots Sarah, a beautiful, angry deaf woman played by Marlee Martin. She refuses to speak or read lips, holding that anyone who wishes to communicate with her can just as easily learn her language. The relationship between Hurt and Martin starts out as very antagonistic; she ferociously resists his attempts to teach her to speak, and he doggedly persists. As is not unusual in movies, their adversarial feelings turn into fierce interest, then closeness, then—ta dah!—love.

And that's where the movie slows down. Not that their love affair isn't interesting; it's very real and touching, and a number of scenes between Martin and Hurt are very memorable. Somehow, though, the conflicts between them as lovers don't have nearly as much spark as the conflicts they had when they were just meeting. The relationship's communication problems are stated rather than shown, and the movie becomes a little too tender. It's a nice tenderness, but it doesn't quite hold the energy that the movie starts out with.

Children of a Lesser God is not a bad movie. In fact, it's pretty good. It's just that sometimes when an exceptionally moving play is transcribed into film, the theme can preach at you a little too much. The first time we see Martin swimming, we understand that the under water world represents the silence Sarah lives in, but that's thrown at us again and again long after that meaning is established. Ultimately the movie doesn't finish in a place much different from where it begins. I guess fittingly, it's sort of a quiet movie. There's a lot about Children of a Lesser God, particularly the powerful performances by Hurt and Martin, that make it worth seeing. So do see it, just don't expect to spend a lot of time on the edge of your seat.

The Color of Money

BY JILL MAZURSKY

I was really psyched to see Martin (After Hours, Raging Bull, and Taxi Driver) Scorsese's Color of Money. I couldn't wait. Paul Newman. Tom Cruise. Pool. Everything sounded amazing. Scorsese is one of my favorite directors. The Hustler which this is the sequal to, was great. Unfortunately, this movie is only solid for about the first half and then, like a cue ball, it scratches.

Paul Newman once again plays Fast Eddie Felson, pool shark. This time though he is on the other side of the stick. He has given up pool and has become a Chicago liquor salesman. He is clean cut, drives a white caddie and has a sometime girlfriend Janelle (Helen Shaver) who wants more than some of Eddie's time. While having a drink in Janelle's bar, Eddie becomes intrigued with a young kid, Vincent (Tom Cruise), who's got tons of energy, cockiness and never misses a shot. Eddie sees great potential in Vincent. He wants him. He wants to make money through him. Vincent, though, is more interested in his girlfriend Carmen and having fun at whuping local hustlers. Eddie manipulates Carmen into manipulating Vinnie. Eddie teaches Vincent that there's more to pool than hitting balls, there's a lot of money. He introduces Vincent to the world of guys who'll do anything for a buck and the world of compulsive pool players. As Carmen, Eddie and Vincent hit the road for Atlantic City, I wish I had too.

The film was actually decent for a while. It was fun, they were fun, but the minute anybody got down to business Newman and Cruise, in particular, lacked presence and I became more interested in listening to the Air Force boys next to me talk about Top Gun. Both Newman and Cruise are flat. None of the relationships have much substance. Helen Shaver, for instance, is practically a nonentity. There is no way Newman cared about this lady and the cuts to him on the phone with her were complete wastes of footage. Cruise's love in Carmen, played by mary Elizabeth Mastrantonio, is a bit more meaty. Mastrantonio does a good job at portraying the tough girl in the middle trying to get rich, but still there are many unanswered questions. If Scorsese had concentrated on one or even two relationships he would have a masterpiece, but seeing Newman pout constantly got annoying. I didn't feel sorry for him. And I certainly didn't care if he won or lost. This film has no soul and was only mediocure. Maybe next time Marty.

Arts Calendar

Friday, Nov. 7 and Saturday, Nov. 8

8:00 p.m. Armstrong Theatre: Colorado Springs Dance Theatre with CC Leisure program presents Nina Weiner and dancers. Ticket information, call 630-7434.

12:00 Midnight Olin Hall: "Rocky Horror Picture Show"

SOUNDSCAPES: A Twentieth Century Chamber Ensemble will be participating in the second annual American Music Week '86 celebration. A concert will be presented on Sunday, November 9, at 2:30 p.m. in the Music Room of the Fine Arts Center. This national event, sponsored by the American Music Center and funded by the National Endowment for the Arts, focuses much needed attention on the American composer and his contribution to the artistic life of this country.

To celebrate this event SOUNDSCAPES is collaborating with the Moovin' Dance Company, a local troupe, which has performed in Denver as well as Colorado Springs. Choreographer Rozanne David is producer and participating choreographer of Dansaction.

SOUNDSCAPES was formed by five professional musicians interested in performing 20th century and contemporary chamber music. While groups of this genre are abundant on the east and west coasts, SOUNDSCAPES is unique to Colorado. Their concert series ranges from performances of twentieth century classics by Debussy and Stravinsky through the avantgarde of John Cage. The variety of instrumentation and programming make for a unique musical experience. Members of SOUNDSCAPES are: Sandra Craddock, clarinet, Jan Gault, flute; Jerry Grandel, percussion; Tom Schultz, piano; Icel Stroup, bassoon.

Thursday, Nov. 13

8:15 p.m. Armstrong Theatre: Great Performances at CC presents INCA: A Peruvian Music and Folk Ensemble. Tickets are free with CC ID at the Student Center.

What's On Your Turntable?

David Fitzgerald—Junior—Political Economy
The Ramones, "It's Alive"

Blair Sanford—Senior—Economics
"This is Big Audio Dynamite"

Jean Boyer—Sophomore—Political Economy
Ultravox, "Lament"

Beth Olson—Sophomore—Undecided
Joan Armatrading, "Joan Armatrading"

Katie Dalsemer—Junior—Art Studio
The Neville Brothers, "Fiyo on the Bayou"

Next Week in Arts

Vito Acconci at CC
UCCS Gallery Review
Movies, Records, and Features

SKYWAY VIDEO

Rentals & Sales

577-9047

Hours:
Monday-Thursday 10:30-7
Friday & Saturday 10:30-8
Closed Sunday

- Foreign Films (Excellent Selection)
- Classic Films
- Operas
- Musicals

As well as an extensive selection of

- Current Releases

— No Club Or Membership Fees —
Tuesday Special - $1.49 Rentals
Sunday Rentals - Free

Skyway Plaza • S. 8th & Arcturus
(feel free to call for directions)

— Courtesy of The Kinnikinnik —

The Colorado Springs Fine Arts Center
November Calendar

30 West Dale Street / 634-5581 / Tuesday-Saturday: 10 am to 5 pm / Sunday: 1 pm to 5 pm
Gallery Admission:
Members Free Adults 2.50 Students & Seniors 1.50 Children 1.00 Under Five Free Sundays Free

Nov — Collector's Showcase on exhibit through November 30.
Nov 01, 02 — Martha Graham Dance Company at the Pikes Peak Center. 8:00 pm Nov. 01 and 3:30 pm Nov. 02. Tickets: $11 - $25.
Nov 04 — "Wages Of Fear" — Classic Film Series. 8:00 pm / $2.50.
Nov 05 — Jazz In The Galleries — H30 with Alan Joseph, 5:00 - 7:00 pm. Free to FAC and Jazz Society members; general admission $1.50. Sponsored by Colorado National Bank Exchange.
Nov 08 — "Painting The Figure" — Bemis Adult Workshop. 9:30 - 3:30 pm / $25 plus $5 model fee. Call 475-2444 to register.
Nov 09, 10, 11 — "Egypt: Land Of The Pharoahs" — World Horizons Travel Film narrated by Frank Carney. 2:00 pm each day, 4:30 pm show on Nov. 09, 8:00 pm show on Nov. 10. $4.75 adults, $3.00 students.
Nov 11 — "Jezebel" — Classic Film Series. 8:00 pm / $2.50.
Nov 18 — "El Cid" — Classic Film Series. 8:00 pm / $2.50.
Nov 19 — Jazz In The Galleries — Laura Davis & Friends. 5:00 - 7:30 pm. Free to FAC and Jazz Society members; general admission $1.50. Sponsored by Colorado National Bank Exchange.
Nov 22 — "Appalachian Hen Basket" — Bemis Basketry Workshop. Call 475-2444 to register. 10:00 - 4:00 pm / $25 plus materials.
Nov 25 — "The Story Of Alexander Graham Bell" — Classic Film Series. 8:00 pm / $2.50.
Nov 30 — "Queen Elizabeth II, Down Under" — World Horizons Travel Film narrated by Douglas Jones. 2:00 and 4:30 pm / $4.75 adults, $3.00 students.

Open Every Day from 10 to 9 and 12 to 9 on Sundays at 2530 West Colorado / 633-1674 cards and gift items / office products / free wrapping / convenient parking

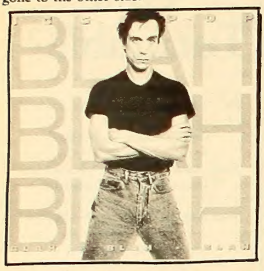
The Kinnikinnik
Bookshop & Office Store
In Old Colorado City

New Pop: Blah Blah Blah

BY E.J. BERNACKI

Has Iggy Pop sold out?

Has the prince of primitive punk who preceded rock music as we know it today gone to the other side?



These are some questions I asked myself after seeing Iggy's video "Cry for Love" and hearing a now sound from this old and much respected artistic pioneer. Iggy Pop is no longer the guy who cuts himself on beer bottles and rolls around in lit cigarettes. Apparantly, since his last major album, Party, five years ago, he has undergone some serious changes, getting himself together physically, financially, emotionally, and other-wise. Iggy was one of the first heavy metal hard-core artists with his band the Stooges. The sound of his new album Blah Blah Blah is different; Bowie-esque, as well it sould be since David Bowie co-wrote a good deal of the tunes and co-produced the album. Age quite possibly could have spurred Iggy's conservatism and re-directed passion but I would rather believe he is finally showing the sensitive boy-like man who has been hiding behind the offensive and self-destructive character that Iggy has been for so long.

Don't get me wrong. The album is very good and quite a success. It may be, to hard core old Iggy Pop fans, a less likeable sell out, but it undoubtedly is an album that will bring Iggy Pop to the rest of America through pop radio and MTV.

It is difficult to cite specific tunes which are better than others because the record is so consistant. Cry for Love, and Blah Blah Blah are songs which are getting air play and are quite representational of the quality of the album as a whole. Iggy's deep sensual and non-threatening baritone works well for the mellow, "Shades" and for all the songs on the album. Blah Blah Blah gives us a different approach to the artist. If you've shunned Iggy for being too cacafarous, accosting or hard core all these years, especially if you're into the Bowie strain, Blah Blah Blah is something you should definately listen to. Although it is uncharacteristic of the artist's lifelong collective work, Blah Blah Blah is a good introduction to the unique world of Iggy Pop.

Albums Furnishings R...
Budget Records & Tapes

New Brit. LP: The Housemartins

BY J. MARTIN BROAN

On the surface, these chart-busting British pop boys sound like they're content with the state of pop music and social issues. You'd think their fun, high-powered, quick tunes would be accompanied by thoughtless, insensitive lyrics like most other pop bands today (even though it may not matter, since only about one in five kids knows what his favorite song is about, according to a scary Rolling Stone poll). In fact, one of their songs is titled "We're not deep." Maybe we should read the lyrics before we jump to any conclusions! These angry little guys, from a British industrial haven called Hull, are really pissed off about a lot of things out there. In "Sitting on a Fence," lead singer P.D. Heaton squeaks about today's domination of apathy. "...but the real problem with this man/is he says he can't when he can/he'd rather not get his hands dirty/he'll still be there when he's thirty." In "Sheep," he continues, "They've never questioned anything they've never disagreed/Sometimes I think they have wool in their ears." The anthem-like "Freedom" reads, "So this is freedom/they must be joking/if they think it's true/I doubt their truth/for me and you." Even "We're not deep" ends up being a mockery that's a far cry from admission.

No stellar musicianship here, yet any deficiency in talent is more than made up for in soul. Heaton belts out his lyrics like a pissed off Boy George (minus the heroin) and guitarist Stan Cullinmore adds a few tasteful minimalist licks between verses. After making it big in Britain this summer, you'd better bet on them invading college airwaves here in the U.S. Their anti-glamour approach is awfully refreshing after just a few too many androgenous idiots on your MTV. Really, these guys are fun, fun, fun, and they even have something to say.

Katie Dalsemer has a bootleg of these guys. Either kill her for it or have her arrested.

Late Night Funk Next Wee

Bobbie McDuffie strums for Stuck Up.

BY KATIE DALSEMER

That's right. CC's getting Stuck Up. No, I'm not referring to another elitist group on campus, but one of Minneapolis' newest soul, funk bands. Yes, a soul band at CC. It's about time right? Next Friday, November 14th Livesounds will sponsor a bash in Armstrong Hall featuring Stuck Up with opening act the local CC talent: Order and Progress (see review in last week's Catalyst).

Although Stuck Up has only been together about six months, the individual members are by no means inexperienced. Backbone leader and bass player for the group is Bobby McDuffie. The music of his previous band, Magic Touch, received much airplay in the Minneapolis area. Most noteworthy of his achievements, however, are his experiences with soul supergroup The Time. Besides assisting the group with some studio work MCDuffie is also credited with teaching The Time's bassist how to play.

Other members of Stuck Up include Harvey Dee Witherspoon III and Daniel Simmons on keyboards, Perry Tranon Graham on drums, Paul Washing... electronic drums and Anthony Brew... lead vocals. The keyboard player... percussionsists occasionally switch ... and each member also takes turns h... Brewer's strong gospel influenced v... Although there is no lead gu... McDuffie's hard driving bass ... combined with the rest of the Stu... sound more than compensate.

Stuck Up's dynamic live perform... include 70% original fun, get you... groovin' tunes such as "Sexy Woma... "I Want You" soon to be released ... debut album. The rest of their rep... includes covers of tunes by ... Minneapolis funksters Prince, Ma... and The Time.

So, as Morris would say: "What ... it?" Well, the show starts at 10:0... next Friday in Armstrong Hall. ... private party (sorry no alcohol al... just for CC students and their ... Tickets are $2.00 and are available ... student center, 931 North Nevada... promises to be one hell of a show, ... it!

From a traditional style...

...to a daringly dramatic statement.

Introducing Tish, our New Stylist.

Artistic Hair Designers

703 North Tejon, Suite B

475-0679

Things For Your Bod And Your Abode

In other words things of various and assorted sundry natures and materials for the adornment of the human corpus and the domicile in which it dwells.

Mon.-Fri. 10-6 pm Sat. 11-5 pm

THE LOTUS EATER BOUTIQUE

Downtown on Platte Between Tejon & Cascade

phone: 635-2118

PHOTO BY JERRY WANG

California Tricks and Treats

BY ANNA SHORTT
AND KAREN WILLOUGHBY

"Let me have another beer and think bout it," sighed Cal-Berkeley player Molly Zernicek (Ann's sister) when asked to describe CC's 1-0 victory over 2nd ranked Cal. An intense rivalry has been developing in the west between CC and Cal, as the Tigers have beaten the Bears for the 2nd consecutive year. Another rival, Wisconsin, was also shutout with Kerri Tashiro collecting two second half goals. Two critical games - two critical wins. Both times the women's soccer team stormed onto the California field determined to regain misplaced pride.

Their first match was Friday against Wisconsin - a must win for CC to gain a playoff bid. A hard-nosed defense and a possessive midfield created numerous opportunities for the forwards to finish. In the second half Kerri Tashiro responded. Leaving defenders in a daze, she nailed home two magnificent goals. Not only did CC play well, but the challenge to play their best was met. Self-respect, team confidence, and a re-established pride were the results.

Berkeley provided a test for their new pride. It was a dynamic game. Scoring opportunities were even for both teams, but, according to assistant coach Austin Daniels, "Strong midfield play made the difference." Junior midfielder, Cheryl Bartels, describes CC's midfield play in terms of winning the ball. "We didn't let them play. We didn't give them time to distribute." Berkeley's missed penalty kick late in the second half symbolized the inevitability of a CC victory. No way, no way was Berkeley going to score. Thoughts from goalie Janine Szpara before the missed penalty kick, "Lord help me to have spring, to do what I can. They're not going to score." It was only moments before Jennifer Hickman fulfilled the prophecy of a win. Hickman caught Cal's goalie out of step with a backheel flick of a 35-yard serve from freshman back Shelley Separovitch. Cal watched in disbelief, as the ball literally rolled into the back of the net. CC went wild. The Tigers were up, but with 7 minutes left, the game was not finished. The defense resisted Cal's attack, as Michelle Bulger physically eliminated their top scorer. The win was especially sweet for the 4 CC Californians and the attending CC alumni of '68. The wins strengthened their confidence, but playing at their best solidified self-respect and pride.

Perhaps the wins can be attributed to a perpetual sugar high. For it was Halloween weekend, and the CC women were prepared to celebrate in a most traditional fashion. Totally raging times were also had on the California beaches, and of course, at Disneyland. Yes, there were 11 college kids wearing Mickey Mouse ears, in a boat, singing "It's a small world after all . . ."

CC, now ranked 3rd, has received a 1st round bye in the NCAA Division 1 playoffs. They are now preparing for a November 15th match against the winner of the Cal State Hayward-UCBerkeley game. More details later. Stay tuned, dude!

PHOTO BY TED CASTANEDA

Ryan Shaffer lopes through Kansas. (Next weekend the Cross-Country team travels to Waverly, Iowa for the regional meet.)

Watch the Big Cats Splash

BY CYNTHIA SURRETT

Some of you may have noticed a lot of activity at Schlessman pool since block break. Rumor has it the Big Cats got loose and started splashing around. The women, after a long, self-disciplined pre-season, had their first practice as a team on Wed., Oct. 22. The men hit the water Mon., Oct. 27.

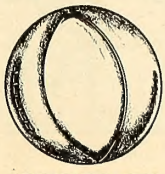
Joani Schofield, the women's head coach, is looking foward to a very rewarding season. She and Coach Lear will be joined this year by former two-time All-American diver Laura Luckett (CC 1984). Laura will coach the divers, including last year's Division III National Champion on both the 1- and 3-meter boards, Beth Olsen.

Joanie is expecting great things from this team. Self-directed pre-season training already has many of the women in good condition. Joani has been heard bragging that her swimmers can crank out 300 sit-ups per day! She'd better watch statements like that, or someone may challenge her and her team.

After 6 weeks of practice, the Big Cats will travel to Boulder for the C.U. Invitational, Dec. 6-7. their second meet will be in Denver against Metro on Dec. 12. CC does not host a meet until after Christmas Break. So, all you Big Cat fans, keep your eyes open for further information. The team will be led by senior tri-captains Carla Bellanca, Alex Trovas and Cynthia Surrett. Other names to look for this season are Trish Franciosi-sophomore, school record holder in both the 100- and 200-yard breaststroke; Elizabeth Stroh-sophomore butterflyer; Allison Wolfinger-freshman butterflyer and Jeannie Leadbeater-freshman backstroker.

We hope you will join us on Nov. 9 for the Swim-for-Heart Swim-a-thon. For more information call the pool, or drop by to pick up entry forms.

Hoopsters to Open '86



BY DEAN CAMPBELL

The 1985-86 Colorado College Women's Basketball Team gave the term "rebuilding year" an entirely different meaning. Plagued by inexperience, lack of height, and a succession of bad coaches at CC, the Lady Tigers went 3-23, losing those twenty-three games by an average of nearly twenty-six points, and being outscored by twenty-one points per contest. Though the team was expected to struggle, the fiasco that ensued surprised even the team's most pessimistic observers.

One person who is enthusiastic about the Lady Tigers' 1986-87 season is second-year Head Coach Beth Branson. Branson, herself a standout in both basketball and soccer at CC, is convinced the team will improve significantly this season. Aided by the addition of three freshmen to alleviate CC's size disadvantage (6'1" Julie Miller, Tulsa, OK; 5'11" Paige Lorimer, Gunnison, CO; 5'11" Sally Bush, Denver, CO), the Lady Tigers will rely on team quickness to establish an exciting fast-break offense and stingy high-pressure defense to foil their opponents. Led by 1985-86 leading scorer Terri Livermore and guards Kitzie Pettersen and Chris Sanchez, CC has great depth, with the team's top eight players all very skilled and experienced. While Coach Branson jokingly predicted "we'll be undefeated," a .500 season is certainly not an unrealistic goal for the 1986-87 squad.

CC opens their season against Denver University on November 22 at El Pomar Sports Center, with the opening top-off slated for 7:00 p.m. With more Division III (and fewer games against major Colorado school) opponents on this year's schedule, the Lady Tigers have a fighting chance at a winning season. Known for their loyal and enthusiastic support of fellow CC athletic teams, the Lady Tigers deserve better support from CC fans. So come out and be a part of what should prove to be an exciting and entertaining season of Colorado College Women's Basketball.

WE'LL DO YOUR LAUNDRY!!!

WASHED
DRIED
FOLDED

Suds 'um
Laundry & Cleaners

1931 W. Uintah (across from Uintah Gardens)
473-3756 Special student offer w/CC ID.

Before the fall.

Skiers to Hit the Slopes

Skiers Enthusiastic

It's that time of year again. Snow in beginning to fly and soon ski areas will be in full swing. The Ski Racing Team has once again begun its dry land training in preparation for an exciting season. Coach Mark Rinehart, who this week began hammering the skiers into shape, expects to have a successful year combining new and returning talent into two strong teams. Chief rivals in the Rocky Mt. Region are archrival Brigham Young and Fort Lewis College.

Last year, CC men placed third in the region barely missing a bid for Nationals. Although several men have graduated, Co-captain Charlie Schwartz is optimistic, "If everyone skiis well and doesn't crash, we have a great chance to do well." CC men look toward a top two placement and a trip to nationals, although they will surely h stiff competition. Returning for the m are Pete Hudson, Jim Grossman and D Kim. Freshmen Jeff Craig and Clay Col also look strong.

The women's team, which enjoyed great season last year including a fi showing at Nationals, is also preparing be a powerhouse in the Rocky Mt. Regio The women also lost some great racers l year, but hope to replace them with ne members to have a solid team this ye Returning talent includes Co-captai Michelle Fisher, Kim Kepner and Ju Miller. A talented group of women skie are vying for the remaining positions o the team.

CC skiers are enthusiastic a hopefully will have a great season, wat for their schedule and give them yo support.

Hockey Team Soars

BY KATHLEEN MAHONEY

It is reality. Colorado College is actually winning hockey games. Last weekend the Tigers swept the University of Minnesota-Duluth in a two game series, 6-5 in overtime Friday night and 6-4 Saturday.

These victories boosted CC to third place in the Western Collegiate Hockey Association behind undefeated North Dakota and once beaten Minnesota. The team is also ranked 8th in the nation this week by the KBJR-AM college hockey poll out of Minnesota. Two coaches from each league vote in this ranking.

All this came about at the Braodmoor World Arena when CC hosted UMD this weekend. UMD are the cellar dwellers in the WCHA at 1-6-1 but the Bulldogs' losses have all come at the hands of the top three teams in the league (which includes CC).

Friday night Guy Gadowsky's two goals, including the winning goal in overtime, led the Tigers to victory. UMD started strong, scoring first on a power play in the opening two minutes. CC matched that one with a Scott Schneider tally, then pulled ahead when tri-captain Gord Whitaker put the puck past UMD goalie Mike Cortes. The Bulldogs evened the score halfway through the second period but CC scored two more, Gadowsky's first of the pair and one by freshman Doug Kirton.

Going into the third period with a4-2 lead, CC let down the guard and UMD tied things up at 4-4. A Tim Budy goal with two minutes left in the game gave the lead back to CC. The Tigers were unable to hold it though and with fifteen seconds left, the Bulldogs pushed the game into overtime.

It was a sudden death for one of the two teams and that death came quicly for UMD when Gadowsky took a pass from tri-captain Marty Ketola. Two minutes of overtime was all CC needed to put another one in the win column.

PHOTO BY JERRY WAN

Sophomore Derek Pizzey had his s solid performance in net stopping Bulldog shots in the win.

They added another point to t column Saturday night thanks to four go by Whitaker and alot of power p opportunities. Five out of the six Ti goals came from capitalizing on UM penalties.

Senior Rick Boh started the scorin minute and a half into the play, ten secon into the first CC power play. UMD ca back with one halfway through the peri The second period mirrored the first at t start when Boh posted his second of t night on another power play go Whitaker padded that lead four minu later with his first of four for the night the only non-power play goal. The Bulld cut the margin to one and ended t scoring for the middle period.

UMD tied it up at the beginning of t third but then Whitaker exploded for thr goals. UMD could only put one more p CC netminder Matt Gilbreth who had strong game finishing with 26 saves. B finished the night with four point assisting two of Whitaker's scores with all around good game.

This weekend comes the real test for t Tigers. The team travels to Wisconsin t play the team who they overtook for th place in the WCHA. It will be an importa series for both teams.

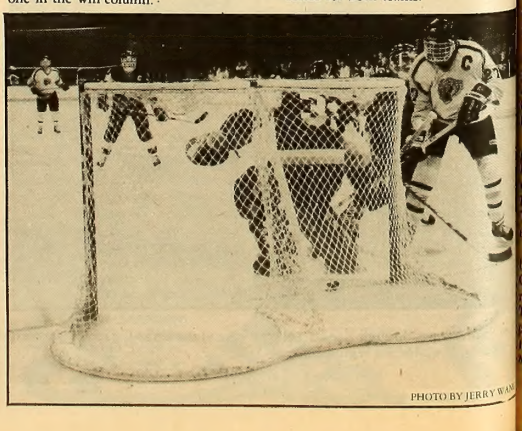


PHOTO BY JERRY WAN

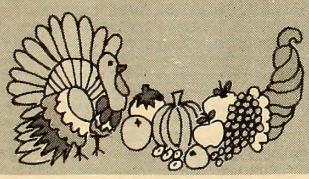
PHOTO CENTER SPECIALS!



Feast your eyes on our low Thanksgiving film developing prices.

COUPON

12 Exposure Roll	$2.29
15 Exposure Disc	$2.99
24 Exposure Roll	$4.49
36 Exposure Roll	$5.99

Offer good on single set of standard size prints. Limit one roll with this coupon (not valid with any other coupon offer). Offer expires in 7 days. Coupon redeemable at this store only. 2297

We use Kodak PAPER ...for a Good Look

College Pharmacy

833 North Tejon • 634-4861

I, The Superbowl Genie, shall grant the BRONCOS Three WISHES. Choose CAREFULLY.
I WANT the BEST RECORD IN THE NFL!
AND The AFC WEST CHAMPIONSHIP!
AND A PONY! A PONY OF MY VERY OWN!!

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

CC defense rips down quarterback.

Ore Diggers Maul Tigers

BY JAMES S. GRANTZ

The Tigers traveled to Golden last week to face the Colorado School of Mines in the oldest football rivalry west of the Mississippi River.

The 84th meeting between the Tigers and the Ore Diggers was marred by poor playing conditions and numerous miscues and mistakes by both teams. Mines handled both the weather and the ball and handed CC a 30-15 defeat.

It looked good for the Tigers in the early going. The defense led by LB Scott "Robo" Robertson (18 tackles, 7 assists with 5 tackles for losses) contained the Ore Digger offense giving up only an 18 yard TD run by junior Tail Back York Brogden on the first quarter.

On Mines' next drive QB Mike Patch fumbled the snap from center and senior Outside Backer Chris "Gumby" Kinney recovered to set up Chad Cavey's 1 yard TD. Then, on the Tigers next offensive possession, CC returned the favor by fumbling on their own 32. 5 plays later, Mines scored on an 8 yard pass from Patch to Mike Thomas to give the Ore Diggers the lead for good. The Tigers threatened late in the half but QB Charley Lorimer was intercepted by LB Darren Warren.

In the second half the Tigers turned the ball over 4 more times and 3 of these led directly to Mines TD's. Mines all but put the game away in the third quarter by holding the Tigers scoreless and scoring 10 points in the process. CC's final TD came with less than 2 minutes to go in the game. QB Charley Lorimer hit Sr. Tight End Rich "Curious George" Lawton for a 1 yard TD pass.

Many of the Tigers gave outstanding individual performances. Offensively Sr. Jack Foster made many key blocks, soph. Chad Cavey and soph. Shawn "Jimi Lee" Holt ran over around and through the Mines secondary. Defensively LB's Mark Gorman and Robertson continually punished Ore Digger Backs.

The Tigers travel to San Antonio, Texas to face Trinity University this week. CC beat Trinity 20-3 on October 11 here at Washburn Field. The Tigers, now 4-4, are trying to become the first CC football team with a winning record in this decade.

Hoops Picks

BY BASKETBALL JONES

It's in the air. Can't you feel it? Hoop! Roundball! The NBA! I know you all have been squirming in anticipation of the start of the new season. Well your sleepless nights are over. The second most popular indoor sport of all time is back and I'm excited about it. I mean if there's anything that rivals the excitement of watching the Indiana Pacers play the Sacramento Kings then I've yet to hear about it. The good news is that the NBA will no longer be a bi-polar entity. Most all of the bad to marginal teams have improved themselves in the offseason while the great ones have remained basically unchanged. Instead of only two contenders there are now a host of teams with the potential firepower to go the distance. Translation: No Beantown cakewalk for the Celtics this year.

This of course doesn't mean that the Celtics won't repeat as NBA champs . . . they very well might. They'll still win the Atlantic division but they probably won't win sixty games and they definitely won't go 40 and one in that ugly green house as they did last year. The mere fact that no team in eighteen years has repeated as champs means that the Celtics will struggle to reach last year's heights. The newly re-vamped Philadelphia 76ers need maturity yet could eventually push the Celtics down to the wire. The Washington Bullets, with 7-6 Manute Bol up to ten push-ups and 120 lbs. in the bench press, and newly acquired Moses Malone in the paint will at least cause some headaches.

The Milwaukee Bucks finally have the solid center they've lacked since Kareem went west in former Sonic Jack Sikma. Provided perennial all-star Sidney Moncrief's balsawood knees hold up, the Bucks could kick the sand back in Boston's face come April. The young Atlanta Hawks, last year's rags-to-riches team, now has the maturity and depth to challenge the Bucks for the Central division title. In Chicago, Michael Jordan will prove that one man does not a basketball team make as the Bulls fall to the cellar. The team of the future is the Cleveland Cavaliers. They had the best draft (the #1, #8 and #28 picks) and regained the services of John "Don't Call Me Point Shaver" Williams of Tulane.

The Nuggets you ask? After scouting Denver's finest in a pre-season game at the Air Force Academy I made two observations: 1) Calvin Natt didn't look too healthy and 2) Alex English didn't look too youthful. Observation #1 has already materialized and Natt is likely out for the season. For the first time in centuries Denver had a good draft, snagging guard Mo Martin, who Doug Moe will likely keep under wraps for the year, and Duke forward Mark Alarie who had an impressive pre-season and could make big contributions as a rookie. Yet without Natt or a quality center, the Nuggets will struggle to reach .500. This division belongs to the Rockets, though the Dallas Mavericks could raise a few eyebrows.

This year will likely be the last hurrah for the LA Lakers as Kareem, that ageless bald wonder and still the league's most effective point machine at 39, has promised this will be his last season. Yet the Lakers are still the class of the Pacific division and they should be able to bounce the Rockets, whose deficiencies at guard should finally show up. If all falls into place for L.A., one of the best championship rivalries in pro sports, Boston/LA, should be renewed and this time the Lakers will win it.

Rookie of the year? It would most likely have been Len Bias, but the chances of that happening are now remote at best. My money is on Cleveland's little-known Ron Harper, though New York's Kenny Walker and Indiana's Chuck Person had impressive pre-seasons. Larry Bird, the best player ever to set foot on the planet, could win his fourth consecutive MVP award, though the pre-season favorite has to be Houston's Akeem Olajuwon. However if the Lakers win it all, Magic Johnson will take a much-belated MVP honors.

On the college front, the CC Tigers will give it another shot at breaking .500 and the FIJIs will win the intramural title. See you on the court!

Our precision haircutters will give you the most up-to-the minute look...a look that stands out and lets you be who you want to be. Great Prices too!

20% off all regular priced services

exciting hair styles

Mon. -Fri. 8-7
Sat. 8-5
Sun. 11-5

6 Southgate Road
(Southgate Mall)
520-9957

NO APPOINTMENT NECESSARY
GREAT EXPECTATIONS
PRECISION HAIRCUTTERS

coupon CC
SAVE $2.00
Shampoo, cut, & blow style now only $8.95
(Reg. $10.95)

coupon CC
SAVE $5.00
on any perm complete with shampoo, precision haircut, styling & our written guarantee.

coupon CC
SAVE 20%
on any coloring, frosting or cellophane

Armadillo's Alley

BY ARMADILLO

How bout the spirit of the CC womens' soccer team! After losing a couple of tough games out east, they regrouped, headed west and were victorous. They beat Wisconsin 2-0, with freshmen sensation Keri Tashiro scoring both goals. the 3rd ranked Golden Bears (sweet nickname) of Cal-Berkeley were declawed thanks to Jennifer Hickman's goal with only seven minutes remaining. The Tigers earned a bye in the first round and will play their quarterfinal game in the shadow of Pikes Peak on Nov. 15th. Come out and support the team.

The 1986 N.F.L. season is past the halfway point and I figured I'd treat my loyal readers by bringing in a couple of experts for their insightful comments. So, without further ado, live from the top of my word processor, will you please welcome Bullwinkle and Spike!!! While these esteemed gentlemen need no introduction, I will elaborate for the sake of you ignoramuses who hail from milieus other than Dime Box, Texas. Bullwinkle is a carved wooden bull's head with nostrils large enough to inhale grams of coke in a single snort. His unique talent must be seen to be believed. For your educational video cassette send $39.95 plus an ounce of cocaine to: Bullwinkle the Blowmaster, 69 High Street, Dime Bag, Colombia.

Spike is an obnoxious, sassy ball cactus. I'm sure many of you are thinkin would be nice to have a cute little around the house," wrong. Last week happily air guitaring in the shower the little fart performed a graceful dive over the shower curtain embedded himself in my left butto on with the commentary. The follo teams have played surprisingly well this season:

The N.Y. Jets (8-1)—year after ye Jets are picked to kick some ass and never live up to their billing. Time changing. Their impressive Monday Night thrashing of the Do and 38-7 annihilation of a decent Sea team in Seattle indicates that they the team to beat this year. Bullw "their studly defensive line is key."

Minnesota (5-4)—The Vikings st Chicago a couple of weeks ago and though they have dropped two str they are definitely a respectable fo team again. Spike: "I'd like their stadium even more if they cranked th up to 102!"

Atlanta (5-3-1-)—Best start in thrilling victory over Dallas, a season with the Rams, and a tie with the The offense, quarterback David Arch particular, has looked shaky and they killer schedule, but no matter happens in the second half the seaso been a success. Spike: "Weren't thes 2-14 last year?"

Denver (8-1)—This one hurts Donkeys were supposed to be good, b this good. Only one of Denvers eight has been by less than seven points. Elway is finally playing up to his pos the Donks are scary. Bullwinkle: "Ba Bulls, what is the diff, I like this sq

Kansas City (6-3)—I keep wantin the paper to acknowledge that the C record is a mistake. Bullwinkle: "I sniff, anybody seen my mirror."

The following are the teams our ex feel are flops this season.

Miami (4-5)—A horrid record Miami ballclub at this point in the Even the stellar passing attack feat Marino, Clayton, and Duper can not the lack of a rushing game and their p defense. Bullwinkle: "The Dol defense has more holes than my membrane."

San Diego (1-8)—The Charger hurting. Don Coryell is gone and th down to their third string quarter Spike, reflecting on the Chargers p attack in the last game "4 of 17 w interceptions, Air Coryell has crashe time."

Pittsburg (3-6)—The Steelers are good quarterback away from respectin The Steeler Mystique, however, is no Their 1-6 start was the worst in fifteen years. Bullwinkle: "I'll take Pirates and give you three points."

Green Bay (1-8)—After season mediocrity, the Pack has finally m move, in the wrong direction. The pathetic, losing 27-3 to the Steeler weekend. Spike: "Does this team e exist?"

Well, I guess that wraps it up, thank for appearing on the show.

Sport Shorts

INTRAMURAL PLAYOFF RESULTS

- FLAG FOOTBALL -

Freshman League
Champions: Einhorn
Runners-Up: Lounge Hounds

Upperclass League
Champions: Wardogs (Phi Delt)
Runners-Up: Aspen Club (Kappa Sig)

- SOCCER -

Upperclass League
Semifinals: Murph's Law def. McGregor
S.W.F.C. def. Jammin Salmonistas
Finals: S.W.F.C. def. Murph's Law

- FRESHMAN LEAGUE -

Championship Game:
4-West Plague (4-1-2) vs. The Dudes (4-1-2)

- WOMEN'S LEAGUE -

Semi Finals:
Jungle Women (3-0-1-) vs. 2 West TBA (3-1)
Alpha FLight (2-0-2) vs. Swim Team (3-1)

Championship:
Winner game 1 vs. Winner Game 2

Club Hockey Loses

BY K. MURPHY

It was a third period awakening for the Colorado College women's ice hockey team.

The Tigers were down 4-0 at the beginning of the third period last Saturday when they hosted the Denver Bandits. CC struggled back almost catching the Bandits at 4-3, but Denver put one more on the board to win the first game of the Colorado Women's Hockey Association season, 5-3.

"We were asleep the first two periods but Dorothy kept us in the game (Dorothy Diggs, CC's goalie). She had one of her best games ever," commented head coach Vic Sunshine.

CC's first game anxiety helped the more experienced Bandits during the first two periods. The Tigers were not able to put the finishing touches on their plays. But as the game progressed CC's largely rookie squad got more comfortable on the ice and began to make things happen.

Junior defenseman and co-captain Sarah Meskin took the puck coast to coast and put it away to open the scoring for the Tigers at the beginning of the third period. The deficit was cut to two a few minutes later when rerurning veterans Dana Breitenstein and Kristen Thompson caused bedlam in front of the Bandits net. Thompson finally pushed over the red line for the score.

Senior Sarah Flynn pushed the next puck over the line for goal number three when a Kathy Mahoney shot bounced off the goalie's helmet and in towards the net. Flynn beat the Denver defenseman, the infamous Heather Poe in the scrap.

Defensively, the team only has two returning players, Meskin and Gretchen Smith but Coach Dave Roe, Defensive Coordinator, was pleased with his players.

"They looked shaky at the start but the team started to pull together as a single unit and held off a much larger and more experienced Denver team."

The Tigers next game will be Nov. 15 at Honnen against the Vail Breakaways.

Swim-a-thon on Nov. 9th

BY CYNTHIA SURRETT

The women's swim team is sponsoring a Swim-a-thon on Sun., Nov. 9 from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. at Schlessman pool. Coach Joani Schofield is hoping this event will bring attention to swimming as a life-long fitness sport as well as raise money for the American Heart Association. She has set a goal of 200 cumulative miles among all participants and is hoping her swimmers will each swim five-miles.

There will be many awards, and each individual who swims one mile or more will receive a T-shirt. Continental breakfast will be provided for all participants. Awards will be given to the individual who swims the farthest, the club or group which swims the farthest (in cumulative laps), the individual who raises the most money through pledges and donations and the club or group which raises the most money.

There is no entry fee, but there is a minimum requested sponsor pledge per category: 1) Individual, $5; 2) Club/Group, $15; 3) CC swim team member, $10. Please submit entries to Joani Schofield at the pool. If you have further questions, call Joani at x494, or drop by the pool to pick up an entry form.

One final note; the women's swim team has challenged the men's team to see who can swim the farthest in total (cumulative) laps. We hope to see you there!

THIS WEEK IN SPORTS

November
7 Hockey at Wisconsin
8 Hockey at Wisconsin
8 Men's Soccer vs. Metro State, 11 a.m.
8 Football at Trinity University
13 Volleyball regionals

EVERY WEDNESDAY
COLORADO
IS COLLEGE
NIGHT!
$1 COVER with your CC student I-d- only
+CHEAP COLD WET STUFF
8-Mid 12-
I.D Required
ANNEX
632-7251
CC

Hair Designers for Men & Women
RAPUNZEL
Style cuts, Cellophanes,
Perms & Color.
Nexus, Redken, and Tri products available for sale.
Stop in or make your appointment:
827 N. Tejon at Cache La Poudre 632-3532

Ellipses and Hyperbole

Exiting Word Perfect

BY AARON SHURE

The question seemed simple enough: "Replace document? (Y/N) N." I typed "Y" Then the computer replied with its usual green demeanor, "Are you sure? (Y/N) N." "Y," I typed, shifting my weight in confusion. Unfortunately, as I moved, my foot knocked out the plug of the machine next to me.

The girl at the machine didn't move at all, as her computer blinked off. She just stared, hardly breathing. I decided it would be better if I just minded my own business. My screen said, "Are you without a shred of doubt that you want to do this? (Y/N) N.

Yes, indubitably, I told the machine, cross my heart; if the universe suddenly became topsy turvy, casting all the laws of common sense into doubt, even then I would be sure of this single act of word processing.

"Ok, but don't say I didn't warn you. (Y/N) N," replied the screen. The girl next to me was quietly saying, "Twenty pages...twenty pages...Oh my God, twenty pages." My computer started to make a perpetual beeping noise, while it blinked on and off.

I decided it was time to call for a Computer Monitor. That's how I came to meet Sarah Netick, the best computer monitor ever to issue from the depths of the computer center, well versed in DOS, Word Perfect, PASCAL, and many other sacred tongues.

Sarah, has small arms that stick out of her torso, as if they started at the elbow. They end in spindly fingers that are highly developed for rapid key strokes. With these arms, her braces and her over upholstered bottom, she resembles a Tyrannosaurus Rex.

Walking over to me, she caught sight of a fly. With a flick of her embryonic arm, she grabbed it in mid-air and exclaimed, "that makes number five hundred and twenty-three in a row."

She leaned over my shoulder and looked at the screen. "The first thing people need to know about computers is that they are stupid. Dumb, dumb, dumb, these machines are stupid. I like to call them Dumb Boxes. All a DB knows how to do is what it is told. That's why they are such powerful tools. It looks to me like you have really confused this DB. Hee, hee, I love it when that happens."

Just then a skinny, one time shaven mop came into the room, his arms full of computer disks and printing paper. He asked, his voice cracking, "Is anyone going to be off their computer soon?"

"Just ignore him," Sarah said, "he's one of those Word Perfect junkies; they rub my disk the wrong way. It all starts out innocent enough: they are encouraged by a Prof to learn how to use WP, as a typing tool. Soon they start to lean on the speller disk too hard. They don't even know the other uses for a DB, but, after a while, they become so dependent they can't even write a word without a computer."

The junkie walked up to the mumbling girl whose computer I had unplugged, and he started to beg with her. "Oh please, just let me tell it the date. I'll just be a minute, I swear on a stack of diskettes. Just let me change the drive."

Sarah was trying to help un-confuse my computer, all the while enjoying how befuddled it was. She concluded (after catching fly number 524) that such a monumental error could only be entirely my fault. After all, how could a stupid machine be to blame for such an ingenious mistake.

"Most Word Perfect junkies obey the unwritten commandments of computer etiquette," explained Sarah. "They have laws like: if thou goest to dinner and leave thine disks in the machine, thy place at the computer shall be honored, for thou hast left thine disks for anyone to take revenge on thee, if they see thou hast gone to dinner and this makes them mad.

"But whomsoever taketh his disks, only leaving writing on the screen, he shalt be stricken with mildew. And when thou sitteth at a computer that is hooked to a printer you must move whensoever someone wishes to print, for those machines are holy and not to be coveted

"And for the reprobates who connive to save themselves a machine, either by making false "out of order" signs or putting the machine into an unnecessary looped program, so that others will be led astray—for these sinners is reserved a special fate:

"To suffer for your selfishness, Ye shall be forced to sit for eternity in a room with ten thousand dot-matrix printers all printing long documents with footnotes and running on quality print until thou art overcome by the unholy noise and made repentant."

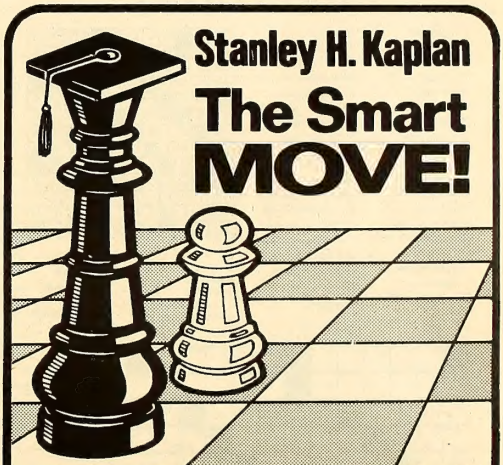
Just then, Sarah caught fly number 525, and declared my Dumb Box operational again. "Exit WP? (Y/N) N," it asked. The junkie was begging the girl with the dead computer if he could just adjust the brightness. I decided I very much did want to exit WP. Y.

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Don't most people do this while sitting on the toilet?

House of
YAKITORI
Japanese Restaurants
Every Tuesday
5 pm - 9 pm
ALL THE YAK
YOU CAN ATTACK
$6.30
on the #17 dinner
*not available on to go or delivery orders
YAKITORI
Also try our Sushi Bar
DOWNTOWN ONLY
Downtown
16 E. Bijou
578-0915
M-Thurs 11 am-3 pm 5-9 pm
Fri & Sat 11 am-3 pm 5-10pm

Stanley H. Kaplan
The Smart MOVE!



GMAT begin Nov. 16
Stanley H. KAPLAN Educational Center LTD.
CLASSES HELD AT DOWNTOWN RAINTREE INN I-25 & BIJOU
Call 761-8904 Now!

HOME FOR SALE, North end, classic 2-bed cottage, 2 blocks north of CC, $117,500; call 634-0223.

Alcohol/Drug Support Group—First meeting will take place Monday, November 10th (7-8 PM) Boettcher Basement. For more info call John R. at ext. 287 or Ted H. at extension 287. Strict confidentiality guaranteed.

TRAVEL PROMOTERS WANTED Earn HIGH COMMISSION and FREE TRIPS! Destination Travel is looking for individuals or organizations to market Spring Break trips. Call Steve at 759-1550.

TWO FULL, ONE-YEAR SCHOLARSHIPS to the University of Regensburg and University of Gottingen will be available to CC students in 1987/88. Recipients will be chosen on the basis of open competition and interviews. German proficiency at the level of GR 305 or better is a prerequisite. Deadline for applications is January 21, 1987. For more information, please see Professor Wishard in the German Department.

READING DISCUSSION Group of T.S. Eliot's Four Quartets—4:00 p.m., Shove Chapel Lounge, November 10.

MEDITATION—Shove Chapel, 8:00-8:30 a.m. Music, silence, mystical and/or other writings (enter by northeast door), November 11 and 13.

EMBODIMENT SERIES—Shove Chapel, 7:30 p.m. "World Hunger"—a presentation and discussion by David Ives, Director of Rastall Center and Assistant Dean of Students, November 11.

SHOVE COUNCIL MEETING—Shove Chapel Lounge, 12:00 noon, November 12.

ALL COLLEGE WORSHIP SERVICE, Shove Chapel, November 14.

RUNNING CLINIC, Dr. Lowew, Monday, November 10th, 3:30, Boettcher Basement, small classroom.

NEED STUDENT as occasional companion for 9 year old child. Must have references. $5 an hour. Call 591-1224.

IF YOU HAVE NOT picked up your 1985-86 Yearbook yet—please call Jane Patterson x222 or drop by Jackson House, Room 205 (evenings).

CC WOMEN'S SWIM TEAM'S SWIM FOR HEART. Briefly, it is a swim-a-thon to raise money for the American Heart Association. We are inviting clubs and organizations to get involved in this worthwhile and fun event. Swimmers simply collect sponsor pledges or donations for their swimming effort.

If you have any question, please contact Wendy Davis at x282 or the Women's Swim Coach, Joani Schofield at x494 or 578-5122. Entry forms are available at the pool, or at various front desks around campus (i.e. Dorms, El Pomar, etc.)

BEGINNERS AND INTERMEDIATE HATHA YOGA—This course includes physical postures, breathing and relaxation techniques, and introductory meditation.

The postures (asanas) stretch and strengthen the spine. The postures and breathing (pranayama) also regulate and purify the circulatory, digestive, endocrine, and nervous system, releasing physical toxins and mental tension.

Instructor Padma Wick. Classes meet at Boettcher Health Center, Wed., Nov. 19, Dec. 3, 10, 17, 7-9 p.m.

BIOLOGY SEMINARS:

November 11, Dr. S.C. Verma, Visiting Professor of Biology, from Department of Botany, Panjab University speaking on "Genetics of Sexual Incompatibility in the Family Cruciferae: The Newer Challenges."

RESEARCH ASSISTANT—Library and editing work, 12 to 15 hrs. per week, Nov. to Feb., work with Prof. Tom Cronin, Political Science Materials; qualifications: excellent student, research and editing abilities. $5/hour. Apply with letter of interest and resume, Box 6, Armstrong.

"TAKE THE SCARE OUT OF HERPES," Wed., Nov. 12th, 7:00 p.m. in Boettcher Health Center.

CC GERMAN SEMESTER 1987—The deadline for applying to the 1987 CC German Program in Luneburg is February 2. Brochures and applications are available from the German Department.

WINSTON...We love you...Your enthusiasm is catching...Your cheering at the Hockey Games is terrific...Its appreciated by everyone especially...Beth, Karen, and Ann.

ZEN SEMINAR on Thursday afternoon, November 13, Prof. Doug Fox, Prof. Carleton Gamer, and Prof. Jeff Noblett will hold a Zen Seminar. This seminar will focus on the theory of Zen, meditation, and "moving Zen," Zen in every day life. If anyone is interested in joining us, call Lisa at x329. There is a class size limit of 25. Everyone is expected to stay for the entire 2 hours, 3:30-5:30. Please, bring a pillow. This seminar is sponsored by A.S.I.A. and the East Asia house.

PIKE'S PEAK WEAVERS' GUILD will present the 11th Annual Fiber Arts Festival in November. Dates and times are as follows:

Gala Opening with Fashion Show of handwoven wearables and wine & cheese refreshments will be open to the public on Thursday, November 13, from 6-9 p.m. in the Music Room, upstairs in the Colorado Springs Fine Arts Center, 30 W. Dale, Colorado Springs. Admission to the Gala Evening will be $2.00. In the same location on Friday & Saturday, November 14 & 15, from 10 a.m.-5 p.m., and on Sunday, November 16 from 1:30-5 p.m., will be a public show and sale of handwoven wearables, home furnishings, art textiles and handmade Christmas decorations.

Note to all handweavers: Anyone interested in selling handwoven items at the sale should contact Jean Pollard, Festival Chairwoman, at 548-1992, mornings.

"ADULT CHILDREN OF ALCO ICS" will meet Wednesday, Nov Boettcher Basement from 1:30-3 small classroom. Any questions call

THE ROMANCE LANGUA DEPT. is now taking applications f 1987-88 program in Perpignan, F Applications are available a Humanities Secretarial Office, Arm 120, ext. 635.

LOSER WANTED—Need overweight people to try new herbal weight control programs as seen o No drugs. No exercise. Call Cliff 289

STUDY IN LONDON FLORENCE: The deadline applications for next semester's program has been extended to Nov 7. You can pick up application form Judy McClow, Palmer 213.

THE GERMAN FILM Schimmel (English subtitles) is showing Wed. 12th at 7:00 p.m. in Armstrong 35

YOU HAVE A CHANCE TO representatives from two of engineering schools that CC is asso with. Lloyd Tredwell, who is in cha transfer admissions at Rensselear here to meet with you on Monday, N at 1:30 in the Olin Lounge and Dean Howatt from the University of So California will be here on Tuesday, N again at 1:30 in the Olin Lounge.

LECTURE ON ACM COSTA RI Dr. Alonso Benavides, field director two ACM Costa Rica programs describe the programs, with slide Palmer Hall, Room 17, at 3:30 p Friday, Nov. 7. He will also be availa answer questions about the program further details, see Paul Kutsche, P Hall 11, ext. 359.

The Puzzle

ACROSS

1 Disconnected
6 Slides
11 Dirtied
12 Helping 14 Contain
15 Fiber plant
17 Teutonic deity
18 Possessive pronoun
19 Frequently
20 Diocese
21 Concerning
22 Assumed name
23 Dimensions
24 Recreation vehicle
26 Kind of cloth
27 Merry
28 Tolled
29 Drills
31 Bookkeeper's records
34 Imitated
35 Challenges
36 Printer's measure
37 Female ruff
38 "Lucky" number
39 Insect
40 Either's partner
41 Dinner course
42 Formal dance
43 Inborn
45 Egg dish
47 Painful spots
48 Took one's part

DOWN

1 Pilferer
2 Lubricates
3 Ancient
4 Compass point
5 Profited morally
6 Surfeits
7 Large oven
8 Cyprinoid fish
9 Roman gods
10 Violent expiration of breath
11 Blouse
13 Unskilled
16 Heavenly body
19 Spanish pots
20 Scorch
22 Was ill
23 Warbles
25 Concur
26 Burdened
28 Altar screen
29 Nobleman
30 Musical dramas
31 Volcanic emanation
32 Walked unsteadily
33 Small fish
35 Erases: printing
38 Rescue
39 Bundle
41 Title of respect
42 Article of furniture
44 As far as 46 Roman 1001

COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

© 1984 United Feature Syndicate

PIZZA SHUTTLE

No one makes pizza as fresh, as fast, as cheesy, or delivers it so fast (and free).

OPEN DAILY AT 11:00

578-8686

2573 Airport Road — FREE DELIVERY to South Central Colorado Springs INCLUDING Colorado College

390-4040

7070 S. Hwy. 85/87 Fountain — FREE DELIVERY to Ft. Carson, Security and Fountain

596-5272

4549 Templeton Gap Rd. — FREE DELIVERY to North Central Colorado Springs

THE "GEMINI" PROGRAM TWO PIZZAS FOR ONE LOW PRICE

Special May Expire Anyt

Two 10" Cheese Pizzas only $5.89
Two 14" Cheese Pizzas only $8.89

Two 10" Pizzas - $1.25 per item

Two 14" Pizzas - $1.49 per item

THE ORBITER
Pepperoni, Sausage, Green Peppers, Onions and Mushrooms (5 items for the price of 4)

INGREDIENTS
Green Pepper Rings
Fresh Sausage
Ham
Double Crust
Jalapenos
Onion Circles
Fresh Ground Beef
Pepperoni
Extra Cheese
Double Cheese (2 items)
Black Olives
Green Olives
Fresh Mushrooms
Anchovies
Pineapple

Single Pizza Prices :	12"	16"
Cheese	5.00	7.20
1 Topping	5.75	8.30
Additional Toppings	.75	1.40

16 Oz. Bottled Drinks

30 Minute Guarantee* *Road Conditions Permitting

FREE DELIVERY
ANYWHERE IN OUR SERVICE ZONES

OUR DRIVERS CARRY LESS THAN $20

SAVE $1 ON ANY 1 OR MORE ITEM PIZZA (12" OR 16" PIZZA)
PIZZA SHUTTLE FREE DELIVERY
Expires 12/31/86
One Coupon Per Order Not Good With Any Other Special
MF-1

FREE EXTRA CHEESE ON ANY LARGE PIZZA (16" PIZZA)
PIZZA SHUTTLE FREE DELIVERY
Expires 12/31/86
One Coupon Per Order Not Good With Any Other Special
MF-2

SAVE $2 ON ANY LARGE 4 OR MORE ITEM PIZZA (16" PIZZA)
PIZZA SHUTTLE FREE DELIVERY
Expires 12/31/86
One Coupon Per Order Not Good With Any Other Special
MF-3

30 MINUTE GUARANTEE
Your Pizza Delivered in 30 minutes or $3.00 OFF
(Within our 30 minute delivery zone)
Expires 12/31/86
One Coupon Per Order Road Conditions Permitting
LT-4

TAX NOT INCLUDED

CATALYST

Volume 20, No. 8 | Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado | 14 November 1986

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

SHANTY TOWN constructed to protest CC's link with companies doing business in South Africa. Organizers of the symbolic demonstration are seeking to draw attention to what they see as an immoral association between the college and the repressive regime. A demonstration featuring speeches, music, and poetry will be held today at 1 p.m. to coincide with a meeting of the Trustees.

On Labor And Corporate Power

BY CAROLINE BRYAN

Global corporations may soon be issuing decisions to governments if the trend of their increasing power continues. Gus Tyler, a lifetime member of the Ladies Garment Workers Union, addressed the CC community Wednesday evening with such words of caution.

He began his lecture by addressing the role of the labor movement in the shaping of today's society. He stressed the fact that free enterprise has not existed from the beginning of time, but rather it is a relatively recent invention. Wage labor is an invention of the capitalist society. The entrepreneur in the free enterprise system has the right to employ other people who work for wages or salaries.

Tyler believes that the labor movement has grown out of the intrinsic competition between capitalists in our society. The competitive nature of capitalism has forced managers to keep wages at a low level in an effort to maintain control of overhead costs. Because of this "iron law" of capitalism, as Tyler refers to it, the consumer market decreases because the surplus funds that are available to the consumer decrease. The inevitable result: depression. Production increases as the ability of the workers to consume remains at a fixed level.

To cope with the problems of poverty and the periodic breakdown of the system, labor unions were organized. The existence of labor unions brought about positive reform; the exploitation of the working classes was curbed and wages were raised; living standards were upgraded and a larger consumer market evolved. The economic system which had been severely damaged by the depression began to stabilize.

Tyler pointed out the political reforms that the labor movement generated. For the first time, there were specific controls in the form of child labor laws, minimum wage laws, and working condition laws that were imposed upon the capitalist corporations in an effort to minimize the hardships of the workforce.

The regulation of the workplace by the government did wonders for the workers and the economic health of the country, but, Tyler recognized, "posed problems for the capitalists who were only concerned with increasing profit." The corporations that were hit the hardest by the new labor reforms began to branch out of the United States, taking their technology to the more underdeveloped and economically weaker countries.

What had begun as an effort by the government to "control recurrent depressions . . . and balance consumption and production," Tyler asserted, had resulted in an effectual denouncement of American policy by the corporations. The corporations simply moved outside of the jurisdiction of the United States, and found the necessary labor for a fraction of its cost in the United States.

This "global corporation" trend, as Tyler refers to it, poses many new

Continued page 2

Conservatives On Campus

Organization Pursues Independent Course

BY TED CRAIG

A group of conservative students, determined to establish an alternative political voice from the right, have recently joined to form the information-oriented Colorado College Conservative Students. "What we want to do is encourage debate and discussion," stated Liz Cheney, one of the initiators of the organization, "that is our number one priority."

At present, the group's activities are centered on creating pamphlets and writing editorials (see "Opinions"). Gaining a CCCA charter is a primary near-term goal; such a charter would allow Colorado College Conservative Students to organize campus debates and forums, and eventually to bring in outside speakers.

Gaining funding from the CCCA is also a possibility, "Because CCCA currently funds groups such as ENACT, the Feminist Collective, and the Latin American Awareness Group, all of which recently protested Reagan's visit, we expect to have no problem obtaining similar funding," stated Cheney.

Although it remains a distant possibility, CCCS members expressed interest in some form of an alternative campus newspaper. Nationally, overtly conservative alternative papers have become a popular vehicle of right-leaning political groups. Regardless of the feasibility of such a project, group members intend to fully utilize less ambitious mediums to get their message across.

"Our aim," explained senior Corey Abel, "is to provide an alternative viewpoint to the most loudly espoused," that of the "activist left." Inger Thomsen, a new member of CCCS, expressed a similar goal: "To show an alternative viewpoint. People accept liberalism without knowing its tenets."

Rejecting College Republicans

Despite continuing concerns about funding, Colorado College Conservative Students decided earlier in the year to avoid association with College Republicans. That organization had earmarked up to $1,000 for a CC chapter. Essentially, the strings attached to membership (stuffing envelopes and washing cars for candidates) were unappealing to the students.

"College Republican's main focus is campaigns, as it should be," explained Cheney. "We found that the students' interests here are on more intellectual pursuits."

The negative impression left by a representative from a state-wide campaign also influenced the decision to remain independent. The student coordinator, independent of but supported by College Republicans, arrived uninvited at a CCCS meeting and attempted to close the doors on an open meeting.

In preserving their independent status, the conservative students hope to maintain a clear point of view untainted by the immediate concerns of this-or-that political campaign.

Life After Marcus

Three members of Colorado College Conservative Students—Tom Ori, Cheney and Abel—were also involved in last spring's briefly visible "Students for America," a group which included the vociferous Marcus Hartman. Present members of CCCS are quick to distance this year's program from the path followed by "Students For America," particularly the

Continued page 2

Women and Change in Peru

BY AKILILU DUNLAP

"The present situation in Peru is one of increasing political and economic polarization," said writer and sociologist Carol Andreas in her lecture, "Women, Popular Struggle and Human Rights in Peru Today." Sponsored by Latin America Awareness and The Feminist Collective, the professor of twenty years focussed her November 10 talk on current political movements of the South American country, specifically as they regard Peruvian women.

Andreas explained that Peru's political system, torn by extreme left and right interests, is overshadowed by a dark cloud of instability. And she added that the polarization of the economy is nearing completion with the growth of the lower class and the diminishing of the middle class. These two features were exhibited in the relationship she described between the men and women of that country.

The Sociology Professor explained that the women have maintained traditional and cultural values whereas the men have adopted Western comforts and ideals. Continuing, Andreas asserted that the "women are basically Indian and the men Spanish." She attributes this to the separate lives the two sexes lead. Because little opportunity exists for women in the city, they've remained in the high countries, existing as farmers in the Indian tradition. In this way, the women were protected against cultural invasion. Men, on the other hand, adapted well in the transition to Western life and managed to continue living in the city. However, with the decline of the economy, both city men and women are being forced to return to their farms. Of these numbers, women are

Continued page 3

Arts pull out section

Stupid Baby Tricks

See Page 7

Reproduced from 1930 "Tiger"

'87

BY ANITA WALLS

Hello, Seniors!! I hope your block is going well. Just think, block break is only a few days away.

The "mixer" at McAllister's Tavern earlier this month was lots of fun, and a big success. For those of you who missed it, we had free pizza, Polish hot dogs and, of course, bevies. But don't worry if you did miss it, we'll be having lots more Senior get-togethers in the upcoming months.

An announcement...To celebrate our graduation, only six months away, the Senior Class is selling t-shirts and buttons with our class logo on them. Now for those of you who don't know, our class logo is a big '87, similar to that at the top of this column. The square buttons have a deep purple '87 on a blue background. They will be on sale soon for a mere $2.50, and they'll last a lifetime.

The t-shirts are 100% cotton, ranging from sizes small to extra-large. They are white with five of the square logos across the chest. If you want a t-shirt, you need to order before Friday, December 15th (the second Friday of next block). To place an order, you need to contact one of the following people...

Jill Brasesco 576-1592
Sas Strum X223
Anita Walls 475-0639

We will be making ourselves as visible as possible. So don't hesitate to yell at us across campus, stop us in the library, or any place you happen to see us. We'll be carrying our receipt books with us everywhere.

To make it even more convenient for you to buy our t-shirts we are going to have a table set up in Tutt Library this coming Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, the 16th, 17th and 18th. Two Senior Class representatives will be there from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. on all three days.

The t-shirts will be selling for $7.50 apiece, and will be available in mid-February. Being the young, questioning adults that you are, you may be asking, "So what's the rush?!" Here's the scoop...Pre-sales are necessary now if our order is to be delivered by mid-February. By ordering now you assure yourself of receiving a t-shirt. If you wait, we can't promise that there will be enough to go around, and you may be one of the unlucky seniors not to get a t-shirt. Buy one for you and your roommate. Give them away as Christmas presents.

Photo of the Week

PHOTO BY

Cheney to Deliver Commencement Address

BY ANITA WALLS

Officials at Colorado College have announced that Lynne Vincent Cheney will speak at C.C.'s commencement ceremony, Monday, June 1st of 1987. However, the title of her speech has yet to be released.

Cheney is a 1963 graduate of Colorado College. She is married to U.S. Wyoming Representative Richard Cheney, and the mother of two daughters, Elizabeth and Mary Claire.

Cheney's most recent accomplishment is to head the National Endowment for the Humanities, an agency of the Federal government. She was nominated to the position by President Reagan in March, and confirmed by the Senate early this summer. The NEH provides support to such fields of study as history, language, philosophy and literature by granting money to scholars and educational institutions. Cheney occupies the position once held by William Bennett, now Secretary of Education. She is the first woman ever to chair the 250-person agency.

In the past, freelance writing has been the only way to satisfy Cheney's love for the humanities. She wrote a monthly column for the Washingtonian, in addition to being the senior editor. Cheney has also written for American Heritage and Smithsonian.

Cheney is the author of two novels, Executive Privilege and Sisters. She teamed up with her husband, Richard, to co-author Kings of the Hill, a history of the House of Representatives.

Cheney first arrived in Washington, D.C. in 1970 with aspirations of teaching. However, that city, as was most of the nation, was experiencing a teacher glut during that time. But Cheney did not give up her dream. Since then, she has taught at the University of Wyoming, George Washington University and Northern Virginia Community College.

This current political appointment is not the first for Lynne Cheney. In 1985 President Reagan appointed her to the Commission on the Bicentennial of the United States Constitution.

Undoubtedly, Lynne Cheney has made her mark in Washington and across the nation.

Conservatives continued

the controversial, strongly wor... pamphleteering of the past.

"We want to get away from the b... editorial approach and adopt a n... intellectual framework," said Abel. A... if the group missed Marcus' presence, h... replied "We miss his energy..."

Colorado College Conservative Stud... have begun their efforts at a time of g... uncertainty for student conservat... Although national membership... College Republicans has reached a... time high and conservative newspa... are on the rise, the results from the ... mid-term elections displayed a s... downturn in student support ... Republican candidates. Young voters ... 1986 chose Democrats over Republic... by a close margin, a fact important to... nation's future political alignment.

Colorado College Conservat... Students, however, have not focu... explicitly on elections. Instead they hop... voice what they see as an often overlo... conservative viewpoint. Students of ... conservative persuasion or those sim... interested in learning about various iss... should contact Tom Ori, Corey Abel or ... Cheney.

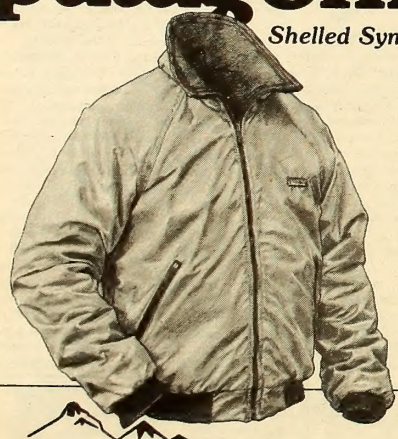
Tyler continued

problems for the U.S. economy and ... worldwide economy. Tyler emphas... three potentially volatile areas. First ... the area of relations between the gl... corporation and the government; T... strongly believes in the possibilit... denationalized corporations which w... belong to no country, and therefore w... not be bound by any laws. In the even... such developments, the corporate mac... would in essence surpass the bureaucr... machine in power.

Second, Tyler warned of the increa... use of "robotization" in the areas ... production and services. "Be aware ... forewarned," of the potential of this typ... mechanization." Because robotization ... greatly increase the capitalists' power ... labor (power they will have to employ ... to the "iron law"), the potential for soc... disruption is significant.

Finally, Tyler restated his convict... that this "polarization" of corporation... countries with no labor laws and no u... will not only continue, but will increa... rapidly as the labor laws in the Uni... States become stricter. With producti... operating at such an efficient level, T... poses a query: "Who will consume?"

patagonia®
Shelled Synchilla®



Mountain Chalet
CC's Outdoor Connection
266 North Tejon 633-0732
Downtown

Peru continued

not only the majority, but the first to make the move as well. Andreas claims this difference of struggle was the catalyst to the popular feminism existing in Peru today.

The way of these separate cultures has created a unique pattern in marital relationships. Andreas illustrated the tendency for women to "come down" to the towns during the harvest seasons. She added that the men periodically recess their work schedule to visit their families and engage in husbandry.

Andreas stated that the women have been successful in undermining the political leverage with which the government manipulated the greater population, namely the poor. Apparently, these women set up "soup kitchens," upsetting th system of food allocation by the government. She explained that the government excercised political control through the food relief. However, with the challenge and success of the women, the government has been forced to compete and set up its own soup kitchens. This is working to the advantage of the people, she pointed out.

The Sociology professor described the revolutionary zeal spreading among the women. A move to reclaim the economic and political power practiced by women before the Spanish Conquest is in strong force. Coinciding with this campaign is the women's encouragement of the men to regain traditional values and return to their communities. "Basically, the men have been mediators between women and government exercised political control Andreas explained that there has been little improvement since the change from military to civilian control in 1980. Making example of the two dissolved peace committees appointed by incumbent president Allen Garcia, she described the frustrations that exist within the ruling party. According to Andreas, members of the first committee resigned when Garcia did little to work with the government's opposition to rectify popular unrest. Feeling manipulated and frustrated by the government's planning of the prison massacre of August 1986, in which 300 men were shot to death, the second committee team also resigned its post, she continued. "The turning point is in the turn-out of Garcias meeting with these [opposition] groups," predicted Andreas. She said that Garcia is threatened by a military coup from Peru's ultra-right wing.

Professor Andreas earned her doctorate in Sociology. She taught Asian studies for several years in Pakistan. After public interest shifted to South American affairs, Andreas furthered her education in this area. Soon afterwards, she began a three-year teaching position at the University of Peru in Lima. For years she lived in the Indian communities and became active in various causes. Several books are the product of these experiences. They are: When Women Rebel, Nothing Is As It Should Be and her latest book, Women, Rebellion and Colonization.

Science Facility Construction Delayed

BY DAVID A. FITZGERALD

Students may expect the disruptions to begin on the east side of campus this month when construction begins on the Olin science addition. The construction was scheduled to begin in October, yet unanticipated delays were imposed by the local city authorities. The Colorado Springs city planning and approval committees retarded progress on the construction by refusing to grant building permits.

The planning and approval committees refused to grant a building permit when it was discovered that the proposed addition to the science building violated zoning laws. The proposed observatory on the top floor of the building exceeded the zoned limit on allowable building heights by 1½ feet. A hearing was set up to propose a zoning variance which would allow the observatory and building height to remain as proposed.

The zoning variance was approved at the hearing. The committees, however, would not start to process the permit proceedings until the mandated fifteen days had elapsed in which any individual who opposed the zoning variance could come forward to protest it. After clarifications in the site development plan, the city granted the proper building permits so that construction could begin, one month late.

The delay in starting construction will not affect the completion date in May of 1988. While the permits were tied up in the city committees the architects and contractors have worked on details associated with the construction. The contractors expect to start the relocation process for the sewer and gas lines beneath San Rafael, and the fence around the construction site will have been completed earlier this week.

The firm responsible for erecting the new addition, Gerald Phipps contractors,

Continued page 15

Cutler Board is currently accepting applications for Catalyst Editor and Disparaging Eye Editor for the Spring semester 1987.

Applications are available at the Student Center on Nevada.
Application deadline is November 19.

DOMINO'S PIZZA

TWO 12" ONE TOPPING PIZZAS FOR $9.14

(TAX NOT INCLUDED)
Please see below for other selections.

Limited Delivery Area
Our drivers carry less than $20

AVOID THE NOID
CALL DOMINO'S PIZZA

30 minute guarantee

If your pizza does not arrive within 30 minutes, present this coupon to the driver for $3.00 off your order.
One coupon per pizza.

Fast, Free Delivery
Good at listed locations.

One of the greatest offers ever from Domino's Pizza—two 12" pizzas for the price of a large! Twice the pizza for one low price!

For a limited time, order any two 12" pizzas (they don't have to be the same!), and you'll get them for the price of one 16". The price will be determined by the pizza with the most toppings.

Two 12" pizzas will only cost you:

Superb cheese	$7.95
1 topping	$9.14
2 toppings	$10.33
3 toppings	$11.52
4 toppings	$12.71
5 toppings	$13.90
6 toppings	$15.09

Twice the pizza for one low price—two 12" pizzas for the price of a large!
And, hot to your door in 30 minute or less, GUARANTEED!

Offer expires Nov. 21, 1986.

635-1511

DOMINO'S PIZZA DELIVERS® FREE.

All Pizzas Include Our Special Blend of Sauce and 100% Real Cheese.

Our Superb Cheese Pizza
12" Cheese $5.65
16" Cheese $7.95

Additional Items
Pepperoni, Mushrooms, Ham, Onions, Green Peppers, Black Olives, Pineapple, Sausage, Ground Beef, Jalapeno Peppers,
Extra Cheese (1 item)
Double Cheese (2 items)
Thick Crust, Extra Sauce
Each Item
12" item $ .79
16" item $1.19

Ask about our Group Discount (on 5 or more pizza orders).

We accept checks.

Prices do not include tax. Our drivers carry less than $20.00.

Open for Lunch Every Day
11 am - 12 am Sun.-Thurs.
11 am - 1 am Fri.-Sat.

Fijis Sponsor Date Rape Discussion

BY JERREL ARMSTRONG

Paul Jones, assistant director of residential life, began the Fiji fireside chat series Wednesday night with a discussion on date rape. Date rape, until recently, has not been legally recognized as a crime, and consequently many date rape violations have not been reported.

Date rape is defined as "sexual assault committed by someone the victim knows." Paul Jones said that in order for an assault to be considered a date rape, any of the following conditions must exist: physical domination of the offender, physical helplessness of the victim, coercion by threat, coercion through the use of intoxicating substances which impair the victim's ability to remain coherent and rational, threat of retaliation, and false imprisonment.

Some reasons for date rape, according to Paul Jones, are rooted in men's "sex role stereotypes" which create false impressions that men are the aggressors and women the passive acceptors. He also highlighted a lack of communication which results in further tainted notions of the women's role during sex.

He also states that Colorado Springs has the third largest rape rate in the country, which he sees as having good and bad implications. Obviously, the badl implications are that more women are being raped in Colorado Springs than nearly anywhere else in the United States. According to Jones this might not necessarily be the case. It may very well be that more women report rape in Colorado Springs than anywhere else in the United States. He associates this report rate with a high degree of women's awareness, as well as the efficiency within the investigative department of Colorado Springs.

Date rape "is less likely to be reported than rape by a stranger," states Jones. He cites a survey conducted at midwestern colleges, which asked women the question, "Were you a victim of sexual violence in the last year?" 80% of the women said they were victims of sexual violence. 20% of them felt they had intercourse against their will. 3% felt they had been raped. But the devastating statistic for Jones is that of all these instances of sexual violence, only one had reported it to the authorities.

Paul Jones feels that date rape can be prevented through communication and the abandonment of the "sexual stereotypes" men have. The responsibility, according to Jones, lies with both the male and the female. Even though a woman might dress "sexy" or decides at the last possible moment that she is not interested in sex, it must be understood that the woman always reserves the right to say "no" regardless of any previous circumstance.

A NOSTALGIC BOUTIQUE
Antique Costume Jewelry
Equisite Clothing
Unique & Fun Accessories
126 N. Nevada Ave.
636-9640
Use this for 10% off

The Stagecoach Inn invites you to join us for a traditional Thanksgiving Dinner noon - 8:00 p.m.

MENU

Salted Mixed Nuts - Stuffed Green Olives - Citrus Cup, Mint and Cherry Garnish

CHOICE OF

Roast Turkey with Herb Stuffing, Giblet Gravy and Cranberry Sauce
- OR -
Roast Prime Rib of Beef Au Jus with Yorkshire Pudding
- OR -
Fresh Rocky Mountain Trout Amandine

Buttermilk Biscuits with Cherry Preserves
Whipped Potatoes — Lemon Peas
Homemade Pumpkin Pie — Coffee, Brewed Decaffinated Coffee or Tea

RESERVATIONS 685-9335

News Briefs

College Awaits Baca Decision

"We've given it our best shot. We've done everything we could now we're waiting for Aspen," said Gresham Riley about CC's acquisition of the Baca Grande Resort.

CC is negotiating with the Aspen institute to use their resort facilities near Crestone, Colorado, 4 hours south of Colorado Springs.

For a remittance of $1 the Aspen Institute will allow CC to use the property for 3 years with an option to buy.

CC has been trying to negotiate for two additional town-houses deemed necessary if the center is to be usable. Riley believes if the contract is signed; classes could begin to take advantage of the facility as early as block 5.

New Public Relations Director

Combine 18 years of journalistic experience and an intense belief in the quality of Colorado College as an academic institution and you have Joe Barber, the college's new Public Relations Director.

Barber's most recent employment was as a columnist for The Gazette Telegraph. He began work at The Gazette as a City Editor and by the end of his nine years he was a columnist. While working in Colorado Springs, he developed an admiration for CC. "I took the job," he says, "because I liked the idea of working with an institution and wanted to add to its productivity."

Barber's job entails looking for stories on campus and publicizing them to the local as well as the national newspaper, television, and radio stations. "We get calls from around the nation asking for specialists in certain areas and we try to match them with people on our campus," said Barber.

"I am still learning the ropes and doing a lot of reading," he admits, but he has plans to create a media guide for the campus in order to help out reporters who might be covering the CC beat for the first time.

Distinguished Investor

Marc Haas, President of American Diversified Enterprises, a private investment firm in New York City will be speaking on Tuesday, Nov. 18th from 1:30 to 3 p.m. in Armstrong 300. With over 50 years of successful investment experience, Mr. Haas will discuss the general financial world, a career in Investment Banking, and how to enter into this exciting field.

Come and taste test Dan K. Weiskopf III and Wayne D. Rudner I, first ever cooking marathon. Sure to tickle the taste buds. Oh, yes avoid the SAGA rush.

Investments Club

Hub Radio Ban Sparks Protest

The once quiet Hub is caught up in a noisy dispute.

Complaints about the noise from employee radio forced Larry Stahlberg, Campus Food Service Director, to ban use of the radio in the Hub.

"There is no official policy about employee radios; and in the absence of clear programming policy, I made a decision," states Stahlberg who went on to explain that radios are tolerated to lesser greater degrees depending on the location. Radios are not allowed in areas such as serving lines where the public is present. "I received a complaint through Tom Winslow's (vice president) office," said Stahlberg, "and made the decision to get rid of the radio."

Students angered by the action joined in a show of solidarity with Hub employees by adding over 100 names to a petition protesting the action. Stahlberg said he saw the petition, but it has never come to his office.

Stahlberg emphasizes that this decision in no way precludes music in the public areas of the Hub. In fact, he says he would be more than happy to see the Hub be used for whatever type of programming meets student's needs, i.e. dances, etc.

Because of the campus refurbishing there is no Benny's, and the Hub has had to replace some of the programs offered by Benny's such as movie nights. The Hub is anticipating it's role as surrogate Benny's and quiet zone, has made a policy of no music or television before two o'clock in the afternoon.

In addition, the state has approved the transfer of the 3.2 liquor license and the Hub will soon have beer.

Trustees Debate Eight Block Proposal

The Eight Block Proposal as passed by the faculty in a special session will go to the College Board of Trustees possibly for the final word.

The trustees will discuss the proposal November 14 and 15 at the year's first quarterly meeting.

"The trustees can either approve the plan outright, reject the plan outright, or take other action such as formulating a list of questions and sending it to the faculty," said Gresham Riley.

Riley is behind the plan and notes that in his sixteen years of faculty conflicts he has rarely seen such an overwhelming decisive faculty vote (82-30-2).

He explains this is basically the same faculty that made the block plan work and believes they can make the Eight Block Plan work.

Hair Designers for Men & Women

Style cuts, Cellophanes,
Perms & Color.
Nexus, Redken, and Tri products available for sale.
Stop in or make your appointment:
827 N. Tejon at Cache La Poudre 632-3532

Ft. Carson: German P.O.W. Camp 1942-45

BY ALEC REKOW

Too many U.S. citizens back in the 40's, World War II may have seemed strangely remote as fighting raged in distant lands. Buffered by vast oceans, American domestic sacrifices remained relatively light compared to those of civilians struggling in shelled cities or occupied countries. The introduction of over 400,000 German prisoners of war (P.O.W.'s) to camps throughout the United States however, afforded many American civilians their only direct contact with enemy soldiers. 9,000 of these enemy soldiers were housed within Camp Carson's (later Fort Carson) compound just south of Colorado Springs.

German Professor Horst Richardson is currently investigating P.O.W. experiences in Camp Carson after reading former CC Professor Ernst Lothar's novel, The Prisoner, a fictional account of one soldier's life in an American prison camp. The Prisoner follows a young Austrian soldier, Tony Fritsch, as he renounces his Nazi beliefs during his P.O.W. experience. When the Nazi hierarchy which rules within the prison compound learns of his change of heart, it charges Fritsch with treason against the Fatherland and condemns him to death in a secret Nazi court session disguised as a church service. Lothar developed the novel's framework around Camp Carson prison life that he observed while teaching fine arts and drama at CC during the war years.

Within U.S. prison camps, Nazi officers propogated their beliefs and tormented those prisoners with anti-Nazi sympathies by limiting canteen access, ridiculing, establishing Kangaroo camps like the one in The Prisoner, and using physical violence. A January 17, 1945 Gazette Telegraph article reports "six German P.O.W.'s have been slain and two others forced by fellow P.O.W.'s to take their own lives...all were accused of turning traitor against Germany by giving information to American officials and expressing anti-Nazi views."

After reading The Prisoner, Professor Richardson grew especially interested in the conflict that arose between the U.S. Army's attempts to re-educate German prisoners and the ardent Nazi officers' struggle to keep soldiers dedicated to the Nazi cause. Richardson says: "I want to see if the story (The prisoner) potentially could have happened at Camp Carson."

'Their attitude was like that of any other bunch of young men taken from their homes, kicked around in the army while seeing many of their friends killed...they wanted to go home.'

Many of the common prisoners who may have suffered at the Nazi's hands wer captured late in the war as allied forces pushed through Italy into Southern France. Many of these Germans had become disillusioned with the war and Nazism. This disillusionment contrasted with most of the P.O.W. officers' attitudes. As former CC student Pam Webber states in her 1982 History Thesis, German Prisoners of War in Colorado During World War II, "many of the officers captured believed the Nazi cause would triumph and without question in their minds their period of confinement would be ended." Many of these officers had served in Rommel's Afrika Korps which were captured when Montgomery and Eisenhower's Allied forces swept across Northern Africa in the summer of 1942. The capture of prisoners en masse for the first time during the war presented a new problem for the Allied command: Where would they keep so many dangerous prisoners?

Decisions were made to relocate the former Afrika Korp members to the United States. The U.S. Army hoped to install these P.O.W.'s into the agricultural work force whose ranks had thinned due to the American war draft. After ferrying the P.O.W.'s across the Atlantic, the U.S. Army screened the prisoners in order to evaluate individual talent and Nazi intensity. "Basically, the more hardcore the Nazi, the further west he was taken...the toughest ending up in Arizona, picking crops," says Richardson.

The Colorado P.O.W.'s spent much of the war working the eastern plains' sugarbeet fields and the San Luis Valley's potato farms. During the harvest seasons, they moved from their Camp Carson barracks to work for farmers. Although guards sometimes accompanied the P.O.W.'s, usually the prisoners were allowed to work under their own cognizance. "The almost total inacessibility of the country and the double barriers of language and appearance among a largely Spanish speaking population, where a fair skinned German was a rarity, discouraged escape attempts." Some prisoners, however, tried to escape. Most were caught within several miles of camp, although one was reported to have reached St. Louis, several others the Mexican border, before being recaptured.

In order to keep the P.O.W.'s busy, the U.S. Army encouraged recreation and education programs at Camp Carson. A happier prisoner, they reasoned, wouldn't plot to escape. Sports, such as soccer and football were introduced. The prisoners produced dramatic works by Shakespeare and Goethe. Many prisoners participated in chess and music. In a woodshop they built furniture for their barracks.

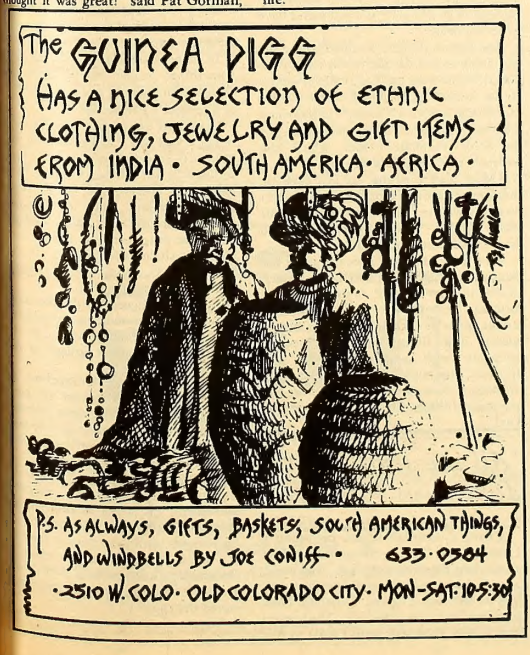
The Camp Carson staff invited CC professors to help assist the re-education program. Professors George Anderson and Frank Krutzke met with P.O.W. teachers in Coburn Library (Armstrong Hall stands in its place) with armed soldiers standing guard outside their meeting room. Krutzke remembers that CC donated over 1,000 books to the prison library. Prisoners earned high school diplomas through courses in English, technical drawing, Mathematics, radio, Shorthand, Geology, American History, and German History. For Krutzke's war efforts, the Camp Carson staff rewarded him with free bus tokens within the Colorado Springs area.

In the war's final days, most P.O.W.'s worked in relative comfort while Allied forces smashed through the Third Reich's defenses. Alton Waters, a Monte Vista farmer, reported that: "Their attitude (was) like any other bunch of young men taken from their homes, kicked around in the army while seeing many of their friends killed...they wanted to go home."

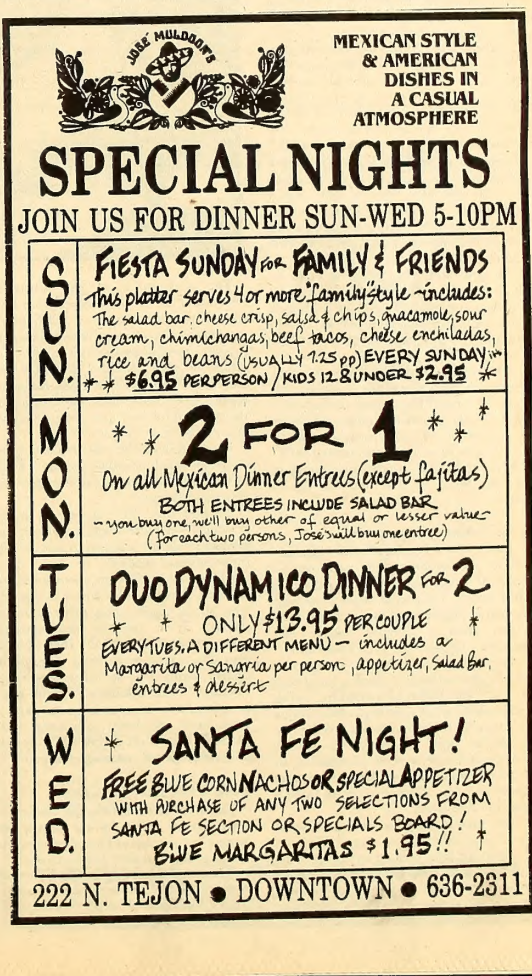
Greek Update

Last Thursday, November 6th, the Beta Theta Pi Fraternity threw a Pub Club of a different sort. In honor of National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week, the Betas held an ice cream social that was a great success. Serving Pepsi and ice cream that was graciously donated by the Colorado Creamery in Old Colorado City, people packed their cones and the dance floor to the sounds of "The Leeches." The social soon turned into a wild night of dancing and alcohol-free partying. "I thought it was great!" said Pat Gorman, President of the Beta House. "Often when we run out of beer, everybody leaves. This time we didn't serve beer and people came in droves. We were glad to be a part of Alcohol Awareness Week."

In other Beta service news, our 1000th can of food was delivered to the Big Mountain Reservation. A different shipment will be underway later this week to the Bijou Soup Kitchen. On another note, the Annual Beta Blood Drive is coming December 8th to the 11th. In the holiday spirits, PLEASE GIVE the gift of life.



The GUINEA PIGG
HAS A NICE SELECTION OF ETHNIC CLOTHING, JEWELRY AND GIFT ITEMS FROM INDIA • SOUTH AMERICA • AFRICA •
P.S. AS ALWAYS, GIFTS, BASKETS, SOUTH AMERICAN THINGS, AND WINDBELLS BY JOE CONISS • 633-0504
• 2510 W. COLO. • OLD COLORADO CITY • MON-SAT: 10-5:30



JOSE' MULDOON'S
MEXICAN STYLE & AMERICAN DISHES IN A CASUAL ATMOSPHERE
SPECIAL NIGHTS
JOIN US FOR DINNER SUN-WED 5-10PM
SUN.
FIESTA SUNDAY FOR FAMILY & FRIENDS
This platter serves 4 or more "family style" -includes: The salad bar, cheese crisp, salsa & chips, guacamole, sour cream, chimichangas, beef tacos, cheese enchiladas, rice and beans (USUALLY 7.25 pp) EVERY SUNDAY
$6.95 PER PERSON / KIDS 12 & UNDER $2.95
MON.
2 FOR 1
On all Mexican Dinner Entrees (except fajitas)
BOTH ENTREES INCLUDE SALAD BAR
- you buy one, we'll buy other of equal or lesser value (For each two persons, José will buy one entree)
TUES.
DUO DYNAMICO DINNER FOR 2
ONLY $13.95 PER COUPLE
EVERY TUES. A DIFFERENT MENU - includes a Margarita or Sangria per person, appetizer, Salad Bar, entrees & dessert
WED.
SANTA FE NIGHT!
FREE BLUE CORN NACHOS OR SPECIAL APPETIZER WITH PURCHASE OF ANY TWO SELECTIONS FROM SANTA FE SECTION OR SPECIALS BOARD!
BLUE MARGARITAS $1.95!!
222 N. TEJON • DOWNTOWN • 636-2311

Let There Be Light

CC: A religious revival?

BY PAT CHISHOLM

Is there a 'religious revival?' If so, is CC in on it? Abroad last year, one of my biggest impressions of the U.S. looking at it from the outside was a trend toward religious fundamentalism, especially with the new "traditional American values" thing of the Reagan era. Plus, I seem to have encountered more born again Christians on campus since being back. Then maybe that's just coincidence.

Anyway, to try to get a better picture I went around asking some people. Here's what I found.

It's Not Sociological—It's God

Senior Scott Thomas calls himself a Christian, but is non-denominational. "I sort of spurn denominations. I try to stay away from emphasizing the division within the church."

At his church, A Church Alive, a normal service begins with a half hour of praise and worship, singing, clapping hands, shouting, dancing, "and making joyful noise unto the Lord," after which the pastor delivers a message on a particular aspect of the scriptures. "It's a very pure and simple praise and worship."

Thomas believes there is a surge in spiritual activity within and outside the church. He does not attribute this to a sociological pattern, but to God himself. "I believe the surge is a move of God to move against a lot of corrupt and decaying spiritual elements on our society." He adds "even on campus here, there is a coming together of the body of Christ, and that's what the Church is."

He describes himself as a born again Christian. "Being born again means that you are born of the Spirit of God," which is different from natural birth. "The birth of the Spirit of God occurs when you declare faith in Christ as Lord and Savior, not only of all the world but also of your own life."

Concerning the Religious Right (i.e. the Moral Majority, Pat Robertson, etc.) which is often associated with the Born Again movement, Thomas is skeptical of its stress on politics. "When you start getting involved in foreign policy, that's beyond the realm."

"I agree with (the Religious Right's) decisions on a lot of ethics (such as abortion and pornography) but I disagree with their involvement in politics. I don't think that is doing the work of the Church."

Thomas is actively involved in religious groups on campus, not only in Seekers and Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship (IVCF)—the two major groups, but also in a number of informal discussion groups which he believes are on the increase at CC. These groups are "another manifestation of the Spirit of God moving us all together."

Is the Religious Right right?

Junior Todd Breyfogle, who organizes IVCF, also believes there is a rise in spiritual activity on campuses and across the country, "but people might be moving toward a religious tradition or framework rather than a dynamic (active and personal) relationship with Jesus Christ."

Breyfogle gives his reasons for this rise in religious activity. "I think a lot of that might be disenchantment with materialistic society, perhaps a loss of hope in where we think civilization is going. On a deeper level I think it's just a manifestation of a need inherent to all human beings for some kind of spiritual outlet to God. I think people are finding that in Christianity."

Are there societal as well as personal benefits in this religious surge? "This is a complicated issue because on the one hand you have groups like the Catholic Workers Movement which are very much oriented toward social concern." On the other hand there is the Religious Right.

"I think this (religious) movement, if it is indeed as widespread as people say it is, is fairly evenly divided between the Christianity which is very socially involved in meeting human needs, and the Religious Right which is very much more politically oriented."

"I think the Religious Right is harming

'Most people fail to realize how radical Jesus' teachings really are."

democracy and Christianity alike." He explains that because the Religious Right is so vocal and visible, it tends to overshadow the socially liberal Christian movements. It infringes upon the separation of Church and State, and "just plain gives Christianity a bad image. I think they've strayed too far from the teachings of Christ."

Breyfogle adds that the Religious Right considers it God's will that the United States carry out a program which he considers "is not scriptural but totally absurd."

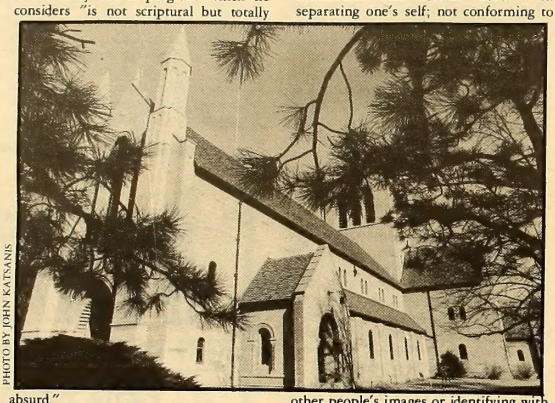


PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

The program is to pass Christian responsibilities off to public officials such that "it's no longer a Christian's responsibility to take care of a poor person, to spread the Gospel, or to instill Christian values in their children. It's now the function of the state, and (the Religious Right) would like it to be the function of the state. I think that is for obvious reasons detrimental to democracy."

His concern on the other hand with the Christian social movement is that it tends to let the social concerns overshadow the spiritual concerns.

Bringing out "the skeptic in him," Breyfogle is not sure whether the 'religious revival' is simply a return to tradition or actual spiritual renewal.

"There is a big difference between actual numbers of people who believe in God and who go to church than those who are actually in a day to day spiritual relationship with God that Christ demands. I tend to be fairly skeptical of figures saying that so many people are Christian." He concludes, "I think most people have misconceptions about Christianity and don't really know what the Bible says. Most people fail to realize how radical Jesus' teachings really are."

From Wildlife to Christianity

Junior Valerie Stambaugh became a Christian last spring, now a "totally new person" in contrast to a lot of partying and an occasional Greatful Dead concert.

Though she grew up having a devoutly religious mother, she never was a Christian herself for fear of what friends would think.

In boarding school, many of Valerie's hall-mates became Christians, so she started going to church with them. Word of this however reached other friends not at her school, and they reacted with skeptical surprise. Valerie then backed away from Christianity.

She started college at Emory, and coincidentally one of her Christian hall-mates from boarding school was also there. Valerie started to attend a Christian group's meetings with her, but her heart was not in it. "I would play Christian with her but I wasn't." She was just a "typical hypocritical Christian."

After that she increasingly hung out with (Greatful) Deadheads. She also had a love for nature and creation, but "worshiped the creation more than the Creator."

Her experiences at "materialistic" Emory and with "the Dead" began to be "empty. Really, really empty."

She transferred to CC where she continued to party some, but again realized the emptiness of it all. The last time she did "ecstasy" (a drug), her high was "so empty," that she said to herself "forget it—this is wrong."

In March, a friend persuaded her to attend a Seekers meeting, and a retreat thereafter. The retreat dealt with separating one's self; not conforming to other people's images or identifying with materialistic things. "I really wanted to believe in all this stuff, but just didn't have it in my heart."

She then walked into a field where she sat down and cried. She finally exclaimed, "God, if You want me You're going to have to do something." Though her heart was not changed with a "boosh!" or lightning bolt from Heaven, "little miracles" began to occur thereafter from which she ardently started to believe.

"More than anything, He just gave me this great peace and a lot of joy and I wasn't lonely anymore." Further, "all the stuff that I've done—where I've screwed up and hurt people...was forgiven."

This glory of God manifested itself last Sunday at Valerie's church, A Church Alive, in the form of faith healing. A woman "sent by the Lord" performed minor miracles including curing a cancer victim and filling seven cavities of someone with apparently poor oral hygiene. The minute after he was healed, witnesses confirmed seven new silver and porcelain fillings. "It wasn't her—it was God."

'All the stuff I've done...was forgiven.'

Valerie's downfall before becoming a Christian was "loving the praises of men more than the praises of God," and being afraid of what people would say had they known she was a devout Christian. Now however, such is not the case. "The bottom line is this: God sent Jesus Christ to this world so that everybody could be from sin because He loves us and want us to perish. And it's true."

From Christianity to Apostasy

Senior Steve Hart was a Chri "nearly a fundamentalist," but a few ago encountered problems Christianity. He now calls himse agnostic, but is "still searching thinking about the ideas of Christi

He sees two main problems com people and religion: first, that of who consider religion irrelevant thinks all people have some rel inclination in the sense that everyone degree questions the meaning of li purpose, and why all must die.

"These are basic questions

'Just a blind acceptance faith without thinking about the contering arguments is very shall everybody asks, and for someone 'I'm not a religious person, I don't thinking about that,' I think just something that everyone is concerned about." He adds that makes one less aware of his culture considering a belief system which ha a major influence in our society.

Another problem Hart enco concerns devoutly religious people blindly accept their faith, wit questioning or understanding it.

"I highly respect a person wh questions and has dealt with some arguments critics make against their but still holds their belief to be str However, "just a blind acceptance of without thinking about the count arguments is very shallow."

One of Hart's problems Christianity that induced him to becom "apostate"...was that Christianity itself as exclusive in that a person c believe in another faith to gain salva The Bible clearly states this, he says

"Here is the question I pos Christianity: What about the good p who is very philanthropic, very altru does good for his community and profound influence on the world, but atheist; what happens to him? Does to Hell?" Hart has not yet found adequate response.

In conclusion, Hart says religio something people should more discuss, think about, and argue about.

A Professor's Perspective

Compared to twenty years ago religion Prof. Joe Pickle came to CC more CC students seem to be attend services or off-campus religious gro He guesses however that this number slightly fallen since the religi movement of the early 1970's which out of the drug culture of the late Most CC students he says are "relati disenganged" from religion—co from non-devout families.

Then, these figures are difficult to "Some of the new religious groups are private and personal and don't expression in outside groups or activities."

He thinks the Evangelical Fundamentalist movements are no strong at CC than elsewhere. More the Religious Right movement he s more a "media production" than an growth in numbers of followers.

"While (the Jerry Falwell, Robertson, etc.) groups are not a negli movement, ...it is not as alarming large as either its opponents or proponents want us to think. It essenti is a media phenomenon." He adds th often more a "construction" rather than actual reflection of social moveme across the country.

Concerning his religion clas

Continued page

Wayne D. Rudner: The Voice of the Future

BY LIZ CHENEY

Get to know Wayne. Follow his flashes of brilliance from a dorm room at CC to Boston, Baltimore, Pittsburgh, New York City, Miami...and around the world. Don't be overwhelmed by his entrepreneurial and campaign successes. Above all, don't forget that behind the smooth operator, the human machine of technical efficiency, there lies a man as easy going and likeable as any of us.

These are tips condensed from the recently compiled "Wayne D. Rudner- Voice of the Future" promotional packet. Yes—believe it or not—Wayne is still with us. As our story closed last year, Wayne had collected 677 student signatures (1/3 of the campus) in the span of two hours, had appeared on KKTV, in the Gazette Telegraph and Rocky Montain News, conducted various interviews and was making plans for a "Mock David Letterman Show" at Chapel Hills Mall. Although the Mock Letterman Show fell through, Chapel Hills Mall did sponsor a petition drive for Wayne.

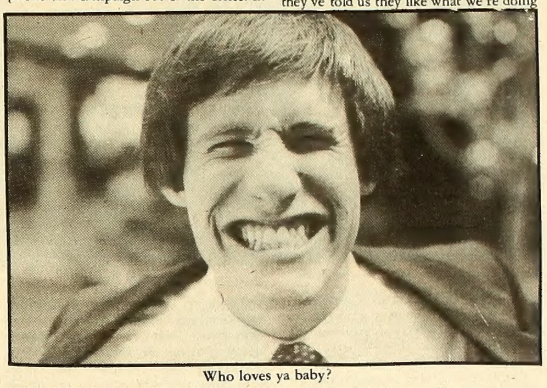
Imagine being on your way down the escalator at Chapel Hills and seeing Wayne's smiling face waiting to greet you at the bottom. There is no escape, nothing you can do short of running backwards up the excalator. This was the predicament of the 1500 people whose hands Wayne shook on that day last May.

"I'd grab a person, shake their hand and say, 'Hi, I'm Wayne D. Rudner, student campaigning to appear on the David Letterman Show.' We collected 1300 signatures over a two day period," says Wayne, "I was offered five different jobs and asked to do two commercials. I kissed babies, posed with fans for pictures, and signed autographs." The campaign was so successful that Chapel Hills asked Wayne D., and his Vice President for Public Relations, Andy Cozine, to return the next day. KKTV covered the event and Wayne appeared on the 5:30 and 10:00 evening news shows.

Since then Wayne has appeared on over thirty Colorado and national radio stations. His story has been featured in papers from coast to coast. AP has picked up the story and UPI is currently processing a feature for national exposure.

Over the summer Wayne was working on the campaign alone in Tuscon, Arizona. Cozine was in London "rallying the British troops." Wayne admits, "at many points I felt like giving up." Wayne explained that he suffered from a nervous exhaustion during the last few days of school last year. But he was rallied when he returned to Tuscon.

Wayne began making speeches to business breakfast clubs in Arizona. He had written, he admits, "a great speech." Through these appearances Rudner was able to make contacts and get a job. His employer allowed him to use the company phone and campaign out of the office. In addition, Wayne was paid throughout the summer to make appearances promoting himself and his campaign.



Who loves ya baby?

For a month and a half during the summer, Wayne was appearing every week-end on one of the nationwide 50,000 watt radio stations. During one of the interviews, former Miss America and actress Lee Merriweather was also appearing. Merriweather spoke with Wayne and pledged her support for his campaign. She promised to write a letter to letterman and offered to take Wayne out to dinner the next time he was in LA.

In addition to Merriweather, Wayne has obtained support from other big names including Erma Bombeck, Senator Dennis De Concini, and Congressman Mo Udall. On campus Wayne has solicited letters of student support including one from his close personal friend Mr. Daniel T. Naatz. Wayne's list of supporters also includes a class of sixth graders in Tuscon who have all sent letters to Dave.

Why, you may ask, is an average student like Wayne obsessed with appearing on the Letterman show? Precisely because he is an "ordinary American."

"We're trying to show," says Wayne, "that a college student with no talent, except giving comedic interviews, can get on the Letterman show. We are unveiling the mystery of the media."

Wayne's people have been in constant contact with the Letterman people. "We are such good publicity for the show they've told us they like what we're doing and asked us to keep doing it."

In addition to his aspirations to appear on "Late Night..." Wayne's ultimate goal is to write a book entitled Campaigning for Fame. "People have told me I could get a best-seller out of this. In fact, Professor Griffiths in the Economics Department told me I could get 2-3 bestsellers out of it."

Wayne is quick to point out that the project is not just self-serving. His persistance in pursuing his cause "symbolizes America and the West." Although it may seem superficial, Wayne said, "A lot of strategy, planning, and sleepless nights go into a project like this. We're very interested in bringing out the educational value of our endeavors."

Wayne explained that his book will stress the underlying themes of persistence, action, and systematic structure. It will be an "autobiographical how-to" for others who might want to follow in Rudner's footsteps.

In the meantime, Cozine and Rudner have immediate plans to go to New York in January to give radio interviews and appear on various talk shows. In an effort to raise funds, they plan to hold a mock Letterman Show and concurrent telethon on the CC campus. Bumper stickers and t-shirts will be printed up and, following the event, a party will be held at the Sigma Chi house. All proceeds will go to the Rudner campaign.

Any students interested in helping Wayne D. get on TV should attend a meeting on Friday, December 5 at 7:00 p.m. in Mathias Lounge.

Wayne and Andy would like to thank the following people for their continued commitment to his campaign: The Colorado College Development Office, Professor Griffiths, Professor Loevy, Dean Peterson, Walt Harrison, Patti McGlaughlin, and Becky Sharp. Special thanks to Randy Roach.

During a recent radio interview, Wayne received a call from a man who said he had been waiting for the celebrity of the eighties to appear. "Wayne," he said, "you are him. Thanks for just being you." The Catalyst editors would like to extend the same sentiments—Wayne, don't go changin'.

Religion from page 6

"enrollment in classes has remained fairly constant" within the past two decades, but this is independent from the actual number of religious people.

As far as differing attitudes among his students, "when I first came here, students were afraid I was going to try to convert them. And then in the late sixtries and early seventies they were afraid I was too wishy-washy, and wanted to know what I really believed. They wanted me to make a statement of some sort."

Today he says the average student "is a little afraid that because somebody is teaching religion and has theological credentials, they might be trying to sell them (their religion)." So, Prof. Pickle uses various strategies to deal with the presuppositions of students.

CAFE BIJOU
DINING & SPIRITS

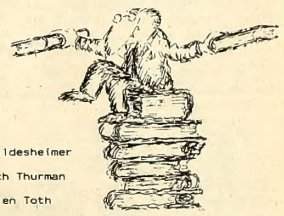
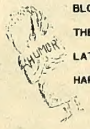
• serving • lunch & light dinners, exquisite desserts & coffees
• first floor •
jazz, cocktails & hors d'oeuvres
• second floor •
Trip the night fantastic in a turn of the century home
411 East Bijou 632-9640
Bring in this ad for a free specialty drink with your lunch or dinner

Warm Up With A Good Book!



MOZART by Wolfgang Hildesheimer
ISAK DINESEN by Judith Thurman
IVY DAYS by Susan Allen Toth



BLOOM COUNTY BABYLON by Berke Breathed
THE FARSIDE GALLERY 2 by Gary Larson
LATE NIGHT WITH DAVID LETTERMAN by Merrill Markoe
HAPPY TO BE THERE by Garrison Keillor

THE ACCIDENTAL TOURIST by Anne Tyler
KILLER DOLPHIN by Naigo Marsh
DANCE HALL OF THE DEAD by Tony Hillerman
SO LONG, AND THANKS FOR ALL THE FISH by Douglas Adams
WITH A LONG SKEIN by Piers Anthony
WORLD'S FAIR by E.L. Doctorow
THE KINGDOM OF THE WICKED by Anthony Burgess
A PERFECT PEACE by Amos Oz
LONESOME DOVE by Larry McMurtry

THE COLORADO COLLEGE BOOKSTORE
McGregor Basement

"Where Everyone's Out to Lunch": Poor Richard's

BY ERIN STRIFF

It happens sometimes. Every now and then, one is attracted to a certain place because of the name alone. I'm reminded of my perspective student days when last April my mother and I drove by Poor Richard's Feed and Read. "Well, that settles it," I said, "I'm going to CC for sure." With a business like that within walking distance, you can't lose. My plans were made, my college decided. Life was good.

After becoming the eager freshman I am, I looked forward to the day I would actually walk in to Poor Richard's. Visions of granola and all-natural soft drinks danced in my head. Then the eagerly-awaited day finally arrived. I made my sojourn down Tejon with some wingies. Upon arrival, I was greeted with a pleasant surprise. Used books? Greeting cards? Movies? Bagels? Oh, joy! I had no idea I was walking in to such a business conglomerate.

Enough reminiscing. As far as I'm concerned, the best reason to eat at Poor Richard's is the atmosphere. I like the idea of eating a bagel and a strawberry smoothie in a room lined with magazines, cards, and old books, with some unidentifiable mellow music playing in the background. It is definitely relaxing, and a great place to sit around and talk. The artwork on the walls, the armadillo on the top of the menu, and even the small sign by the kitchen that reads "slave quarters" all add up to give Poor Richard's a very unique ambiance.

The food ain't bad, either. Employees say the best item on the menu is the Turkey and Jack sandwich. The nachos are also pretty good. The best deserts (who cares about those main courses anyway) are probably the strawberry shortcake or the strawberry smoothie. They also serve some really good flavors of Haagen-Daz.

There are a number of used books for sale, both in the bookstore itself and in the restaurant. Anyone can sell old books to them, but they will not buy textbooks. The magazines are quite varied—you can buy everything from All About Beer to Town and Country. The greeting cards have that wonderful sick humor that only some of us appreciate. That distinctively granola music playing in the background is available in the bookstore. The movies they show are either classics or slightly bizzare. For $2.75 you can watch anything from Citizen Kane to Eraserhead.

Poor Richard's came to be about ten years ago from an idea by a man named Richard Skorman. This answers that eternal question, "Who is Poor Richard anyway?" It was only a restaurant, but time went on, movies were shown in back. The bookstore began about four ago, and was originally across the st where the frameshop is now. The orig Richard sold the business and is working on a book in New York. The owner is Wayne Chambers, but I take idea of Poor Wayne's Feed and Read rejected.

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Feeders and Readers.

The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly A look at CC roommates

BY JULIE INGWERSEN

Take a good look around your room. If you're like most of us living here on campus, you probably just scanned over the belongings of one of the indigenous elements of Dorm Life—your roommate. Maybe you just gave a casual glance, or perhaps you gave a slight gawk at the almost militarily-regimented order of your roomie's bed, desk, and closet. Maybe you couldn't help but wince at the ever-growing, ever-changing pile of—of—of

COURTESY TEOT

God knows what that overflowed out of their trash can, past their dresser, and is currently threatening to wipe out anything on your side of the room in its quest for dominance over all life forms. What is it that makes a good roommate? How do you pick one? How do you get rid of one?

Asked to give an opinion on the subject of The Roommate, one student replied simply, "Huh?" while another, a reactionary veteran of four years of private boarding school dorms, stated "the only good roommate is a dead roommate." R.A. Michelle Chalmers suggests that "there aren't any 'bad' or 'good' roommates, just good combinations and bad combinations. But then, there have been some really bad combinations."

Freshmen seem to be the most frequent victims of the worse combinations, since their roommates are designated randomly by computer on the basis of a small handful of personality-oriented questions, such as "do you smoke," "what is the usual condition of your room," and "what times do you usually study and sleep." The responses to these questions form a fairly small criterium for basing a nine-month relationship, but regardless, many dorm residents and staff view the roommate as a people hold their expectations too high—they think just because they're rooming with someone, that person will become their best friend, and that doesn't always happen. Some people just need their space." Chalmers believes, "for freshmen, it's a good challenge."

"The only good roommate is a dead roommate."

Sophomores have it a bit better, exercising more of their own control over who they will live with, although living with a good friend can often have unexpected and disasterous consequences. Sometimes a complete stranger with a totally different lifestyle who you ra even see is the best roommate.

An interesting phenomenon ob occurs as two roommates grow accustom to living with each other, and standard decency begin to drop. Initial concer with the unfamiliar roommate, like wh to pile the dirty laundry or whether should try to hide how you really feel in morning, begin to fade in importance t point where almost nothing is sacred e etiquette is cast to the wind. Thi perhaps the ultimate state in a philosop of "roommate determinism," depending on the particular type relationship, it can represent either extreme form of exasperated apathy relaxed, total acceptance of cohabitat Maybe it's all a matter of attitude.

Freshmen are a necessary part of the freshman experience.

Especially for public high school students, most of whom get their first taste of co-habitation in college, "the first roommate is a good learning experience," explains Slocum Hall Director Theresa Poff. "Also, a roommate is a good companion for freshmen. If they're at first having trouble socially, at least they have someone to come home to." A lot of times it's relieving to live with someone who's facing the same situations. But what about when the relationship just isn't working? Poff cited the most frequent complaints as "different personality types. Also, some people are inconsiderate about borrowing things or holding conflicting hours for sleeping and studying. And then some

Print Workshop: Strange Things in the Name of Art

BY SUSAN GRIAK

Before Vito Acconci arrived to design a print here at CC, all I heard about this internationally known artist was that he couldn't even file his own plates. That, and "Uh, yeah — he's the one who masturbates." Well, he's been here and gone, and students in Louise Lafond's printmaking workshop are still busy at work. Busy and tired and burned out and almost done.

Tom Majesky, who is a masterprinter and art professor at the University of Omaha and good friend of Lafond's, has worked with Acconci in the past. Hoping to bring a little culture to the campus, and shock some students into opening their eyes to the boundless rules of art, they felt that hosting such a controversial figure as a guest artist would be a great experience for the students.

"I'm exhausted," one of the workshop students commented, "I didn't count on being here from nine in the morning until ten, eleven at night everyday. I have other things to do." Acconci was here from the fourth of the month until the ninth and kept everyone on a tough schedule. While he was here Acconci managed to talk at a Thursday-at-Eleven, give a public lecture in Packard, have several television and newspaper interviews, go to Garden of the Gods, and even visit Poor Dick's.

He has done some strange things in the name of art: He once burned the hair off his body with a candle (the footage didn't turn out the first time and attempts to glue the hair back on his body were unsuccessful due to a highly flammable glue that was used, so he had to wait six months to do it again). He also bit himself. He put his hands in his mouth. He dressed his penis up in baby clothes. Was it all just to grab some attention?

It could be argued either way, but for those who heard him speak, or even had the chance to talk to him in person, found that he is very convincing and can talk his audience into just about anything he believes.

"I'm glad I had the experience, but I still don't appreciate his art," a working student said.

In the next stage of his career he tried to pull more people into his art by having more than one person perform, but that still did not satisfy him. Finally he grew into his "community" idea where he designed lifesize pieces that required a group of people to make them operate.

The image he designed for the print workshop is that of an unfolded, angular house with a lizard-like tail entering at the bottom, and a bat exiting at the top. The tail was originally intended to be that of an alligator, but because it is so small, Acconci claims "I guess it's a lizard or something." The slanted walls of this particular house appear as if they could be folded up to make a paper house, but it doesn't actually work.

Tom Majesky and Louise Lafond.

Kristin Mernitz and Tina Deutsch.

The lizard and bat are present because Acconci wanted some sort of undercurrent, flowing and squirming, beneath the structure.

Most of the students of the print workshop are glad they had the experience, but don't quite accept Acconci as a skilled artist. "He didn't do anything. He barely had an idea for it when he got here," I was told. That way, however, the students were able to take part in the decision-making process. Most of the time he hires people to execute his ideas, in this case a group of art majors who were actually paying him instead of being paid themselves — a very touchy subject among the students. Some couldn't accept the fact that Acconci would sign his name to the finished piece when they had done all the work, while others felt that the fact that the idea was his was enough justification for his claiming artistic rights.

"I didn't learn any technique from him, but I learned a lot about thinking out a plan, having a reason for doing something before you do it."

"Seems he's almost more of a philosopher than an artist — he can talk his way into anything."

Artist, philosopher, designer— whatever he is, everyone agreed that he was a nice, interesting man.

If all runs smoothly, the nine plates will have been printed by today. Of the hopeful twenty perfect copies, a percentage will go to Acconci, CC and the students who worked the hardest. It will be a difficult decision, for they all put in an ambitious amount of time, energy, and talent. Maybe the problem is going to lie in who isn't so sick of the project that they would even want to look at it again. "I wouldn't hang it on my wall," one tired worker said.

Overall, just the fact that Vito Acconci was here seems to have left an impression on many of the conservative people who hang out in Packard. So, maybe Acconci has no artistic talent — he's got the ideas and the personality to thrive in the competitive art world. And, in actuality, he's a very shy person. After one particularly long day of working, a student suggested that they all go out dancing. He turned them down, saying that he won't dance in front of people, he gets too embarassed. "Here's a guy who will dress up his penis in doll clothes, but he won't go out dancing in public . . ." You figure him out.

Acconci supervises.

Sculptured Space

BY ERIC BREITBARD

When you first look at Garrion Roots' I'll Never Live Like This Again you see a forest of listing ceiling-high columns, clustered up the blue floor into darkness. You must go forward. When you do, you find yourself vaguely unbalanced by the tilt of the floor—not steep enough to be unwalkable, but enough to render your equilibrium unsteady when moving among the strangely leaning striped columns. This unsteady feeling is further compounded by the improper feeling of "walking on art." But this art, like the other piece in this UCCS Gallery of Contemporary Art exhibit, Sculptured Space, is an environment you have to walk around in to understand. This is an installation. According to Gallery Curator Sally Perisho, that means it is an "interior sculptural project which combines many media and is large scale and site-specific."

When you soon see the focus of the piece, a dark pit with two figures engaged in a bizzare wrestling contest, you are again thrown-off, disturbed by the feeling that you're going to gall into the black rectangular depression. But this pit is not a place you would want to be. It is the scene of an ugly drama, a powerful vision that Mrs. Perisho explains as the concretization of Roots' recently ended marriage. The two figures are body-casts of Roots and his ex-wife, capped with jackass heads. They are back-to-back, tied together with rope at the waist, the female lifted into the air by the male, who is bent under her weight.

It could be a reference to that childhood game where you take turns lifting your partner into the air, or it could just stay like this—one person bent and straining and the other kicking and screaming. The man holds a large megaphone in his right hand—a symbol of the stifled communication between the two, or maybe of the sporting event-like nature of this absurd relationship.

In contrast with I'll Never Live This Way Again, George Peters' The Drawing Room is a pleasant place. It is well lit, with gentle round shadows cast on the white walls. In Peters' airy installation the room referred to in the title is surrounded by a styrofoam garden of thorn trees, connected overhead in a twine lattice. Styrofoam snakes or worms wind around the bottoms of the trees. Neither the trees nor the snakes are bothered by tornado-like cones swirling down near the room, a 10 foot square dark gauze shack.

The inside walls of the room, the room where art is created, are decorated with styrofoam flames and other explosive byproducts of the intense creative processes that go on here. Above the roofless room floats a lace zeppelin filled with lace smoke. Peters creates a still space, but it is not quiet. White-noise sounds—sounds like a clothes drier drying clothes with a lot of zippers—filter into the installation and the overall feeling is one of an unearthly energy.

As in I'll Never Live This Way Again, every component of the work contributes to the mood of the whole space. Peters, of Boulder, and Roots, of Lafayette, were the two 1986 recipients of the Colorado Council on the Art and Humanities' Creative Fellowship Award. They have created compelling environments for the viewer to walk into, and from inside appreciate the work of which he/she is a part. In this show, at UCCS until November 26, they have proved the effectiveness of the installation as an important voice for expression in contemporary art.

Musicians and Teachers: The Colorado College Trio

BY PRISCILLA PERKINS

For the uninitiated, the term "artist in residence" might conjure up images of Mozart, the court composer, strolling around the gardens of the palace in Vienna.

For Sue Langlas Grace, CC piano instructor and one of the members of the Colorado College Trio, being an artist-in-residence is not quite so glamorous.

The Colorado College Trio consists of Grace on piano, Don Robinson on violin and Susan Smith on cello.

Although the name of the group is fairly new—they just gave their first concert under this name in October of this year—the three musicians have been playing together for about ten years.

"We used to be called the Colorado Springs Symphony Trio," says Grace. "We didn't play last year because of budget problems at the Colorado Springs Symphony." After a one-year hiatus, The Colorado College gave the trio a contract and changed its name.

The change was not very dramatic for Grace, who was already teaching piano at CC anyway.

The Trio's new duties include two formal concerts at CC each year. The October concert was this year's first, and the Trio will perform at a spring concert that is yet to be scheduled.

In addition, the school plans to send out its new artists-in-residence to perform at alumni functions in Colorado and maybe all over the country.

"The idea," says Grace, "is to give small, formal concerts that can serve as a kind of advertising for the college."

The relationship between the school and its artists benefits both sides. The college prospers by having its name associated with the music of artists like Grace, Robinson, and Smith. When the audience leaves a performance, they might not remember the names of the individual performers, but it's likely that "The Colorado College" will stick in their minds.

For Grace, being a member of the Colorado College Trio gives her an extra sense of identity. She says, "People outside of CC may take me more seriously" when they hear that she's a part of the Trio.

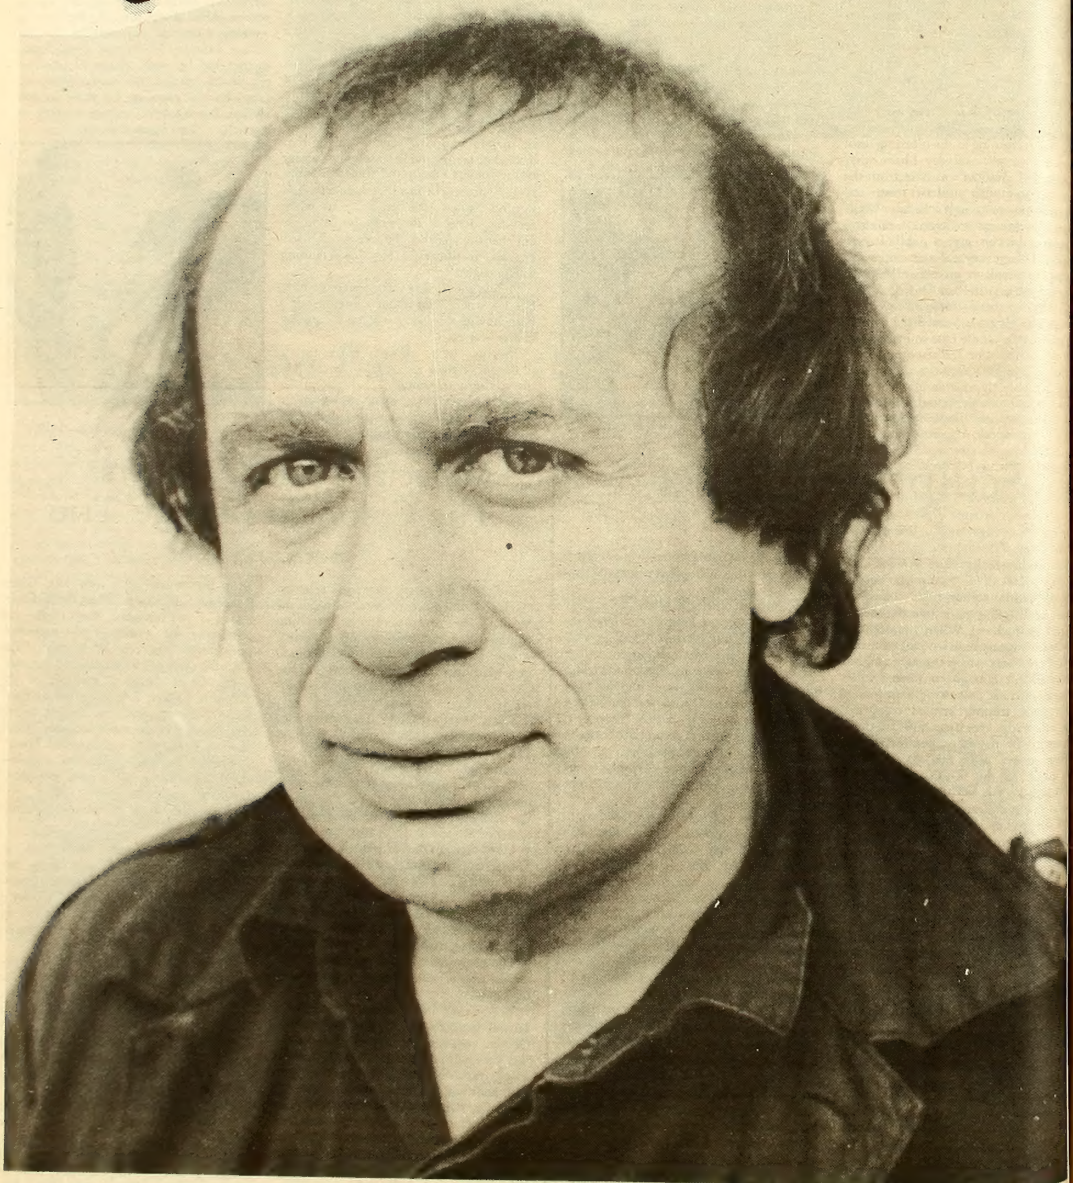
The Trio plays classical music—Beethoven and Chopin are among Grace's favorite composers—but they also perform the work of twentieth-century composers.

"I've never been interested in composing music myself," says Grace, "but I do like to play the music of people I know personally, like Carlton Gamer." Gamer is a music professor at CC. "It's very interesting for me to be able to play music when the composer is right there."

When she's not working with the Trio, Grace teaches piano to eleven students at CC. She also organizes the chamber music program at CC; her job is to match student performers with other students of similar experience to play in small groups. She then assigns each group a faculty sponsor, who helps them to work together and improve as musicians.

When each group has polished a couple of pieces of music, they get to perform in a lunchtime concert, held once each block. "It's a low-pressure, kind of informal chance for students to perform in front of their peers and CC staff members," says Grace. The next lunchtime concert will be November 18.

Interview



Vito Acconci

PHOTO BY ERIC BREITBARD

DISPARAGING EYE

A Journal of Social and Political Thought

VOLUME 2 NUMBER 3, NOVEMBER 14, 1986

The Deportation Dilemma

BY NINA K. FARQUHAR

Juan is from El Salvador. He told his story through an interpreter. "I was kidnapped and for 24 days, held in the prison of the National Guard. I was subjected to a variety of tortures, including electroshock, having plastic bags put over my head and other kinds of torture. The second day after my release, personnel from the death squad came to my home." (San Francisco 10/15/84.)

Flora is also from El Salvador. One afternoon soldiers came and forced everyone into the plaza at gun point. They then selected fourteen young men at random and burned them alive.

In Armando's village nearby, soldiers came every night. They would drag two or three people from their houses to be shot and left in the street.

An estimated one hundred thousand civilians, Archbishops, nuns, doctors, farmers, men, women and children have been murdered in El Salvador and Guatemala in the past six years.

Many who survive the death squads seek refuge in surrounding countries. They flee to Honduras and Mexico, and some refugees, such as Juan, Flora, and Armando (their names have been changed) come to the United States.

The U.S. Congress adopted the Refugee Act in 1980. According to this law, the U.S. should grant asylum to persons who have fled their country due to a "well founded fear of persecution due to race, religion, nationality, or membership in a particular social group or political opinion. These standards clearly apply to Salvadoran and Guatemalan refugees.

Despite this law, the Attorney General and the State Department, responsible for the law's administration, turn down over 97% of asylum applications from El Salvador and Guatemala.

One reason for the high rejection rate is that our government supports the military in both El Salvador and Guatemala. Granting asylum would be acknowledging that the military in these countries is dangerous to its own people.

Continued on page 8

Its Time for Congress to Just Say No

BY DAVE MAKARECHIAN

In the last issue of The Disparaging Eye Jim Lasko examined the Reagan Administration's trendy concern over drugs in the United States. Lasko discussed a wide range of topics, including the sensationalism of the "drug problem" and the creation of victimless crimes. In focusing the nation's attention on drug usage, the Reagan administration sought to return to its old success formula: traditional values + an election year = votes for Republicans. Congressmen could not resist the drug temptation. Rather than just saying NO, as Nancy would have them do, Congressmen tried to cash in on the politically popular drug war, and passed the boondoggle that is HR 5484.

Elections are over, and Congress is coming down from its high. Despite the morning after blues, congressmen are expecting no sympathy from Ronald Reagan, the pusher who got them hooked. But it's O.K. to do one little drug bill, isn't it? After all, everyone else in Congress is doing it. But now that the ecstasy of the moment has passed, its time for Congressmen to get out the Alka-Seltzer and look at what they've done. Things just got out of hand. Everyone at the party was just feeling moral, and Congress passed a pork-barrel measure that will help derail the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction measures and will keep the economy on unsound economic footing for many years to come.

Most analysts are sure that the waste and clear cut patronage measures embodied in the drug bill would have caused it to die under normal circumstances. Before the bill passed, Rep. Michael Bilirakis of Florida warned his colleagues that "we can't let all of the media hype push us into irresponsible public policy decisions." His words went unheeded. The bill is a myriad of suggested rules, regulations, and guidelines from 12 different committees without provisions for coordination or successful implementation. The bill promises to increase the red tape that drug enforcement authorities cut through to halt drug trafficking. Drug Enforcement Agents stated that a simplification and redefinition of authority would have increased their effectiveness and reduced the need for vast sums of money to finance the drug war.

HR 5484 is loaded with wasteful provisions that arose as individual Congressmen sought to "out moralize" each other. As Representative Barney Frank (D-MA) remarked, "I fear this bill is the legislative equivalent of crack. It yields a short-term high, but does long-term damage to the system and it's expensive, to boot." Successful amendments to the bill include a costly measure that forces the military to serve as a boarder police force. Another measure adds a billion dollars to a $300 million slush fund for aid to state and local governments. Despite no proven success in implementing social policy in schools, the bill provides a 64% spending increase in formula grants for drug education. Congress has clearly forgotten about fiscal responsibility.

Congress down played one of the most controversial, wasteful provisions in the drug bill—a provision to authorize $650,000 for a commission to study college athletic programs. The NCAA responded to the measure by issuing a report that lists clear overlaps between internal and federal programs. The report concluded that the taxpayers' $650,000 could have been put to better use.

HR 5484 is loaded with patronage jobs and special considerations for specific areas. Powerful Congressmen were able to attain funding for their districts, and because it's an election year, quickly chose not to worry about the drug problem on a national level. The federal government will dole out over a billion dollars to state and local governments from the drug bill. The traditional concerns about inefficiency in federal handouts surfaced during floor debate. The federal dollars lack controls. Funds wind up as back door revenue-sharing, in which local officials spend the money at their discretion, its earmarked purpose notwithstanding.

With the federal deficit averaging 200 billion dollars yearly, Congress should have addressed an additional concern when doling out funds to municipalities. State and local governments are well off. Cumulatively, they enjoy a surplus of $58 billion. In passing the drug bill Congress is throwing more money at already spoiled children.

The most serious consideration of HR 5484 is its effects on the federal deficit. The bill will increase the deficit in fiscal year 1987 by about $1.7 billion. Supporters of the pork barrel measure claim that in the face of a deficit of $200 billion, 1.7 billion more to fight drugs just isn't that significant. When compared with federal revenues, $1.7 billion is indeed significant. In 1984 the income tax collected from 15 states totaled less than $1.6 billion. In other words, to finance the war on drugs, Congress must use almost a quarter of its income tax receipts—and will still face a huge deficit. Sneaky provisions in the bill could make total drug spending over the next five years—the most crucial years in the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction sequence—close to $6 billion.

The drug bill is a typical example of a new and dangerous Congressional trend. Congress is raising spending and employing accounting techniques to mask these real increases. Congress has created a hollywood movie scene...total spending and revenue figures appear acceptable on the outside, but are actually supported with haphazard gerry-rigging.

In the face of rising outlays, Congress has no recourse but to enact hidden tax increases. Little known tax hikes in 1982 and 1984 kept the government afloat but siphoned money from the productive to the unproductive sector of the economy. A continuing deficit shows the inability of these measures to solve the fiscal crisis facing the United States. Sluggishness across many sectors reflects the drag these measures have imposed on the economy.

Perhaps the one successful aspect of the drug bill was its ability to increase individual Congressmen's popularity in an election year. Democrats and Republicans alike cashed in on the political boon. But just as alcoholism and drug abuse hurts the user's loved ones the worst, Congress' wild drug crusade will hurt their constituents the worst. □

Special thanks to Dan Mitchell of Citizens for a Sound Economy for information for this story.

LETTERS LETTERS

Dear Editor:

After 200 years, it's still "America, the Beautiful" but now appears becoming "America, the Bugged."

When our forefathers came to this young nation, their pre-occupation was to make a living, raise a family, obtain an education, and to pass on the American heritage.

Now we see:

...conflict between the law abiding and law breaking.

...strife between labor unions vs. those desiring non-union workers.

...differences between government entities; federal, state, county and city.

One of the manifestations of home-side hostilities is manifested by the magnitude and multitude of surveillance (bugging).

BIG BROTHER seems to have an "electronic interest" in all Americans and this interest may extend to innerdisagreements among other agencies. Tax payers are being investigated by devices for which they have paid.

BIG BUSINESS has competitors, foreign and domestic, and protest financial interests with intricate devices preventing industrial sabotage. Bulging federal budgets for defense industry lead manufactorers to pick the Pentagon clean.

BIG "SUPERNATURALS" richly endowed by the Founding Fathers with privileged rights, some spiritual societies have departed from "surveillance by the Diety" to scarcely religious, home grown, intelligence systems. has the "bug" replaced the Holy Bible? Has the computer bank substituted common sense? Or the Sacraments? Or sanity?

After 2 centuries, America is still beautiful.

Lady Liberty continues to be the symbol of freedom. However, the Beautiful Lady must be amazed at the strange variety of electronic frequencies buzzing around her embellished crown.

Dr. Urban Terbieten
Yancy, TX

Dear Editor:

With my clothes clinging to my skin uncomfortably, and my hair flattened against my head from the sudden downpour, I sat on a curb and summoned up all my remaining energy and confidence as I went through my rap trying to discover some flaw. I was working for CoPIRG, Colorado Public Interest Research Group. I was almost through my turf with few additions to CoPIRG's lobbying population. I looked at the house across the street and smiled; it was a small, modest home with many colorful flowers bordering its yard, choking out most of the weeds. I always found an interested listener at such homes.

Ding Dong!

"Hi, My name is Suzanne Leahy, and I'm with CoPIRG, the state's largest citizens' lobbyist group. Most people know us for passing the new car Lemon law. I'm in the neighborhood this evening on our annual support drive, and working on our Clean Air Campaign. We're all aware of the brown cloud, but if we don't pass legislation immediately, we'll lose $300 million in federal funds. So, CoPIRG is campaigning for a legislative package which will reduce pollution from all major sources.

I've been showing your neighbors this statement of support. As you can see, your neighbors have been showing their support by becoming members with a signature and a contribution. Members are important because the more members we have, the more clout we have in the statehouse. Members also receive a newsletter four times a year to keep you up to date on CoPIRG's progress and the way that your Congressman votes on important consumer and environmental protection bills."

No matter how enthusiastic and sincere I was, my rap was usually interrupted with a rude remark or a door slammed in my face. Still having a remaining audience, in this case, however, I grew excited as I anticipated a stimulating conversation about air pollution control, as well as a potential membership. Although during my four days of canvassing for CoPIRG, I had grown increasingly discouraged from the apathetic responses I received, public opinion polls illustrated recently that there is a growing concern for Denver's level of carbon monoxide and the famous brown cloud. Colorado citizens are growing aware of air pollution problems within the state as areas along the front range also move up in the ranks of the nation's leaders of polluted regions. In fact, up to 85% of Front Range residents want tougher anti-pollution measures adopted; 75% are dissatisfied with the way the legislature has dealt with the problem. (I guess I hit most of that 15% that didn't want air pollution in Colorado controlled.)

CoPIRG's job is to help convey this public concern into legislative action next year in order to prevent the loss of this federal funding. In order to accomplish this, the public needs to be further educated about the severity of air pollution in the area, the dire health risks posed by our air, and the options available to address the problem. Also, the public must show its willingness to take a stand on this issue. Canvassing involves both of these prerequisites because it allows an issue to be presented in an informative manner face to face, with time to answer concerned citizens' questions. Additionally, a membership with CoPIRG expresses an active concern to the statehouse while it influences elected officials to respond to the public's concern.

Coloradans have always been proud of our state's natural beauty as well as our healthful lifestyles, however, these attractions have drawn an increasing population to Colorado, and, with it, an escalating industry. Due to the inversion factor, Colorado's Front Range has some of the most serious air pollution problems in the country. In fact, Denver is currently ranked number one in the nation for its toxic level of carbon monoxide—that's right, it's above NYC and LA!

Carbon monoxide, an invisible and odorless gas, deprives the brain, heart and other organs and tissues of oxygen. Short term effects include headaches, dizziness, and drowsiness. The elderly, children, and pregnant women as well as people with heart or lung conditions are susceptible to more severe, permanent health risks including death. Often double what EPA standards consider safe, in 1984, the carbon monoxide safety standards were exceeded 45 times in Denver, alone.

I live in southwest Littleton, so I never notice the air pollution effects; except in the winter, when I look down at Denver and, instead, see an enormous brown cloud, realizing that somewhere in the stomach of this monster lies a whole city. Two days of my short CoPIRG career were spent in downtown Denver. Half-way through my turf, my head was pounding, and I felt sick to my stomach. To most Denverites these signs of a high-level of carbon monoxide are a part of daily life.

Both, the "brown cloud" and the carbon monoxide levels, can be fought the same way. The primary sources of these two evident results of severe air pollution are industry and power plants (contributing 41%), woodburning fireplaces and stoves (25%), diesels (15%), and cars (13%). CoPIRG is lobbying for a legislative package which would attack these main sources.

This legislative package would require industry to install scrubbers on all smokestacks, reducing industrial pollution up to 20%. Providing tax incentives to encourage homeowners to install emission reduction devices on woodstoves and fireplaces, may cut pollution up to 10%. Additionally, an enforceable emmission standard for diesels and a centralized emission testing program are essential to ensure compliance with standards and to cut air pollution. Also, tax incentives may encourage the use of alternative fuels like gasohol during the winter to reduce carbon monoxide emmissions by 25%.

A membership demonstrates that the public is willing to put its money where its mouth is, and contribute to research and to lobbying for necessary actions. CoPIRG has its foot placed firmly in Greeley, Fort Collins, Boulder, and Denver. Unfortunately, CC was unable to aid in the battle to ally Colorado Springs last year when the student body voted against membership with CoPIRG. Air pollution is an issue worthy of CC's attention and action, and, hopefully, this year it will receive it.

—Suzanne Leahy

Dear Editor:

At the Broadmoor I saw the President of all of us bash the other half of all of us—Ted Kennedy, independent thinkers, Democrats, liberals, government workers, enlightened Republicans and me, the ordinary citizen who prefers a thoughtful Tim Wirth, a senator for all of us from Colorado.

I felt sad as I watched the beautiful kids of Colorado Springs cheer in bizarre fashion at every joke, jibe, jibber and dangling hope from our President's mouth. Kids know only what they like to hear. They've been told they want a "peace shield" called Star Wars to protect their delicate bodies from nuclear bombs. Yet these eager kids are about to buy an unproven, defensive weapon system with offensive objectives and outrageous costs which may some day be rightly labeled the Death Star Initiative.

I say it's time to toss the blinders aside and embrace the Friendship Alternative. Just say no to the arms race.

Jack Reppert

Dear Editor:

"A woman will never make it as president because women are controlled by their emotions." We think that this statement, made by a female CC student, would be an interesting start to a brief editorial comment on women in politics. Regardless of how this woman and others think, women are coming into politics. For the second time in history, two women nominees ran for the U.S. Senate. This was the Linda Chavez (Republican) and Barbara Mikulski (Democrat) race in Maryland. In Nebraska, Kay Orr (Rep.) and Helen Boosalis (Dem.) competed for the state governorship, a race described by a Republican senator as being run like a "state prom queen contest." This election assured the state of its first woman governor. The winner, Boosalis, is the eighth female governor in American history. A total of 48 women competed in primaries and general elections this year. Not bad for a bunch of emotional wrecks and "dizzy" prom queen contestants.

Not only are more women running than ever before, but voters are becoming less gender-biased. A recent Wall Street Journal/NBC News Service Poll supports this new voting trend.. It shows that the gender of a candidate makes "no difference" to 71% of likely voters. After the 1984 elections, an NWPC poll showed that only 7% of the voters were less likely to vote for a woman, while 27% were more likely to do so. We think that both women and men are equally capable of holding office and apparently the public agrees.

As exemplified, in many cases the female candidates in 1986 have run against other women, which has contributed heavily in lessening voter's gender bias. They must chose between two women, so no battle of the sexes exists. Rather than choosing between a man or a woman, voter's vote for certain issues that the politician is representing. For example, in the Maryland race, the winner Mikulski favors abortion rights, government-funded child care, and Equal passage. Chavez' conservatism mirrors Reagan policies of a strong defense, firm economic principles and anti-bortion laws. Mikulski triumphed because of her liberal stance and campaign efforts, which were unrelated to her gender.

It is important for people to be aware of the progress women are making. Politics has been dominated by men for a long time, so it is understandable that women are just beginning to enter the political domain. In their efforts and successes, they are gaining the experience necessary to become competent leaders.

Jean Maxfield
Stacy Stanford

STAFF

Munir Meghjee ..... Editor In Chief

Art Editor: Peter Scott

Associate Editors: Lelia Deykin, Brian Smith, Rob Lynch, Jean Maxfield, Michael S. Mehan, Dave Lazerwitz

Layout Editor: Nina Farquhar

Copy Editor: Dean Campbell

Contributors: Suzanne Leahy, Norm Leahy, Dave Makerechian, Stacy Stanford, Eric Johnson, Peter Hudson, Jim Loper

Typesetter: Linda Shireman

The opinions expressed herein do not necessarily reflect those of the Disparaging Eye staff. The Disparaging Eye reserves the right to edit letters to the editor and guest commentaries.

The Well Is Running Dry

BY DAVE LAZERWITZ

"When the well's run dry, we know the worth of water." When Benjamin Franklin wrote these words in Poor Richard's Almanac I'm sure he had little idea of how applicable they would be to the current situation in the Southwestern United States. Today, we have a problem in the Southwest, it is a crisis which will affect us and the nation as a whole in the years to come. The problem is water, and that there is little of it in this arid region, which is growing faster than it can quench its thirst.

The Southwestern United States has come to be recognized as the "Sun Belt," where warm weather and open land have encouraged development and economic growth in recent years. The heavy influx of population from other areas of the nation has had a significant impact on the already dwindling supplies of water in this arid region. A region that was once at balance with its water supplies is now rapidly damming its surface waters and depleting underground aquifers (groundwater) in an attempt to make the desert bloom.

The water we use in the southwest comes from two main sources: the Colorado River and underground aquifers. The 1,440 mile long Colorado River Basin, now tamed and highly regulated, serves some 15 million people's water needs in the Southwest. But as Charles Bowden, author of Killing the Hidden Waters, points out, this is not enough to meet the demand: "Since surface supplies were spoken for long ago, Americans have now turned to groundwater. Arizona meets 60% of its water needs by pumping aquifers...other states and basins approximate this dependence."

The problem here lies in the fact that since we are already using up the Colorado to its full capacity (it si already using up the Colorado to its full capacity (it is now only a trickle when it reaches Mexico) we must now depend on underground water. The biggest aquifer in the West is the Ogallala which covers an area from Texas to South Dakota. This underground water source is responsible for 15% of the nation's wheat, corn and cotton as well as 38% of the livestock, but we are using up the Ogallala eight times faster than it can replenish itself. At this rate, experts warn that many parts of the Ogallala may be drained by the early part of the next century.

The problem of water shortage in this arid region had been solved in the past by water projects. The building of dams, canals and pumps to store and importing water from other areas had led to the creation of multi-billion dollar projects, such as the Central Arizona Project, which will create an aqueduct from the Colorado River to Phoenix and Tuscon. But the era of the federally subsidized water projects is coming to an end.

In the final years of the Carter Administration, Congress began to put the brakes on Federal spending for water projects. The Reagan Administration has continued the policy, saying that states must begin paying for the dams and canals from which they benefit. Part of this resistance has come from environmental groups which see the development of water projects destroying wildlife and harming the environment, although the main push recently has come from the desire to cut back Federal spending. This cutback has come at a time when the Southwest is growing rapidly and has a growing demand for more water, so the problem is compounded.

Realizing that there was little hope of getting more water from Washington, an alliance of environmentalists, political liberals and economic conservatives is pushing the acceptance of an idea that they say can make better use of already available water. The idea is water marketing. It stems from the fact that water is now very cheap and this, in turn, breeds waste. Economists believe that by letting farmers or agencies sell their cheap water at market rates to other individual or to growing cities both sides can win.

In California's Central Valley, many farmers pay the government $10 for the water it takes to cover an acre of ground to a depth of one foot, but proponents of water market transfers point to the fact that officials in San Diego are willing to pay $200 for an acre foot.

Under Western water law, water rights are treated as mineral rights and are generally attached to land ownership, but the owners of water rights can lose their rights if they do not use the water. Advocates for the free-market approach, such as Thomas Graff, of the Environmental Defense Fund, argue that the system encourages "growers to waste water and use it on marginal crops."

Setting up a system in which farmers can sell their excess water to cities for a high price will give agriculture money to set up conservation efforts, such as lining ditches and more efficient irrigation, and it will also give the cities the water they need. On top of this, environmentalists will be very happy because we will stop building these huge water projects which are screwing up the environment. The transfers of water, once arranged in the marketplace, will take place through canals or by letting, say a city, take over the right to withdraw water from a source that was previously the right of another user.

This free-market system is already being employed in California where water trading is legal. Instead of mounting a costly battle to expand the Central Valley Project that ships water south, says Thomas Graff, "politicians are beginning to see that a much better option would be to trade water from the Imperial Valley for investment in Southern California." Under this plan, metropolitan water users would pay $10 million a year to the Imperial Valley for conservation improvements. If this deal were to go through it could set a precedent for future similar projects. This system, explained by Richard Katz, an assemblyman in California, "allows the auctioneering of surplus water. Areas with excess water can sell it for a profit and drier areas can purchase it at large savings compared to the huge cost of building water systems."

It all seems great, but, as with any other great solution, there are still problems. The main opposition to the Imperial Valley transfer, and thus a free-market system in general, is coming from farmers. The farmers fear that selling water could be devastating to their communities. Farmers hoping to get started, officials say, could not afford to pay market rates for water while the agribusiness people who depend on this strong farming economy would suffer. Farmers feel that if they were to give up their water rights for a period of time, they would never be able to regain them, due to the high market cost.

For now, the hopes are high for the implementation of a free-market system for water in the Southwest, but it has not yet happened. The Reagan Administration is supporting this idea as well as environmentalists; it seems to be the light at the end of the (water) tunnel. The barriers of protecting the farmers as well as figuring out efficient ways to transport water must still be overcome, but it seems that for now a free-market system could be the answer for the Southwests water problems. □

Environmental Activism Begins at Home

BY ERIC JOHNSON

I know dozens of people who are seriously concerned about environmental issues. Some of them are concerned but don't know what to do. Others spend a large part of their free time working for various causes and candidates, writing letters to legislators, distributing petitions, and doing all of the other things that anyone would think of if asked to list the activities that make up environmental activism. The people in the second group, the most involved and committed eco-activists, get a lot of compliments, respect, and admiration from each other and those in the first group for their willingness to spend a lot of time and energy working on environmental issues. They also tend to be pretty satisfied about the work they're doing for a clean and living planet.

With few exceptions, these committed activists are ecologically full of feces. I'm not playing holier-than-thou, because that last statement applies quite well to me. There is a prevalent attitude that leisure time involvement in different environmental "causes" is enough to preserve the Earth if enough people do it. This attitude is embraced as much by committed activists as by concerned but inactive sympathizers, and is fundamentally flawed. Even the most busy and involved eco-activists may as a whole be screwing up the biosphere, because they have failed to question the overconsumptive and earth-destroying lifestyles they lead.

I don't mean to imply that all those letters, protests, and other conventional activities are worthless—they're not. They are positive and necessary, but inadequate by themselves. In a classic article (in Earth First!, May 1, 1986), Robert Streeter wrote, "It is not enough to send twenty bucks or two thousand bucks to an environmental group and go about a middle-class lifestyle. It may ease the conscience, but the net effect on the planet remains negative...until we regress in our daily activities to an ecologically responsible level, all the laws, letter writing, donations, demonstrations, monkeywrenching, etc., will only slightly delay the biotic collapse of our planet."

Streeter makes a good point. The environmental crisis has its roots in our lifestyles, and not in certain bad laws or legislators. So, what's really needed is an all out attack on the destructive aspects of our lifestyles, as well as continuing and severe reexamination of lifestyles to help weed out our damaging consumption patterns. It is in this area that we are failing as environmental activists.

Even though we may be having a "net negative effect" on the biosphere, we are headed in the right direction. Any sort of environmental activism is good. However, our lifestyles and philosophies need to keep evolving in order to reach a point of "net positive effect," where we will begin to rebuild and heal damaged ecosystems. In the next several paragraphs, I will outline destructive areas of our daily lives and alternatives to those damaging habits.

Avoid automobiles. If you have one, sell it, buy a bicycle, and use the remaining money to do an ecologically good deed. Alternatively, share an automobile with a dozen or so other people, and use it only for transporting heavy loads or long distance trips. Use public transportation or a bicycle to commute and shop for food.

Why? Cars and trucks are a major source of acid rain and other pollution. Petroleum exploration and road building are environmentally destructive. And, autos consume huge amounts of nonrenewable fossil fuels.

Stop buying and using unnecessary appliances. Whatever happened to hand-washed dishes, hand-chopped vegetables, and hand-cranked ice cream? Appliances are depriving us of meaningful daily activities. Hang your clothes to dry outside (hand them inside in the winter—it's dry enough in Colorado for this). Build a solar oven to partially replace your gas or electric one. Stop using electric razors, curling irons, hair dryers, and toothbrushes. Definitely get rid of your television. TV's seduce us into apathy and inactivity while enticing us with slick commercials that tell us how important it is to consume, consume, consume.

Hand in hand with eliminating unnecessary appliances is conserving energy. Heavy energy consumption has brought us acid rain, strip mines, nuclear waste, oil spills, the destruction of rivers through damming, and relocation of traditional Navajo people at Big Mountain, among other evils. Study in the library and leave your house or room lights off. Take fewer, shorter, and cooler showers to conserve the energy used to heat water. Turn the thermostat down as low as you can stand it, and put some more blankets on your bed. Work on being able to tolerate lower household temperatures.

Conserve water, too. Take shorter showers. Don't flush every time. Get rid of bluegrass lawns and replace them with native plants that don't require watering. In them with native plants that don't require watering. In Colorado, water projects threaten our wilderness and divert Western Slope water which should be flowing downstream to other ecosystems.

Don't buy all of those heavily packaged and wasteful everyday consumer items. Do without

Continued on page 8

The Law of Uncertainty

"The New Immigration Bill"

BY MICHAEL S. MEHAN

Faced with the choice of either trying to round up and deport the estimated four to eight million illegal aliens in the United States, or to allow the underground "sub-culture" of illegal aliens, which has developed over the years, to continue to thrive, Congress and the President have opted for a third choice, that of designing legislation to try and deal with the growing problem of illegal immigrants in the United States. However, the new immigration bill, that now awaits the autograph of President Reagan, seems to stir more questions than it answers.

The bill centers on the problem of illegal entry along our southern border. In the last year, the situation along the Mexican-U.S. border has gone from bad to worse. Along our common border, there exists a "push-pull" situation, that has aggravated the long existing problem of illegal entry into the U.S. With increasingly worse economic conditions in Mexico, high unemployment, escalating inflation, and lack of economic growth, all made worse by Mexico's 100 billion dollar debt, many Mexicans look to the Gringo neighbor up north for employment and better living conditions, thus they are "pushed" out of Mexico by poor economic conditions. The United States "pulls" them across the border with hope of employment. Employers in the U.S. are all too willing to exploit cheap Mexican labor, and to fill "undesirable" jobs, harvesting crops, working in the slaughterhouses, doing domestic work, or unskilled manual labor, with illegal Mexican immigrants. However, the situation on the Mexican border has reached unacceptable proportions. Last year a record 1.3 million people were arrested trying to illegally enter the United States on the border. Over five thousand people are arrested daily by border patrols along the Rio Grande, and an unknown amount of people succeed in entering the U.S., to join the estimated eight million illegal immigrants already living in the United States.

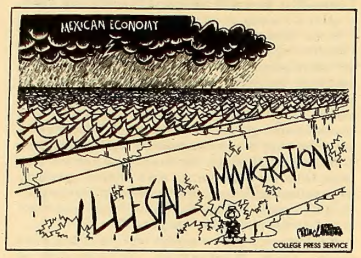
How The Law Will Work

The bill, passed by Congress, would deal with the situation by offering amnesty to illegal residents who entered the U.S. before January 1, 1986. Six months after the bill becomes law, there will be a 12 month application period, in which illegal aliens must prove that they have lived in the U.S. continuously since before January 1, 1986. After applying, the aliens will be given temporary residence and may apply for permanent residence after 18 months. Five years after becoming a permanent legal resident of the U.S., they may apply for citizenship. This also applies to agricultural workers who have worked in the U.S. for at least 90 days prior to May, 1986.

Employers will face fines for hiring illegal aliens, and possible prison sentences for repeated violations. Fines for first offenses may range from 250 dollars to 2000 dollars, for second time offenders, from 3000 dollars to 10,000 dollars, and "pattern of practice" offenders could face up to six months in prison.

A Justice Department commission will be established to investigate and prosecute any cases of discrimination against legal aliens, especially Hispanic, residents.

There will be an increase in border patrol enforcement, to help stop the tide of illegal immigrants and four billion dollars will be available to help states with the cost of education, schooling and social services for former illegal residence.



Problems Facing The Law

Unfortunately, if you mix one part hope with two parts fear, you end up with the uncertainty of the immigration bill. Uncertainity is the general feeling among immigration officials, employers, attorneys, social workers, and especially among the aliens themselves, legal and illegal.

One of the many questions raised is whether or not employers, who use a lot of illegal labor, will follow the law or not, especially in border towns where illegal aliens are a large part of the work force in many industries. Fines and prison terms are supposed to deter employers from using illegal alien help, but economic circumstances may force them to ignore the law. In many cases, finding people to replace the illegal workers will pose problems for employers. Most Anglos do not want work in the fields, or slaughterhouses, or as maids and gardeners and landscapers, therefore, eliminating illegal labor from the market will leave a void in the work force. Also, in areas where Americans are willing to replace Mexican workers, the prive of labor will increase as employers are forced to meet minimum wage requirements and labor wage requirements.

However, the new law will leave a nice loophole in this area. Under the law, employers would be required to verify the residence status of all their employees, they will not, however, have to verify the authenticity of documents shown them, and will not face penalties for hiring illegal aliens who have forged or fake identification papers. As long as employers are shown some kind of proof of residency, a valid U.S. passport, certificate of U.S. citizenship, certificate of naturalization, a foreign passport and work visa, or just a social security card and driver's license, both of which are easily obtained, legally or illegally, they may hire the worker. Whether or not the document is valid is not their concern. It is this provision, that many feel will nullify the effectiveness of the bill.

The question of documentation raises the main problem in the bill, that of verifying continued residency since January 1, 1986. Most illegal aliens in the U.S. have lived underground for years, using only cash in business transactions, and leaving few or no traces of residency, proving eligibility for amnesty will be hard, due to lack of documents. With up to a million people expected to rush immigration offices when the law goes into effect, the problem of proof will provide a logistical nightmare for immigration officials, and will increase the nightmare for immigration officials, and will increase the availability and supply of fake documents.

Already in the border towns, according to immigration officials, there has been a switch in type of document forgery. Instead of the usual immigration documents, such as visas and passpo there is a switch to fake residency papers. A floo phony rent receipts, utility bills, income tax fo driver's licenses, social security cards, and b certificates, all custom made to fit the le requirements of the new law, has already hit markets in border towns such as El Paso, Texas, a are available in areas where there is a la concentration of illegal immigrants, such as Housto The prices range from six dollar social security car to 500-1000 dollar resident-alien cards, or "gre cards" (which are actually white). These allow aliens work legally in the U.S. with most of the rights citizens. For a 1000 dollars, a person may al purchase a package of documents including, W forms showing wages paid, and baptismal certifica which in turn can be used to apply for a passport. W the continued decline in the Mexican economy, u law is expected to create a surge of new illeg immigrants over the Mexican border into the U.S., people hope to sneak in, and apply for residency und the new law, using altered, or forged document Forgers along the border in Texas and California, a expected to make a killing as thousands pour over t border before the amnesty period expires.

There are means of enforcing the new law an reducing the problem of verifying document Employers can verify records through the Soci Security Administration, and the Internal Revenu Service, however, this is complicated process, fo which both agencies are understaffed. There are no enough people to help check all the Social Securit numbers and tax records that would be called in b employers. Besides, under the new law, employers ar not required to do so, therefore, they would have n incentive to waste their time trying check document

Another problem caused by the law, is increasing arbitrary discrimination against foreigners, especiall Hispanics. When the new law goes into affect, anyon with an accent or colored skin will be suspected o being an illegal alien. legally naturalized Hispanic may have to carry uncontestable proof of residenc when applying for a job, or even on their current job as employers shy away from Hispanic labor, in orde to avoid any entanglement in the new law. The bill ha not been signed into law, yet already, employers ar questioning the legal residential status employees making legal residents angry, and illegal residents frightened. If the law is obeyed, then many employers will run the risk of turning away the wrong person, and ending up in court with discrimination charges against them.

The law also places many alien residents in a legal gray zone. Students and visitors, who came to the U.S. on legal visas, which have since expired, and who remained in the U.S. do not know what their status will be under the new law. Also in question is the status of people who entered the country in 1981, but did not find work until after the January first deadline. Lawyers may find themselves in court trying to prove illegal entry instead of legal entry into the United States, or the aliens may turn to illegally forged documents in order to remain in the U.S.

And so, millions of hopeful, illegal immigrants, from all over the world, not only Mexico, wait anxiously for the bill to become law. Some have flown from political terror and civil war in El Salvador and Nicaragua, others from war torn Vietnam, and

Continued on page 8

Fairness in Reform

BY SUZANNE LEAHY

"Less government intervention!" preaches the omnipotent Reagan Administration, as it stretches its long fingers around the necks of wage laborers; the docile blue-collar workers, squeezed by this fatal grip, are unaware of their peril, drugged by promises to secure their jobs from those stealing and deceiving, Spanish-speaking wetbacks, the most terrifying foreign nightmare of them all. The American wage worker has been recently injected again with another miracle drug: the Simpson-Rodino bill, disguised as freedom from the swamping of foreigners, national security against communism, and the answer to unemployment, secures the Administration's grip on American lives.

In fact, underneath its mask, the Simpson-Rodino bill attacks the wage laborer, American as well as Mexican; it is only a renamed bracero program. The Simpson-Rodino bill is now a law, passed without Ted Kennedy's amendment, which allowed its elimination if it did, indeed, as it is predicted to do, promote prejudice. Increased hysteria and prejudice only benefits big business; it serves as a method to deport undocumented, immigrant workers who threaten to unionize.

Unionization, now, has bad connotations; it is unAmerican, associated with corruption of union leaders who are paid off by big business owners to betray factory workers. Afraid of losing their employment, it is difficult for undocumented workers to unionize and demand the wages of American workers and working conditions which do not threaten their lives. Simpson-Rodino perpetuates this; now, when hired in the United States, undocumented workers are chained to their oppressive working environments.

It is interesting to see that Simpson-Rodino discriminates against the Mexican industrial worker; it totally avoids the sector of agrarian workers as well s shrugging off the service sector, both of which a increasingly filled with undocumented workers, wh One reason is that most of these jobs are not filled b unemployed Americans, who receive more mon from welfare than the income supplied by the occupations. this is evidenced when Reagan spe millions of dollars deporting thousands of Mexica in California to open up their jobs to Americans; th campaign failed because the unemployed refused to fi these jobs, and Mexicans were, once again encouraged by the business sector to cross the borde

Trying to eliminate the minimum wage for youth the Reagan Administration has attempted to fill thes sectors with young Americans. However, this is only a temporary solution since the bulk of Americans wi soon be supported by social security that fewer an fewer American workers are able to suppl Americans are not replacing their work force

Continued on page

The Impact of Mexico's Economic Plight

BY JIM LOPER

In the last 57 years, Mexico's ruling party, the Institutionalized Revolutionary Party (PRI), has never lost a presidential or gubernatorial election. It has held power with little challenge. Until the summer elections last July, the PRI came uncomfortably close to losing elections in the northern border state of Chihuahua. It is only through possible electoral fraud that the PRI maintained power. Since 1982, opposition parties have defeated PRI candidates in dozens of city halls. The popularity of Miguel de la Madrid, elected for a six year term in 1982, has faded earlier than his predecessors. While the causes of "la crisis" can in part be due to the flourishing drug trade and corruption, the PRI's biggest worry is its economic plight. It is the worst in 50 years.

Mexico's economic woes are many. It has been suffering from a recession. 40 percent of the work force is jobless or underemployed. The foreign debt has soared from $27.8 billion, a decade ago, to $110 billion for 1986. Inflation has averaged 80 percent during each of the past three years. The real wages for the average Mexican have dropped 35 percent since 1982. The free market value of the peso is tumbling and capital is leaving the country at an alarming rate. In short, Mexico is in trouble.

Mexico's troubles are mainly the result of three factors: excessive borrowing, over-protection of industry, and skidding oil prices.

The foreign debt can be partly attributed to Mexico's development strategy of import substitution industrialization, adopted in 1940. The main objective of ISI was to replace imported products with goods produced locally. The government, since 1940, therefore has invested much of its resources in infrastructure to facilitate the movement of raw materials and goods throughout the country, as well as investing heavily in industry and agriculture. This strategy worked well throughout the 40's and 50's producing high growth and low inflation.

However, starting in the early 60's and continuing to the present, the public sector has been less able to finance its investments from its own resources. Its role had expanded substantially, but little was done to secure additional resources. Part of the governments policy to promote private enterprise was a low level of taxation and large subsidies. In essence, the government sacrificed its financial health to promote private investment.

In order to maintain this high level of spending, the government resorted to foreign credit as a means to finance its deficit. This policy enabled the government to pursue exchange rate stability until 1976. During that period, the peso remained at 12.5 to the dollar. Moreover, this policy os exchange rate stability was compatible with domestic price stability.

However, this pattern of borrowing from foreign creditors can lead to a deficit in the current account in the balance of payments. (The current account is a record of the international transactions of goods and services of a country for one year.) The loan requires repayment of the principle as well as servicing the interest on the debt.

In theory, the deficit could be made up by encouraging an export economy, meaning that total revenues brought into the country by selling exports is greater than the revenue leaving the country as a result of purchasing imports. However, loss of revenue due to the increased imports of raw materials and capital goods which resupply local firms or establish new ones, has outweighed revenue from the export sector. Thus, instead of working to eliminate the debt, the trade imbalance in Mexico has added to the foreign debt, requiring additional borrowing to balance the books and compensate for the outflow of currency.

Why have Mexico's exports been unable to offset imports? The answer is protectionism. Tariffs, quotas, and bureaucratic barriers, have inhibited Mexico's industries from developing to their maximum potential by reducing foreign competition. Competition is needed to develop efficiency. While in the initial stages of ISI, protectionism is justified to give new industries a chance to establish themselves, at some point these measures must be reduced. It seems, however, that once Mexico's businesses have been given these advantages, it becomes politically disadvantageous for the PRI to take them back. The reason for this will be discussed later.

In addition to the foreign debt caused by ISI, and the trade deficit due to overprotection, is the oil factor. Mexico's skidding oil prices have been the most immediate factor causing Mexico's problems. Oil became Mexico's leading export during the late 70's. By 1981, oil accounted for about 75 percent of Mexico's exports. However, since 1982, petroleum revenues have plummeted from $15.6 billion to an estimated $6.5 billion for 1986. It is estimated that each $1 decline in the price of a barrel of oil cuts Mexcio's earnings by about $550 million. The decline in oil prices makes it increasingly hard to repay the foreign debt.

The picture painted of Mexico's economic situation is bleak. The very realization of this among Mexico's investors has further aggravated the illness through the falling value of the peso. Four years ago, 25 pesos would buy a dollar. Today the exchange rate is about 830 pesos to the dollar. When people in Mexico get scared, the first thing they do is to buy dollars. This starts a circle of despeculation. As more dollars are demanded, the price of the dollar increases in terms of the peso, causing it to weaken. Investors, seeing the value of the peso dropping, seek to buy more dollars. Not only does this cause the value of the peso to decline, but it causes capital flight, which deprives Mexico of money that could be reinvested in its own economy. The declining value of the peso makes imports more expensive, adding to the trade deficit.

Mexico's economic problems, therefore, are a result of three factors: 1) Government expenditures, as a result of pursuing ISI with subsidies and low taxation, have created a foreign debt that requires huge servicing payments. This seriously questions Mexico's financial solvency in the eyes of international money lenders, such as the IMF and the World Bank, who might declare Mexico unsuitable for future loans. 2) Over-protection has resulted in reduced competition and therefore inefficiency. This, in turn, raises domestic prices. 3) Mexico's reliance on oil has made the economy's fate dependent on the international price of oil. While Mexico's government cannot be blamed for the third point, it certainly can be held responsible for the first two.

The state of Mexico's economy is crucial to the United States. Mexico currently owes about one-quarter of its debt to United States banks. Should Mexico default on its loans, it could result in serious financial fallout in the United States. With Mexico's economic situation, as it has been discussed, in mind, Secretary of the Treasury James Baker and Federal Reserve Chairman paul Volcker secured a $12 billion dollar loan package from the International Monetary Fund in July to stave off a default.

These loans come at a political cost to de la Madrid. Mexico has maintained political stability by protecting powerful business interests, in return for their support. However, many of the terms upon which these loans were negotiated are aimed at reducing subsidies and protectionism. This will allow foreign investors to enter the market, causing competition thus eliminating inefficiency. Also, in July, Mexico agreed to join the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), an organization set up to promote free trade. Furthermore, the government has pushed interest rates up to slow capital flight.

The result of these demands is the closing down of innefficient industries, thus raising unemployment. A recent example of this is the shut-down of a money losing steel mill at the cost of 6,000 jobs. Yet the government does not have to worry about this short-term unemployment, as foreign investment and more efficient industry will take care of this in the longrun. The real problem will come from Mexican business, the support of the PRI. It is a double-edged sword for the PRI—on the one hand Mexico's economy should begin to turn around. However, this comes at a political cost to the PRI, as it loses its powerful base to the oppositin. For Mexico, this could mean true democracy—or repression. □

Problems Facing Contemporary Mexico

BY SUZANNE LEAHY

The five most critical problems presented in the 1980's by Mexico are the external debt, immigration, peasant landlessness, rapid industrialization and urbanization, and the conflict over changing gender roles. The border maquiladoras, when examined, untangle the causes and the close relationships between these problems associated with the uneven and sporadic distribution of modernity.

The border has always been an economic and political facade, separating the social mobility and growth of the United States from Mexico's stagnation and poverty. A "developmentalism" program along the border, the Mexican government thought, could not help but lead to a generation of new employment opportunities for unemployed Mexicans; an expansion of technological knowledge of Mexican workers to procure an industrial future; and an increase in the number of Mexican-made components and raw materials. To benefit from industrialization, the Border Industrialization Program intended to accomplish these goals by offering cheap Mexican labor to the capitalist Americans. As explosive expansion continued along the border, the Mexican government viewed its industrial development as an integral part of Mexico's plan to expand its economic growth and power.

With the increasing industrialization and urbanization of Mexican border cities, U.S. border cities experienced an economic boom due to the increased number of consumers residing on the border. The combination of Mexican cheap labor and Mexico's proximity encouraged U.S. investments along the border; Mexico offered an alternative to overseas production. Additionally, Mexican immigrants filled the service and agricultural sectors within the United States, that offered higher wages than the maquiladoras along the border.

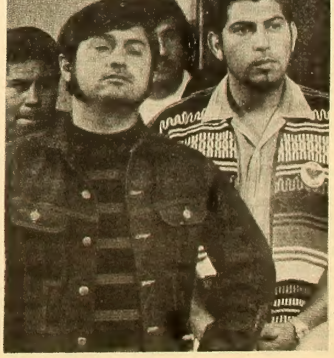
The border attracted migratory movements of Mexicans which filled the occupations offered there to a point beyond the capacity of the border cities to provide jobs. The increasing opportunity of a higher living standard finally gave way to unemployment and underemployment and shanty towns as a result of migration.

According to "Fordism," it is in the interest of maquiladoras to hire those with the most acute economic needs, and, in Mexican society, women are increasingly forming this economic sector. Often husbands leave families to look for employment opportunities in the United States or even desert them for the better life looming north of the border. Whether this is the case or not, most Mexican families need the supplementary income provided by the maquiladoras. Often the only permanent substantial income provider, women are coerced into taking the least desirable jobs. This coercion is demanded by the threat of being replaced by one of the other hundreds of women also in need of jobs.

Not only can the maquiladoras pay less for longer, harder hours worked under worse conditions by hiring women, but also the "male" trade unions can be avoided. Additionally, women workers tend to be temporary, working until they are married or until they have saved enough to take care of the family; this allows employers to escape compensation payments. The call of children or husbands plus the monotony and poor working conditions determine the temporary status of women workers. This furthers the exploitation of women in the maquiladora, since the traditional Mexican social structure allows a dual wage structure for men and women.

Although women are continually exploited and overworked in the work place as well as at home, performing their "double bind" duties, they are wage earners and contribute to the subsistence of the family in the same way which was prescribed to men. As women supplement the income of their families and help earn the money which holds their only hope of a higher standard of living, "they assume a greater role in decision-making areas reserved for males by Mexican cultural norms." It is in this manner that the maquiladora system has encouraged cultural strife during this process of changing gender roles.

Continued on page 8



U.S. Uses New Weapon

BY PETE HUDSON

Between 1970 and 1973, Chile was governed by a democratically elected Socialist President. President Salvadore Allende became president of one of the greatest political experiments in the 20th century: the socialization of a capitalist country by non-revolutionary means. Allende wanted to socialize Chile peacefully, but many interest groups were unsupportive of his efforts and formed strong opposition movements to thwart his plans. The U.S. used its vast resources and control of international credit to assist opposition parties and their overthrow of Allende. Although Chile did pose an ideological threat to the U.S., no military intervention was used to threaten Allende's government. The U.S. policy-makers found other measures equally as effective.

Two main factors supported U.S. economic and political policy toward Allende's government. One, the U.S. did not approve of Chilean expropriation of U.S. owned multinationals, specifically the copper companies controlled by the Anaconda Company and the Kennecott Copper corporation. Two, the U.S. was scared of a spread of communism, described by the domino theory, and wanted to stop it by destabilizing Allende.

By the time of Allende's election, the increasing political mobilization of many Chilean interest groups had resulted in a very fractured political party structure. In 1970, winning the presidential election required party alliances or coalitions, which in Allende's case only amounted to 36.3% of the vote. With his election, Chilean politics had made a significant shift towards the left.

Allende's platform was based on two assumptions. One, the Popular Unity Coalition could achieve state power from a popular election. Two, this power could be used to peacefully transfer capitalism to socialism. This called for many reforms, including nationalizing big business, extensive public welfare programs and land reform. Allende did not want to preserve the status quo, but with the support of only 36.3% of the people, changing the system wasn't realistic.

From the very beginning of Allende's term, the United States began working with the opposition. The U.S. encouraged congressional bribery, political fractioning, opposition publications, strikes, and military activization. The CIA did not initiate these maneuvers, but played an important role in their development through fiscal support. This action was coordinated by the White House and the committee chaired by Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, who said, "I don't see why we need to stand by and watch a country go communist due to the irresponsibility of its own people."

Besides supporting Chilean opposition parties with over $8 million, the U.S. also gave monetary aid to the Chilean military, which for years had been considered apolitical. In 1973, the U.S. Defence Department gave $10 million in military aid to the Chilean forces, twice its normal commitment. Later, in September of 1973, President Salvadore Allende was overthrown by a military barrage and died in the ruins of the governmental palace. U.S. military aid certainly did not discourage this result.

In addition to this subversive support of the opposition, the U.S. began an economic attack which, in combination with Allende's immense spending to nationalize industry, helped to strangle Chile's economy. The U.S. denied Chile foreign credit, created shortages in manufactured parts, and forced Chile to pay its huge debt while refusing to renegociate.

The U.S. used its influence on international credit agencies and Chile's dependence on U.S. credit to help suffocate Chile's economy. It realized that economic chaos would become associated with Allende's socialism and polarize the population in favor of the "right" opposition already strong in Chile. To realize the effect of a U.S. credit blockade on Chile consider that between 1964 and 1970, over $1 billion in economic aid flowed into Chile from the U.S. Agency for International Development (AID), the U.S. Export-Import Bank, the World Bank, and the Inter-American Development Bank (IDB). After 1970, virtually no credit was given to Chile by any of these agencies.

Chile's economy depends a great deal on copper exports. After they nationalized all the U.S. copper companies, U.S. policy also called for a slowing of spare part shipments and cash payments in advance. 95% of the replacement parts for machinery in the copper industry were imported from the United States. By late 1972, about one-third of the machinery in Chile's copper mines was in need of parts. In addition, transportation was greatly affected because most motor vehicle parts came from American based companies, GM or Ford. 33% of Chile's state-owned buses were unable to operate by 1972.

Finally, the U.S. pressured the Allende governme with a debt squeeze, demanding on schedule paymen of over $1.9 billion owed to the U.S. U.S. poli makers had a "no loss" strategy in mind:

> ...if Chile paid up it would have to direct scarce funds from popular programs and development projects, thus generating political opposition; if Chile did not pay, its international credit rating would decline, new loans from non-U.S. sources would not be forthcoming, and loss of financing of imports would cause an economic decline generating political dissent.
>
> —James Petras

Allende tried several times to renegociate with t United States, but each time found the U.S. unwillin to change its policy.

This economic strategy, in combination wi subversive encouragement and support of the politic opposition, was very effective in destabilizing th Allende government. With the active opposition an economic problems that Allende faced, he was unab to effectively control Chile's government, economy, gain public support. The U.S. perceived Allende overthrow as a great victory for U.S. imperialis against the spread of communism.

The victory for the United States had severe implications regarding its foreign policy. No longe did the U.S. have to risk international criticism wi the use of direct intervention in Latin America whe its economic or political interests were threatened b socialist governments. Utilizing its control o international credit, the U.S. could strangle th economy of most developing countries very easil creating public dissent. Also, secret CI organizational advisors could use funds along wit already established opposition groups to sway publi opinion and encourage a coup de etat, instead o overthrowing the government with force.

For Latin American nations who have encourage U.S. investment, dependency on U.S. funds plac them in a precarious position regarding the economic stability. This dependency will also be use to insure that the U.S. is politically safe in th American arena. It considers any Socialist trend a threat. No longer does the U.S. have to get physical to sway Latin American political change. It simply ge fiscal.□

U.S. Brazilian Relations

BY BRIAN SMITH

Brazil is one of the most prosperous countries in both Latin America and the Third World. Brazilians have enjoyed an ever-rising standard of living over the years, and the country has experienced relatively rapid economic growth. Today, the Brazilian economy is the tenth largest in the world (and the eighth largest in the free world). As Brazil's economy continues to grow, Brazil will possess a greater ability to exert some influence on the world, both in an economic and political sense. Given Brazil's growing clout in the Western Hemisphere and the world-at-large, the United States should closely re-examine its foreign policy toward Brazil.

Brazil has a population of some 140 million people. The country's land area is roughly equal to that of the United States. Like the United States, Brazil has been blessed with an abundance of natural resources. Traditionally, the Brazilian economy centered around the cultivation of coffee. But in recent years, the Brazilians have taken advantage of their favorable natural resource base and have subsequently diversified their economy. About the only natural resource which Brazil does not possess is oil. Thus, the economic health of Brazil correlates with the international price of oil. During the late 1960's and early 1970's, when the price of oil was low, Brazil experienced incredible economic growth rates of 10-11% per year. But after the steep oil price rise following the Arab oil embargo of 1973, Brazil's growth rate plummeted.

Brazil's economy became volatile—volatile because its economic fortunes depended not only on the market price for oil (Brazil imports virtually all of its oil) but also on the ruling military dictatorship. It has traditionally been ruled by military leaders. During the '70's the military rulers managed to squander the Brazilian economy by embarking on wasteful economic ventures, borrowing heavily from world financial institutions (the I.M.F., the World Bank, etc.) to pay for these fiascoes. Economic mismanagement combined with the high price of oil in recent years has subsequently saddled Brazil with a huge foreign debt.

A professor here at CC referred to Brazil as "A Belgium or Sweden imposed on an India." What he was referring to was Brazil's dual societies. 90 million of Brazil's 140 million inhabitants live in a state of dire, Third-World poverty. The remaining 50 million people possess a comfortable standard of living. Indeed, Brazil's upper and middle classes lead lives quite similar to most Americans. The modernization and diversification of Brazil's economy after World War II created the Brazilian middle class. But during the slowing down of Brazil's economy in the '70's, the Brazilian middle class lost ground, so to speak. Middle class support of Brazil's military rulers faded, largely because of their mishandling of the economy. In addition, the military's repression of civil liberties didn't exactly help their popularity with the middle class either.

Military rule in Brazil started to gradually come to an end, beginning in 1978. In 1982, the military rulers called for elections to be held in 1984. Even though the military thought they could control the election, they evidentally could not. The military's party lost the '84 election and military rule "officially" ended in 1985. Brazil's new freely elected democratic government set up a system similar to our own. It's national government consists of a president (elected via an electoral college), a Chamber of Deputies (similar to the U.S. House of Representatives), a Senate and a Supreme Court. Brazil also has several state governments which operate under a format similar to state governments in the United States. However, a tendency toward centralization has existed since the 1930's. The result: state governments in Brazil have much less influence and power then they do in the United States.

With a more enlightened and humanitarian central government, along with lower oil prices, Brazil's economy has again picked up steam. Given these circumstances, Brazil's power and influence will increase, both in Latin America and in the rest of the world. Furthermore, Brazil is in "pretty good standing" with the world financial community because it is one of only a handful of Third World nations which has been able to meet its debt requirements. How does Brazil's growing economic political and economic influence affect U.S.-Brazilian relations? The answer: in a number of potential ways, most of them positive for both countries.

Let's start with Brazil's economy. As mentioned before, Brazil used to produce mainly coffee. Now Brazil has transformed itself into an industrial economy—producing goods such as steel, shoes, leather products, textiles and auto parts. In addition Brazil possesses numerous minerals, especially iron ore. Agriculturally, Brazil cultivates not only coffee but also rice, soy beans and tropical fruits. The United States serves as a valuable market for these and other Brazilian products. Thus, Brazil's large, diversified economy benefits American consumers by offering a greater variety of goods. And if the United States can convince the Brazilian government to lower some of its trade barriers, Brazilian consumers will benefit by having access to previously unavailable American goods. In sum, increased trade between Brazil and the United States would benefit both countries.

Brazil can also benefit and enhance our foreign policy aims; by serving as a model for other Latin American and Third World nations to follow. Brazil represents living proof that democracy and capitalism can work in the Third World. It's economic and political success can serve as a check against the scourge of totalitarianism.

Still, Brazil does have the will and the right to develop a foreign policy independent of the United States. But as Brazil becomes more modernized, it can serve as a bridge between the interests of the First and Third Worlds. Brazil looks at itself as a leader among Third World nations. But the cosmopolitan Brazilian middle class also has a high regard and respect for American cultural traits. Thus in our relations with Brazil, the United State should concern itself mostly with economic relations. By increasing trade between the two countries, both parties will benefit. By Brazil's economy thus remaining healthy and ever-more powerful, the government will become more stable. Brazil will become a political-economic model for other underdeveloped nations to follow, and the United States will perhaps achieve a foreign policy aim of diminishing the influence of totalitarian communism in the Third World.□

America As Follower

BY NORMAN LEAHY

The United States today is faced with a crisis the likes of which would terrify even Stephen King. If current trends continue, this country will lose its ability to compete in the world economy and if that comes about, the world economy itself may be imperiled. The great evil that threatens to bring this about is the growing tendency of American business to call for protectionist measures to insulate itself from the influx of foreign goods. The same logic was used in the 1930's, when the government enacted trade barriers so drastic that world trade came to a virtual halt, contributing to the effects of the Depression. We are in similar straights today, and only a thoughtful economic policy can help us avoid the mistakes of the past.

How did these conditions come about? After World War II, the U.S. was the only major industrial nation whose capital stock was left intact. As such, we had the ability to forge ahead of the rest of the world in technical innovation and wealth generation. Over time, the American economy became the dominant economy in the world and our prosperity grew.

While this was taking place, the devastated nations of the world had rebounded, some with U.S. aid, and they too began to grow along with the United States. Eventually, some of these nations were able to utilize copied American technology and cheap labor to undercut the U.S. in some markets. This did not disturb American business much as the gains were not sufficient enough to threaten their profit margins.

By the 1970's however, the gains and inroads made by such nations as Japan and Germany were great enough to force American producers out of some markets for good and make their hold on others more and more tenuous. Today, the situation is even more bleak, with industries and Congress stirring up the specter of protectionism in an attempt to shelter domestic industries.

And indeed some measures have been taken. Protection of the automobile industry in 1984 cost the public $5.8 billion. Protection of the "union label" in textiles cost Americans $27 billion (Business Week April 7, 1986). This money was spent by consumers as an opportunity cost for the insulation of industries that can no longer compete with the lower production costs that nations such as Japan incur.

Then how are American industries to compete? The current mindset among CEO's in the U.S. is to take the production process abroad, where costs are lower. This may seem practical, but it leaves behind massive unemployment and takes overseas the means and benefits of production. Domestically, we are left with a growing service economy that is not as productive or as wealth generating as the lost manufacturing jobs. The other way to compete is to seek trade protection, which does not address the problems of declining productivity or of managerial inefficiency.

Then where are we to turn? This is the $64 question. In the current short run mindset of American industry, we will turn to whatever means gives us the greatest immediate profits. This will not rectify the problems we are faced with. What industry needs is a fundamental change in the way it is organized and in the way it functions if survival is to be hoped for. Easier said than done, but still the only way out. The company of the future, then, must cut back on labor costs and managerial perks and invest itself in the capital intensive wave that has changed production so much.

U.S. industry has the capacity to create for itself as many new frontiers of growth and change as it can imagine. To use this capacity will take a rededication to innovation and hard work, not a rehashing of the failed mercantilist policies of the past.□

BILLY AND AL in..... Debacles of the WORLD
AL! Hey! Wow!! It says here in the DISPARAGING EYE That Democracies EXIST IN EAST ASIA!! WITH MY KNOWLEDGE OF SOCIAL STUDIES AND YOUR ORIENTAL CHARM, WE'RE shoe-ins for jobs AS LOCAL Government officials!! LETS GO!!
AND WHAT'S That disgusting smell over there? Lets clean This place up!
VOTE BILLY AND AL
BOY, That was easy! what do You guys do to celebrate around here?
where's AL?
PEDERSCOTT

Capitalism: Asian Style

BY ROB LYNCH

Where is the greatest economic expansion happening today? Is it in Europe or the United States? Neither, the answer is the capitalist economies of Asia. They are quickly going from "developing" to "developed" countries in the international economic scene. With economies based primarily on exports, South Korea, Taiwan and Hong Kong are challenging American, European and Japanese industrial giants in the high stakes game of international trade. Although these smaller countries lag behind the West in many areas, their recent economic growth is unparalleled compared to any other area of the world.

Currently South Korea's GNP has grown at a 9.5% annual rate, three times that of the U.S. Its per capita annual income has risen from $80 in 1960 to $2,000 a year today. Its economy is giving strong competition to Japan for the U.S. market with 36% of its exports going to the U.S. Through a supportive government, low wages and high productivity, South Koreans are beating their competition in the world market.

The government strengthened the economy through cutting taxes and interest rates and giving assistance to small business. The government exercises limited discretionary control over the economy yet it bases its policies on free enterprise. It plans on relinquishing some of its economic function, however, through reducing its direct control of 10% of the GNP. The government wants to insure longterm economic growth through promoting competition and research and development within the industry so that the country will not have to import most of its technology in the future.

Even though South Korea's export economy has expanded rapidly, the country still faces many problems. It depends on foreign technology, and its large imbalance of trade with the U.S. has made Americans increasingly angry. Further, the government is just beginning to deal with the consequences of economic growth. To answer problems of human needs, it is pushing to increase the quality of life of individuals through greater availability of education and increased public welfare. Nevertheless, their biggest problems lie in the political realm. Their internal situation has become increasingly destabilizing as their military dictator must compromise with the opposition. The major stumbling block is on the issue of achieving Korea's first peaceful transition of power in decades. Most observers believe that constitutional reform is desperately needed to strengthen the legitimacy of the government. South Korea must come of age politically by meeting its problems head on for its economic success to continue at its present pace.

South Korea's per capita annual income has risen from $80 in 1960 to $2,000 today.

Taiwan is another example of the great success of capitalism in Asia. To say the least its economy is also booming, with the country acting like a big export processing zone. Because of its low wages, Taiwan has attracted increasing Japanese foreign investment and has maintained an advantage in the world market by keeping the value of its currency low. Further, because Taiwan is still considered a developing nation, it continues to receive U.S. trade preferences. However, its policies of free trade abroad and protectionism at home may eventually cause problems. If Taiwan doesn't open up its markets to foreign goods, it will eventually have to pay the price. Protectionism has made the U.S. and other countries threaten to put up barriers of their own. Taiwan's protectionist export economy has caused internal economic problems as well by giving its citizens much purchasing power which lays idle. Moreover, public services on the whole are not good. The government must follow Korea's lead through promoting long term economic growth and a better quality of life for its citizens.

Hong Kong is another intriguing example of an economically prosperous capitalist area with an uncertain future. If the agreement stands, Great Britain will transfer control of Hong Kong to the Chinese by the year 2000. Although China has experimented with limited free enterprise in recent years, one still has to believe that China is similar to a blind man leading the future of intensely capitalistic Hong Kong. China will undoubtedly want to keep its new acquisition strong, yet there is still that threat of hampering economic growth through the influence of socialism. Hopefully, China will follow England's example by leaving a good thing alone. If China can restrain its collectivist impulses in regards to Hong Kong, this symbol of successful free enterprise can be maintained.

South Korea, Taiwan and Hong Kong are very similar in the sense that they are basically capitalist success stories but nevertheless have problems. The combination of economic liberalism and political repression are problems these countries must face. They have succeeded in developing their exports, but they must now promote a better balance of trade through less protectionism and greater imports. Nevertheless, long term economic growth depends on political stability. These governments will have to provide for the welfare of their people by patterning themselves after the efficiency of private industry. Enlightened political leadership is needed to look at the successes and failures of the past to see a clear vision for an even brighter future.□

Mehan Continued from page 4

oppressed Poland, and of course others from economically stagnant Mexico, but all anxiously await their chance to become a part of American society. Some have waited for over a decade, others for a few years, now it is only a few weeks until their dream may come true, yet many are still worried, not knowing their status under the new law, and they may have to wait more while the new law is sorted out in court.

However, U.S. employers will most likely continue to hire illegal workers. The Mexican economy must provide at least 800 thousand new jobs a year to keep up with the growing labor force, if, as it is expected, it cannot meet this then, more Mexicans will look to the north for employment, and the new immigration law may become a "paper tiger."□

S. Leahy Continued from page 5

The maquiladora system has also excluded the traditional work force, males that migrated with their families; to remain idle and unemployed. "...(It is possible) that maquiladoras operate as a magnet in the migration to border cities, but that the population attracted to the border is not absorbed by maquiladoras..." Contributing to high unemployment rates, the border still host males who had formerly worked north in the brazero program. These new arrivals have translated easily into an influx of undocumented workers who are readily embraced by American businessmen.

As undocumented workers in the United States, immigrants form "a category that employers find especially attractive because it entails literally no rights whatsoever for the workers involved." These workers fulfill the capitalistic principle of vulnerability: receiving higher wages than most Mexicans, immigrants still cut the labor cost for American businessmen. And, factory raids and frequent deportations act as deterrants against immigrant union organizing. In the United States, male immigrants play the same role that women play in the maquiladoras.

"Primitive accumulation" and land expropriation accounts for the large population of wandering, unemployed peasants. The peasantry has been historically kicked off their land, to be replaced by industrial plants or exported crops. Although this expropriation is necessary to form a labor class, it reduces the amount of agrable land plowed for subsistency crops for Mexicans rather than foreign consumers. The result is forced migration from internal mexico to the cities, to the border cities, and, unavoidably into the United States. Consequently, Mexico must import goods to feed its rapidly increasing population because it no longer has the agriculture investments to support its masses.

Not only is Mexico importing goods to feed its starving masses, but also Mexico imports new technologies, "including 'know-how agreements' that facilitate their profit-making inside Mexico and their influence over the Mexican state." The recurrent themes of dependency, monopoly, and unemployment allow Mexico's population as well as the country's resources to be exploited.

The United States' continual external control of Mexico has led to an insured debt. Incentive after incentive has been passed on to the American businessman to drive down the competition of other third world nations. Tariffs were lowered until they were virtually non-existent and the foreign control of transnational companies extended until it was solidified at 100%. The Mexican government must remain competitive or the American businessmen, no longer finding it as profitable to maintain maquiladoras on the Mexican border, will close down these businesses and reopen new ones overseas where the cost of production is still at a minimal. As a result, the consequences would be of such threatening social unrest that it is too dangerous to arrest the growth of the maquiladora system.

On the other hand, after more than ten years of existence the maquiladora program has hardly contributed to improve the balance of payments. Borrowing more and more money to industrialize Mexico, the Mexican government claims to be pitching Mexico towards future economic independence. In truth, however, instead it is furthering the interdependency of Mexico and the United States economies.

Although Mexico is highly dependent on U.S. trade and loans as well as the social stability the U.S. provides, mexico does have a few "bargaining chips" such as its reserves of oil, inexpensive labor power, and "independent" foreign policy. Through use of these methods, perhaps, Mexico can instigate bilateral relations. Without bilateral relations, Mexico will increasingly become dependent, as a transnational society and, as it is further and further annexed politically economically, the Southwest of the United States shall gradually inherit the social unrest of Mexico.□

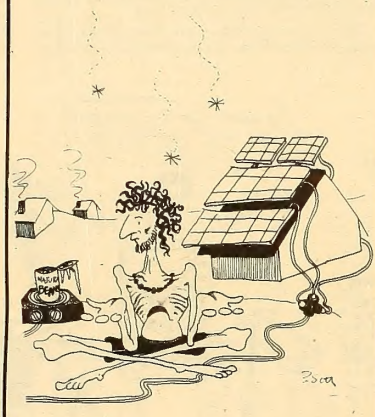
Johnson Continued from page 3

aerosol cans, plastic packaging, styrofoam cups, paper plates, disposable pens and lighters and anything else disposable. Throwaways are wasteful of resources. They also take up landfill space.

Buy food in bulk, and buy food that is grown regionally. Bananas and other tropical food products are not only wasteful of energy (in transportation over thousands of miles), but they are helping to destroy the world's remaining rainforests.

One of the easiest and most important things you can do is recycle. Recycle everything that you can, which is a lot. Paper alone makes up one half of consumer waste. Recycling reduces mining and foresting demands, saves energy and water, and reduces pollution. Every ton of paper recycled saves 17 trees and up to one hundred gallons of gasoline. Recycled aluminum takes only 5% as much energy to produce as aluminum produced from bauxite. Pick up aluminum cans when you're out walking around.

When major segments of the population begin to pick up low impact habits, we will be on the road to a sustainable society and an ecologically non-destructive one. Environmentalists, in beginning an ongoing examination of lifestyles, can help initiate the necessary changes. Without environmentalism as a way of life, at home as well as in political causes, human beings will cut their own throats by destroying the webs of life that allow them to live.□



Recycling is one way we can all have an impact on helping to better our environment and ourselves. Recycling is easy for all of us here at CC, and it is something we must strive for. ENACT, the student environmental organization, picks up recyclables from the three sheds and several paper barrels set up across campus. ENACT recycles an average of one ton of newsprint each week, and huge amounts of cardboard, mixed paper and aluminum. These recyclables are sold to City Waste, which in turn sells them back to manufacturers who turn them into new products. The money which comes from the recycling of CC materials is used for ENACT projects and donated to environmental organizations. The recycling program at CC has been successful, but ENACT needs your help. There is much more to be done.

RECYCLE!

What can be recycled:

—Aluminum (cans and foil)
—Newspaper (place in bags or bundles)
—Cardboard (boxes and corrugated)
—Mixed paper (any paper)
*Note: ENACT has temporarily stopped recycling glass.

Where:

Three sheds are located at:
—Bemis (between Bemis and Loomis)
—Mathias (Southwest of Mathias)
—Slocum (North of Slocum near Nevada Ave.)
—Barrels for mixed paper are located in the student center, Olin Fishbowl, and Armstrong Basement.

ENACT meets every Wednesday at 7:00 in the ENACt

ENACT meets every Wednesday at 7:00 in the ENACT office next to Mathias desk, everyone is welcome.

Remember—Recycle this paper.

S. Leahy Continued from page 4

Undocumented workers fill the sectors which Americans depend upon; at the same time, they pay taxes and social security, rarely receiving benefits.

As Mexicans have increasingly become a source of cheap labor so near to home, Mexicans have increasingly been deported and prejudiced against. More than any other undocumented immigrant worker in recent history, the Mexican has been persecuted, not because he takes away American jobs, but, because using this tactic of oppression, the American business sector prospers from reduced costs. Consequently, American laborers are afraid to unionize and demand higher wages because they know how easily their strikes can be broken by the ever-lasting undocumented immigrant worker supply, that remains outside of the law and outside of protection from exploitation. This furthers the plight of American and undocumented wage laborers.

Discrimination is not the only way the Administration threatens to enslave the American people: this law will cost 10-12 billion dollars to implement in its first five years, increasing militarization of the borders, which already is such a corrupt system, and various other funds, one of which will require a national identification card, much like the one required in South Africa today. The American public is indeed drugged by the Reverend Reagan's denouncement of government intervention; Reagan supports increasing the files on Americans' lives.

And, it's not as if the national identification system would ever work—look at how many underaged teenagers by alcohol with fake ID's. There is no tamper proof ID card; as long as undocumented immigrants are needed, there will be a growing market, leeching off of them, supplying them with fake residential identification cards. The question still remains, then: why does the government want Americans to carry national identification cards, even if they realize the system can not possibly work? Is it not another miracle drug being pierced into our bloodstream?

Farquhar Continued from page 1

The government's official grounds for rejecting applicants is that they are economic not political refugees.

The Tucson Ecumenical Council submitted 1500 asylum applications. Many of the applicants' bodies had marks of torture, bullet wounds, and had witnessed rapes and murders of their fellow civilians at home. All but one of these applicants was turned down. The government is currently appealing that one case in an immigration court to get it turned down.

Rejected applicants are sent back to their native countries. A volunteer group in San Salvador is responsible for interviewing the deported people and reporting its findings to the State Department. The government report on one list of people indicated that of the 482 people, 73 were not interviewed because it was too dangerous to travel to their homes. In addition, 188 names were not traceable due to incomplete or entirely false information. Other studies indicate that 1 in 50 of the deported Salvadorans are killed upon arrival.

One Salvadoran, Jose Segovia, was told by the judge who deported him that he could try to re-enter the United States legally if he contacted the U.S. Embassy. "Fearing for his life, he said, he tried to do so in San Salvador, the capital. Segovia said U.S. Embassy guards would not let him enter the building unless he could prove he owned a house or a car, or had $10,000." (The Arizona Daily Star, 2/13/86.)

Sanctuary

As awareness of the plight of the refugee has increased, a number of groups have formed in the United States. The Sanctuary Movement is one of the more successful. The Sanctuary Movement started in 1982, on the second anniversary of the assasination of Archibishop Komero.

The group works through the church to make shelter available to refugees. Sanctuary tries to protect the refugees from arrest and deportation, and provides them with legal assistance should they be arrested.

The groups other major objective is to eventually change American policy towards Central American refugees, and ultimately to affect American policy towards Central America itself.□

Vito Acconci

BY ERIC BREITBARD AND SUSAN GRIAK

We found Vito Acconci in the busy Lithography studio in Packard, working on the piece he designed for CC's third print workshop (see separate article). Acconci is most well known for his controvertial 1971 work, Seedbed, where he masturbated under the gallery floor. Although that particular piece will always be mentioned with Acconci's name, the whole body of his conceptual and performance works—which have progressed from intimate personal spaces to mildly provocative public spaces—have affected the directions of contemporary art.

Acconci answered questions in his hoarse, heavy New York accent for about forty-five minutes last week in the Packard lobby. He had absolutely no qualms about discussing his work and art in general; he was intelligent, articulate, and friendly. Above all, he was a New Yorker.

E.B. In my class today we were talking about a medieval poem, and I thought of something you said last night about private space and public space. El Cid, the hero of the poem, would break down in emotional outbursts in front of whoever was there; he didn't differentiate between private and public space the way we, in our culture, do now. Do you think, in your early works, you were trying to break down that barrier?

V.A. Yeah, I think in a way I was. But I don't know if I was really doing that or if I was exaggerating the barrier. I doubt if I was thinking medieval, but I came out of the sixties, and that sixties time was so much about that — so much about notions of encounter group. ...I'm not so sure if I'm so crazy about those notions.

E.B. You mean now?

V.A. Yeah, but even then I thought there was something about a kind of fake community. It seems to be about a lot of privacies, and then each privacy would sort of explode in public. But it didn't seem to be any kind of joining of individuals. Maybe along the same lines, and I don't know when this started to strike me, again about a public space notion, is that in America, though maybe early this wasn't true, there's no tradition of a town square. There's no tradition of a public meeting place. The nearest equivalent to the town square is the shopping mall. Which is exactly the opposite, because a person goes in order to consume, whereas a town square is a place where people go in order to meet, argue, discuss a public situation — discuss a situation that everyone's affected by. It's a kind of self-government.

S.G. That's what's lacking here on this campus right now.

V.A. It's lacking everywhere in America though. I don't think it exists. In fact, I was interested in this idea, I'm not sure who first put it forward, this view that's probably exaggerated but I love it, that the suburbs were invented in order to get people out of the city. Because once people are in the city, they're close together and they can discuss, they can argue, they can then start a revolution. I know those kinds of notions are in the back of my mind. More with recent work than early work, because early work was more about...I was talking about a breakdown of self, but with public implied later.

The early work was so much about a kind of person-to-person relationship. I think my stuff has always been about relationships, but early stuff was more about a kind of person-to-person intimate relationship. The more recent stuff is about the kind of town square thing. It almost seems like early stuff was about "bedroom," later stuff is about town squares.

S.G. Looking back now, it seems that you've always reached some sort of higher enlightenment aobut whatever you were doing, and then moved on.

V.A. Oh yeah, but that doesn't necessarily mean that I think that the next step I make is better. But it's true that the way I usually think is, "okay, what was left out here, did this have some kind of implications that maybe I don't like, and then how do I go on?" I tend to drive myself into a corner, and then maybe try to go on to something else.

S.G. Do you see any particular phase of your career as being your favorite?

V.A. It's hard for me to say, because there are things that I liked in each phase.

S.G. But you're glad that you got out?

V.A. Yeah, but at the same time there are things that I miss. It seems like there were things that just couldn't be done anymore. It was so connected to a time, that maybe it didn't make so much sense at a later time. I still miss some parts of live presence. The thing I miss about it especially is the notion of being on the spot. You never knew what was going to happen. It was almost like the situation of a kind of stand-up comedian — the lights go on, ya gotta perform. There's no turning back.

I never liked the word 'performance' so much, because 'performance' seems to mean 'theater' to me. My stuff was more about a space that you pass by, rather than a theater, which is a space that you go to, and there's a defined time. I've always liked the kind of thing that you sort of happen upon. But one meaning of the word 'performance' that always interested me is 'perform' in the sense of carrying out a contract — you promised you were gonna do something, now ya gotta come through. And that notion of 'performance' seemed important to the kinds of live stuff I was doing.

E.B. You brought up stand-up comedians, has anyone ever compared you to Woody Allen.

V.A. ...I don't think they have.

E.B. What do you think about that?

V.A. I've always thought that my stuff was funnier than other people thought. I expected people to laugh more, even at early work. I can understand why people don't, they don't quite know where I'm coming from yet. I don't mean that I think it's just funny, but I think funny is part of it. It's funny, but then maybe you feel queazy at the same time. It's a mixture. But I think the funny is really an important part of it.

E.B. But it's not just the funniness, it's the self-ananysis. Woody Allen makes a movie about his own psychological problems, and then he analyzes himself.

V.A. Yeah, I've always felt that way. I always wondered why there's such a tendency, especially for people in New York, to have some kind of psychoanalyst or therapist, and I wondered why haven't I ever had one? Why should I? I had my early pieces! I'm sure those early pieces had that kind of function.

E.B. Not anymore?

V.A. I don't know if the newer stuff can have that kind of function, because wouldn't you have to use your own person? ...Maybe not...sure, the pieces are ways for me to try out ideas, troubles, doubts, hesitations. I do think of art as sort of a way to live. I can't think of art as separate from it. I've always had a problem with art just thought of as form, or color, or shape. First of all I just don't believe that, I don't believe anything is just form. Things always have some kind of metaphoric association, so I've never understood the view that you look at something just formally. I just don't think it's possible for a human mind to do that.

...I've always thought of my stuff in terms of some kind of pop music of the time, though I haven't thought of it that much recently. For some reason I seem to have lost track of music right now. But in the early 70's, my pieces seemed to me very much like Van Morrison, Neil Young — long songs, single voice, this person drifting around the notion of self. By the mid 70's it seems like my pieces have changed and my influences have changed. Now it was the Sex Pistols, The Ramones — short songs, instead of single voice circling around oneself, a kind of mass voice that pounces on an audience. When I first heard the Sex Pistols, I thought, this is one of the prime moments of my life.

S.G. And now music is in so many different directions you don't know what to do.

V.A. I just don't understand it anymore! There's nothing that strikes me the way that stuff used to strike me.

E.B. Well, what's on your turntable?

V.A. When I listen to stuff, I'm listening to stuff that I knew from '77, '78, not new stuff. I mean I've tried, I've even bought Prince records, but I can't play them, I can't connect.

...Sometimes I look at work of mine and it seems like the career of the work is almost like a child growing up. First you sort of realize you're there, then you realize another person's there, then you realize a whole mass of people are there, and gradually you realize you can leave the room, and the room still stays there even when you aren't there. In some ways my work has come like that.

I think one of the reasons why a lot of early work for me started using my own person has something to do with the fact that I came to art from outside — I came from a writing background, so that coming into an art context I didn't really have any art "rules." There was nothing I could focus on, so I probably had to find something to depend on. I had to focus on something that I could at least assume I knew something about. In other words I could use myself as a starting point.

E.B. But you did gain some familiarity with art "rules."

V.A. The thing about art "rules" —

S.G. There aren't any.

E.B. There are "codes..."

V.A. There were codes, but what always puzzled me about people who went to art school is that they learn one set of codes. It was very much a Western culture set of codes, but there are a lot of other kinds of art. And I think one thing that people at the end of the 60's did was to start to look at some other codes. Also, we started to think of art as not necessarily an isolated field, but as part of a common culture. There were cultural codes, there were cultural conventions, I certainly don't want to avoid those. What I wanted to avoid was art as an isolated thing — that notion of art for art. That life is here, and art is somewhere else. That seemed so wrong to me because if art can make any sense it has to be an instrument in the world. Art should be a way of knowledge. It should be a way to grope through things. It should be exploratory more than a finished fact.

E.B. A book is a finished fact.

V.A. Well, it's a finished fact just in the sense that there's a last sentence. But everytime you read a sentence you make a connection, you're out of just the book.

E.B. Last night you said that you hate "art as priest." What do you mean, and why?

V.A. One thing that I think happened in my generation is that artists started to think more about talking about their work. One of the reasons they did that, we did that, was that we objected to an abstract expressionist painters' view, where they say, "I don't know where it came from, I just did it. It just happened. It came to me." Wait a second, if somebody said, "This comes to me," there's the implication that this person is some kind of visionary. This person got the vision normal people didn't.

I and my generation started to think that art is just a thinking system, the way there's any other thinking system. Anybody has the capacity to do it. It's not this message from God. So, the thing I object to about "art as priest," is that it implies that some are chosen, and too bad for the others. I think for me and my generation the urge was to try to get to an art that wasn't in another world that the viewer couldn't reach..

S.G. Where do you come up with a lot of your ideas? Do you spend a lot of time —

V.A. —Brooding? Pacing? I do, yeah, but I also try to grab things. Like movies, music, architecture. I have a tendency to have a lot of books around, and I have this over-elaborate book system with like 65 categories, so that if I think that I have some ideas, I can go and just pull out things. I like to have things around me. Even if I don't necessarily look at the books, they're sort of like pets.

I feel most comfortable working when I'm given a particular situation to work with — like a certain sized room. I start to think of very basic things, like what can a wall mean? Is a wall something that stops you? Is a wall something you can bang your head against? Is a wall a trap? Or is it comfortable? Do you lean against the wall? I'm probably revealing my background in writing — I still think very much in terms of written language.

S.G. What about movies? Have any recent films influenced your thinking?

V.A. Brian DePalma interests me a lot. There's something I find detestable, I think it's so inherently sexist. Yet at the same time there's something... of all American filmmakers, he seems to be the only one that really speaks with the camera. It's so much about camera movements meaning something. I still think the first five or six minutes of Carrie are some of the most amazing American filmmaking. It's just an astonishing scene where Sissy Spacek is in the shower, and it starts with very slow focus, very soft music, and she has this bar of soap and she's washing, washing, washing her body. The camera drifting so slowly down her body that you almost don't notice. It's drifting down her body, and then as it comes to her stomach, and past her stomach, there's blood. As soon as that happens, all-of-a sudden, what was in soft focus becomes very sharp focus. Music that was very slow, very soft, becomes very loud. And she comes out of the shower and into this high school girls locker room, looking very puzzled. And then there's this amazing scene where all these high school girls bombard her with tampons, and push her up against a corner, throwing tampons against her, and yelling, "Plug it up! Plug it up!"

That was one of the most startling things I've ever seen. It was such a total male fantasy, or maybe even a Catholic male fantasy — which maybe I respond to, I don't know, mabye Brian DePalma had the same kind of Italian/Catholic background that I did. Maybe this goes back to early work of mine, maybe it still applies to more recent work, but I tend to like movie-makers that seem to have some sort of undigested psychological material that they have to deal with.

E.B. Most of your work that we've talked about has been three-dimensional, the work you're doing here is a two-dimensional print. What's the link between the two?

V.A. I've done prints throughout my career. They always seemed to have started off something to me, sometimes they sum things up. I think I mentioned about my bias in favor of three-dimensional space. Two-dimensional space is difficult for me to deal with. But it's a kind of time out, a way to re-group forces, and you can see things more clearly on the two-dimensional space. I always hope a print will start me off in some other direction. I have no idea if this is going to or not. I have a feeling this sums up things more than starts them off.

E.B. This is an end?

V.A. I think, I'm not sure...

Neil Young and Crazy Horse: Garage Gig

BY ALEC REKOW

Tuesday night in McNichol's Arena, the band Crazy Horse helped rock dinosaur Neil Young celebrate his forty-first birthday in a three hour garage jam-session that roused 8,000 fans from their seats, blasted them airborn for most of the show, but left them dangling after a lame encore like the bloated spider in the group's rusted-out garage that they used as a stage-prop.

Billed as the third best garage band in the world, Young and Crazy Horse members Frank Sampedro—guitarist and keyboardist, Billy Talbot—bassist, and Frank Molina—drummer, hoisted the garage-door at 7:30 p.m. as they quickly introduced monsterous distortion and guitar feedback that began in "Mr. Soul," (a relic from Young's Buffalo Springfield days) and prevailed throughout the show.

Various critters, ranging from that bloated spider to several pesky cockroaches and some talking mice, danced around the garage's oversized props of washer and dryer, elk antlers, and an obnoxious telephone, while Neil and the boys pounded through such re-forged ancients as "Cinnamon Girl," "When You Dance," and "Down by the River." Chatter stayed minimal between songs, as group members saved their energy for solo guitar stomps while Young thundered about the garage like a hobbled bronco.

Young incorporated material from his latest album "Landing on Water" into the show which included two smoking musical indictments of President Reagan's foreign policies. He also strapped on his acoustic guitar for several solo efforts such as "Heart of Gold," "Sugar Mountain," and "After the Gold Rush." Here the audience glimpsed Young, the master of melancholy, as the wailing of harmonica echoed behind his tarnished and emotive lyrics, carrying the audience on a magical journey "dancin cross the water...on a slow galleon" that "plunges through the waves."

Throughout most of the show, however, Young and Crazy Horse played thunder stompers. "Powderfinger," "Like a Hurricane," and "Hey Hey, My My" epitomized the group's ability to throw musical metal pieces across the arena like the roars of range bulls.

Overall, the garage theatrics may have taken away from the show. An irate neighbor and accompanying policemen chased Neil Young and Crazy Horse out of the garage and off the stage to end the gig. While the band returned for a meager encore of one of Young's newer songs, "That's Why We Don't Want to be Good," they quickly shut the garage door on the audience's hopes of a classic wrap-up jam. Surprisingly, tunes such as "Southern Man," "Cowgirl in the Sand," and "Old Man" were left out of the encore. As one irritated fan from Texas snarled: "That's one lame way to end an awesome show!"

Short Order at CU

BY KATIE DALSEMER

"Confusion, Confusion": When I volunteered to review the Tuesday New Order concert in Boulder I never imagined that it might be rather difficult. Let's just say that this was not your typical show.

From the start I knew the concert would be different: The stage in the C.U. Events Center had been moved up, only one-third of the seats were being used, and the crowd was not full of the usual rowdy concert-goers, only a few hyperactive new-wavers here and there.

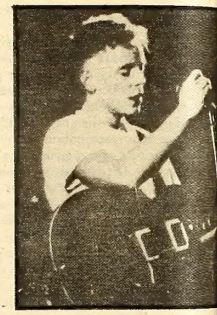
Like most concerts this one also had a relatively unknown warm-up band. The group in question was Love Tractor. Yeah, I thought the name was pretty amusing too. Although, I already had my mind set on not taking these guys too seriously, I did give them an attentive listen. The first couple of songs sounded a little like R.E.M. but lacked originality and energy. Later, the group did a few respectable covers but by this time I was starting to yawn and the rest of the crowd's enthusiasm seemed to mirror mine.

Of course Love Tractor didn't get much of a response because we all wanted to see New Order. In fact I was so anxious to see them that I managed to sneak down on the floor a few feet from the stage. Finally, at about 9:00 pm the lights dimmed and it was show time.

New Order's entrance onto the s was, well, less than spectacular. Actual took some people a while to realize they were even out there. Pretty however, the familiar sounds of the "Elegia" filled the auditorium. Like name suggests it is a slow, somber that basically set the mood for the re the show.

After a couple more songs like "Vigilantes" from the Low Life album "Angel Dust" from the new Brotherhood album I got the impres that a strong rapport with the audi was not one of New Order's top priori The band members only interacted each other and the sole acknowledgm of the crowd was an occasional thank

True, the band's reputation aloofness was apparent but so was th perfectionism. Except for a min amount of feedback every song exceptional and showed none of ravages of being performed live. member played their respec instruments with such precise skill timing that it was almost like watchi video. This and the fact that New Or one of my favorite groups left me a awe-struck.



Forty-five minutes into the show a driving beat started resounding thro the auditorium and the audience qui recognized it as the beginning of popular "Blue Monday." Except for singer Bernard Albrecht taking microphone and rattling it around insi Coke cup the song was right on track the professionalism of the other tunes the end of the song we all stood by wai for much more but instead New Or crept off stage in the same fashion as entrance.

I was dumb-founded. Was this it? So not. Soon, however the lights were tu on and the roadies started breaking up crowd needless to say was not pleased New Order's anti-pop attitude had reac its peak and the band certainly did p that it was a new kind of order b performing for the pleasure of audience.

Overall I did enjoy seeing these m musicians at work, but now I can't wondering if Bernard Albrecht ha audience in mind when he sang "Face with closed eyes and exclaimed: "Oh, b can not bear the thought of you."

Next Issu in Arts

Billy Bragg, Law Anderson, and th Leeches starring

MARTIN SHEEN
Startling new evidence of HOPE for the nuclear age... even though every child born today begins its life in a state of emergency...
A STATE OF EMERGENCY
A RICHARD BENNETT FILM
also starring PETER FIRTH and TIM PIGOTT-SMITH also starring FRANCES TOMELTY, KENNETH HAIGH, DUDLEY SUTTON, BOB SHERMAN and FIONNULA FLANAGAN as Diane, Director of Photography WILLY KURANT. Music Composed by GEORGE GARVARENTZ, Screenplay by RAY CUNNEFF and TOM GUGGINO, Story by TOM GUGGINO, Produced and Directed by RICHARD BENNETT © 1986 EsStar Productions, Inc. all rights reserved
A DOUBLE "O" ASSOCIATES, INC. RELEASE IN ASSOCIATION WITH EsSTAR PRODUCTIONS INC.
PG PARENTAL GUIDANCE SUGGESTED
SOME MATERIAL MAY NOT BE SUITABLE FOR CHILDREN
SHOWING AT RUSTIC HILLS NORTH
Fri.: (5:30; 7:30; 9:30)
Sat. & Sun.: (1:30; 3:30; 5:30; 7:30; 9:30)
1605 N. Academy 597-9481

The Best and the Brightest

BY LIZ CHENEY

eteran's Day. A day when America should elebrating her freedom. A day when Americans should onoring the men and women who have died for that eedom. A day, instead, when veterans in many parts of country paraded through half-empty streets.

low dare we. How dare we take our freedom so ntly. How easy it is for us to life our daily lives without considering the men and women who have fought rotect our ability to live those lives as we choose. Our ity, for instance, to be able to choose to read this wspaper, or to protest this college's investment in uth Africa, or even to be able to attend this college at ttendance at The Colorado College means, efully, that we are constantly being exposed to a ad range of political beliefs and are gaining the skills think clearly, analyze, and evaluate the validity of se beliefs. Somewhere along the line, pride in erica, confidence that our liberal democratic system mply the best, most enlightened system that has ever ted, has been lost in the shuffle. Advocation of this y of thinking brings criticism of close-mindedness, d is often explained away by insisting the advocate is rely a product of his/her upbringing in this liberal mocracy. Of course! How could anyone given to eful introspection and thought arrive at this clusion?

riticism is healthy. Self-criticism is perhaps the most althy of all. In his book, How Democracies Perish, ancois Revel calls self-criticism "the vital springs of mocratic civilization and one of the reasons for its eriority over all other systems."

here's a vital and important difference, however, tween self-criticism and constant self-condemnation.

We are living under the best system created by some of the best and brightest minds in history.

evel, in reference to U.S./Soviet relations, points out at self-condemnation is a source of weakness and eriority in dealing with an adversary that has pensed with such scruples.

Revel also explains that democratic civilization is the t in history to blame itself because another power is rking to destroy it. To those who question if the viets are indeed working for democracy's destruction, s necessary merely to point out the logical rationality the Soviets behaving this way. Our two systems are mpletely incompatible and communism's survival pends on democracy's annihilation.

The Soviets are aided in this battle not only by our lf-condemnation, but as Revel puts it, by the spugnance on the part of many Westerners to ognize Soviet expansionism for what it is." Our willingness to accept the superpower conflict in any ht except to treat it as tension between two morally uivalent powers, says we have in some way lost sight the goals of our founding fathers. We have begun to e our freedom for granted.

Because we live in a country where we enjoy the rights ought to have, the rights that are inalienably ours, we get the endless struggle that has taken place to obtain maintain our freedom. D.H. Lawrence described rectly the American situation when he said, "Men are st when they are most unconscious of freedom." We cannot, however, let this unconsciousness become thy. We can't neglect the defense of our freedom. We rt, as Rousseau cautioned, remember this: "You may quire liberty, but once lost it is never regained."

We at CC should continue to criticize, analyze, and luate. We should not, however, be afraid of arriving at conclusion that we are living under the best system ared by some of the best and brightest minds in tory.

z Cheney is a junior and member of Colorado College onservative Students.

Baseball, Politics and Conservatives

BY COREY ABEL

This is about politics, but I'm going to touch on baseball to begin. When the batter takes his place at the plate, the pitcher on the mound, and fielders in their places, and when they commence to pitch, hit, and catch, they are engaged in an activity we call baseball. Manifest in its having a precise identity is the activity's possession of particular, discernible defining characteristics. In other words, we recognize baseball according to its rules and practices, including unwritten, traditionally derived behaviors a well as the more obvious written, explicit ones, also traditionally derived. Similarly, the participants in baseball recognize themselves to be engaged in a particular, homogeneous, self-defined idiom of activity.

Fans, players, and owners alike would be astonished should anyone suggest that baseball players wear skates. Those are accoutrements belonging to another activity, separate and distinct from baseball, and they imply separate manners of thought and activity, and require different mastery. The astonishment one would feel upon hearing such a suggestion is a function of one's recognition of the irrelevance and confusion underlying the notion of skating baseball players. This irrelevance-induced astonishment is the same feeling I get, when someone speaks of a "scientific solution to the political problems of today." Science has caught the fancy of practical, political actors in the modern world, and is widely thought to hold the answers to all conceivable problems. I hope to show however, that science and politics are separate idioms of activity, and like baseball and skating, that they are irrelevant to each other.

Science conceives the world quantitatively in its attempt to explain it in absolutely stable, general terms without regard to the qualifications of time and place. Generalizations are posed in hypothetical and statistical terms. With respect to this, science supposes a (temporal) tabula rasa, as its hypotheses are not grounded in particular historical circumstances. The truth of a scientific idea exists independent of time.

Practical experience on the other hand, concerned with the conduct of life, has temporality and change as its central features — the prevention or production of change. That there is always a discrepancy between "what is" and what is "to be" (including that which is to be maintained), involves practice in a dilemma of unresolvability. Any time some point is reached, another "to be" presents itself.

We can recognize that science and practical life are, so to speak, "two different ball games." The assumptions and manners of activity in each (the rules and the playing) are distinct, and irrelevant to each other. Politics belongs to practical experience as a specific engagement in particular areas of practical life, namely "attending to the general arrangements of a collection of people, who, in respect of their common recognition of a manner of attending to its arrangements, compose a single community." (Michael Oakeshott, "Political Education"). I may seem to be suggesting that one cannot, or should not think scientifically about politics. Properly speaking, one can't; to do so is either not science or not politics, thinking in that manner does nothing for science per se, nor for politics. However, adjectivally, we may consider politics "scientific," meaning more accurately, the attempt at a rational analysis, and the presumption of some degree of generalizability which would render a hypothetical approach valid. To presume oneself to think scientifically about politics literally then, leads to confusion and frustration — not that it can't be tried, but to do so is akin to trying to run bases in skates. I have no interest though, in prescribing political policy, for to formulate a principle based plan is one of the manifestations of the so-called scientific approach, or, political rationalism.

The rationalist is drawn to the order, certainty, and simplicity (theoretical "elegance") of scientific explanation, and seeks to employ it in politics in the form of a technical approach. This relies on examining 'crises' independent of their contextual and historical continuity, and proposes to offer 'rational' (i.e. based on universal principles logically arrived at) solutions. Also, the rationalist relies on technique, the knowledge of "how to" manuals rather than on an intimate understanding of his or her own political tradition and present condition. Politics becomes, under this scheme, a process of abrupt discontinuity, of "programs" and their destruction; the search for, ex nihilo, a better world.

To the conservative, such pursuits represent the fundamental dilemma of modern political thinking. the conservative pursues "intimations," gauging political conduct by the standard of his or her tradition, preferring politics of repair and resuscitation. A conservative recognizes that the so-called "original" ideas of the rationalist are themselves derived, and can only be derived, out of a given, familiar manner of thinking, and that to change something doesn't require a radical shift in an "objective" world. Rather, the conservative seeks a comfortable place within this — the only — world, and without an ideological destination, sets about only to attain calmness and moderation in political affairs.

Corey Abel is a senior and member of the Colorado College Conservative Students.

Liberalism: A Mediocre Response to a Common Problem

BY INGER THOMSEN

We would all like to consider ourselves liberated liberal arts students; we admire liberal minded people who give liberally to good causes. Perhaps through folk etymological association with the meanings of "broadmindedness" and "generous" which belong to the word "liberal," the ideology of the modern liberal mind has come to have an inherently positive meaning. Liberalism is no longer seen as a choice to most of us nestled at T.F.O.P.P., but rather as something obviously desirable or as the natural state of affairs. It is ironic that we have in a sense lost our freedom towards this ideology founded in self-determinism.

Kenneth Minogue, in The Liberal Mind, is helpful in elucidating the assumptions that are made when we blindly embrace liberalism. Three of the assumptions of liberalism that he mentions are the divorce of the modern world from history, the illusion of ultimate unity, and the rejection of moral rules.

Liberalism, according to Minogue, depends upon a consciousness of being modern. Newness, as expressed by revolution, is the key to our attitude of separation from the past. "There is in our culture a passionate desire, if not to believe in total modern revolution, at least to wish that there were one and to bring it about." But as Minogue points out, revolution has been vulgarized to the point where we have daily revolutions in "activities as varied as housebuilding, dishwashing and philosophy..."We are only a revolutionary age in the sense that we are an age that wants to see everything in terms of revolution.

But the idea of an entirely new world (just like the idea of "brand new music" as recently advertised on campus) is ridiculous. The liberal mind refuses to recognize this fact and devotes its time trying to free itself from its past. This favorite pastime of the liberal mind is well illustrated by the modern fettish for psychoanalysis. As Minogue points out, "the entire science of psychoanalysis is devoted to releasing men from their past."

The same example of psychoanalysis can demonstrate two other assumptions of Liberalism. Minogue asks the reader to imagine what would happen if a psychoanalyist "persistently interjected remarks like: 'what a deplorable thing to think about your mother!'" Liberalism strives for an illusion of ultimate agreement by throwing morality by the wayside. As Minogue puts it, "morality condemns, liberalism tries to understand." By compromising it values, liberalism unites. Liberalism tries to rationalize morality and construct "a generalized policy adapted to the character of [a generic man]." As a result, "we all conspire in a meaningless agreement upon what are incorrectly thought to be fundamentals." Morality is lost in a cloud of generality.

Before blindly accepting liberalism, it is important to understand the assumptions this choice entails. Liberalism should not itself be an assumption; in fact it may only be a mediocre response to a common problem.

Inger Thomsen is a sophomore member of Colorado College Conservative Students.

Reflections and Suggestions

After such heated student discussion prior to its approval, it seems ironic that there has been scarce formal student reaction on the Eight Block Plan after its approval. This observation results from a trickle of letters to The Catalyst and is also reinforced by the sparse attendance at CCCA-sponsored Eight Block Plan forums.

The explanation for this phenomenon cannot be accurately pinpointed but The Catalyst has several hypotheses: Student acceptance and understanding of the faculty's overwhelming support of the Plan; that old standard of student apathy; and/or a feeling of student impotence after the Plan's seemingly sudden approval.

If the first theory is in fact true, fine. In addition to alleviating their own problems, the faculty has successfully gauged student concerns.

If either of the other above theories is true, not fine. Apathy is a national collegiate trend; the feeling of student impotence with regard to collegiate curricular affairs is not. CC students should not let impotence temper an already gross level of apathy.

With respect to the Eight Block Plan, the difference between success and failure depends largely upon the CC student body and its willingness to excell with the reality of the Plan.

Let reaction turn into action and make eight blocks more successful than nine ever would be.

* * *

Nuclear Free Zone or not, CC is now a combat zone—a construction combat zone, that is. With both Worner and Olin shaking to the tune of a jackhammer, CC has taken on a new look and it is not pleasant. We're here and we'll deal with it but some functional and aesthetic adjustments around the construction zones should be made: Sidewalk ramps should be installed along Nevada allowing bikers to more safely enter campus now that San Rafael is fenced off (overall CC is seriously lacking in sidewalk ramps for bikes); and that hideous chain-link fencing is not aesthetically characteristic of this expensive institution.

* * *

Where are the CC telephone directories? Who needs them anyway? Everybody does—faculty, administration and staff. They are normally distributed sometime during second block. As we approach block four, excuses for delay run thin. We want our phone directories pronto or else the switchboard operators are going to build a shantytown in protest.

—B.S., Editor

CATALYST
Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado

DAVID KLEIN
BLAIR SANFORD
Editors

LIZ CHENEY, Opinions Editor
TED CRAIG & DAVID FITZGERALD, News Editors
PATRICK CHISHOLM & KATIE DALSEMER, Features Editors
KATHY MAHONEY & ALEC REKOW, Sports Editors
ERIC BREITBARD, Arts Editor
SUSAN GRIAK, Associate Arts Editor

•

JOHN KATSANIS, Photography Editor
MIKE FRATERELLI, Copy Editor
ANNE MANHART, Layout Editor

•

JEAN BOYER
Business Manager

LINDA SHIREMAN, Typesetter
LINDA IMHOFF, Typesetter

The Catalyst logo by JANE PATTERSON

The Catalyst is published by Cutler Publications, Inc., Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado 80903. Phone (303) 473-2233 extension 675. The Catalyst is printed tri-monthly from September to May, except during holiday periods.

Cutler Publications, Inc. does not discriminate on the basis of race, color, age, religion, sex, national origin, or physical handicap in its education programs, activities or employment policies in accordance with federal, state and local laws.

Editorials appearing in the Catalyst are the opinions of the designated author and not necessarily those of any other Catalyst staff member.

The Catalyst encourages the letters to the editor. Letters should be no more than 400 words in length and be typed or neatly printed. Address letters to the Catalyst, Rastall Center, Colorado College, Colorado Springs, 80903. Unsigned letters will not be printed.

A work of comich table length may be submitted as a guest commentary. Persons interested in submitting comments ry should contact the Catalyst at 632-4999 or 475-2233 ext. 675.

The Catalyst reserves the right to edit or cut letters to the editor and guest commentaries

Letters to Liz

Freedom of Expressio

Dear Editor:

For the last two months, I have attempted to sit idly by and restrain myself from voicing my opinion on the accusations that I have heard and read in regard to the journalistic integrity of The Catalyst I was one of the authors of an article entitled, "It's All Greek to Us—Upcoming Sorority Rush Sparks Remarks" and thus felt that it was not my place as a journalist to write a letter to the editor, but since then I found an argument which I feel is substantiated enough to voice.

After entering CC this fall, I, a "lowly" freshman gathered up the self-confidence to write for a COLLEGE newspaper (OOH-AAH-right?). While initially apprehensive, I discovered that there was seemingly little difference from my high school paper, with one exception, lack of censorship. After walking into The Catalyst office, I felt at home once again in familiar surroundings with exacto knives, long strips of copy waiting patiently for placement, rulers and various other indications that I was in a news room. Yes, and that's exactly what it is, a newsroom, a place where news is written and expressed freely. When I worked on my high school paper, news and opinions were stifled in light of decisions made by my advisors and the administration and not by students themselves. I hope that CC students are not suggesting going back to these kindergarten ways because they are offended by the readiness of The Catalyst to print different student's ideas.

The Catalyst has chosen to allow a variety of opinions to be expressed on the Greek system throughout this fall. Mark Thesing's article, "No More Mr. Nice Guy" and my own (along with Patrick Chisholm's) "It's All Greek to Us" certainly sparked remarks (two successive letters in rebuttal). The main purpose of "It's All Greek to Us" was not to be a flowery depiction of sorority life (although the existence of a more "flowery" side was referred to in the lead paragraph). Instead it was meant to allow students to voice their sentiments both pro & con and determine a general awareness of the views that CC's students feel are important in determing a full picture of sorority life.

Many of the Greeks interviewed in the article were open to seeing that the system is not perfect. Their awareness is presently affecting changes in the lack of visibility that many students see as a problem. Prior to the article plans were being made to educate the campus of the philanthropic endeavors of the sororities and Greeks as a whole. So obviously, this is not a new problem, nor one that should not be breeched because it is not representative of sorority life. But, alas my friends it should be breeched as with every organization, there are triumphs as well as failings.

As students in a liberal arts college, we need to examine what we really want: name calling and nursery school antics (it works both ways, you know!) or a true approach to a liberal education. Over second block break, I went through Rush, many people were surprised and questioned if I was serious about joining or simply "mucking" around for more news. I assure you (now speaking as a member of the Greek system) that such was not the case. My depiction of different opinions in the October article made me more aware of what some of the problems with the system are, however, they did not dissuade me from wanting to become a part of it.

I was witness to a lot of complaints as a rushee, that the rush class was smaller than in previous years. Many chose to blame it on the article's release just prior to Rush. 160 people were signed up prior to its release and five dropped following. This does not give much validity to that acusation and demonstrates that maybe students aren't as in dire straits as I had assumed. The n didn't quit or lose faith and neither should anyon

As a member of a liberal system our respons should be to challenge ideas and reflect critical th The Catalyst is attempting to do just that by people's opinion.

—Courtney M

A Collegiate Dictatorsh

Dear Editor:

Get the Ape off of our backs!

-Mak

Approximately three weeks ago, an incident oc that might possibly undermine my citizenship native resident of the U.S. Since when did the te staff of the Colorado College determine what my a shall be? What I may and may not do? It's ludicro crass and inane! It's a travesty of everything th proud country stands for!

Friends, we live in collegiate dictatorship, insid democracy, or more correctly, a malicious oligar number of teachers have complained that the k radio interferes with their dining pleasure. Then, insult to injury, they unequivocally demanded th television remain unactivated before 4:00, P.M.

Maybe it's a corporate takeover, one of those industrial mergers that Teddy Roosevelt so accu foresaw. The Teaching Staff at C.C. has banded to in dubious resolve to dictate culinary policy t Foods, Inc. What ramifications will this ominou have on the U.S. economy? Only God knows. Wha for Saga Foods, Inc.? Will we be compelled, with expulsion for noncompliance, to wear tuxedos wh consume our daily sustenance? Why stop there? W us eat at all? The ramifications boggle the mind! T ultimatum be issued to the Music Dept., by the virtue seemingly innate dislike of music, that they m longer issue forth the resonating music that th Will a proviso be forwarded to Tutt Library statu visual aids are no longer a valid instructional imp in our educational process? Why stop there? W electrically powered machines be banned from u as ideologically detrimental by the de facto junt C.C. become an Amish community? Will we s practicing husbandry on the football field?

What is the Hub anyway? An extension Library? Of course not! It is a place where the stud this college may garrulously interact. Do we clam "Dead Kennedies" in the Teacher's Lounge! proclamate edicts to the effect that pornograph will be shown in said lounge, but only before 4:00 -And what of the persecutued proletariat of the like Hub Kitchen? Is it to much to ask that he mig some music to ease his burden? How I'll be able to my horizons, before 4:00 P.M., through the utiliza PBS.? Is it to be understood that I must obey the d of an illicit legislative body that has not bee elected? It's unAmerican! It's subversive!

What do we have to fear from the Soviets? T enemy is here! Hear me students! United we stan together against the infidel! Be revolutionaries causes of Freedom and Democracy! Picket! P Storm Armstrong! Occupy Cutler! Pile hamburg the green!

—Fletcher M

ISSUE: Arms to Iran

BY T. JOHN CALDWELL

"The Great Satan" has once again blundered into ...ria, offering an apple in the form of military spare ...rts to devout Islamic revolutionaries. That "Satan" is ... course Iran's rather ridiculous reference to ...onfused Reagan administration; and the revolution... ...es have known sin for some time, manifest in the ...port of bloody terrorism and the practice of sending ...ildren to fight war.

Coming on the heels of a downed American arms ...pment in Nicaragua, the recent (ongoing?) U.S.— ...anian tango has raised serious questions about ...merican credibility and the proper role for the ...ational Secruity Council.

On the surface, providing military spare parts to Iran ...nnot be justified. As Washington has so often ...mphasized, paying ransoms for hostages merely ...ncourages future hostage-takers. If radical bandits can ...ucceed in altering U.S. foreign policy by simply ...idnapping or killing a few of our citizens, then they will ...o so again and again. The superficially humanitarian ...crifice to free Americans now in captivity will ...eopardize all U.S. nationals abroad in the future.

The Libya raids of last spring demonstrated one valid ...esponse to a nation exporting terror; paying political ...nsom is its antithesis.

Clearly, however, Bud McFarlane's opening to ...heran was aimed at more than the hostage's freedom. ... supplying military parts for Iran's decrepit ...merican built) military machine, administration ...ficials hoped to shape the course of post-Khomeini ...an. A friendlier, more moderate Iran could indeed ...stify the shipment of what appears an inconsequential ...ount of military equipment.

Initiated by an administration often inflexibly ...mmited to principle, such geopolitical maneuvering ...mes as a breath of fresh air. It raises shades of Nixon's ...ening to China in the early 1970s. Using the same ...echanism, Kissinger (then chairman of the National ...urity Council) circumvented the bureaucratic barriers ...renched at the State Department and helped end two ...ades of conflict between the United States and the ...ople's Republic. China, however, had signalled clear ...ceptivity to the move, and a willingness to keep the ...gotiations secret until progress was made.

In such endeavors, execution is the key ingredient. ...ith Iran this ingredient was absent. Rival Iranian ...ctions were able to expose the efforts, setting the ...ministration up for a falling out with its allies, with ... American public, and with dissenting members in ... goverment.

The similarities between the secret diplomacy of ...ixon and McFarlane are absent in important areas. Our ...ATO allies were clearly supportive of the China ...ening; with Iran we have undercut these allies. After ...tonishing the Europeans to take a hard-line against ...tions sponsoring terrorism, we have showed ...mselves duplicitous. Officials such as George Shultz, ...o probably knew of the covert operations, have lost ...uch face in continuing to voice a policy of "no ...ncessions."

More importantly, U.S. administrations were careful ... protect the interests of regional allies in moving ...ward normalization with China. Whatever one may ...ink of China's ultimate motives, they were not ...gaged in a hot war at the time of the opening. ...oviding military equipment to Iran, however ...significant the amount, has delivered a symbolically ...maging blow to moderate Arab states around the ...rsian Gulf. Saudi Arabia, fearing a wave of radical ...ndamentalism emerging from an Iranian victory, ...ithfully feels betrayed.

Mr. Reagan, apparently moved by the plight of the ...ostages, has begun a dangerous game. There are ...otential rewards, but they seem unlikely at best. Any ...anian faction which might embrace the "Great Satan" ... placing itself in a tenuous position. While there is no ...ed for the United States and Iran to remain enemies, ...e Reagan administration should avoid policies which ...ight display concessions to terrorism and support for a ...tion engaged in a destabilizing war.

Mr. Reagan has begun a dangerous game.

BY MICHAEL S. MEHAN

"No U.S. law has been violated," the White House announced earlier this week, as it became mired in yet another foreign policy scandal, the issue of U.S. arms sales to Iran by the Reagan Administration. No laws were broken, I am sure, just like we did not mine Nicaraguan harbors, and Khadaffi is once again poised for the attack. The White House statement, for some reason, does not seem very helpful in reassuring our faith that the White House is on the level.

The recent disclosure of a new courtship of Iran by the Reagan Administration has opened a vertible Pandora's Box of problems for the Reagan team. Reagan's new love aggair with the Iranians has cast serious doubts on the credibility of United States foreign policy and the Reagan Administration. It seems the rhetoric and hot air we have been hearing from Reagan, since the last days of the Carter Administration, about knocking terrorists into their proper places, and not giving in to their demands, has been just that, rhetoric and hot air.

Reagan, in the name of furthering relations with Iran, a country he feels, contrary to popular belief, is important to American interests in the Middle East, has now entered a high stakes game with the same country that was the cause of so much abuse heaped on Carter by Reagan, the candidate and the President. He is sticking his nose in the same beehive that blistered Carter's nose

The Administration's insistence that no law has been broken is a typical Reagan attempt to justify its illegal actions, Reagan believes no laws were broken, so he just says so, and poof! No laws have been broken. However, his belief and the truth may not run along parallel lines.

To begin with the obvious, Reagan, by selling arms to Iran, has broken a standing six year law, which even he agreed to continue. In 1979, President Jimmy Carter banned all arms sales to Iran under the authority of the Arms Export and Control Act, and in an executive order he froze all Iranian assets in the United States, Reagan has continued both his own law and policy of not bowing to the demands of terrorists.

Administration officials claim the action is justified as an attempt to influence the future of U.S.-Iranian relations in a post-Khomeini Iran, however, they overlook the fact, that by aiding Iran in its war with Iraq, we may be aiding its victory, which will threaten moderate Arab states and U.S. allies in the region.

Reagan thought he could sneak one over on Congress, by using the National Security Council instead of the CIA, bypassing the requirement forcing him to inform Congress, however, the Gipper is not as sly as he wishes, because the Boland Amendments to the National Security Act, which require the President to inform Congress about all covert actions and intelligence actions, apply to "all departments or agencies or entity of the U.S.," thus the National Security Council is not exempt.

This latest scandal is just one in a series of events, beginning with the air strike against Libya, that raise the question of just what the heck is going on with Reagan's foreign policy. In the grand finale of his show, Reagan seems to be stumbling with his lines. First, the air strike, supposedly a tough stance against terrorists, showing them if they mess with us, they are going to get burned, has been offset by supplying Iran, world terrorist headquarters, with arms. Second, American reporter, Nicholas Daniloff was released under a mysterious deal with the Russians, raising questions about U.S. credibility. Then, the "disinformation" plan of the National Security Advisor Poindexter, was revealed, casting further doubts on the Reagan Administration. And just when we thought it was all over, I mean, trouble comes in threes, it was not. The Nicaraguans shot down a plane carrying American weapons for the Contras and the lone survivor starts crying "CIA" as soon as he is captured, while everyone in the Reagan Administration denies anything to do with him.

With this latest affair, it looks as if the Reagan advisors have created a monster of our foreign policy, much to the dismay of Secretaries Weinberger and Schultz and the American public. Unfortunately, mum's the word at the White House, as Reagan and crew hide everything under "Executive Privilege," while they figure out what is going on.

One must give credit to the President for at least freeing some of the hostages, who, I am sure are more than grateful. However, the Reagan Administration has paid a high price for their release. Not only has Reagan tarnished his own credibility, he has violated his own policy of not bowing to the demands of terrorists, broken United States law, and compromised U.S. foreign policy by sending a message to terrorists everywhere, that the U.S. is willing to negotiate them.

At Least The Weather's Exciting

BY SHANNON WHEELER

Last night I felt like I was in a Lori Anderson film. It was Tuesday at about 12:30 and I had just finished watching "Late Night." I was walking down the middle of Nevada, and the wind was picking up. There wasn't a car to be seen and so I decided to keep walking down the middle of the road, not the median. Then there was this car and it was going down the sidewalk just as slowly and surely as I was in the road. We passed each other and I rounded the corner, the wind was howling and trash was flying. I heard a clatter to my right, and turned in time to step out of the way of a bouncing chair.

The weather made me feel strangely energetic and I remembered an ad that asked if there was excitement in your life, and if not you should remedy that by buying some new furniture. I guess if you play with chairs on a windy day it could be exciting. My furniture at home didn't thrill me that night.

Speaking of thrills when was the last time you were glad to see a policeperson. Shouldn't we be comforted by the presence of an officer of the law, shouldn't we feel safe. Maybe I have a guilty conscience or something but police cars give me the willies. The way they prowl along at night like a feverish dog. Then they creep toward you just when you knew they would. Cops seem to be following me lately, one even tracked me with the spotlight as I was crossing campus, do they know my phone bill is overdue. Perhaps they're just bored, I would be. If so they should get new furniture, a "Big Sur" waterbed or a chiropractic-automatic-custom-made-to-fit-you reclining chair.

Things on campus, or off, just aren't very exciting. We try to spice things up, Western night at Saga, costume parties, day trips to Aspen, dollar-movie etc... Wouldn't it be great if life were so exciting that we looked for ways to calm it down. Well I guess we would get bored with that and come right back to where we are now. Maybe life is exciting, I certainly enjoyed my encounter with the chair, and I guess I like being spooked by cops.

Mr. Nice Guy at Poor Dick's

BY MARK THESING

Many Students at the Colorado College are envious of C.U.'s location in the hip town of Boulder. They find the Springs conservative, boring, and a vacuum of intellectual activity. They are wrong.

And how do I know. I eat at Poor Richard's regularly.

Poor Dick's is mellow, peaceful, avant-garde, and downright groovy. It may be slightly more expensive than other eateries in the Springs, but it is the atmosphere that one is paying for and not the food. Besides eating at Poor Dick's is a philanthropic endeavor. The mildly inflated prices subsidize the heating for the bums, posing as intellectuals, who drink lemon water and read/sleep all day.

It is also interesting to see what semi-conscious are reading these days. Last time I was in Poor Dick's I spotted some characters reading such works as "Intermediate Astronomy" and "Loving with AIDS." I was immediately intrigued by these works and looked at them. Because the books are recycled and generally previously owned by a Poor Richard's client, one often finds a few sprouts left within the pages. I don't buy books with sprouts.

Aside from the freaks and miscellaneous lost people at Poor Dick's there are some truly significant Springs intellectuals from the Colorado College community who regularly visit the "read and feed." Sometimes these significant social leaders go to Poor Dick's in search of something more than just a casual place to hang.

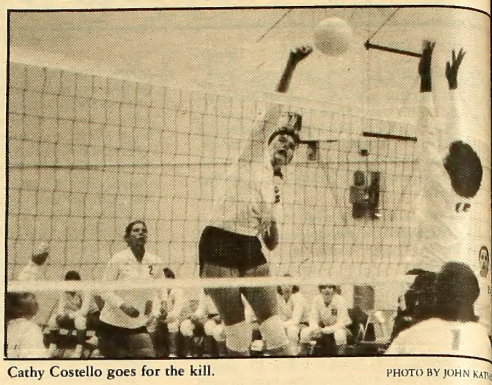
I once heard two talented art majors say they "wouldn't contemplate eating at a hamburger restaurant because it would simply perpetuate the American hormonal imbalance that has lead this world to violence and constant nuclear tension." Apparently Poor Richard's is a place where those of high moral standards can feel comfortable with their intense personal convictions.

I must admit the reason that I mostly enjoy Poor Dick's is because there are always a lot of old Catalysts around and I see what Mr. Nice Guy has been doing. Going to Poor Dick's.

Kickers and Spikers Prepare for National

Tenacious Tigers tackle. PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS



Cathy Costello goes for the kill. PHOTO BY JOHN KATS

BY KAREN WILLOUGHBY

NCAA Division I quarterfinals begin SATURDAY at 1:00 PM. on Steward field. The women's soccer team, rested and restless after a 1st round bye last weekend will take on Cal-Berkeley. In the 1st round of playoffs, Berkeley defeated Cal St-Hayward to advance to the quarterfinals. The winner of this weekends match advances to the Final Four. The Bears, beaten on California turf two weeks ago by CC, are eager to avenge two consecutive losses to the lady Tigers.

The match features a clash of powerful styles. Cal is well-known for their incredible array of individual talent. And while CC also boasts a fine individual roster, their strength lies in incredible teamwork. Key match-ups to watch: Top Gunner Bera Brandi Chastain vs. Head Hunter Michelle Bulger and the reckless contest between Cal's #10 and our own Bates Fisher. Another unity strength will be the support of CC's diehard fans. Season passes have long bee sold out, sorry guys, but the NCAA Admission fee is a mere one dollar. And speaking of money, you CC country-clubers, our tired little field needs a little sprucing up. $15,000-$20,000 should do it. One disadvantage CC does have are the poor conditions of their field. so, the next time you see Mom and Dad, ask them for some spare cash. Seriously folks, any leads to a generous contributor should be directed to the little big guy, Dang.

Take part in evolution and watch the survival of the fittest where the Tigers hope to be naturally selected.

For the second consecutive year, the CC Tigers women's volleyball team has advanced to the NCAA Division III playoffs. Ranked eighth nationally in Division III, the 22-9 Tigers face unranked Methodist (N.C.) College in Thursday's first-round match. Should the Tigers win on Thursday, they will advance to meet top-ranked Menlo (Calif.) College in San Diego on Friday.

Besides Menlo, the Tigers will be challenged by perrenial powerhouse University of California-San Diego (CC lost to the Tridents earlier this year, 15-10, 9-15, 12-15) and twelfth-ranked University of LaVerne, who eliminated CC in a quarterfinal match at last year's tournament. While "UCSD plays a straight power game," and "Mes defensive-minded," second-year coach Sue Bethanis hopes that versatility will allow the Tigers to p "We need all six players giving performances," offered Bethanis, wh stated that "we need to pass the ball we can wheel and deal our offense." Although the Tigers record year) isn't as impressive this year Bethanis claims that "we're such a team than last year, there's not comparison." Led by all-American Amy Smith and freshman hitter Costello, the Tigers have a great ch improve on last year's tournament and perhaps steal away with the Division III national championship the only way to go. . .

TAYLOR TRAVEL

"Your Campus Travel Agency"

818 N. Tejon 636-3871

HEAR TODAY... HEAR TOMORROW!

Music with integrity.
Not just one hit single surrounded by filler, but complete albums. The kind of records you will play over and over again. Year after year.

Hunters & Collectors is one of the most respected Australian bands and without a doubt the most intense. Composed of three horn players backing a rhythm section of three, the band has been together since 1980 gathering renown for its confrontational lyrics, "squeezing-out" musical feel and exhilarative live shows. Intellectual rock for the mind and body.

ONLY $6.99 I.R.S. ALBUM OR CASSETTE

I.R.S. RECORDS: PROVIDING CONSISTENTLY SOUND INVESTMENT

Budget Tapes and Records

327 N. Tejon
471-4419
M-F 10-8
Sat 10-6
Sun 12-5

Wisconsin Badgers CC Pucksters

BY SARAH FLYNN

CC pucksters lost two important games in Madison last weekend, ping from third to fifth in the WCHA ings. They now trail first place North , second place Minnesota, and hern Michigan and Wisconsin who ed for third. Unfortunately, CC also rom the national top ten rankings occupying eighth position in last 's poll.

d Coach Mike Bertsch reflected on wo overtime losses: "We went up to nsin expecting to get at least two points out of the series and came home with nothing. We didn't play as well as we could have, but Wisconsin has a good hockey team."

On Friday night, the Tigers entered the third period leading 2-0, but a stroke of bad luck led to Wisconsin's first goal. Said Bertsch, "Wisconsin's first goal was a fluke. It went off a CC defenseman's skate into the net. If that hadn't happened we probably would have won 2-0." Unfortunately, the goal sparked Wisconsin's momentum, and the Badgers scored again only forty-six seconds later. This goal pushed the game into overtime, and a Wisconsin goal dropped CC, 3-2.

Saturday's game was a virtual mirror image of Friday's matchup, with CC losing 3-2 in overtime.

"Our problem," said Bertsch, "was inconsistency, and at this point in the season, consistency is crucial. Our passing and puck control weren't on. Wisconsin capitalized on the few opportunities we gave them, and those were the games. We had some bright spots; the goals we scored were good. We had chances to win but gave up the puck in crucial situations."

CC was not without outstanding individual performances despite the two losses. Matt Gilbreth, who started in goal on Saturday night, and Derek Pizzey, who patrolled the nets on Friday, both had excellent games, and last week's WCHA "Player of the Week," Scott Campbell, had another consistent series. CC's leading scorer, Rick Boh, scored two goals on Saturday, but a third period ankle injury benched him for the remainder of Saturday's game. Barring further injury, Boh should enjoy a productive series this weekend against Air Force. The Tigers,

Hockey continued on page 14

Run on the Wild Side

BY CAROL A. SHAFFER

was young and impressionable when I started. That's no excuse, really, but all I have. You know the way it all es - walking home from school alone, hear a "pssst" from a dark, deserted . I'll never forget him, the evil-looking with skinny legs and those nylon s with the catch-pants...."Hey, babe, a run on the wildside," he whispered, ling a pair of Nikes in front of me. then, they didn't even have Nike Air, was hooked anyway.

on it was several pairs of $60.00 shoes r there were shoes for flat pavement, s for golf courses, shoes for track workouts, shoes for track races, shoes for dirt roads....My friends noticed I just wasn't around anymore. "She's probably out running," they'd say among themselves, sufficeint to say that three runners with sub-20 times and the close times between the team overall give the team great promise.

The travelling team is listed below. Now that you know where they're coming from, be really nice to them and don't call them mean names like "insane" or "masochistic." Remember, there's a fine line between pain and pleasure.

Terri Grzybowski, 1st on team, best time. 1986-18:49.

shaking their heads and wondering where to turn. I was gone.

Oh, sure, at first it was only a race now and then. Soon it was summer track teams, though, and then school track teams and then cross country and indoor track...

Which brings us to the subject at hand. The CC cross country women are travelling to Waverly, Iowa to compete in the Regional Cross Country meet this weekend. They have a chance to qualify for the National meet, and it should be an exciting weekend overall. The women have to score in the top 2 teams to qualify. It is a complicated process of subracting places that I won't go into here, but it is Carol Shaffer, 2nd on team, best time, 1986-19:23.

Mary Armijo, 3rd on team, best time, 1986-19:27.

Brigid McBride, 4th on team, best time, 1986-20:50.

Liz Payson, 5th on team, best time, 1986-20:41.

Emily Godfrey, 6th on team, best time, 1986-21:21.

Mia Cadmus, 7th on team, best time, 1986-21:30.

Men's Basketball

eading into his fourth season with the Tigers, men's basketball coach Jim s is optimistic and at the same time ious. It is difficult to forecast a better n average season for a 8-14 squad which lost its top two scorers. In addition the uiting situation doesn't figure to help ers much. "We had probably our best rting year ever," says Cross, "...then lost them all." Two prize freshmen and 6'7") decided to spend their tball careers at places other than the of Pikes Peak. Ouch.

However the Tigers have reason for mism this year. Most importatly they rn all their front court players a year and a year wiser. As a result Cross's tionally guard-oriented offense will emphasis from the backcourt to the nen. This means that it's finally time 6'5" senior forward Dave Rakel to step the spotlight. "Rakel," says Cross, "is ue talent. He really came on in the ond half of last season." Joining co-ain Rakel in the frontcourt will be ards John Sacha, the only remnant of 's promising first year squad, Junior Schroeder, and 6'7" junior centers Fox and Josh Childs. Continued opment by the newly bulked-up rs, who Cross says "gets better every may likely be the key to the Tiger's ess. 6'4" sophomores Jeff Moore and Baranko add depth to the frontcourt.

The sitution in the backcourt, however, is not as stable. The Tigers have solid, talented starters in Senior shooter Rob Bogue and Junior point man Rob Hemminger. After that the outlook dims. Cross recognizes the fact that an injury in the backcourt would be devastating as the back-ups all remain unproven in game situations. Freshman Jim Grantz, junior Ricky Garcia and transfer Chris Hardman will be looked to as substitutes.

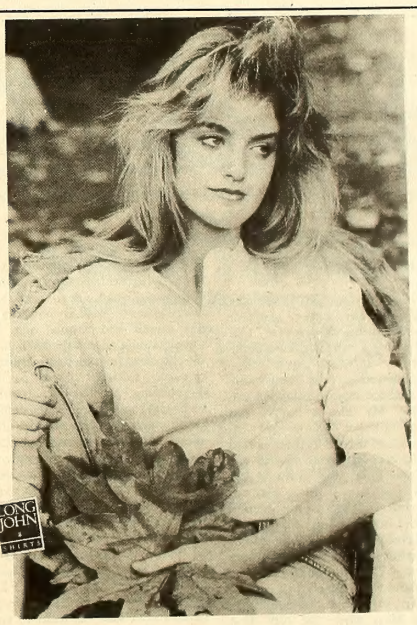
Despite the thin backcourt, Cross unflinchingly sets a goal of finishing at .500 or better. If the Tigers accomplish this it would be only the second time in 25 years a CC team had a winning season. This year's schedule shows that the road to .500 may prove a difficult one. "We have no sure wins this year," says Cross. In addition to traditional powerhouses such as DU and Regis, the Tigers will face tough competition in squads such as Pomona-Pitzer, Western State and 2 time NCAA Division III semi-finalists Nebraska Wesleyan.

Yet this year's squad has the leadership in captains Rakel and Bogue and the frontcourt depth to surprise many teams this year. Some things, of course, never change. "We'll still be running and pressing like crazy," assures Cross. CC's faced-paced brand of basketball promises, as always, to be exciting and entertaining. The Tigers open their season on Nov. 21 in Nebraska against Dana College.

AIM HIGH
PUT YOUR COLLEGE DEGREE TO WORK.
Air Force Officer Training School is an excellent start to a challenging career as an Air Force Officer. We offer great starting pay, medical care, 30 days of vacation with pay each year and management opportunities. Contact an Air Force recruiter. Find out what Officer Training School can mean for you. Call
(303) 528-1751 collect
AIR FORCE

WE'LL DO YOUR LAUNDRY!!!

WASHED
DRIED
FOLDED
Suds 'um
Laundry & Cleaners
1931 W. Uintah (across from Uintah Gardens)
473-3756 Special student offer w/CC ID.



We have a Great Selection of Styles and Colors of Long John Shirts
Mountain Chalet
CC's Outdoor Connection
266 North Tejon 633-0732
Downtown

Sport Shorts

The men's soccer team ended their very, very long season with a win over Metro State last Saturday. Unfortunately, Denver University administered a 4-0 shellacking to the beleagured Tigers a week earlier. CC finished at 9-9-4, barely averting Coach Richardson's first losing season.

An obviously uninspired Tiger squad showed up for the contest against Denver. The Pioneers outran, outskilled, and outworked CC, who obviously were looking forward to the night's Halloween festivities. An indirect free kick goal early in the first half was all the visitors needed (the Tiger offense obviously wasn't going to score) but CC graciously gave their guests three more scores.

In perhaps the most meaningless, and certainly most boring game in CC history, the Tigers defeated Metro State 2-1. Alec Rekow had his hand in both CC goals. Alec received a pass at half field, burned half the Metro squad as he moved the ball upfield and gave a nice pass to Paul Schmidt who found Andreas Klohnen in front of the net. Klohnen easily booted the ball in the net to tie the game at 1 all. Less than ten minutes later Alec hammered a Chip Sagal corner kick by the Metro keeper to give CC the win.

The team wishes to express their thanks to all their fans who suffered through heartless efforts and humiliating defeats. Make sure you come back next year for more.

X—C Skiing at CC!

The premiere season of cross-country skiing is getting on track at C.C. The interest for this sport has been pressing for its introduction for many years, and finally it is here!

The team is realtively small as of now, with 12 guys and 5 girls filling its ranks. But with more publicity it is sure to grow. In this small group there is a wide variety of experience levels. There are three Junior Olympians, one state champ, and others who have never raced, but love the sport.

The team practices every day in the hopes that it will be ready for deep snow. Then it will ski 2-3 times weekly at Catamount Ranch just 30 minutes from campus. The first race is January 9-10 at Steamboat where they will compete against CSU, BYU, Mines, Western State, and Utah State.

Whether you're a skiing god or goddess from northern latitudes or a beginner from the south who doesn't know which end of the ski is the front, there still is time to join one of the most exciting things to happen to C.C. in years. Contact Jeff Brazil at ext. #280 or show up at the football field at 3:00 pm for practice. And everyone pray for snow in this desolate area!

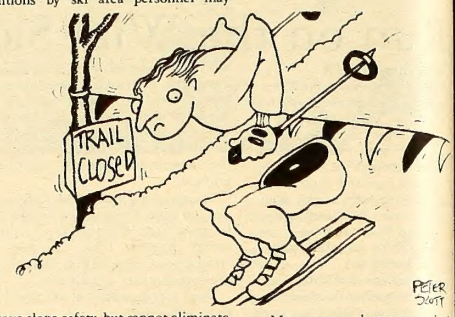
Ski Safely

Ski season has once again returned to the mountains. Gone are the long bike rides, hikes along favorite trails, and the lazy days at the lake. Time to tune up the boards and head for the slopes. But, what is this we hear? The Skier's Responsibility Code? Be Aware, Ski with Care?

Skiing, besides being a wonderful means of recreation and physical enjoyment, is an exciting, challenging and sometimes hazardous sport. Year-round slope maintenance and monitoring of winter conditions by ski area personnel may improve slope safety, but cannot eliminate the inherent risks involved in skiing. A good measure of common sense and personal awareness is what is needed to offset these risks.

The National Ski Areas Association has adopted the Skier's Responsibility Code to educate skiers to be conscious of the "rules of the road" when skiing. These rules are as follows:

- Ski under control and in such a manner that you can stop or avoid other skiers or objects.
- When skiing downhill or ov another skier, you must avoid b below you.
- You must not stop where you a trail or are not visible from abo
- When entering a trail or downhill, yield to other skiers.
- All skiers shall use devices prevent runaway skis.
- You shall keep off closed tr posted areas and observe all post



Many states have passed ski legislation. In 1979, Colorado pass Ski Safety Act, which specifically st responsibilities of skiers and s operators. Skiers should be famili the laws of the state(s) in which

In an increasingly stronger effo year, the National Ski Areas Asso and the ski industry are totally co to instilling safety and responsibili skiers. Once again, the national "Be Aware, Ski with Care."

Armadillo's Alley

BY ARMADILLO

I thought to myself, "Do I feel like watching the Donkey-Charger game or should I do something constructive?" Due to my rather lazy nature I realized being constructive was not in my psyche's best interests. I moseyed into the living room, flipped on the boob tube and plopped into the beanbag. My life is rough, but someone's gotta live it.

I was curious to see the featherless bird that had once been the proud majestic Air Coryell. Tom Flick, the third string quarterback had turned in a Hall of Lowlifes performance against the Chiefs, 4 for 17 with 4 interceptions. Imagine my surprise when I turned in near the end of the first quarter and found the Chargers leading 3-0. The announcers were jabbering about San Diego's ball control offense. My instinctive thought was "Mother of Mary where did NBC find these dimwitts, even my pet banana tree knows the words ball control are not in the Chargers one dimensional vocabulary." Defying the laws of football nature, San Diego received the opening kickoff and drove 71 yards in 17 plays consuming 9 minutes and 23 seconds in the process before settling for a 25 yard field goal.

Denver tied the game a few minutes into the second quarter and though they certainly were not looking sharp, I figured it would only be a matter of time before they took control of the game. The first half ended and the third quarter came and went and I realized that it was the fourth quarter and San Diego was stubbornly clinging to a 6-3 lead. By now, the beanbag and myself had become one. I roused myself, stumbled into the kitchen, grabbed the chips and hot sauce and returned to the miracle taking shape before my disbelieving eyes. The Denver offense was inept and I was loving it. The defense kept the Chargers out of the endzone all day, but allowed them to control the clock. The fourth quarter seemed to drag on for an eternity until suddenly the scoreboard clock read 0:00. San Diego 9, Denver 3. The 1-8 Chargers had knocked off the 8-1 Donkeys!!! My buddy John (the dude with the big teeth) committed four turnovers, all within a whisker of the San Diego endzone. For a man who fancies himself the best quarterback in the N.F.L., Elway has not exhibited the leadership qualities necessary to lead his team to victory in games such as this in which the team is flat. A glance at the Broncos remaining schedule added to my euphoric state. Denver faces Kansas City (7-3) twice, the N.Y. Giants (8-2), Washington (8-2), Cincinnati (6-4), and Seattle (5-5). The Donks do not have an easy game left. Here's hoping they completely collapse and lose all their remaining games.

The Colorado College football team finished the season 5-4, their best season in years. Congratulations and may the winning tradition continue throughout the 20th century.

Hockey continued from page 13

hoping to bounce back after last weekend's losses, eagerly await the home-and-home series against the Falcons. The two teams will meet at The Broadmoor at 7:35 p.m. on Friday, with Saturday's face-off slated for 7:35 at the Academy.

Since the games against Air Force are CC's first non-league games this season, the atmosphere will differ somewh the normal WCHA clash. But du rivalry between the two schools th will no doubt prove exciting. A Bertsch said, "there's no love lost the two schools," so maybe things little crazy against the bastion of da Let's hope so.

Slimline Cards
Say It All
Design S1 "Merry Christmas"
Design S2 "From Our Home to Yours"
Design S3 "Joy"
Design S6 "Happy Chanukah"
Design S6 "Noche de Paz"
10 FOR $4.99
Includes envelopes
Nothing gives holiday greetings a perso touch like a color photo card made from own negative, slide or print.
Photo Greeting Card
25 FOR $12.99
Send Photo Greeting C with the personal
of a color photo.
Design F1
Merry Christmas and may every happiness be yours in the New Year
Design F2
Season's Greetings with very best wishes for your happiness in the New Year
Design F3
With Very Best Wishes for Your Happiness in the New Year
Design F4
May every wonderful
Christmas be yours
College Pharmac
833 North Tejon • 634-4861

Ellipses and Hyperbole

My God they are rolfing parakeets

BY AARON SHURE

I went down to the Embassy Suite Hotel, going to do a follow up story on the GNO feature. Instead, I found the Hotel in the throes of a convention, the first meeting of the International Intra-disciplinary committee against Unpleasantness. The committee's purpose was to convene for a week, hold numerous seminars, and finally produce a letter to Reagan and Gorbachev. Unfortunately, the wide range of groups present made it very difficult for the committee to reach any consensus.

Some of the interest groups represented were: The International Food Texture Coalition, Dermatologists against Fiery Seething Death, The Melanoma Clothiers Affiliation, and The Committee Against Cruel Massages and Indiscriminate Rolfing.

I arrived just in time for the final meeting, in which the letter was to be drafted. Liz Prig, of the Melanoma Clothiers spoke first, suggesting that the depletion of the ozone layer should not be ignored; after all, severe threat of ultra-violet burn could lead to new and exciting forms of clothing.

"Sun glasses will no longer be just accessories, and face masks won't just be for Halloween. Just think of it, every inch of skin will be covered. Every aspect of a person will have to be reflected in clothing; even your mood will have to be reflected in cloth. The final frontier in fashion is the face!"

The Dermatologists Against Fiery Seething Death, of course, were outraged by this sentiment. They agreed that protective clothing was good for the complexion, but the face should never lose its significance. Furthermore, they argued, despite protective clothing, depletion of the ozone would still harm the face.

If enough rays get through, most large leafed plants would die, thus hampering the production of high grade cotton balls. The dermatologists then tried to impress on the committee the damage to facial hygiene that would occur with insufficient supplies of cotton balls.

"And what about oatmeal?" shouted someone from the Food Texture coalition. Apparently, whatever grains that survive ultra violet bombardment, will become extremely course and lumpy.

Lumpy oatmeal makes a great facial mask, countered the dermatologists. The Melanoma Clothiers were in hysterics at the positively garish suggestion of wearing oatmeal. Then a frail man stood up and shouted, "Who cares, we all deserve to die, as long as poor helpless dogs are being used as test subjects in masseuse schools. My God, in some places they are rolfing parakeets! Let them drop the bomb!"

"Yes, let them drop the bomb," agreed Liz Prig, "the things you can do with radioactive suits are thrilling." The dermatologists thought things were getting out of hand, but they still wanted to point out that irradiated moisturizers are useless.

Finally, it seemed that everyone had reached a point of delicate agreement, and they started to write the letter. There was a bit of a problem when the dermatologists wanted to add some complexion tips for Gorbachev, but that was soon settled. After many hours of discussion, they finally signed the following letter:

Dear Mr. Reagan and Gorbachev:

We the undersigned firmly believe that you should do your best to prevent destruction of the biosphere, nuclear war, racial oppression, torture, acne, polyester, okra and tofu.

P.S. Nuke the bastards that give puppies alcohol rubdowns.

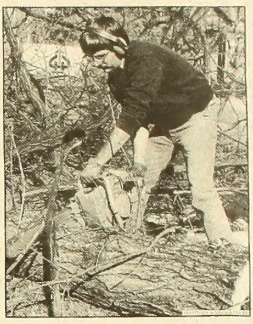
Construction continued maintains that the noise disruptions on campus will be minimal. Dr. Harold Jones, Chairman of the Science Facilities Advisory Committee, assures that measures will be taken to minimalize the disruptions if the disruptions become excessive.



Landscaping engineer beautifies CC grounds near Olin.

More News: Lecture Today

BY BILL PORTER

This afternoon, Professor Rodolfo de la Garza, of the University of Texas at Austin, will give a special presentation focusing on U.S.-Mexican Border Relations.

Sponsored by MEChA and the International Student Organization, this lecture/discussion promises to be "informative and provocative," according to CC Professor David Finley. "The recent passage of the immigration bill, after such a long period of controversy, makes it important that we look at specific provisions of the law as it is now on the books and estimate what its effects really will be." He adds that de la Garza has long specialized in this aspect of U.S.-Mexican relations.

De la Garza, former political science professor and assistant dean at CC, was originally scheduled to teach a fifth block class on U.S.-Mexican relations. Due to unanticipated committments at the university, however, he will be unable to teach here this year. Thus, de la Garza hopes this afternoon's presentation will serve in some way as a replacement.

De la Garza will speak in Palmer Room 123 at 3:00.

Things For Your Bod And Your Abode

In other words, things of various and assorted sundry natures and materials for the adornment of the human corpus and the domicile in which it dwells.

Mon.-Fri. 10-6 pm Sat. 11-5 pm

THE LOTUS EATER BOUTIQUE

Downtown on Platte Between Tejon & Cascade

phone: 635-2118

FRESH OLD CHICAGO PASTA & PIZZA

CC Student Special
Bring in this ad
Any Night Through Nov. 30 '86
2 FOR 1 PIZZA TO GO!
Valid on large or medium only
Not good with any other coupon or promotion
11 am - 11 pm
Mention coupon when ordering •1 allow 1 hour
118 N. Tejon • downtown • 634-8812

House of YAKITORI
Japanese Restaurants
Every Tuesday
5 pm - 9 pm
ALL THE YAK YOU CAN ATTACK
$6.30
on the #17 dinner
*not available on to go or delivery orders
YAKITORI
Also try our Sushi Bar
DOWNTOWN ONLY
Downtown 16 E. Bijou
578-0915
M-Thurs 11 am-3 pm 5-9 pm
Fri & Sat 11 am-3 pm 5-10 pm

RESEARCH ASSISTANT—Library and editing work, 12 to 15 hrs. per week, Nov. to Feb., work with Prof. Tom Cronin, Political Science Materials; qualifications: excellent student, research and editing abilities. $5/hour. Apply with letter of interest and resume, Box 6, Armstrong.

TRAVEL PROMOTERS WANTED Earn HIGH COMMISSION and FREE TRIPS! Destination Travel is looking for individuals or organizations to market Spring Break trips. Call Steve at 759-1550.

THE BETA THETA PI and the Feminist Collective are collaborating to discuss the socialization process that males and females go through. Please join us for a fun and interesting movie called The Gender Gap. Discussion and refreshments will follow. Gates Common Room, Tuesday, December 2nd.

BETA BLOOD DRIVE coming up 3rd week of fourth block. Please give the gift that gives life.

RECEPTION FOR STUDENTS interested in CC Mexico program. Tuesday the 25th, 2 p.m. in Romance Language Lounge (319) in Armstrong. For information call Kevin O'Connor, x624.

FOR SALE: '83 Mazda GLC Custom L. Black Metallic, air conditioning, cruise control, 5-speed transmission, cloth interior, and 20-month warranty left. 35,000 miles. Phone 594-9622.

YES, DAVE WE DO WANT FREEDOM. We do want justice. Work for Acorn the nations largest community organization. Organize on housing, utilities, environmental, and women's issues. Call 1-623-1958.

THERE WILL BE AN INFORMAL meeting for all people interested in running for the CCCA on Tuesday, November 25 at 4:45 in Olin L. Elections will be held on Friday, December 5 for the 1987 seats on the CCCA.

THE FEMINIST COLLECTIVE AND THE BETA THETA PI FRATERNITY will be sponsoring a humorously informative movie concerning the socialization process that humans (of both sexes) go through in growing up. It is our interest to stir some intellectual debate and remove some of the sterotypes that exist on campus. "THE GENDER GAP" will be shown TUESDAY DECEMBER 2nd at 8PM. Refreshments and conversation will follow. This program is the cullmination of months of collaboration between CCCA and the Feminist Collective. Funding was provided by the CCCA. PLEASE ATTEND!

NEED CASH?! Well, so do we, but we also need your fiction and poetry. Yes, this is another Leviathan pitch, but we're serious this time. We've extended our deadline one entire day (till noon tomorrow) in the hopes that those artists still struggling to produce can be rewarded. Wake up early tomorrow and rush to Bemis Desk, the Student Center, or the Catalyst office and grace the campus with your insight. Last chance until January!

APPLY FOR ROCKEFELLER EDUCATION FELLOWSHIP. Visit Chicago schools and investigate topics of personal interest. For deadline and other information, contact Professor Paul Kuerbis in the Education Department, Mierow House, X726.

TO ALL THOSE INTERESTED IN THE ASSOCIATION of Students Interested in Asia (A.S.I.A.)—If you think you are on the mailing list and have not received any newsletters it might be because we do not have your on-campus address. We need your on-campus address!

Or if you are not on our mailing list and want to be... Please call Theresa or Lisa at ex. 329 and leave your address or drop a note by the East Asia House.

ACM INDIA PROGRAM—It is a great opportunity! And if you are interested, contact Jack Carter in the Biology department, Olin 415 or ex. 402 for more information. But...do it quick the deadline for applications has been extended but it is quickly approaching.

SHOVE CHAPEL:

November 17—Reading & discussion group of T.S. Eliot's Four Quartets—4:00 p.m., Shove Chapel Lounge.

November 18—Meditation—Shove Chapel, 8:00-8:30 a.m. Music, silence, mystical and/or other writings (enter by northeast door).

November 19—Shove Council meeting—Shove Chapel Lounge, 12:00 noon.

THE ROMANCE LANGUAGES DEPT. is now taking applications for the 1987-88 program in Perpignan, France. Applications are available at the Humanities Secretarial Office, Armstrong 120, ext. 635.

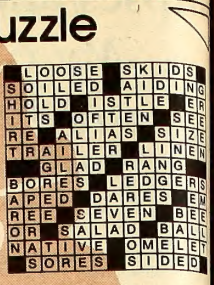
The Puzzle

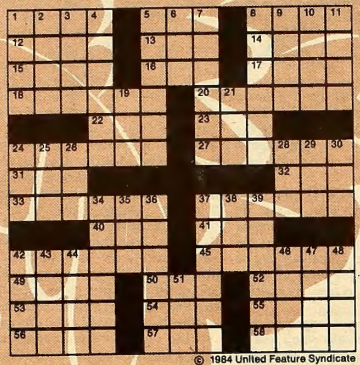
ACROSS

1 Temptation
5 Obstruct
8 Commit depradations
12 Choir voice
13 Organ of sight
14 Repetition
15 Condescending look
16 Marsh
17 Greek letter
18 Lower in rank
20 Oil-carrying vessel
22 Ocean
23 Perform
24 Iterate
27 Abate
31 Exist
32 A Gabor
33 Collect
37 Slumbering
40 Sudsy brew
41 Article
42 Petty ruler
45 Plagues
49 Region
50 Veneration
52 Cupola
53 Covers
54 Offspring
55 Arabian chieftain
56 Soviet news agency
57 Bushy clump
58 Nerve network

DOWN

1 Hairless
2 Toward shelter
3 Newspaper paragraph
4 Muscular
5 Loss
6 Affirmative vote
7 Pertaining to the mind
8 Publishes
9 Chess piece
10 Diminutive suffix
11 Equals twelve months
19 Beverage
21 High card
24 Tattered cloth
25 Period of time
26 Fondle
28 Observe
29 Day before holiday
30 Short sleep
34 Fatigue
35 Guido's high note
36 Meal
37 Be present
38 That woman
39 Chief
42 Seasoning
43 Solo
44 Spreads for drying
46 Indefinite amount
47 Send forth
48 Withered
51 Court





© 1984 United Feature Syndicate
COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

FREE
FLAVORED CORN

Bring this coupon with you the next time you buy a 30 oz. bag of Vic's popcorn. You'll get a FREE medium bag of the flavored corn of your choice.

- buttery caramel
- zesty cheese
- spicy cinnamon

Good at Uintah location only. Limit one per coupon.

CORN Vic's POPPER

1864 W. Uintah 520-9129
Mon-Sat 10-7 Sun 12-6

Homemade
Sandwiches
Soups &
Salads

Orders to go 633-8588

823 N. Tejon
(3 min. from campus)
And yes
we have Roses and
Baloons too!

Ideal Fundraiser

For your club or organization. Fun, effective, fast, easy. Supported by reputable local business.

Call Ray 548-1684 for details.

PIZZA SHUTTLE

PIZZA SHUTTLE COMING AT YOU!

No one makes pizza as fresh, as fast, as cheesy, or delivers it so fast (and free).

OPEN DAILY AT 11:00

578-8686
2573 Airport Road — FREE DELIVERY to South Central Colorado Springs INCLUDING Colorado College

390-4040
7070 S. Hwy. 85/87 Fountain — FREE DELIVERY to Ft. Carson, Security and Fountain

596-5272
4549 Templeton Gap Rd. — FREE DELIVERY to North Central Colorado Springs

Special may expire prior

THE "GEMINI" PROGRAM TWO PIZZAS FOR ONE LOW PRICE

Two 10" Cheese Pizzas only $5.89
Two 14" Cheese Pizzas only $8.89

Two 10" Pizzas - $1.25 per item Two 14" Pizzas - $1.49 per item

THE ORBITER
Pepperoni, Sausage, Green Peppers, Onions and Mushrooms (5 items for the price of 4)

INGREDIENTS
Green Pepper Rings
Fresh Sausage
Ham
Double Crust
Jalapenos
Onion Circles
Fresh Ground Beef
Pepperoni
Extra Cheese
Double Cheese (2 items)
Black Olives
Green Olives
Fresh Mushrooms
Anchovies
Pineapple

Single Pizza Prices :	12"	16"
Cheese	5.00	7.25
1 Topping	6.75	8.50
Additional Toppings	.75	1.45

FREE DELIVERY ANYWHERE IN OUR SERVICE ZONES

OUR DRIVERS CARRY LESS THAN $20

16 Oz. Bottled Drinks

30 Minute Guarantee* *Road Conditions Permitting

SAVE $1 ON ANY 1 OR MORE ITEM PIZZA (12" OR 16" PIZZA) PIZZA SHUTTLE FREE DELIVERY Expires 12/31/86 One Coupon Per Order Not Good With Any Other Special MF-1

FREE EXTRA CHEESE ON ANY LARGE PIZZA (16" PIZZA) PIZZA SHUTTLE FREE DELIVERY Expires 12/31/86 One Coupon Per Order Not Good With Any Other Special MF-2

SAVE $2 ON ANY LARGE 4 OR MORE ITEM PIZZA (16" PIZZA) PIZZA SHUTTLE FREE DELIVERY Expires 12/31/86 One Coupon Per Order Not Good With Any Other Special MF-3

30 MINUTE GUARANTEE* • Your Pizza Delivered Within 30 minutes or it's $3.00 OFF (30 minutes for 30 minute delivery zone) Expires 12/31/86 Road Conditions Permitting One Coupon Per Order LT-4

TAX NOT INCLUDED

CATALYST

Volume 20, No. 9 Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado 5 December 1986

Shanty Town Sparks Constructive Dialogue

BY AKLILU DUNLAP

The Colorado College Community Against Apartheid constructed a model shanty town Thursday, Nov. 13, on the eve of the last quarterly Board of Trustees meeting for the year. The effort was in protest of CC's investment in South Africa. Coupled with the demonstration that took place the next day, the incident has sparked community and legal action.

The political display, directed primarily at the Board of Trustees, was successful in part. "Although we didn't achieve our goal of complete disinvestment, we did gain small victories," remarked CCCAA member Stephanie Bryson summing up the experience as a whole. The gains made as a result of the demonstration included the board's reinstruction of the Investment Committee to reconsider and reassess the issue. Also, four CCCAA members—margaret Duncombe, Jeff Livesay, Tim Fitz and Teddy Metera—were able to address the board and present their views. Finally, CC President Gresham Riley granted the group's request to have two hours of representation and dialogue as well as to publication of the board's voting on the issue in the March meeting.

Press coverage of the event was considerable. All the local television stations carried it in their programs, as well as in the local paper, The Gazette Telegraph. The accuracy in reporting varied, though, according to group members. "Channel 11 was unbiased in its coverage, [whereas] the GT was frequently inaccurate," complained senior Bryson. "It's hard to know what the school is feeling. We only know what we hear," Bryson continued. And what they've heard from the campus community is a collage of reactions. Response from the general community, however, has been predominantly negative as evidenced by letters in "Tell It To The GT." CCCAA members attribute this to biased coverage by the paper. Channel 5 devoted an editorial from the station manager to the subject. The station accused CCCAA of being enrolled in "Hypocrisy 101" and

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

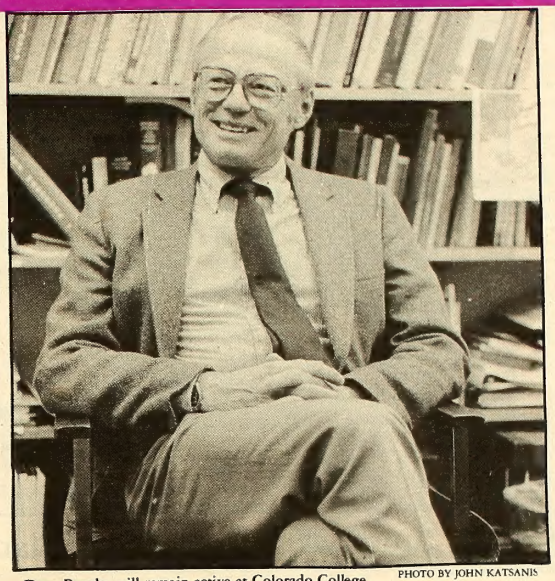
Continued page 2



Dean Brooks will remain active at Colorado College. PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Brooks Resigns

BY CAROLINE BRYAN

At the end of the summer the Colorado College will bid farewell to one of its most respected administrators. Dean Glenn Brooks, Dean of the College and Dean of the Faculty, submitted his resignation to the college in the middle of November.

Maxwell Taylor, Vice President for Student Life, delivered a memorandum for President Gresham Riley to the faculty on November 17 in which he expressed his sadness over the loss of "a treasured working relationship" as well as his appreciation "of the imaginative, sensitive, and human leadership" which have very much been a part of Dean Brooks' career at Colorado College.

Dean Brooks has been at Colorado College since 1960. After receiving his Bachelors and Masters degrees from the University of Texas, and his PhD in Political Science from Johns Hopkins University, he began his first teaching job at CC. He has been a dean for eight years, almost twice the average term, notes President Riley. Dean Brooks also admits that he has held his position for almost twice as long as he had originally intended.

"Being a dean at CC is never dull, you are constantly fired at from all directions, but," Dean Brooks notes, "there are great satisfactions that go along with it." Overall, Dean Brooks has achieved satisfatcion through many facets. He has the sense that his work has "always been done through collaboration, and never in isolation." Because he feels that effective cooperation and communication are the most important aspects of the college, this collaboration has been very gratifying for him. He has also enjoyed watching his students go on to lead "interesting and significant lives." In his years as a dean he has missed the day to day contact with students that gave him this immense gratification, and hopes to return to the classroom.

As Dean of the College, he has found satisfaction in other ways. A firm supporter of the eight block plan, he will be able to withdraw from his position with a sense of accomplishment at its passage. In its refined form, Dean Brooks believes the eight block proposal to be "an extremely constructive step towards academic excellence." Through the implementation of the eight block plan, Dean Brooks believes that the school will have a stronger faculty, and much wider opportunities in the areas of independent study.

Dean Brooks firmly believes that the

Continued page 4

America's Number 2 Team

BY ANNA SHORTT AND KAREN WILLOUGHBY

Second in the nation! The Colorado College womens soccer team reached the NCAA finals after outlasting U.Massachusetts in a semi-finalist game. The Tigers, surviving a sloppy 1st half performance against UMass, saw four Minutewomen shots hit the goalposts. (Thank God for square posts!) Led by captain Libby Sheldon, the CC women came back in the 2nd half to take control of the game. Despite a valiant effort, the end of regulation and the OT play found the

Continued page 18

Barnes Boosts Budget

BY DAVID KLEIN

Dr. Otis Barnes, a former Colorado College Chemistry professor who had a starting salary of $2500 and never earned more than $8000 in his years of teaching has left the school a sum of $4 million. It is thought to be the largest single gift ever made by a professor to a U.S. college.

Barnes and his wife built this fortune "through shrewd investment and a modest lifestyle," said CC professor of Chemistry Eldon Hitchcock. "My guess is he was wise enough to buy stocks in the thirties when prices were low and with the help of good investment advice and clever investing and reinvesting and good luck was able to make his money." Hitchcock also explains that the Barnes' lived well but did not have an extravagant lifestyle.

He left almost his entire estate to the school where it has been combined with a trust fund he and his wife had created in 1955 and $5000 to provide chemistry students with scholarships. The trust fund had grown to $1.5 million and has provided 80 Barnes scholars with four-year full-tuition scholarships. According to Joe Barber from college relations, "The Barnes' had no children, so they thought of the Chemistry students as their adopted children."

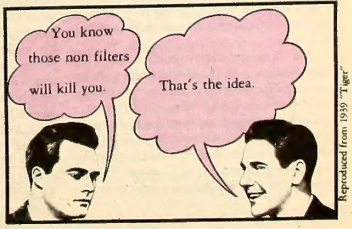
Income from the interest on the $5.5 million trust fund will support the Barnes Scholars, provide stipends for Barnes Scholar's summer research, bring noted scientists to campus, and provide money for purchase of equipment and publications.

Barnes specified that this money be used to supplement the college budget not to buy things for which the college already budgets money. According to Hitchcock "the primary purpose of the grant is the Barnes scholarships which we plan to

Continued page 2

Soccer Photo Essay Page 18

A Question of Journalistic Ethics Page 8



Reproduced from 1939 "Tiger"

87

BY ANITA WALLS

Hello, Seniors!! I sure hope you're all in a festive mood because we have some very special reasons to celebrate this month.

The Class of 1987 has thirty members that have worked so hard at C.C. that they have been able to complete their requirements in only three and a half years. The prestige of being a "DECEMBER GRADUATE" is something to be admired, respected, and congratulated.

To honor these Seniors, President Riley will host a special luncheon for them next Tuesday. Besides the graduates, Deans Taylor, McLeod, and Brooks will attend, as well as Jan Heitman, Assistant Director of Alumni Relations.

Now if you're wondering how you can get into the act and congratulate these outstanding Seniors, we have just the solution . . . A PARTY! The place to be is the El Paso Room at the Antlers Hotel. The festivities start at 7 p.m. and will probably last until they kick us out at 10 p.m.. Oh, yes — the date of the party is December 10th, which is NEXT WEDNESDAY. So make room on your calendar!! You don't even have to break out that fancy formal dress or that expensive suit and tie, but do wear something that is semi-formal. After all, it is a party to honor thirty special Seniors.

The Antlers staff is already putting together some great complimentary hors d'oeuvres, and spirits will also be available. (Don't forget to bring your I.D.) There will be plenty to go around.

Photo of the Week

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSAN

CCCA Elections Postponed Until December 16

BY GARTH FITZGERALD

President CCCA

As only an unfortunate few of you know, the CCCA Elections were scheduled to be held on Friday the 5th of December (today). This is in need of change. To better facilitate the candidates as well as the voters, the present CCCA feels it is necessary to extend the elections to the 16th of December.

All deadlines are thus moved to the following dates: the statement of candidacy is due in the Catalyst office (located at the bottom of the stairs in Cossitt) at 12:00 p.m. on Wed., Dec. 10, 1986, the petitions will be due on Dec. 10 between 4:00 p.m. and 5:00 p.m. in the Catalyst office at which time each candidate will have their picture taken. On Thurs., Dec. 11, a forum will be held at 7:00 in Olin 259 during which time each candidate will have an opportunity to say a few words. On the 12th of December we will all wish my younger sister Brooke a Happy 18th Birthday as well as viewing all of the candidates and reading what they have to say in the Catalyst, and four days later we will vote.

We are terribly sorry for the inconvenience of those who were getting prepared for elections today, but we felt we had no other choice. We don't feel that enough students have been made aware of the opportunities which are opening up in the CCCA and thus did not feel justified in holding elections so soon. So please vote on December 16th and support your school.

Riley Stumps for Eight Block Plan

BY JERREL ARMSTRONG

The principal concern among students was the Eight Block Plan during an informal question and answer session with President Gresham Riley in Bemis Hall this past Tuesday evening. President Riley also addressed issues ranging from a description of what his responsibilities were as President, to the future of CC programs abroad.

President Riley expressed utmost confidence in the faculty's ability to administer and implement the plan. "This is the kind of plan I feel I can and should support," stated the President. According to the President the eight block plan would accentuate some of his primary goals for the college, including an attempt to enhance the college's position throughout the nation as one of the premier Liberal Arts institutions. President Riley felt that the eight block plan would strengthen the faculty's ability to teach as well as the student's educational objectives. The faculty's main benefit from the plan would be an increased opportunity to learn more in their particular fields through extra research time, as well as giving substantial contributions to their respective fields. The President also feels it is important for students to take some responsibility in their own education. He stated that the independent study and research programs in the plan would encourage students to take a more active role in their education.

The President also offered a brief explanation on what his job entailed and what responsibilities he had to the college community. According to President Riley, his main responsibility is educating the student body, the faculty, and community about the role education should play in society and specifically what role a Liberal Arts education plays. The President also discussed his responsibilities in raising the needed funds which supplement the tuition that allows the college to offer the caliber of education which students expect. Aside from the public relations and fund raising aspects of his job, the President also discussed his responsibility in national affairs. This responsibility stems from the prestige and position educational institutions, especially an institution of CC's stature, has in our society. For this reason, according to the President, his responsibilities have expanded to national affairs through his involvement in national committees and boards.

The discussion also focused on the future of overseas programs. Students expressed concern about the amount of programs accessible to students. According to the President, a program that allowed students to study for a semester at a University in the Soviet Union was in its developmental stages, and programs to study in mainland China and Africa were being worked out.

President Riley concluded the discussion with comments on the soon to be released Carnegie report on higher education and attempts to improve the value of the major.

Barnes continued

double." The money will help perpetuate a distinguished lecture series which will bring noted chemists of Nobel Laureate caliber to campus. Two years ago the lecture brought Nobel Laureate biochemist, Melvin Calvin, from Berkeley to CC.

The school will probably begin to use the interest and dividends from the trust in the fall of 1987, after the IRS has looked it over and the chemistry department has decided on the distribution of the money.

The Barnes donation, the second largest the college has ever received, (the largest was a $7.5 million donation by the Packards in the early seventies) raised the total of the Capital Campaign to $28.2 million. The college hopes to raise $43.5 million by 1990.

Barnes received his doctorate degrees from the University of Illinois. He came to CC in 1925 and retired in 1962 when he was named professor emeritus. In 1966 the college gave him an honorary doctor of science degree.

Shantytown continued advised the protesters to leave if they w so dissatisfied with the school's positi Ian Campbell, another CCCAA activ added, "The station has welcomed u rebut and that's what we're working now."

From its official position, the school these protests as "a form of symb speech, protected by the constitution the school guidelines as long as they d disrupt school activities," explained Re Rabinowitz, Legal Counsel. Rabino said that the city, on the other hand, de the shanty towns as "illegal dwell points" and that the school may be cite at least $300. It that is the case, the sch may be forced to reconsider its origi position. Consequently, it is unclear how long the display will remain up.

Bryson accuses the school of be "astute" and adopting a policy protectionism. Referring to past sch treatment of the demonstrators, she s "they've been condescending beaurocratic, but now they're beginnin take us seriously." The school has asked group to disassemble the town due t small arson fires in one of the "hous during Thanksgiving break and the o legal warning, but is not forcing confrontation at this point. Listing anot measure taken by the school, mentioned that security has been step up to protect the students.

Some CCCAA members are A involved in an independent study on S Africa being conducted by Livesay. undertaking has been divided into se facets of the South African issue allocated by topic to the participa Several individual theses will be inclu in the study. The group hopes to comp the work and publish it in time for March Board of Trustees meeting.

"We're not looking for the school to money," explained Campbell referrin the CCCAA's goal of effecting comp disinvestment. He proposed that school adopt a timetable similar to th set by other schools. Campbell encoura anyone interested in the cause or co him or Tom Kaplan at 475-9180 for information. CCCAA consists of 2 students, faculty and alumni.

Closing the Gender Gap

BY SAM LOWRY

A film and discussion on the "gender gap" drew a large and active crowd to Cates Common Room on Tuesday night, with students discussing their own views on sexual stereotypes as well as views toward government policies. The event, co-sponsored by the Feminist Collective and Beta Theta Pi, was hailed as unique due to the complete absence of faculty, and for the frank airing of opinions. Organizers estimated the crowd at over 200 people.

The 15-minute film, "Gender Gap," produced prior to the 1984 presidential election, presented numerous opinions critical of Reagan administration policies, particularly its policies toward women. While many participants criticized the film's overly partisan nature, as well as its failure to substantially address the gender gap, most agreed that it provided a catalyst for the discussion which followed.

Pat Gorman and Val Feder moderated the enthusiastic discussion. Participants addressed such issues as moderate, incremental progress versus radical and rapid improvement in the societal roles of women. A number of men in the audience (women and men were equally represented in the large crowd) voiced feelings of discomfort at the "guilt by association" they felt implicit in the feminist position.

Said Shannon McGee about this dilemma, "when I think about the oppression that has been happening for hundreds and hundreds of years, I'm not too concerned about alienating a few men." She and others emphasized the goal of liberating both women and men through the feminist movement.

Gorman expressed satisfaction over the exchange of ideas in the discussion, especially in light of what he sees as an inadequate amount of discussion and debate at CC. "People are walking out of here more informed and I think that's great," he said.

In closing the discussion, Feder emphasized that the Feminist Collective aims at exactly the sort of open dialogue evident Tueaday night, and that new participants are always welcome.

Greek Update

BY J. TIM SMITH

Admittance to all fraternity open partys will require a can of food; have a great time while supporting the hungry of the Pikes Peak region.

The Inter-Fraternity Council and the Panhelenic Council are bringing the Muscular Dystrophy Association's Dance-A-Thon to Colorado College in February. Contact Mark Scoggins, Chairman of the MDA Committee, for more information. Sign up sheets will be posted early next year.

A new fraternity rush pamphlet is being designed, and it will contain many more facts and much more information than previous pamphlets.

IFC and Panhel are working on a Greek newsletter. It will be sent to alumni as well as faculty, staff, and students in late December. Information about each Greek house and IFC-Panhel activities will be features in the newsletter.

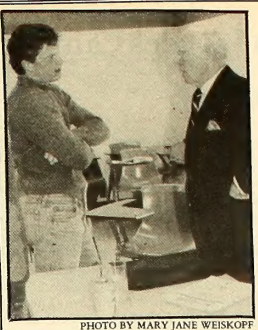

PHOTO BY MARY JANE WEISKOPF

The recently chartered Investments Club flew in a special guest from New York City last meeting (shown above)—Marc Haas, President of American Diversified Enterprises. Mr. Haas spoke to 27 students, including two members of the Career Center, interested in the topic of investment banking and job placement within the field. Response was favorable from all students. The Investments Club's next speaker is on Tuesday, December 9 in Armstrong 353 from 3-5 p.m. Mike Strauss, Vice Chairman of Union Corporation, CEO of Capital Credit Corporation and former Vice President of American Express Gold Card Marketing Divison, will fly in from New York City for all Colorado College students.

'Tis Christmas Time Again, Fa-La
Wonderful Christmas Gifts and Cards, Fa-La
For Your Friends, Loved Ones, and Family, Fa-La
At the Fa-La-La Lotus Eater Boutique, Fa-La

Mon.-Fri. 10-6 pm Sat. 11-5 pm

THE LOTUS EATER BOUTIQUE

Downtown on Platte Between Tejon & Cascade

phone: 635-2118

DOMINO'S PIZZA

TWO 12" PIZZAS FOR $9.14 ONE TOPPING

(TAX NOT INCLUDED)
Please see below for other selections.

Continued By Popular Demand

Limited Delivery Area
Our drivers carry less than $20

AVOID THE NOID
CALL DOMINO'S PIZZA

30 minute guarantee

If your pizza does not arrive within 30 minutes, present this coupon to the driver for $3.00 off your order.
One coupon per pizza.

Fast, Free Delivery
Good at listed locations.

One of the greatest offers ever from Domino's Pizza—two 12" pizzas for the price of a large! Twice the pizza for one low price!

For a limited time, order any two 12" pizzas (they don't have to be the same!), and you'll get them for the price of one 16". The price will be determined by the pizza with the most toppings.

Two 12" pizzas will only cost you:

Superb cheese	$7.95
1 topping	$9.14
2 toppings	$10.33
3 toppings	$11.52
4 toppings	$12.71
5 toppings	$13.90
6 toppings	$15.09

Twice the pizza for one low price—two 12" pizzas for the price of a large!
And, hot to your door in 30 minute or less, GUARANTEED!

Offer may expire anytime

635-1511

DOMINO'S PIZZA DELIVERS® FREE.

All Pizzas Include Our Special Blend of Sauce and 100% Real Cheese.

Our Superb Cheese Pizza
12" Cheese $5.65
16" Cheese $7.95

Additional Items
Pepperoni, Mushrooms, Ham, Onions, Green Peppers, Black Olives, Pineapple, Sausage, Ground Beef, Jalapeno Peppers,
Extra Cheese (1 item)
Double Cheese (2 items)
Thick Crust, Extra Sauce
Each Item
12" item $ .79
16" item $1.19

Ask about our Group Discount (on 5 or more pizza orders).

We accept checks.

Prices do not include tax. Our drivers carry less than $20.00.

Open for Lunch Every Day
11 am - 12 am Sun.-Thurs.
11 am - 1 am Fri.-Sat.

Soviet Symposium Invades Campus

MICHAEL S. MEHAN

Yesterday, the Colorado College Political Union opened its five day symposium on the Soviet Union. The symposium will bring in speakers from Monday to Thursday next week, covering many different areas concerning the Soviet Union and its relations with the rest of the world.

The purpose of the symposium, according to Political Union chairmen Michael Fine and Hugh Morrison, is to promote discussion and dialogue about various aspects of the Soviet Union. Co-chairman Michael Fine described it as "a mini, one week course on topics concerning the Soviet Union." Topics will include business relations with the USSR, Soviet relations with Syria, US-Soviet relations and arms control.

The first of the five guest speakers, William Menold, from the office of Soviet Affairs, U.S. Department of State, opened the symposium yesterday, at an informal, noon-time luncheon held in Hamlin House. At the luncheon, Menold answered questions and led a discussion about different aspects of the Soviet Union, including the prospects for an arms control agreement, and the future of US-Soviet relations.

Menold, who deals primarily with Soviet foreign policy, arms control, and what might be called, "nuclear matters," such as testing and nonproliferation, works in the Multilateral and Security Affairs Section of the European Bureau's Office of Soviet Affairs. Yesterday evening, the symposium formally got under way when he gave the opening speech in the Gates Common Room, entitled, "The Current State of US-Soviet Affairs."

The symposium will continue on Monday, when international business consultant Michael Yanney will discuss business relations with the Soviet Union. Yanney, a banker from Omaha, Nebraska, and President of the Agricultural Corporation of America, has traveled to the USSR over 30 times in the last five years, representing such agricultural firms as John Deere, and Valmont, the largest US manufacturer of irrigation systems.

He will start his section of the symposium at a noon time luncheon in Hamlin House, and will give a speech on US-Soviet business relations at seven o'clock Monday evening in Gates.

Tuesday the emphasis of the symposium will shift to Soviet relations with the Middle East, when Former US Ambassador to Tunisia and Syria, Talcott Seelye, will discuss the Soviet Union's relationship with Syria in a speech entitled, "the Soviet-Syrian connection and the US-Soviet Competition in the Middle East."

"The Space Defense Initiative" will be the topic of Wednesday's discussion, when Consultant for the US Space Foundation, John C. Curry, will speak on the role of space weapons in the relationship between the US and USSR.

The symposium concludes on Thursday with the topic of arms control and verification. Co-director of the Natural Resources Defense Council and USSR Test Ban Verification Project, Thomas Cochran, Ph.D., will be present at an informal luncheon at Hamlin House on noon Thursday. Cochran will give the final speech of the symposium at seven o'clock, Thursday evening, in the Gates Common Room, entitled "Arms Control and Verification."

The symposium is sponsored by the Colorado College Political Union, in cooperation with Great Performers and Ideas, the Extra-curricular Committee, CCCA, and Venture Grants.

News Brief

Eight Block Update

Gresham Riley expects the approval of the Eight Block Proposal to come at the March meeting of the Board of Trustees. After a report from the Academic Policy Committee of the Colorado College Board of Trustees, the Trustees decided to look in depth into the issue of implementation.

Riley said, "The meeting of the Academic Policy Committee was arranged so it would not conflict with any other meetings, and the entire board was encouraged to attend." The committee studied the proposal in depth and recommended approval by the entire board.

The board, however, decided it needed more information about the specifics of the implementation before they could make a final decision. The created an Ad Hoc Policy Committee of three members-at-large and the existing policy committee to meet with the Committee on Committees which is in charge of sterring the implementation of the Eight Block Year.

Ted Craig says please recycle your tuna cans.

Top Photographer

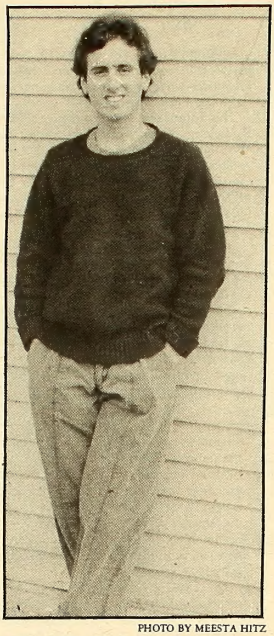

PHOTO BY MEESTA HITZ

Colorado College senior John Katsanis (above) is the first place winner of the Colorado State Lottery Photograph Contest. College students throughout Colorado participated in the competition for a prize of one hundred Colorado Lottery tickets. The contest was sponsored to promote funding of Colorado state and minicipal parks. Katsanis' photograph of Memorial Park in Colorado Springs was chosen because of its color and lighting qualities. Katsanis is editor of photography for the Catalyst.

Brooks continued

eight block plan will benefit the stud... He regrets the lack of communic... between the students and faculty tha... lead to serious misunderstandings, ... most serious of which is "the stu... belief that the eight block plan is no... more than sluffing off a block." ... believes that CC quite possibly ha... strongest undergraduate faculty in ... country. "At CC, we have ... extraordinarily dedicated faculty ... recognize what it takes for them t... better teachers." Stressing the fact ... these healthy changes will benefit ... students, he forsees the students find... "more effective working relationship... the faculty" under the eight block pla...

Overall, Dean Brooks hopes that ... students and faculty will strive ... communicate effectively. He believes ... students and faculty share ... responsibility of fulfilling the enorm... potentials of this institution, and ... through talking and listening ... potential can be realized.

Dean Brooks will leave his positio... August of 1987. President Gresham Ri... who has worked closely with Dean Bro... for the past five years appreciates ... excellent job that he has done for e... years. "Dean Brooks has served the col... extraordinarily well," recognizes Presid... Riley. "He is effective and enjoyable ... work with." President Riley attempte... persuade Dean Brooks to keep his positi... but in the end realized that it would ... better for Dean Brooks to take on ... new assignments.

At this point, Dean Brooks has e... intention of continuing to be a part of ... at CC. He may return to the Polit... Science department, or he may unde... different administrative assignments, ... he has no plans to leave the college (a... simply, he believes that it is healthy ... leadership to change.

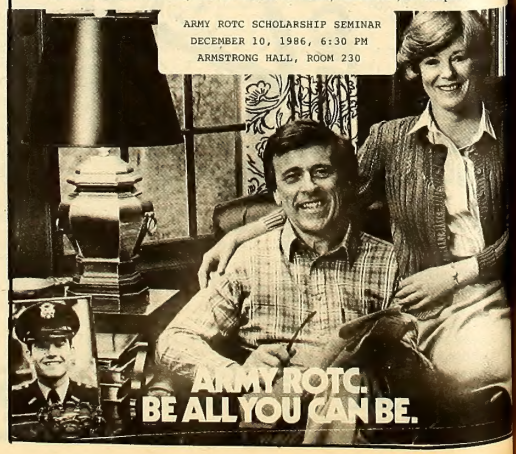
The appointment of a new dean wil... made from within the existing faculty ... has been the practice at CC for many ye... President Riley believes that the CC fac... consists of people with exceptional tal... and desires to make use of this talent. A... consultation with individuals and fac... groups to determine what will be requi... of the new dean, President Riley will m... the appointment. He hopes to reac... decision early next semester.

ARE YOU SMART ENOUGH TO SAVE YOUR PARENTS THE COST OF COLLEGE?

You are, if you win an Army ROTC scholarship. When you win one of our scholarships, we pay your tuition, books, lab fees and other academic expenses. We'll also give you up to $1,000 a year extra. And when you graduate, we'll make you an Army officer.

But you have to be more than smart to win. We'll consider your extracurricular, leadership and athletic activities. And if you reach the finals, we'll meet with you for a personal interview.

For more information about how to avoid overburdening your parents for the next four years, contact the Army ROTC Professor of Military Science on your campus.



the Stagecoach Inn

Affordable Elegance
Open All Year
for
Lunch Dinner
Sunday Champagne Brunch

RESERVATIONS 685-9335

The Liberal Arts Inquiry Group

BY TED CRAIG

What do the Second Law of Thermodynamics, Faust, Lou Gehrig's lifetime slugging percentage, Nietzsche's theory of eternal recurrence and Mao's Cultural Revolution have in common? Probably nothing, but if there is an answer, it might be discovered at an interdisciplinary discussion in the College's Liberal Arts Inquiry Program.

Entering into its second year, the new program involves approximately 20 students and six faculty members in a never ending search for the correct paradigm. The Inquiry Group seeks to embody the spirit of a Liberal Arts education, bringing together students from all disciplines to discuss broad topics. English Professor George Butte, an initial creator of the program, describes it as "a model of liberal learning . . . without a grade in the balance."

Seeking strength through consolidation, participants this year decided to divide into only two subgroups. After considering proposals from all members, one group chose the theme of "progress" to loosely classify the year's discussions. Typically, the subgroups meet once a block, with one student identifying a specific topic, often writing a paper and assigning relevant readings.

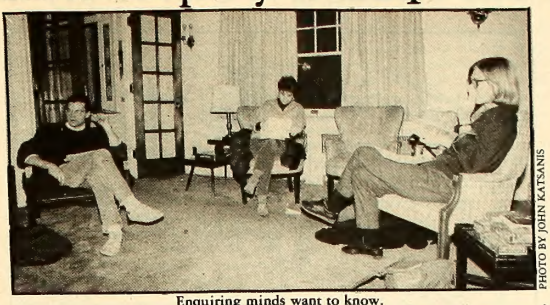


PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Enquiring minds want to know.

After just two meetings, Senior Inger Thomson expressed what seems to be a consensus view on the theme "progress": "My conclusion is that there is no such thing . . .things stay the same or regress."

With an eye to the first group's choice of topic, the second cadre of atavistic interlocutors chose to pursue a complementary (antithetical?) search for "origins," though English major Priscilla Perkins admits "I thought they said 'oranges.'"

Because involvement in the program can prove a significant burden under the block plan, LAI elders seek students with strong academic commitment. CC students with an average G.P.A. of 3.6 or above are invited into the program, though the 3.6 standard is not "a hard and fast thing." "Generally," says Professor Butte, "it hasn't been a matter of conflict."

In addition to the monthly subgroup meetings, participants have attempted to gather once a block in a larger group for special events or social occasions. This Wednesday they grilled labor leader (and all-round Renaissance man) Gus Tyler over dinner in Bemis.

For both students and faculty, the absence of concern over grades is a key element in the program, providing for relaxed discussions and a genuine commitment to the subject matter. Chemistry Professor Keith Kester praised the initiative of those involved: "I don't feel responsible for getting the discussions going, and I don't have the worry that if I don't speak it'll fall flat."

Although the program is still in its infancy, both students and faculty members express enthusiasm and a determination to avoid any entropic dissolution of LAIP. Despite the time and energy required, students have found it well worth the effort. Concluded "origins" member Perkins, "I used to think I'd come and talk a lot, but I've found that I'd rather listen."

Take the Plunge

BY LINDA SMITH

The world is filled with needs. Our attention is drawn to myriad concerns: South Africa, Central America, pollution, AIDS, nuclear arms, women's equality, political campaigns, crime rates, taxes, tuition bills, exams, lunch...

There are, however, some needs that have no voice. Some needs won't and/or can't come to us; we must go to them. This is exactly what 19 young adults of First Presbyterian Church did the weekend of November 7-9. This group, comprised of the College Age Fellowship (Seekers) and the Young Working Singles (Sonrise), took what we call an Urban Plunge. The weekend is an experience in the inner city of Denver, an experience of the needs of the silent: the homeless, the jobless, the poor, the mentally ill, the youth, those in prison.

Friday evening we drove into Denver, passing by the Tabor Shopping Mall just 4 blocks to reach the Salvation Army. A man who had once roamed the streets, now a soldier in the Salvation Army, spoke to us of their program of counseling and aid in the areas of employment, alcoholism, and spirituality. They also run a shelter on Blake Street. The men in our group spent the night there and interacted with the homeless men while sharing in the evening meal of the soup truck outside.

Our women were provided sleeping space at the Denver Rescue Mission, otherwise known as Jesus Saves. Jesus Saves provides medical help throughout the week, gospel services every night followed by dinner, beds for 40, and breakfast in the morning. They are striving to double their capacity with bunk beds, but they are receiving opposition from the community which doesn't want to attract more transients. The community however, fails to see that there are approximately 3000 homeless in Denver and only 180 beds in shelters. Adding to shelter capacity simply brings people off the streets rather than attract more.

Morning came quickly as the men must leave the shelters at 5:00. Our group rejoined and shared stories over breakfast at Jesus Saves. Following breakfast, we relocated to the home of Hope Prison Ministry's Chaplain William Fay. In 1980 Bill Fay was a chief executive of the fourth largest pacemaker company in the world; he was also the owner of the nation's largest house of prostitution! He now ministers to maximum security inmates bringing hope to their lives and strength to stand once they're out. Bill also speaks to congregations, informing them of how

Continued on page 7

TACO JOHN'S
Happy Holidays
COUPON
Good April 18 through May 1 only
Get a FREE Soft Shell Taco
When you buy one at regular price
Offer Not Good With Any Other Special per visit at
TACO JOHN'S.
-Use the 20% Discount Card-

Origins of a Ski Industry: U.S. Army hits the slopes

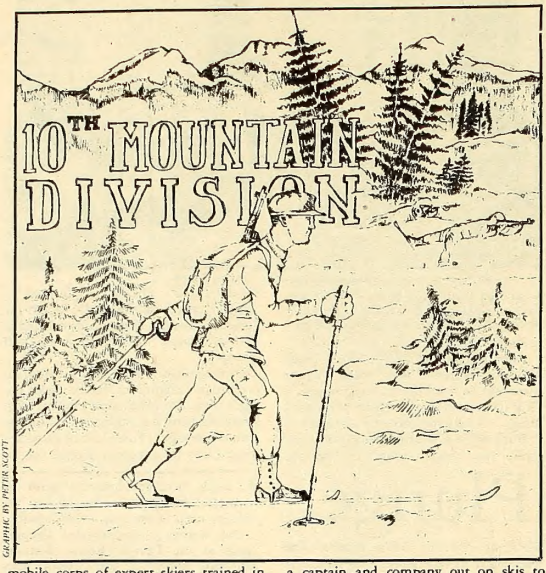
BY ALEC REKOW

As heavy clouds labor over the Continental Divide and drop snow on high country slopes, many people turn to the ski areas where they will carve turns this winter. While most skiers travel up I-70 to ski at Summit County giants such as Vail, Keystone, and Arapaho Basin, those in search of the Colorado ski industry's roots might go to a deserted valley further southwest—the Pando Valley just north of Tennessee Pass and Leadville. Here lies an old railway siding that stretches past crumbled foundations of an abandoned army camp and hints of other times when thousands of men lived in this valley and schussed on hickory-wood skis in the surrounding mountains.

Forty-four years ago soldiers of the US 10th Mountain Division rode this railway siding into their new barracks at Camp Hale. As members of the United States' first and only ski and alpine troops, the 10th practiced winter and mountain warfare technics that later helped them break through Hitler's defenses in Northern Italy's Apennine Mountains. Their feats established the 10th Mountain Troops as the most highly decorated division of the Italian campaign.

The 10th Mountain Division was established largely due to the efforts of a civilian National Ski Patrol leader named Minot Dole. In WWII's early days as the Nazi Blitzkreig thundered across Europe, Dole shared many Americans' fears of a possible US invasion. He realized (just as the British had during the American Revolution) that the natural invasion route of the US would come from the Northeast during winter—through Canada along the frozen St. Lawrence River and down the Champlain Valley to Albany and New York City, thus effectively cutting off the Northeast from the rest of America. Dole believed the best defense against such an invasion would consist of a highly mobile corps of expert skiers trained in winter warfare and survival, who might harass the enemy until American forces could regroup. Dole pointed to ski troops' achievements in past wars, most recently in the 1939 Russian winter invasion of Finland where small groups of Finnish alpine troops had sufficiently harried the numerically and technolgically superior Russian forces for months.



GRAPHIC BY PETER SCOTT

Actually, European armies had used winter ski troops as scouts for hundreds of years. In 1190 Norweigen King Sverre sent a captain and company out on skis to reconoiter enemy positions at the Battle of Oslo. 1747 saw the birth of the Norweigen Ski Korps. By the late seventeenth century Italy had initiated its Alpini troops, France its Chasseur Alpins. During WWI Italy's Alpini played a large role among the northern Alps. By WWII Hitler maintained a crack mountain division—the Gebirgstruppe. As former 10th Mountain Division soldier Bill Boddington (former CC men's soccer coach) explains, "when ski troops travel across the snow, they often follow one single file trail. T makes it extremely difficult for an e who comes across their tracks to k whether two men passed, or five hund and two."

By WWII's early stages Dole convinced the War Department that troops traditionally trained in flat locales such as Louisiana and Texas w flounder in any potential US moveme into Europe where mountain chains such as the Alps and Apennines crea defensive barriers. Most European nati already maintained alpine troops, such Hitler's Gebirgstruppe, Dole argued.

In December of 1940 the US Ar created the Winter Warfare Board in or to establish a mountain ski-soldier u Dole and his National Ski Patrol beca the first civilian organization to h recruit a US military force. As skiing w relatively new American sport, the h high command might have thought difficult to find enough enthusiastic ski to form a division. Dole, howev recruited many of his Ski Patrol buds and then sent letters to every college university in the country that carried or outing program. He also provid information regarding the new divisio many mountain and explorer clubs. Yo men from all over the country, altho mostly from the Northeast where ski was most popular, volunteered for the alpine unit: the 87th regiment.

Because of the many enthusias responses, Dole's organization maintain a competitive selective process. As well seeking men with outdoor skills interests, Dole wanted intelligent recr who exhibited high moral character patriotism. Known as the "Three Le Outfit," volunteers submitted three lette of recommendation: one from volunteer's local ski association, anoth from his high school principal or colle president, and one from his chu

December Specials at the Bookstore

Please come for
*C - C - C
There's no room in McGregor for our annual Bookstore
Christmas Party, so we hope you'll join us on Fridays for Cookies and Coffee
and
25% off Cards, Cups, and Calendars.

Order your Gift Books from our Catalogue and get an extra 10% off!

1987 Colorado College Calendar $3.95

Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday
10% off Sweatshirts 1	10% off Stuffed Animals 2	10% off Infants and Children's Clothing 3	10% off Calendars 4	*C - C - C 5
20% off Art Supplies 8	20% off Children's Books 9	20% off All Clothing 10	20% off Browse Books 11	*C - C - C 12
30% off Posters 15	30% off Records and Tapes 16	30% off Backpacks and Bags 17	30% off All Christmas Merchandise 18	*C - C - C 19

Sign up for door Prizes:
$50 Gift Certificate, Football, Steak Knife Set
---- and more!

Happy Holidays!

...mountain troops go to war minister. As a result of Dole's recruitment, the 10th Mountain Division included a fantastic array of personalities—world-class skiers, Ivy League college boys, mountaineers, forest rangers and trappers, lumbermen and guides, cowboys and mule skinners.

By late 1941 the first US alpine troops began temporary training at Mt. Rainier in Washington State. Meanwhile the army chose Pando Valley in the Colorado Rockies as a permanent training location. With an existing Santa Fe Railway ready to transport troops, they built barracks along the Eagle River in the valley ringed by wind-blown peaks. In December of 1942 the first 10th Mountain Infantry soldiers arrived to their new home and initiated training.

In its hey day Pando Valley housed fourteen thousand troops. As the new recruits began camp life they experienced many hardships. Lowland trainees gasped for weeks in the thin air. Heavy black smoke from passing trains and the troops' wood and coal furnaces hung over Camp Hale and tormented the mens' throats and lungs. Mountain weather proved unpredictable with night temperatures that dropped to 30 degrees below zero and snowstorms that dumped deep powder around the camp.

In training, the soldiers used mountain conditions to their advantage. They spent days on the surrounding slopes and perennually built a rope tow at Cooper Hill. In the summer they climbed cliffs and crossed rivers, and in the winter they skied. Their training involved carrying ninety pound packs during daily marches. Frequently they herringboned up to treeline where they set up military positions and bivouaced for the night on the windy slopes. Soldiers also left camp for four to ten day training sessions. One time the entire division left Camp Hale's relatively snug confines for the six week "D" series manouver. During the manouver temperatures plummeted. After one frigid night, over one hundred men had to be treated for frostbite.

One may wonder how these soldiers survived training. While many left the camp for more moderate climes, many more remained for the full training period. Those who stayed must have experienced a strong comraderie based in part on their shared experiences and common love for the mountains. It is also important to remember how these troops entered the 10th Mountain. They were volunteers determined to survive the ordeal.

However, training wasn't always miserable. The soldiers spent days skiing under clear Colorado skys. When off duty they used the new rope tows at Aspen and Berthoud Pass. The 10th Mountain men's recreational ski experiences may have encouraged them to return after the war to pursue ski-oriented careers.

The 10th Mountain Division remained at Camp Hale until the summer of 1944 when they left for a brief flatland training course in Texas. Soon they were ordered to the Italian Front in the Appennines Mountains to help crack Hitler's Gothic Line. Summit Magazine writer John Woodruff describes the Allied Forces' collision with the gothic Line that fall: "the Allied forces had fought all the way across Sicily and up the boot, but were stalled by a seemingly impregnable string of mines, machine gun nests, artillery and booby traps." Beyond the Apennines lay the Allied Command's immediate goal—the Po River valley, a fertile corridor that ran into Austria.

...world class skiers, Ivy League boys, mountaineers, forest rangers and trappers, lumbermen and guides, cowboys and mule skinners

The Allied Command decided to test the 10th's mountain abilities with orders to capture Mt. Belvedere, a massive peak which nestled a German battery outpost near its crest. In order to reach Belvedere's guns, however, the 10th had to attack Riva Ridge, a rocky cliff overlooking Belvedere's open ridges. The 10th's troops slipped to Riva Ridge's base under the cloak of darkness and hidin an abandoned village's farmhouses.

On the night of February 18th, 1945 four roped assault teams crept up Riva Ridge's 1,500 ft. face. The icy wind that swept over the rocks carried the occasional dropped piton's clink or tired soldier's cough away from the sleeping Germans. By dawn the 10th teams reached the top and captured their adversaries.

As the troops on Riva Ridge dug in to weather German counterattacks, other 10th regiments swept up Mt. Belvedere's slopes. Losses proved much heavier on the mountain's mined slopes. Luckily the troops neutralized the German guns due to their new observation post on Riva Ridge. After Belvedere the 10th fought north through the Apennines, capturing German positions hill by hill, one objective to another until they reached the Po River. By spring the Italian Front had collapsed and the 10th Mountain Division's role in the war was over.

Due to their outstanding service, the 10th Mountain Division earned the highest decoration rate of any division serving in the Italian campaign. Unfortunately, they also suffered the highest casualty rate. Of the 11,000 soldiers who served, 990 died and over 3,000 were wounded.

When the surviving 10th Mountain soldiers returned to the United States many traveled west—back to the Rockies where they had skied with their regiments. Former 10th men helped develop some of Colorado's largest ski areas—Aspen Mountain, Arapahoe Basin, Vail and Snowmass. 10th veterans have worked in all parts of the ski industry as managers, ski patrolmen, ski instructors, and equipment manufacturers.

Today over 3,000 10th Mountain veterans belong to the 10th Mountain Division's National Association. They publish a newspaper called "The Blizzard" and still meet to ski on Colorado slopes and reminisce about 10th Division achievements. As veteran Bill Boddington recalls, "the original group of guys stationed at Camp Hale were undoubtably the nicest bunch ever brought together in a war outfit." The guys who sacrificed during the United States' war effort also helped create the Colorado ski industry.

Plunge continued from page 5

they can support recently released ex-cons and noting that 83% of released inmates return to prison within 3 years while only 7% of Christian inmates return.

Next we visited Jan Williams at the Inner City Health Center. Several years ago, Jan and her husband began to see their faith in Christ in a new way, a way that led them out of their comfortable suburban home and into Denver's inner city. As a medical doctor, Jan's husband earned a large salary. In response to their new view of Scripture they decided they could live on half their income which would allow him to halve his practice, pair up with another doctor and establish another practice for low income families.

We then drove to the West Hotel, an old hotel that is now a low rate apartment complex. There we met with the Reverend Majorie Cooper. Majorie is new to Denver. She just arrived from Chicago, but she is wasting no time getting involved. She founded a church that holds worship services for the elderly and the homeless. Marjorie gave up a singing career with the Met to pursue her present vocation, and she challenged us to discover how and where God would have us minister to the oppressed, for all of us are oppressed.

That evening we spent the night in the home of Neighborhood Ministry's Ted Travis. Although Ted was gone for the weekend we were able to speak with one of his co-workers. As she spoke, it was evident to us the investment of her life in the lives of the children she works with. Neighborhood does more than meet immediate needs of people; they provide support, counseling, skills, direction, and hope; provisions that empower people to live full lives.

Saturday evening some of us returned to Blake Street to talk with more men and learn more from them. Sunday morning we concluded the trip with worship at Agape Christian Church. Agape, once an Anglo church with outreach to Blacks and Asians, is now primarily Black and Asian. We enjoyed a blessed time of worship with them.

The Plunge has many purposes, but overall it is hoped that those who participated will not count the experience as a weekend experience but a lifetime experience. It is hoped that what we learned will compel us to address such needs right here in Colorado Springs and that in so doing we will recognize our own poverty despite our material wealth and learn more fully what worshiping God means (see Isaiah 58).

CC students that went were Betsey Brewer, Jacquie Cartwright, Heidi Hawkins, Joy Keller, and Min Lo. If you want to know more about this Urban Plunge, any of the specific people we met, our Plunge scheduled for the Spring, or Seekers in general, talk to any one of these students or contact me, Linda Smith ('86), the Seekers intern: 471-3763 x50

Letters to Liz

Self-satisfaction and the Middle Class

Dear Editor:

This letter is in response to the three letters which appeared on the Opinions page of the Catalyst, November 14, 1986. Liz Cheney, Corey Able and Inger Thomson all claim to be arguing for a "calmness and moderation in political affairs," a respect for our "liberal democracy" which entails "self-criticism" and not "self-condemnation," and the assertion that liberalism is essentially a flimsy moral compromise intended to satiate the "generic man." The reasons I believe all these claims to be "simply" not true are many.

Conservatives by nature are caretakers of the status quo; and when these conservatives come from the upper middle class—or any section of the middle class—they usually acknowledge generously that "things" should be improved, yet achingly slow and as long as they do not get hurt. Ms. Cheney in her letter toots the horn of our liberal democracy, claiming it was created by the "best and the brightest" minds in history. These are fine words, and so are her righteous sneers at we liberals who do not honor our veterans on Veterans Day, haughtily exclaiming "How dare we?" Then she goes on to grant us our right to self-criticism but not to self-condemn—something, I assume, of which she can readily tell the difference, for she seems to be infused with a special understanding of what it is like to be an American—as opposed to someone like me.

To all this I say: Do not tout your love of "liberal democracy" to me, Ms. Cheney; liberal democracy to you is something on the plane of an abstraction which you are too afraid to see in concrete reality. The true spirit of liberalism—a spirit which Inger Thomson labels "mediocre"—is to recognize all the glaring faults in our current "free" society. For there is not only such a thing as political justice, there is also something on the same strata of importance—social justice. And if you would only "lower yourself" to the level of the filthy working class you will see (and feel and think and breathe) that there is a lack of social justice in this country, not only in the area of the country where I come from, Philadelphia, but Colorado Springs itself. I have seen one family living out of their car in the parking lot of Job Service—with their one child. What do we do, Ms. Cheney? We shake our heads and call it a pity—and then we blame those lazy good-for-nothings for not having our grand capitalist ambition to improve themselves, to run over the other guy in haste to get to the "top." There is such a thing as self-respect, a self-respect which a man or woman must feel before they can even begin the great social climb up the golden ladder which the great middle class have created for itself. But how is this possible in the despair of the slums of, say, a South Philadelphia, an upper Bronx, hell, even under the bridge in sweet Republican Colorado Springs? How is it possible for men or women who have families, yet who also have recurrent illnesses and cannot hold a job, or even because of their accent and the way they dress? If 10 million people are starving in this country, shouldn't we ask ourselves why, and please stop patting ourselves on the back because Jefferson and Washington lived two hundred years ago? Should we actually try to help feed these people? And if so, not just to show off to the Soviets that we have more refrigerators, bathrooms or fat people than they do, but because we really care, on a deep personal human level.

In reply to Inger Thomson: liberalism no more clouds morality than it does a blue sky; it continually helps redefine our values under new conditions. Morality is not a set list of do's and don'ts, but an amorphous, protean code of personal ethics we choose for ourselves. Morality is never a set system of dogma, and even if it were, who is to set it? Who would "dare" without interferring with those sacred political rights which I, as well as Ms. Cheney and company, "hold so dear?" Also to Inger Thomson: liberalism is not an attempt to escape from the past. It is an attempt to learn from the past, to release us from its chains when they are too unnecessarily binding and do not live with the reality we see. In this respect, psycholo-analysis is a great tool, for we do not need to live a life condemned to a web of memory we cannot dissect or associate for ourselves.

Liberalism is a means to the end of justice in all reaches and levels of society; it is far better to question our assumptions than to sit self-satisfied on our middle-class values and tout abstractly the greatness of "liberal democracy." We must never ignore the social injustice around us, even if it does hurt like hell to see our ignorant complicity in it. I do not condemn our political system; I condemn the self-satisfaction of a middle class who are numb to the social realities around them. It is fine for Colorado College students to blow the horn for divestment in South Africa—but dare the same students blow the horn for investment in our own cities? Keep the shacks up in front of Armstrong! We will go from city to city within our great liberal democracy and protest for the rights to jobs, dignity and self-respect!

Victor Greto

The Voice of the Future Speaks

Dear Editor:

Congratulations to Liz Cheney on a fine article concerning an important topic confronting today's American people! I am excited that the students of Colorado College are eager to see Wayne D. Rudner: The Voice of the Future appear on "Late Night with David Letterman," and I guarantee it to be an outstanding interview sure to please millions (donations for a trip to New York City are being accepted at mathias Box 248). Congratulations are also in order to the Catalyst's superhuman editors Dave Klein and Blair Sanford—you will truly be missed. Andy Cozine (Campaign Vice President) and I anxiously look forward to working with the new editors at the helm next semester. Watch out world, Wayne D. Rudner is not finished yet!

Eagerly Yours,
Wayne D. Rudner

The Raw Exercise of Power

Dear Editor:

The latest issue of the Catalyst was so dominated by CC's right-wing pseudo-idealogues that it makes one wonder if the Catalyst Opinions Editor, Liz Cheney, has any journalistic ethics whatsoever. Perhaps the Catalyst staff felt that the Colorado College Conservative Coalitions' formation was important enough to be the lead story. But they should have taken time to remember the other developments of the week, notably the Shanty-Town protest in front of Armstrong. All of the local TV stations, the Gazette Telegraph, Denver Post, Rocky Mountain News and the news wires felt the shanty towns important enough to feature it quite prominently. The Catalyst meanwhile did not actually report the issue and thereby committed a great disservice to its readers and to its own ethics. I should mention that the Catalyst did include a photograph of a shanty but also felt it important to include many cheap, snide remarks designed to tear down the legitimacy of the shanty town protest. Besides, I know for a fact that the Catalyst had enough information and time to include an article about the whole protest. But they did not, and I wonder why.

Part of the Catalyst situation can be explained by its somewhat biased Opinions Editor. In the last issue she felt it crucial to include on the lead page of her opinions section not one, but three editorials side by side, written by the newly formed Colorado College Conservative Coalition of which she is a member. This is not a balanced coverage, it is the raw exercise of power at the expense of any journalistic ethic. I too support discourse on important issues but I do not feel discourse is promoted through only presenting one side of the political spectrum. We have seen enough of the right-wing power press in the local Gazette Telegraph. This newspaper regularly features not one but three columns written by the editors of the National Review, a conservative journal. The press in Colorado Springs is notably skewed to the Right and so was the last issue of the Catalyst.

I know the conservatives are suffering through some trying times lately and many of them see the need to assert what power they do have in an attempt to hang on to their programs. They are essentially re-grouping and it will take some time before they come to terms with the recent developments within their party. Perhaps in their search they will consider alternative viewpoints. A word of warning: the classic reactionary response to crises is the raw exercise of power.

Tony and Kevin Lopez

Letter From Liz

"Void of any journalistic ethics"; indulging in "raw exercise of power"; "presenting only one side of political spectrum;" being a member of the "right-wing power press," and purposely omitting coverage of shantytown, are all criticisms levied against the Catalyst in this week's "Letters to Liz." In response to these comments we can only say: Folks, let your fingers do the walking.

The current editorial staff has published eight issues prior to this week's. A quick tabulation of the political columns, letters, and cartoon in the editorial section reveals 11 "right-wing" contributions and 12 "left-wing" opinions. The appearance of three "conservative" opinions in the last issue says no more about the political bias or journalistic ethic of the editors than did its appearance, in the same issue, of two columns criticizing the Iranian Arms deal.

As for the shantytowns, the structures appeared in front of Armstrong on Thursday, November 13. The deadline for Catalyst articles is Wednesday at noon; by Thursday the articles have been typeset and the Catalyst staff is laying out the newspaper. Because we felt the shanties were an important news story we did what we could—we ran a front page picture of the structures. This week we are runing a news story giving the shanties the coverage we agree they deserve.

The Recurrence of Painful Havoc

Dear Editor:

Returning to CC after a year's absence I was dismayed at some slight alterations in the Catalyst. The editorial page had become "Letters to Liz," complete with fighter plane and American flag logo, footnote assuring us that opinions expressed in progressive articles are not necessarily those of the paper we frequent, as were political cartoons I could do without. However these seemed trivial points and certainly not worth raising my hackles about. This week's issue (Nov. 14), on the other hand, contained some "opinion" outlandish enough to necessitate response.

In her article "Liberalism: A Mediocre Response to Common Problem" Inger Thomsen states "The liberal mind refuses to recognize this fact (of the impossibility of creating an entirely new world) and devotes its time trying to free itself from the past." Thomsen goes on to equate the "liberal mind" with a need for psychoanalysis because of its constant attempt to disengage itself from the past. Au contraire, the "liberal mind" is acutely aware of the past and through this historical perspective seeks to understand the ways the recurrence of painful havoc can be avoided. The acknowledgement of radioactive and chemical spills and efforts to prevent such recurrences or recognition of the analogous nature of Viet-Nam and the current horrors in Central America are two cases in point. How sad it is that only "liberal" psyches are affected by such things! Further, there are very few people who plan to create an "entirely new world" before some of the muck we are currently wallowing in is cleaned up.

Thomsen goes on to say that "Liberalism strives for an illusion of ultimate agreement by throwing morality by the wayside," which she attempts to substantiate by quote from Minogue (from whom she draws heavily) stating "morality condemns, liberalism tries to understand." I fail to see the connection between attempts at unified understanding among people and a lack of morals.

Perhaps I simply don't read between the lines well enough to understand the point of the article. That would surprise me, however. As a long time "liberal thinker" I have become a fine between-the-lines reader, aided tremendously by three years of the Gazette Telegraph. Could it be that the article is pointless unsubstantiated—"a mediocre response to a common problem" which as yet has not been defined?

Maybe next year someone could try a new logo for the editorial page; an olive branch and a dove? Or if that's too bleeding-heart, not tough enough, how about something apolitical, like a Navajo Indian by a clear stream on one side and the same Indian years later with leukemia next to a Kerr-McGee uranium mine on the other.

Anne Meadow

Equality at the Grass Roots Level

BY MEGAN D. GRAY

I think all of us who attended the discussion put on by the Feminist Collective and Beta Theta Pi Fraternity were surprised and encouraged by the large turn out. I was doubly impressed because I realized it was the first meeting I have attended at CC where there were no faculty present, just students concerned about a fundamental issue important enough for them to shake off the so-called 'CC apathy' and demonstrate interest. I found it heartwarming.

As one student pointed out in the discussion, the term "Feminist" can be applied to a female or a male because it represents the striving towards a universal liberation of both sexes; it is not simply a "woman's issue," for the sex roles that oppress women also limit and restrict men. It was encouraging to discover how many of the men in the room, by their presence and by their remarks, seemed to agree with this premise and demonstrate sincere concern in wanting to explore ways in which to lessen the gender gap and arrive at an equally positive and mutually beneficial manner of relating between the sexes. I came to the meeting wondering what sort of comments I would hear about Feminism from, among others, the members of a fraternity—the two concepts seemed to me to be almost mutually exclusive. I realized my mistaken presumption when I heard some of what I thought were the most insightful, articulate, open-minded and provoking comments made coming from those very same 'frat-boys'—a bias of my own was revealed and disproved thanks to the laudable efforts of Beta Theta Phi and the Feminist collective. By the same token, I would like to encourage all women who believe themselves to be immune from sexist biases to try and be aware of any tendencies they might have towards reverse discrimination, and more importantly, become aware of any tendencies towards patriarchal sexism that may have been internalized unconsciously. If we all try to examine our own preconceptions and biases, the community as a whole will profit from the increased awareness. I am thankful to those driving forces behind "The Gender Gap" discussion (most notably, Valerie Feder and Patrick Gorman) for making such an event possible and providing the opportunity for the CC community to come together and examine an issue which is so essential to us all.

One issue which was brought up, (and which I think is central to our concerns as a constantly growing, re-evaluating community), was the issue of 'reverse discrimination.' A male student expressed feelings of alienation and oppression as a result of being held responsible for the history of patriarchal repression of women and other groups. He said that he "had been made to feel like a bad person" by contemporary social philosophy which blames the dominance of the white male for many of the ills of society. What worries me about this phenomena is that if every time a man hears about "Feminism," he hears an accusing voice, a negative projection, a feeling of undeserved guilt weighing upon him, he will associate the issue as one that doesn't speak to him, but against him, and as such he will avoid it and close himself off to it everytime he thinks he sees a 'militant feminist, man-hater' flag go up. This is counterproductive to our goal in seeing feminism through as finally a universally human liberation from bonds of sexual roles which are unequal, negative and limiting to both sexes. We should not be so much concerned with pointing fingers (although to identify the aggravating origins is necessary to some extent) as we are with collectively coming to an understanding of our present day situation in order to ensure more rewarding roles and relationships for both sexes in the future. Whether the progress of the feminist movement (as defined in terms beneficial to both sexes) needs to be incremental or not, certainly we all agree that changes do need to be made. And as the longest journey may start with the smallest step, changes, if we really want to make them, have to be made at the grass roots level—starting here, in our community.

Which brings me to what I believe to be the crux of my statement: In the discussion which followed the showing of the film, "The Gender Gap," a lot of important theoretical and political issues were raised, but disappointingly, there was not a lot of discussion as to how gender issues personally affect us as a community here at CC and as members of a larger humanity. What I am curious to know, (and I address this to both those males who feel they 'have been made to feel like bad people' through no fault of their own, and those who don't), is that insofar as we are an educated, open-minded faction of the population and insofar as you all are educated, liberated, open-minded males, how wide do you think the gap is between genders here in our community? Those of you who coherently and intelligently spoke out at the discussion and expressed a real desire to really work towards a humanist revision of gender relations, let me ask you this; it is easy enough to speak in favor of the feminist issues theoretically when surrounded by a group of feminists, but I wonder, do you put that theory into practice when you are behind closed doors with the rest of "the dudes?" Do you keep the issue of sexual inequality in your minds when 'just the guys' are speaking 'in the locker room'; planning for the 'killer party?' looking over Sports Illustrated swimsuit issues? checking out a girl in the beer line? How many of you are really concerned with consciousness raising in your peer group? How many of you reproach your friends when they make degrading or dehumanizing comments about women which perpetuate the gender gap? How many of you make such comments yourselves? Is your commitment to change and improvement of gender roles and relations between the sexes as feverent when you are writing articles for your private fraternity magazines as when you are in a room with members of the Feminist Collective? I would like to know how many of you honestly believe that you are doing all you can and that the bad rap that you get as a dominant white male is undeserved. I say to you that I am not asking to be facetious, I am in all sincerity asking these questions because I really and truly wonder what you all think, and as you all appeared to be intelligent and honest speakers, I feel confident that most of you will transcend any impulses to react to these questions with defensive resentment, but rather as a truly concerned community that wants to get to the bottom of the issue. I welcome response from any and all readers.

Do you keep the issue of sexual equality in your minds when "just the guys" are speaking in the locker room?

Is Anyone Listening?

BY HUGH MORRISON

As the present leader of a student organization, the Political Union, I feel some of my patience towards the present status quo at our school ready to burst. A combination of administrative inadequacies and student apathy are, I feel, greatly diminishing the political and social atmosphere of CC.

To start with the levels of political activity and general information have declined to almost nill. As I recall, two years ago the school sponsored such speakers as former President Ford, candidate John Anderson, the Syrian Ambassador to the US, ex-Watergate associate Jeff Magruder, and Congressman Cheney. Many of these speakers were involved in the Thursday-at-Eleven and Endowed Lecture series. Last year these programs showed a major decline in level of activity with the exception of a small variety of musical groups. This year? Govenor Richard Lamm. That is it. In one semester one important speaker has been brought in by the school! How pitiful!

Students haven't been much better. Not only are above listed organization significantly controlled by students but also a recent organization entitled the CC Conservative Students has attempted to form itself for purposes similar to those of existing organizations (notably the Political Union). Meanwhile, the CCCA members have resisted entering existing organizations. Student apathy can mostly be seen at lectures, whether sponsored by the school or by student groups. I have begun to wonder whether the school does have a legitimate reason in not sponsoring speakers which nobody attends anyway.

The social atmosphere at CC is also in limbo. It has been criticized by the administration as being too Greek-oriented. However, the same administration which undermines this atmosphere by increasing restrictions placed on fraternity houses and the demolition of any alternative social atmosphere, notably Benny's, also fails to replace it. Regulations on on-campus living quarters prevents dorms from sponsoring parties. The school itself is not sponsoring anything. Even important events, notably the recent success of our women's soccer team, have been totally neglected.

What has upset me most about the apathy on this campus is that involving two issues which seem to apall students more than anything else—the Eight Block Plan and Saga. The CCCA recently held hearings discussing student concerns on the Eight Block Plan with the intention of sharing them with the Board of Trustees. Yet I continuously hear students who are opposed to the plan offer the apathetic excuse that these hearings were insignificant! As for Saga, with the large amount of the student body abhoring the food (the largest understatement of the year), one would think somebody would have organized an anti-Saga petition or other form of protest. Student action doesn't take a great deal of originality or creativity.

What the hell is happening here on this campus? Let's hope somebody does something about it.

The Superficiality of Labels

BY REBECCA PIKE

We create labels for intellectuals who seem to naturally need groupings such as: conservative and liberal. When we need definitions for things these labels work fine. Often times these labels get over-used and become meaningless, allowing factions to exist that are no longer based on specific ideologies but on bland stereotyped images serving only as levers for anger and frustration.

Hopefully, on a campus where students think enough about specific ideas and human situations, individuals can evaluate, create, and maintain values that are deep enough to allow mosiacs of ideologies. Given this variation, the terms liberal and conservative become obsolete in such broad senses.

Even still, we often feel the frustration of watching people who seemingly don't understand individual problems and deal only on the over-generalized level: acting by what an image tells our emotions to do. This is perhaps due to lack of understanding specific issues combined, with the internal 'feeling' that issues are connected. We need to first speak to specific issues and then from issue to issue draw the important and inevitable connections.

I believe that this is partly what the conservative group is attempting to say. Yet, such statements as: "People accept liberalism without knowing it tenets" ('Conservatives on Campus' Catalyst Vol. 20, No. 8) create an opposition to a stereotype—an invisible group that truly does not exist—and only escalate the problem of ignorant pigeon-holing and bandwagon jumping.

A conservative group of students on campus that is organized on intellectual grounds—by ideals that are specific—is indeed necessary for dialogue. A group that begins with a title "Colorado College Conservative Students" is already setting the tone for angry factions united on emotional and superficial grounds rather than through thinking and rational decision making. A group that begins as a reaction against conceived vague behaviors that may not even really exist is an open-minded failure from the beginning. The group will forever be battling something (its opposition) rather than dealing with concrete issues.

All issues will be dealt with together under a blanket system with a certain method of attack that fits the 'conservative' mode of thinking. Such a conservative platform is fine if this is a group that is formed for methodological ways of dealing with issues. The reasons voiced did not seem to be for these reasons though.

With the methods and over-generalizing that such a group would create, specific problems and the uniqueness of situations will be hidden. Creative measures that break the arbitrary boundary line of conservative-liberal realms will be lost in the void that so much of our unstereotypable world has already fallen into with such illfitting labels.

Reagan Goes to Washington

Can anyone figure out why Ron gave the go-ahead for the Iran operation? Selling weapons to Iran was the worst foreign policy blunder the President could have made, short of selling nukes to Russia.

Why would anyone so seemingly patriotic go so far as to sell arms to Iran, jeopardizing any credibility the U.S. holds throughout the world, as well as imperiling his own credibility on which his 'patriotic' programs (such as aid to the contras) are based? Now he hardly has a chance of 'keeping America great' during his final years as President. (Though many consider this a blessing—especially the Soviets.)

Reagan's sincerity comes into question. It doesn't make sense that a truly serious president would so beautifully preach and bomb against terrorism and then secretly sell $millions (perhaps $billions) in weapons to one of the world's foremost terrorist nations, not to mention a nation that plans to keep conquering other nations if it wins its current struggle.

The blunder reveals that Ronald Reagan and his men are perhaps not responsible enough to lead the country after all. Reagan probably meant well for his country (and whatever he meant is beyond me), but here his political simplicity caught up with him. The office of President of the United States not only demands a good politician, but also a critically thinking, scrupulous political scientist. The current scandal further proves that R.R. lacks the latter qualities.

By electing Ronald Reagan, the American people wanted to whip the Sandinistas, carry out Star Wars to its fullest, and enhance America's respect throughout the world. Their expectations backfired. That's what we get for electing a movie star.

—P.C.

CATALYST
Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado

DAVID KLEIN
BLAIR SANFORD
Editors

LIZ CHENEY, Opinions Editor
TED CRAIG & DAVID FITZGERALD, News Editors
PATRICK CHISHOLM & KATIE DALSEMER, Features Editors
KATHY MAHONEY & ALEC REKOW, Sports Editors
ERIC BREITBARD, Arts Editor
SUSAN GRIAK, Associate Arts Editor

JOHN KATSANIS, Photography Editor
MIKE FRATERELLI, Copy Editor
ANNE MANHART, Layout Editor

JEAN BOYER
Business Manager

LINDA SHIREMAN, Typesetter
LINDA IMHOFF, Typesetter

The Catalyst logo by JANE PATTERSON

The Catalyst is published by Cutler Publications, Inc., Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado 80903. Phone (303) 473-2233 extension 675. The Catalyst is printed tri-monthly from September to May, except during holiday periods.

Cutler Publications, Inc. does not discriminate on the basis of race, color, age, religion, sex, national origin, or physical handicap in its education programs, activities or employment policies in accordance with federal, state and local laws.

Editorials appearing in the Catalyst are the opinions of the designated author and not necessarily those of any other Catalyst staff member.

The Catalyst encourages the letters to the editor. Letters should be no more than 400 words in length and be typed or neatly printed. Address letters to the Catalyst, Rastall Center, Colorado College, Colorado Springs, 80903. Unsigned letters will not be printed.

A work of considerable length may be submitted as a guest commentary. Persons interested in submitting commentary should contact the Catalyst at 632-4999 or 473-2233 ext. 675.

The Catalyst reserves the right to edit or cut letters to the editor and guest commentaries.

A Conspiracy of Silence—Again

BY PAUL KUTSCHE

Within the last few months CC's board of trustees turned down two reasonable proposals: one to divest from companies doing business in South Africa; the other to prohibit discrimination against students, faculty and staff on the basis of sexual orientation. The first refusal is widely discussed all over campus, and at least two student organizations formed to combat it. The second refusal is so far met with the silence which is traditional whenever the subject of homosexuality is brought up in anything but a joking context.

The board's inaction on sexual orientation deserves thorough debate on campus. The announcement, buried in a list of sixteen decisions taken at its June meeting, said, "The proposed provision regarding discrimination was amended to include only those actions prohibited by federal law, thereby excluding the provision on sexual orientation which had been recommended [by President Riley]."

So what? CC has only a few gays and lesbians—maybe even fewer than the magic Kinsey Institute figure of 10% of the population, since CC's reputation is not hospitable to us. Consequently few oxen are gored, right?

Couldn't be more wrong. This is everybody's ox. The board didn't figure it owed the community a reason. "We'll prohibit only what the law requires us to prohibit, and not advance one step further," is whay they're telling us. Telling whom? Telling the small private liberal arts college nestled at the foot of Pikes Peak that is such an innovator in education. Telling the college that just set up the McHugh Chair in American Institutions and Leadership. Telling us that leadership is fine as a classroom game, but don't make the mistake of thinking that CC will stick its neck out when anything is at stake. Your ox, my ox, everybody's ox is gored when we're chumped off by the people in charge of the college.

How much leadership did the board decide not to take? Less than you might imagine. Most of the best colleges and universities in the country have already taken the step, as you see by the list below, including two in the ACM—Grinnell and Macalester. The board has the entire list, plus names of 60 or 70 U.S. corporations that have done the same (including corporations represented on the board), plus a letter from Grinnell President George Drake, former CC Dean, that "The presence of such a statement [pledging nondiscrimination on the basis of sexual orientation] has not been particularly controversial..."

The recommendation which the board voted down last June started as a simple matter of overdue justice to a minority on campus. The board responded by flipping the finger at us. It has now become a larger matter of the board's refusal to respect those it governs. The Committee on Committees has gone on record, demanding that the board reconsider.

It's a good thing for injustice thousands of miles away to be widely discussed. Let's get some public discussion going about injustice right here on campus. You don't have to be South African and Black to oppose apartheid. You don't have to be gay or lesbian to oppose discrimination against those of us who are.

Politics of Confusion

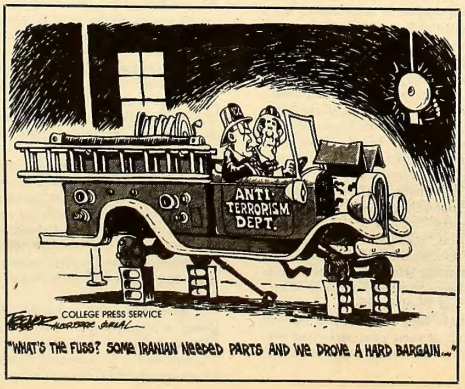
BY COREY ABEL

Confusion in thought is rampant. Skating baseball players are everywhere. I read that our nation needs a new philosophy of the public good, and moreover, a political philosophy of the public good congruent with and based on "basic needs theory," so as to confront the pressing problem of social justice. I wish to address this question of "philosophies."

The above schemes, and similar ones aren't looking for a philosophy; what is sought (and achieved) is an ideology: "a systematic body of concepts . . . which constitutes a sociopolitical program . . . visionary theorizing" (Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary). This definition serves us well, since it reveals the political nature of an ideology — a body of ideas designed for political action and change. Philosophy on the other hand, is not conerned with, and "has no direct bearing on practical life" or politics (M. Oakeshott, Experience and its Modes). Philosophy is a singular activity (unlike ideologies of which there can be many) which seeks to explain the world, not offer possible plans for changing it. Plato for instance, wasn't a social planner — the "Republic" is only a theoretical device for exploring philosophical questions. In the end he concludes that if what is true ultimately is attained in one's own mind then all that may reasonably be hoped for has been accomplished regarding the life of any 'man.' Philosophers throughout history have held a similar opinion. The ideologue often labels his or her thoughts as philosophy, but it is a confused and misleading assertion.

The confusion is compounded when the assertion is made that the ideology (called a philosophy) is scientific and consists of universal principles logically arrived at (an omnipresent assertion), or that is is founded upon inevitable historical principles, for science and politics don't mix, and history is "the past for its own sake," not a basketload of 'lessons.' Past events as lessons may be used in politics but they aren't properly speaking, "History." Marx gives us a good example of this triple-compounded confusion (more so with certain neo-Marxists, who have sought to be more scientific). Armed with a supposed philosophy with the point of changing the world, the claim is made that this sociopolitical change can be scientifically understood according to the inevitabilities of an historical dynamic. Really, it is an elaborately justified, and equally confused ideology.

To some, this intellectual confusion may seem a moot issue. But thoughts on politics, particularly for the ideologue who explicitly applies 'ideals' to action, have an impact. It is relevant to consider the effects of this political idealism, which arises out of a confusion over the role of philosophy, ideals, and politics; on our political lives. Ideology implies a concerted and single-minded pursuit of an ideal, one which almost certainly is not shared by all members of a society, and which therefore tramples the liberties of any dissenter. In "civil society," alternately, people are not required to participate in the pursuit of a visionary ideal; government's role is limited so that people may pursue ends of their own choosing. Under such a scheme monomaniacal dreamers may freely exist, and do. "We tolerate monomaniacs, it is our habit to do so; but why should we be ruled by them? Is it not an intelligible task for a government to protect its subjects against the nuisance of those who spend their energy and their wealth in the service of some pet indignation, endeavoring to impose it on everybody ..?" (M. Oakeshott, "On Being Conservative"). I think it is an intelligible task, and one worth reflecting on.



THE COLORADO COLLEGE

Summer

SESSION

June 22-August 14, 1987

Check Out the Advantages

- ☑ Innovative 3-unit Institutes
- ☑ Field Study Courses in the Sun
- ☑ Special Tuition Rates
- ☑ Off-Campus Programs
- ☑ Arena Stage of Washington, D.C.
- ☑ The Bill Evans Dance Company
- ☑ The Colorado College Conservatory
- ☑ AP:A and AP:B credit

Field Study Institutes

Introductory Geology of the Rockies—Tyler (director), 8-week term, 3 CC units
The Plant Sciences Institute—Storey (director), 8-week term, 3 CC units
South By Southwest: The American Naturalists—Gordon (director), 1st 4-week term, 1½ CC units

Interdisciplinary Institutes

Fiction: Reading It, Writing It—Yaffe (director), 8-week term, 3 CC units
The Novella: Writing About Short Fiction (includes Introduction to Word Processing and Writer's Workbench, an editing program)—Mauch (director), 2nd 4-week term, 1½ CC units
The Southwest Studies Institute: Geology and Ecology of the Southwest—Loeffler (director), 6-week term, 2½ CC units
The Third World: Written Constitutions and the Federal Idea—McJimsey (director), 8-week term, 3 CC units

Off-Campus Institutes

Marine Invertebrate Zoology (in cooperation with Lloyd Environmental Center, Buzzard's Bay, Massachusetts)—Capen (director), 1st 4-week term, 1½ CC units
Spanish Language and Culture: The Barcelona Institute—O'Connor (director), 8-week term, 3 CC units
Writing About Drama and the Others Arts: The London Institute—Butte (director), 8-week term, 3 CC units

Special Programs

Primatology: Chimpanzoo (in association with the Jane Goodall Institute and the Cheyenne Mountain Zoo)—Nowak (director), 8-week term, 2 CC units
SummerDance at Colorado College: Bill Evans and Company in Residence—Berg, Lommasson (co-directors), 3-week term, 1 CC unit
The Theater Institute: Emphasis on Acting (in association with Arena Stage of Washington, D.C.)—Malcolm (director), 8-week term, 3 CC units

Courses (1 CC unit)

AH 320s: Art Teaching in the Elementary Grades—Barsotti, 1st 4-weeks
BY 203s: Field Zoology—Winternitz, 2nd 4-weeks
BY 244s: Theory and Techniques in Scanning Electron Microscopy—Hathaway, 2nd 4-weeks
BE 211s: Principles of Accounting—Laux, 1st 4-weeks
BE 212s: Principles of Accounting—Laux, 2nd 4-weeks
BE 350s: Arts Administration: Seminar and Internship—Becker, 8 weeks
BE 475s: Advanced Topics in Business: Business and Society—Bird, 1st or 2nd 4-weeks
BE 476s: Advanced Topics in Business: Independent Studies—Bird, 1st or 2nd 4-weeks
CH 151s: Organic Chemistry—Champion, Jones, 1st 4-weeks
CH 251s: Organic Chemistry—Champion, Jones, 2nd 4-weeks
EC 202s: Principles of Economics—Becker, 1st 4-weeks
EC 203s: Principles of Economics—Becker, 2nd 4-weeks
EC 498s: Senior Thesis I—Bird, 8-weeks
EC 499s: Senior Thesis II—Bird, 8-weeks
EN 404s: Independent Reading—Coleman, 8-weeks
MA 121s: Introduction to Digital Computing—Tinsley, 2nd 4-weeks
MA 240s: Readings in Mathematics—Anderson, 1st 4-weeks
MP 121s-MP 171s: Assorted Practical Music Courses (¼ CC unit each)
MP 404s: Opera Workshop—Jenkins, 8-weeks
PH 314s: Philosophy of Education—Rabbin, 2nd 4-weeks
PC 133s: Astronomy—Bordner, 2nd 4-weeks
PY 100s: Introduction to Psychology—Johns, 1st 4-weeks
PY 321s: Educational Psychology—McNew, 2nd 4-weeks
SO 117s: Patterns of Human Intimacy—Boderman, 2nd 4-weeks
SO 380s: Sociology of Education—Shaw, 1st 4-weeks

Special summer tuition rate: $490 per unit
Some scholarships and loans available
Summer work opportunities
Last summer's institutes filled. Early enrollment recommended

For more information, call X653 or X655 for arms control, within this administration, along with it. The recent crisis has dealt a severe blow to Reagan's credibility and perceived strength. No longer will the Soviets view the Reagan Administration as a unified, powerful threat. Reagan has lost the upper ground. He is now seen as out of control, out of touch and struggling to keep his power and prestige. He is in no position to force the Soviets to the negotiating table, with the decline in s' Nest

dent, and a Democratic Congress an ever to keep him in line.
position will greatly relieve the eader, Mikhail Gorbachev, to strike
Russians wait to see how tightly be bound in controlling US foreign ident Reagan's hand weakened
Iranian ordeal, the Soviets may opt ntil the next President comes along.
an lost the initiative on the Russian Western European front. The allies sident. They fear his latest actions erica's ability to conduct foreign lo not wish to see a President, ss in his ability to lead the NATO
the Soviet Union on the defensive.
el to have lost his control of his the conduct of foreign policy and ide out his term not as a lame duck, s to blame the press for the whole nately, it was his doing, and his sident of the United States. The agan's top aids, or even he himself, ails of the arms deal with Iran and as, is ridiculous. Colonel North was it from someone. If the President is t two years in office, he must let even if it means firing friends. If nt and the nation is as important to as they say, then those responsible House to save the credibility of d the United States.

Reagan
d Term

. JOHN CRAIG

ic now, that talk this summer of gan to stand for election in 1988.
n president should be allowed a would cry; "the democratic will of not be limited by the 22nd disavowed any idea of a personal ted the idea of repealing the twoonstraint renders the president a l years, he argued. Unfortunately resident through his own actions webbed feet and feathers.

n-Contra scandal will go remains spectre of Watergate is hopefully president on that scale would be th at home and abroad. For this izens should give Reagan a chance efully in appointing a special ent is doing just that.
riminality in the executive branch Secrecy is not the issue—a llowed to have secrets, to act in one in secret must be legal.
, clearly, but one of an unwise, noice. Diverting money to the xpress will of the United States re serious matter. The executive, ved virtue or significance of its d to violate the laws of the people.
air says about Reagan's style of e broadly about the modern larly important. Reagan had the tools of the televised,
y. Charisma begat teflon, teflon let his Nielson ratings and a 49

ner for retention of the 22nd r Tom Cronin warned of an in long periods in power. The uption in an entrenched
nends the two-term limitation.
s executive branch succombed to ying erroneously that public
o tolerance for whatever action

they saw fit, NSC members and others followed an insane policy. Blame in part the 1985 switch from a pragmatic James Baker to a power-hungry Don Regan as Chief-of-Staff.

Beyond arrogance was carelessness. Reagan's detached style of leadership has at last cost him. That the President had no knowledge of the money transfer is strangely believable, it is also frightening.

OPINIONS

Reagan Go
Washingto

Can anyone figure out why Ron ahead for the Iran operation? Sell to Iran was the worst foreign po the President could have made, sh nukes to Russia.

Why would anyone so seemingly so far as to sell arms to Iran, jeop credibility the U.S. holds througho as well as imperiling his own c which his 'patriotic' programs (s the contras) are based? Now he chance of 'keeping America grea final years as President. (Th consider this a blessing—esp Soviets.)

Reagan's sincerity comes into doesn't make sense that a t president would so beautifully bomb against terrorism and then $millions (perhaps $billions) in one of the world's foremost terro not to mention a nation that pl conquering other nations if it win struggle.

The blunder reveals that Ronald his men are perhaps not responsib lead the country after all. Reag meant well for his country (and meant is beyond me), but here simplicity caught up with him. T
President of the United State demands a good politician, but als thinking, scrupulous political sc current scandal further proves tha the latter qualities.

By electing Ronald Reagan, th people wanted to whip the Sandi out Star Wars to its fullest, a America's respect throughout the expectations backfired. That's wh electing a movie star.

CATALY
Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado

DAVID KLEIN
BLAIR SANFORD
Editors

LIZ CHENEY, Opinions Edi
TED CRAIG & DAVID FITZGERALD,
PATRICK CHISHOLM & KATIE D
Features Editors
KATHY MAHONEY & ALEC REKOW,
ERIC BREITBARD, Arts Edi
SUSAN GRIAK, Associate Arts

•

JOHN KATSANIS, Photography
MIKE FRATERELLI, Copy Ed
ANNE MANHART, Layout E

•

JEAN BOYER
Business Manager

LINDA SHIREMAN, Typeset
LINDA IMHOFF, Typesette

The Catalyst logo by JANE PATT

The Catalyst is published by Cutler Publications, Inc., Colorado College, 80903. Phone (303) 473-2233 extension 673. The Catalyst is printed tri-monthly from September to May, except during holiday periods.

Cutler Publications, Inc. does not discriminate on the basis of race, color, age, religion, sex, national origin, or physical handicap in its education programs, activities or employment policies in accordance with federal, state and local laws.

Editorials appearing in the Catalyst are the opinions of the designated author and not necessarily those of any other Catalyst staff member.

The Catalyst encourages the letters to the editor. Letters should be no more than 400 words in length and be typed or neatly printed. Address letters to the Catalyst, Rastall Center, Colorado College, Colorado Springs, 80903. Unsigned letters will not be printed.

A work of considerable length may be submitted as a guest commentary. Persons interested in submitting commentary should contact the Catalyst at 632-4999 or 473-2233 ext. 673.

The Catalyst reserves the right to edit or cut letters to the editor and guest commentaries.

ranian Arms nd the NSC

BY BILL WEIDA

pressions of outrage and disbelief have been rmon across the campus as the story of the Iranian deal unfolds. While the fact that the National ity Council (NSC) could be composed of such slow ers is particularly troubling, it is also an indication much deeper problem.

he people involved in this debacle had different s and objectives than most of the members of the mmunity, but they were not "bad" people. Instead, were caught up in an atmosphere of power that s a premium on maintaining personal integrity and anced perspective, and they obviously failed in those avors. Why?

he NSC is a heady place to work. Its members, who sually young, bright, and well educated, often see of the president in a week than some cabinet bers do in a year. Access is power, and on the NSC power far exceeds what comparable staff members achieve anyplace else in the Executive branch of rnment. As a result, NSC members can get things and they can trample over, or completely bypass, touch-maligned government bureaucracy any time wish.

cess is power, and on the NSC at power far exceeds what mparable staff members can hieve anyplace else in the ecutive branch of government.

d therein lies the problem. For all its faults, the ucracy has been established to assure that all points ew have been expressed and all reservations have satisfied before any idea becomes government y. In the process, a lot of people with a lot of ience (and a lot of knowledge) influence each y. Unfortunately, the power to bypass this process o the power to deny other views. It is the power to consider certain options. And in the end, it is the ate arrogance of confusing what is possible because rsonal power or station with what is correct—it is power to be "right" without the responsibility to nstrate why.

ce each of us usually believes that we are indeed t" when we take a stand on an issue, the ations involved in an environment like the NSC bvious. To resist those temptations, all one needs is e humility. Unfortunately, humility is a commodity has been in short supply in the NSC for a number of . Until this situation changes, embarrassments like Iranian arms deal will continue to occur.

Weida is an Associate Professor of Economics and erly served in the Office of the Secretary of Defense e Pentagon's Office of International Economic and ty Affairs.

Reagan's Hornets' Nest

BY MICHAEL S. MEHAN

It is ironic, that the distant nation of Iran is such a large thorn in the side of President Reagan. You would think that after the hostage ordeal and the subsequent pounding that President Carter took for it, President Reagan would have stuck to his policy of condemning Iran as a nation of terrorists, and not have become closely involved with such a political hornets' nest.

However, in the belief that he was pursuing a legitimate policy of reconciliation with Iran, President Reagan, and his advisors, tried to utilize a dual policy of condemning Iran, while secretly negotiating with Iranian political factions and selling the Iranian military advanced weapons. The White House has subsequently stumbled head first into the worst crisis of the Reagan era, risking the disintegration of Reagan's power, prestige, credibility and his Administration, not to mention the decline of the President's ability to conduct foreign policy.

The recent controversy, involving arm sales to Iran and the questionable syphoning of funds for the Contra rebels in Nicaragua from "profits" of the arms sales, has burst the bubble of infallibility that has surrounded President Reagan and his Administration for the last six years.

As the last part of his term begins, Reagan is becoming victim of the trend among recent Presidents to fall from grace and lose the ability to function effectively in foreign policy matters. Johnson had the Vietnam war to drag him down, Nixon made his own downfall in Watergate and Carter was doomed by the very nation that is involved with Reagan's troubles, Iran.

The interesting aspect of the whole crisis is, how poorly the affair was handled by the White House and the fact that it was allowed to become such a scandle.

The usually politically wise President fumbled the ball on his own 20 yard line, leaving the other team in perfect scoring position, and the Congressional offense is going to take full advantage of the turn over.

Instead of immediately answering the many questions that arose from the disclosure of the arms sale to Iran, and the aid given to the Contras in Nicaragua, Reagan went on the defensive and left many of the proverbial stones unturned.

The whole affair would not have exploded so loudly if Reagan had handled it more delicately from the start. Now, Reagan's vow to find out the truth and settle the matter once and for all comes too late. If, at first, Reagan had gone on TV, not defending his policy, but admitting that a good policy had gone astray due to the meddling of ambitious aids, and, at that time, vowed to find out the truth and clean up the whole affair quickly and thoroughly, he might not have raised a single Congressional hair. But instead of using a John F. Kennedy style, Bay of Pigs approach, and assuming responsibility and admitting failure, Reagan drew both guns in preparation for a shoot-out to the last, and would not concede defeat. He adapted a Nixon-style approach, by erecting a barrier of denial around the White House, insisting that a mistake had not been made. This defensive stance is costing Reagan his credibility in Congress, among the American people and in the eyes of the world. It is an old political rule of thumb, discovered very painfully by Richard Nixon, that the more you try and hide something, the more the public, the press and Congress want to know about it, and the uglier the situation becomes. This is exactly what is happening to President Reagan.

Maybe, he did not make a mistake, per se, in trying to rebuild relations with Iran, there is much to say in favor of such a policy, however, the mistake was not made in the ends, but in the means. The President allowed the policy to leave his control and fall into the hands of subordinates who steered it out of control. Reagan is notorious for delegating authority, but he should never have entrusted such a delicate matter to aids and advisors unskilled in the political subtleties of foreign policy.

Looking back on the recent summit meeting, in light of the events concerning Iran, and the subsequent link with Nicaragua, Reagan may have made a grave mistake in waffling on the arms control issue. An arms agreement, of any type, will be jeopardized by the Iranian/Nicaraguan affair. While the Administration was trying to figure out what it did and did not say at the summit, the Iranian affair exploded taking the prospects for arms control, within this administration, along with it. The recent crisis has dealt a severe blow to Reagan's credibility and perceived strength. No longer will the Soviets view the Reagan Administration as a unified, powerful threat. Reagan has lost the upper ground. He is now seen as out of control, out of touch and struggling to keep his power and prestige. He is in no position to force the Soviets to the negotiating table, with the decline in his stature as President, and a Democratic Congress determined more than ever to keep him in line.

Reagan's weaker position will greatly relieve the pressure on Soviet leader, Mikhail Gorbachev, to strike an arms deal, as the Russians wait to see how tightly Reagan's hands will be bound in controlling US foreign policy. With President Reagan's hand weakened considerably by the Iranian ordeal, the Soviets may opt to hold their cards until the next President comes along.

Not only has Reagan lost the initiative on the Russian front, but also on the Western European front. The allies are wary of the President. They fear his latest actions will jeopardize America's ability to conduct foreign policy. The allies do not wish to see a President, strangled by Congress in his ability to lead the NATO alliance and to keep the Soviet Union on the defensive. Reagan is now feared to have lost his control of his administration and the conduct of foreign policy and appears destined to ride out his term not as a lame duck, but as a dead duck.

The President tries to blame the press for the whole ordeal, but unfortunately, it was his doing, and his responsibility as President of the United States. The idea that none of Reagan's top aids, or even he himself, did not know the details of the arms deal with Iran and funding of the Contras, is ridiculous. Colonel North was getting the green light from someone. If the President is going to save his last two years in office, he must let those responsible go, even if it means firing friends. If loyalty to the President and the nation is as important to those close to Reagan as they say, then those responsible will leave the White House to save the credibility of President Reagan and the United States.

On a Reagan Third Term

BY T. JOHN CRAIG

It all seems comedic now, that talk this summer of allowing Ronald Reagan to stand for election in 1988. "The greatest modern president should be allowed a third term," partisans would cry; "the democratic will of the people should not be limited by the 22nd amendment."

While Ron himself disavowed any idea of a personal third term, he supported the idea of repealing the two-term limitation. The constraint renders the president a lame-duck in his final years, he argued. Unfortunately for the nation, the President through his own actions may have just aquired webbed feet and feathers.

Just how far the Iran-Contra scandal will go remains anybody's guess. The spectre of Watergate is hopefully extreme; a debilitated president on that scale would be bad for the nation both at home and abroad. For this reason pundits and citizens should give Reagan a chance to come clean. Hopefully in appointing a special prosecutor the President is doing just that.

At the same time, criminality in the executive branch cannot be tolerated. Secrecy is not the issue—a government must be allowed to have secrets, to act in secrecy. But what is done in secret must be legal.

Iran was a mistake, clearly, but one of an unwise, hypocritical policy choice. Diverting money to the Contras, against the express will of the United States Congress, is a much more serious matter. The executive, no matter the perceived virtue or significance of its ends, cannot be allowed to violate the laws of the people.

What the whole affair says about Reagan's style of leadership, and more broadly about the modern presidency is particularly important. Reagan had seemingly mastered the tools of the televised, popularized presidency. Charisma begat teflon, teflon begat carelessness. He let his Nielson ratings and a 49 sweep get to his head.

Speaking this summer for retention of the 22nd amendment, Professor Tom Cronin warned of an "arrogance," possible in long periods in power. The potential for corruption in an entrenched administration recommends the two-term limitation.

Apparently, Reagan's executive branch succombed to such arrogance. Believing erroneously that public approval translated into tolerance for whatever action they saw fit, NSC members and others followed an insane policy. Blame in part the 1985 switch from a pragmatic James Baker to a power-hungry Don Regan as Chief-of-Staff.

Beyond arrogance was carelessness. Reagan's detached style of leadership has at last cost him. That the President had no knowledge of the money transfer is strangely believable, it is also frightening.

Ephemeral Brilliance: The Leeches

BY EVAN WILLIAMS

The dialectic of ephemeral brilliance is a kind of musical archetype, and it describes the standard life-cycle of the professional rock musician. Lame music listeners such as yourselves typically refer to this cycle as "life in the fast lane," culminating in the "crash and burn" syndrome. Perhaps no band in recent memory better conforms to the dialectic of ephemeral brilliance than the newest band at CC, the Leeches, who made their debut at a recent party hosted by the Beta House.

The debut of the Leeches was, in a word, brilliant. They compensated for their relative lack of experience by giving an imaginative and compelling performance. They combined the free-spirited psychedelia of Jimi Hendrix, the Jefferson Airplane, and Steppenwolf with darker, more violent elements such as Lou Reed, the Sex Pistols, Spinal Tap, and the Violent Femmes. The Leeches radiated confidence with their innovative format, displaying a kind of poise essential to the success of any rock band with a mission. Furthermore, their performance was polished, evidencing a considerable amount of dedicated practice. The combination of confident innovation and dedicated practice produced a high-energy show which delighted the crowd at the ice cream social.

The brilliance of the Leeches lies in their effective and imaginative synthesis of the ordinarilly contradictory themes of peace and violence. Says bassist and lead vocalist Kent, "Our message is one of peace." Also known as the Love Doctor, Kent explains the key to the Leeches' success. "Our band gets its sustenance from Schaffer's Beer. For us, it symbolises hard work and dedication. Next to peace, Schaffer's is what we're all about. Once we drank Blatz instead of Schaffer's and we had our worst practice ever. Colin got sick and went home."

And what about Colin? As power-ax (rhythm guitar player) for the Leeches, Colin echoes Kent's sentiments: "Ours is a message of peace." Yet Colin's driving guitar style shows distinctly violent punk roots. Moreover, Colin cites as creative influences beat literature, Sam Pechinpah films, and long, lonesome rides on his Harley Davidson Electroglide. "We advocate peace through violence, not through sublimity," he says.

Moreover, Colin attributes the success of the Leeches to divine providence. He and percussionist Fill Sticks narrowly escaped death when, just minutes before they were to arrive at their rented practice space, two propane tanks at the adjacent refinery exploded, engulfing the entire area in a ball of flame. "If we had been caught in those flames, the band never would have happened," says Colin.

Like Colin, percussionist Fill Sticks plays with a violent intensity normally associated with punk rock. It is his energy, in fact, that carries the band. However, despite the intensity of his playing, despite destroying his drum set at the end of the performance at Beta, Fill insists that "playing drums with the Leeches captures the essence of peace."

Vocalist Penny shows all the capriciousness of a classic rock and roll dive. She declined an interview.

Finally, lead-ax Neil reiterated the peaceful intentions of the band. "We see ourselves as a psychedelic band with a raw, violent edge."

Asked if the band planned to perform original compositions someday, Neil replied, coldly, "That's been done already. It's so cliché. Everybody wants to write original songs. If everybody is doing it, then it isn't very original anymore, is it?" He added that the Leeches' innovation lay in the violent reinterpretation of old cover tunes, especially old peace anthems." What could be more original than expressing peace through an aggressive, primal style with violent antecedents! It's never been done before." For example, Neil dreams that someday he and Colin will drive their Harleys on stage, with Penny in tow, and break into a searing rendition of Born To Be Wild. "Some day," he said, "we're going to cover the entire soundtrack from the film Easy Rider. That's the kind of artists we are."

Artists indeed! But can the contradictions inherent in their brilliance dialectically render it anything but ephemeral?

What's On Your Turntable?

Marea Beeman—Senior—English
"Nothing, it got stolen last night."

Alex Reich—Senior—Biology
Steve Winwood, "Back in the High Life"

Bill Campbell—Junior—German/Econ.
Hot Tuna, "Hot Tuna Live"

Will Burland—Junior—English
Chick Corea Elektric Band

Lisa Leckenby—Junior—Art Studio
The Woodentops

Rob Wilson—Sophomore—Undecided
The Rolling Stones, "Shattered"

A Step Outside the Mind: Laurie Anderso

BY LAURA FINLEY

Put it this way. Laurie Anderson's performance, Home of the Brave, is the sort of thing that could make a rationally minded liberal arts student abandon intellectual pursuits in favor of becoming a roadie for her band. A person like me could blissfully roll up cables for the rest of her life. Laurie Anderson's Home of the Brave makes one pray to be reincarnated as a high-fi speaker. This visual and acoustic feast was presented in Poor Richard's Bookstore/Theater. More than just a moviemaker, Laurie Anderson dazzles us with her eclectic excellence as musician, storyteller, and philosopher. She appears in the first scene wearing a modified ski-mask and singing through a voice synthesizer. She plays a violin with a magnetic tapehead for strings, a strip of pre-recorded tape on the bow. The effects are magical, and very musical. She complains, in the character of Sharky—a nuclear age mime—about society's emphasis on those two numbers that form the base for computer science: ZERO and ONE. The problem, according to Laurie, with the value judgments attached to these numbers ("Nobody wants to be a zero.") is that there just isn't enough space between them for the rest of us. This way she leads us on a fantastic exploration of modern America—Home of the Brave. Each number is a story as well as a song. Her images, both pictures and words, are outstanding: "And there was this guy sitting there with these big white teeth—like luxury hotels on a Florida coastline." Her wit is artful: "all his friends stood around at his funeral acting sad, but they were really thinking about all the ham and cheese sandwiches in the other room." The songs range in theme from the killing of a pesky fly, to tuning in the radio for some Difficult Listening Music. She sings about the ignorant vanity of a nuclear world, "watch us move. Watch us shake. We're so pretty. We're so nice." Meanwhile creatures on another planet watch destruction through their telescope

The production is slick—no co speakers clutter the stage. Each member is just as electric as Laurie h Included are the groovy backup st stars of TomTom Club, that we s Talking heads' Stop Making Sens Home of the Brave pieces stretch fro hyper "Sharky's Day" to the hypnoti "Gravity's Angel" to the hip hot "Language is a Virus." "Language is a from outer space," says Laurie And through the voice synthesizer, hearing your name is better than your face." Home of the Brave w amazing evening of musical entertainment. It's a step outside the a turn to the wild side, a trip to pur Laurie Anderson leaves, us gas Dancing towards the crowd with her violin, she makes a rhyme out of War III:

"Well I drove down to big D.C
I walked into room one-oh-oh-th
And there they were—the Big Bo
And they were talking Big B little o, little m silent b...
hey what's that big noise from th
Sounds like thunder.
NOPE...
Deep in the heart
Of darkest America,
Home of the brave
You've already paid for this;
Listen to my heart beat."

She strides towards us playing her vio it is the radar warning sound of a n attack. We shiver and walk out t theater into First Strike City, USA. can hear the mountain ticking.

— Courtesy of The Kinnikinnik —

The Colorado Springs Fine Arts Center

December Calendar

30 West Dale Street / 634-5581 / Tuesday - Saturday: 10 am to 5 pm / Sunday: 1 pm to 5 pm
Gallery Admission:
Members Free Adults 2.50 Students & Seniors 1.50 Children 1.00 Under Five Free Sundays Free

Dec	Holiday Sales Gallery. Unique handmade gifts. Through January 11.
Dec 01	Queen Elizabeth II - Down Under. Narrated by Douglas Jones. World Horizons Travel Film Series. 2:00 and 8:00 pm. $4.75 adults; $3.00 students.
Dec 02	Queen Elizabeth II - Down Under. 2:00 pm.
Dec 02	A Night To Remember. Classic Film Series. 8:00 pm / $2.50.
Dec 05	Sophisticated Swing. Big Band Holiday Dance with Les Elgart and his orchestra. $75.00 per couple.
Dec 06	Wicker Basketry. Bemis Art School one-day workshop. 10:00 am to 4:00 pm / $32.50.
Dec 06, 07	Merry Christmas Colorado Springs. Grand opening of the Galleries Of Trees. Free admission, refreshment and entertainment. 12:00 to 5:00 pm.
Dec 07	Young People's Art & Bemis Art School Exhibition Opening. Artwork by Colorado Springs area elementary school children. Through January 11.
Dec 09	Pickwick Papers. Classic Film Series. 8:00 pm / $2.50.
Dec 11, 12, 13, 14	Elves - A Christmas Musical. Presented by the Colorado Springs Music Theatre. 8:00 pm Thursday, Friday, Saturday; 2:30 pm Sunday. $8.00 adults, $7.00 students and seniors.
Dec 25	Christmas Day. Building closed.
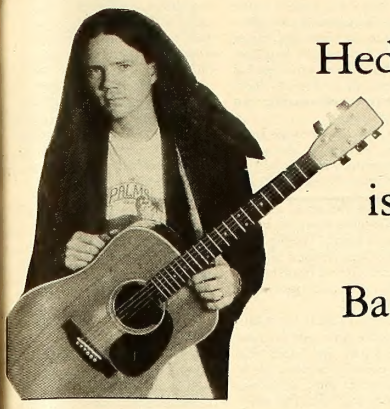
Dec 26	Building open.

Open Every Day from 10 to 9 and 12 to 9 on Sundays at 2530 West Colorado / 633-1674
cards and gift items / office products / free wrapping / convenient parking

The Kinnikinnik
Bookshop & Office Store
In Old Colorado City

Guitarist Extraordinaire:



Hedges is Back

BY KATIE DALSEMER

When I mention the name Michael Hedges around CC, I get one of two reactions: either people rave about how good he was last year or say that they're "bummed" that they didn't catch his show. Well, good news. This Sunday, December 7th, at 8:15 in Packard Hall Livesounds will once again present guitarist extraordinaire Michael Hedges.

After graduating with a degree in composition from the Peabody Conservatory in Baltimore, Hedges' interests brought him to the Stanford Music Center. Here he played guitar at a local theater where he met Will Ackerman, founder of Windham Hill Records. So intrigued with Hedges' unique style was Ackerman that he signed him on with the label.

A year later Hedges' critically acclaimed debut album, Breakfast in the Field was released. A second album, Aerial Boundaries, soon followed which rose to number one on the Top 20 Jazz Picks in Digital Audio Magazine. Hedges' most recent album marks his vocal debut and features his incredible versatility. He not only plays the guitar but also flute, synthesizer, harmonica, and acoustic and electric basses on the tracks.

Although his albums alone are evidence of his outstanding musical ability, Hedges' live performances, as I have seen, are nothing short of spectacular. Even after seeing him it's hard to believe that all that sound is coming from one man and one guitar.

His playing at times has been labled somewhat unorthodox. He often uses unusual tunings, his own time signatures, and creates innovative ways of playing that have his hands jumping all over the acoustic guitar in unheard of positions.

...it's hard to believe that all that sound is coming from one man and one guitar.

So unique is Hedges' music that a few adjectives don't really pay it justice. His repetoire includes tunes with an improvisational feel that range from hard-driving to peaceful. No matter what the style, however, all his songs are so charged with emotion and Hedges' own inexhaustable energy (he jumps all over the stage during performances) that strong audience response is inevitable. On the one hand his incredible dexterity leaves you awe-struck, but at the same time his down to earth personality makes the music accessible to everyone.

After seeing last year's sold out performance, I know this will be an experience you won't want to miss. Remember, the show is this Sunday at 8:15 in Packard Hall. Tickets are $4.00 and are available at the student center.

Symphony Calendar

December 5: 10am - 5pm
7pm - 9pm
December 6: 10am - 5pm
7pm - 9pm
December 7: 10am - 5pm

The Symphony Guild will present a Holiday House Tour on December 5, 6, and 7. Five distinguished homes decorated especially for the Holiday season will be open for viewing. Tickets are $7.50 if purchased in advance at the Symphony Box Office or $10.00 if purchased at the door.

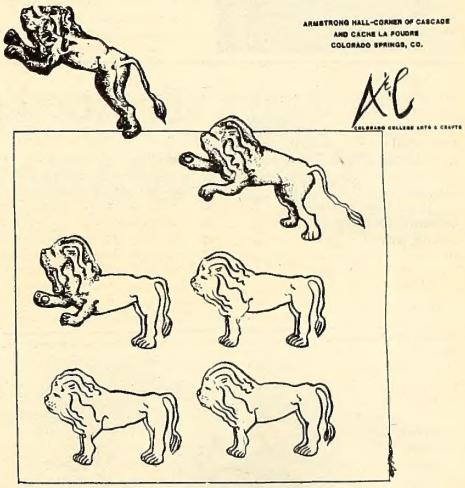
December 6: 12 noon
December 7: 12 noon

The Colorado Springs Youth Symphony will present Christmas Concerts at the Fine Arts Center on December 6 and 7 at 12 noon. Admission is free.

December 17: 8pm
December 18: 8pm
December 19: 8pm
December 20: 2pm
December 20: 8pm
December 21: 2pm

The 1986 Broadmoor Christmas Pops On Ice, a magical combination of music and skating with the Colorado Springs Symphony, Charles A. Ansbacher, Conductor, and members of the Broadmoor Skating Club, will be presented at the Broadmoor World Arena, December 17th through the 21st. The annual event has become a popular holiday tradition in the Pikes Peak region, and this year the Colorado Springs Symphony will celebrate with a Victorian Christmas. Performance times are December 17-19 at 8:00 pm, December 20 at 2 pm and 8:00 pm, and December 21 at 2:00 pm. Tickets at $8, $9, $10, $11, $14, $17, $18, $20 and $25 are available at the Symphony Box Office. A $1 discount is available for children 12 and under.

Symphony Box Office, 1014 N. Weber, 633-0333. Hours: M-F 9-5; Sat 9-2. VISA, Mastercard, Discover and American Express.



COLORADO COLLEGE'S 7th ANNUAL

ARTS & CRAFTS SALE

Friday Dec. 5, 12 noon to 8p.m.

Saturday Dec. 6, 10 to 6p.m.

Hair Designers for Men & Women

RAPUNZEL

Style cuts, Cellophanes,
Perms & Color.
Nexus, Redken, and Tri products available for sale.

Stop in or make your appointment:

827 N. Tejon at Cache La Poudre 632-3532

CAFE BIJOU
DINING & SPIRITS

• serving • lunch & light dinners, exquisite desserts & coffees
• first floor •
jazz, cocktails & hors d'oeuvres
• second floor •
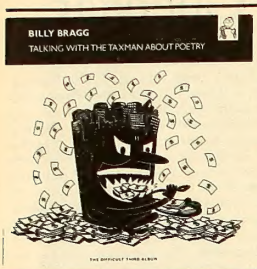
Trip the night fantastic in a turn of the century home
411 East Bijou 632-9640

Bring in this ad for a free specialty drink with your lunch or dinner

RecordsRecordsRecordsRecordsRecordsRecordsR



The Difficult Third Album

BY J. MARTIN BROAN

Billy Bragg is undoubtedly Britain's best answer to a truly modern folksinger. Normally alone, strumming a slightly muffled electric guitar, Bragg's rough cockney accent perfectly complements an acute political awareness equalled recently only by early Clash material. Until his third and latest effort, Talking with the Taxman about Poetry, Bragg's trademark was his raw, completely solo tunes. Now, with occassional additions of acoustic guitar, bass, piano, violin, horn, and even vocal backing, Bragg's sound is now fuller and more accessible than ever, without losing its innate rawness. Bragg has yet to make a name for himself in the states, yet Britain adopted him with high esteem long ago. Still, after his expansion to an accessible sound, his biggest hit to date is "Levi Stubbs' Tears." A new song sounding very much like his older work.

The songs on this album range from socialist anthems (There is Power in Union) to sad, beautifully melodic ballads (Greetings to the New Brunette). There are even songs where the two cr... meet halfway to form, may we call... socialist love songs (?). If you wo... Kramer, Help Save the Youth of A... may piss you off since he barks, "A... cities of Europe have burned befo... they may yet burn again/and if th... hope you understand that Washing... burn with them."

Bragg's incredible versatility, tra... and beauty (lyrically, of course) le... no choice but to equate him with th... of Dylan and Young. This album is ... and hell, it sure beats another Springsteen albums (and it's a hell... cheaper too).

Bad B.A.D.

BY JODY REED

I have to say it: I find Big Audio Dynamite's latest to be something of a disappointment.

This is not to say, however, that No. 10 Upping Street is a bad (no pun intended) album. It's just that it seems that Mick Jones and his merry band have sacrificed substance for danceability.

This album is a drum machine's dream. Take, for instance, the song (if you could call it that) "Ice Cold Killer." Simply a compilation of drum rhythms, it is more of a pain than a pleasure to listen to. In many of the songs, in fact, rhythm takes precedence over lyrics and actual music.

There are several tunes, however, which will catch a listener's fancy. "The Big V" is a whimsical little instrumental that is refreshingly different in tone from the rest of the album. "Dial a Hitman" provides a bit of morbid humor.

B.A.D.'s first album, This is Big Audio Dynamite, came at the same time as a new release from the Clash, and much was made of the relationship between Jones and Joe Strummer. The immense popularity of the first Big Audio Dynamite album was seen as a sort of one-upsmanship on the part of Jones, who was "kicked out" of the Clash by Strummer. Interestingly enough, No. 10 U... Street was co-produced by Jone... Strummer. Strummer also co-wrote ... the tracks on the album. A combinat... the two Clash talents may have seem... a good idea, but what it has produced... empty album with "Fuck art, let's d... undertones.

All in all, No. 10 Upping Street is... of a dance club staple than a worth... addition to an album collection. Mayb... reunion of Jones and Strummer w... such a good idea after all. Or maybe it... is just trying too hard to be bad. Either... something's missing on this album, b... luck next time.

Beastie Funk

BY E.J. BERNACKI

Licensed to Ill is not the Beastie Boys first album but it is the first important album of theirs released in America—strange since they are an American band who claims to owe a great deal to American bands Run DMC and Jam-Master Joy. The Beastie Boy's sound can be classified as hard core funk but Licensed to Ill has a quite diverse selection of tunes, some sounding more funk, some more hard core! The album as a whole is quite well done. Some of the better tracks are "Girls," "Slow Ride" on which they do a rendition of the main theme of War's "Low Rider," "Fight for your Right" and "Hold it Now, Hit it." Being a fan of, but not an expert on or extreme enthusiast of Funk music, I can honestly say that I liked this album. It was easy to listen to and needless to say, quite entertaining. I recommend listening to Licensed to Ill. Once you do we can wait together for more good work from the Beastie Boys.

Buy Art

BY BETTINA MOK

The Colorado College's annual Arts and Crafts Sale will be held on Friday, Dec. 5, from 12 noon to 8 p.m., and on Saturday, Dec. 6, from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. The sale will be featuring original handcrafted items of all media from both student artists and local craftspeople. In the past, Christmas shoppers have found terrific bargains among these unique items, which include pottery, weaving, jewelry, batik, etc. A percentage of the profits will go to benefit the Arts and Crafts Committee at CC. Refreshments will be available throughout the sale, and live musical entertainment will also be provided.

Album Donate... by Budget Tap... and Records

A NOSTALGIC BOUTIQUE
Antique Costume Jewelry
Equisite Clothing
Unique & Fun Accessories
126 N. Nevada Ave.
636-9640
Use this for 10% off

$2 off any Long John Shirt with the ad (expires December 31st)
Mountain Chalet
CC's Outdoor Connection
266 North Tejon 633-0732
Downtown

Mention this ad for 10% off (sales items excluded)
The Largest Selection
In The Pikes Peak Region
Fine Vintage Clothing and Jewelry for men and women from 20's through 60's
- Great Selection of Men's Long Wool Overcoats
- Wool Blazers & Suits
- Rhinestone Jewelry

Lots and Lots More!
on-going 50% and 75% off racks

• THROUGH • THE • LOOKING • GLASS •
10 Ruxton Ave., Manitou Springs, CO, 685-1666
(Where Manitou Ave meets Ruxton)
HOURS: 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Mon.-Sa... 11 to 5 Sunday

An All-American and a Texan

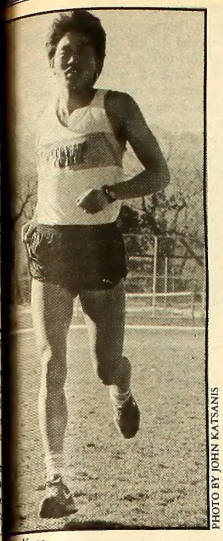


PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

er Kang

Coach Ted Casteneda and juniors Scott Kang and Erik Browning traveled to Freedonia, N.Y. over block break to compete in the Division III National Cross Country Championships. Both Kang and Browning were psyched about competing in Nationals, but were not jumping with joy over the arctic conditions. Their first run on the extremely challenging course took place during a friendly blizzard.

The gun sounded and the CC duo quickly found themselves in the back of the 184 man field. They slowly worked their way through the huge field. Kang proved more successful, plowing his way up to 16th place and achieving the prestigious title of All-America. Scott is CC's first All-America runner of Coach Casteneda's young six year program. The team has improved significantly every year under Coach Casteneda's guidance. Browning placed 45th and is already looking forward to a hopefully injury free track season. Both Kang and Browning felt that running in such adverse conditions (snow, sheets of ice, ankle deep mud, etc...) would help them immeasurably next year. How do Div. III runners compare with Div. I studs? The winner of the Div. III meet competed in the Div. I Nationals on Monday, Nov. 24th with only one day of rest and finished an amazing 11th, proving that the top Div. III runners can compete with anyone in the country!!!

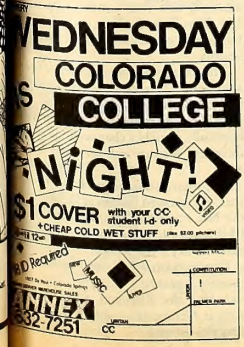
How's this for the irony of the year? Just hours after becoming an All-America runner Scott Kang was refused re-entry into the U.S. after visiting Canada because he did not have his green card (Scott is a citizen of South Korea). The U.S. immigration officials were extremely rude, and for a few anxious moments it appeared that Scott might have to spend the night in a Canadian jail cell. Luckily the Canadians allowed him to spend the night in a hotel in Canada. Scott's green card was transportd up early the next morning and CC's trooper made it back to the safe milieu of The Colorado College.

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Erik Browning

Kang wins Regionals...

The CC men's cross country team paid ir second visit to Waverly, Iowa in three eks on Nov. 15th for the NCAA ivision III Central Region meet. The field 10 runners attacked the rolling hills of Waverly golf course. CC fielded a young n spearheaded by the two pronged ck of Scott Kang and Erik Browning. ng was seeking his fifth individual win his outstanding season, while Browning hoping to continue his comeback after ng injured all September. Two and a miles into the five mile race Kang and owning were in the lead pack of fifteen ners, and the rest of the CC squad were rking their way through the main pack. ng threw in a surge around the three a quarter mile mark and dropped eryone but St. Thomas' Jeff Hyman, the 00 meter National Champion. Kang ged once again at the top of a hill near four mile mark and Hyman was dust! nwhile, Browning reached the four e mark at the head of the second pack lizing one of the four national ividual qualifying spots was still cured. Kang cruised to a seven second ury in an unbelievably fast time of 9, shattering the course record by over seconds, becoming CC's first ever tional Champion. Browning finished in 24:42, joining Kang on the All- tional team, and also qualifying for the tional meet, thanks to a blistering 4:42 t mile. The entire CC team ran rsonal best's: Ben Harrison 26:38, Ted kins 26:44, Paul Koch 27:03, Ryan ffer 27:21, and Vic Reckmeyer 27:42. entire squad returns next year and another year of hard work behind will be gunning for a National berth 987.



WHEN IS THE RIGHT TIME TO CALL YOUR GRANDPARENTS?

a) Five minutes into "The Lawrence Welk Show."

b) About a week before your birthday.

c) When you just want to tell them you miss them, and that you ate the last of Grandma's chocolate-chip cookies this morning.

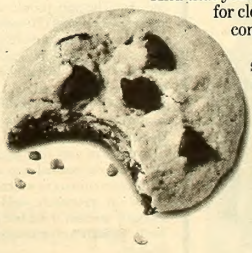
There's nothing grandparents like better than a call from a grandchild in college. But if you do accidentally happen to interrupt Lawrence, you ought to have something worth telling them.

For example, you could mention that you called using AT&T Long Distance Service because you can depend on AT&T's high quality service and exceptional value.

And then you can tell them that AT&T gives you immediate credit if you dial a wrong number.

And that you can count on AT&T for clear long distance connections.

Finally, of course, you should quickly reassure them that you're eating enough, then let them hurry back to the TV to catch the rest of the Lennon Sisters' Blue Oyster Cult medley.



AT&T
The right choice.

© 1986 AT&T
© AMERICAN GREETINGS CORP.

Football

Over .500

BY JAMES C. GRANTZ

On November 8th, the CC Tigers snatched victory from the jaws of defeat on a hot, muggy afternoon in San Antonio. Sophomore half back Shawn "Jimmy Lee" Hold scored on an 8 yard pass from senior QB Charley Lorimer with 25 seconds remaining in the game to lift CC past Trinity University, 10-6. The loss dropped Trinity to 0-8. The win marked the Tigers first road win since 1983 and their first winning season, 5-4, in this decade.

Sophomore Tiger Back Brian Ash's interception on the second play from scrimmage set the stage for the CC defense. The Tiger "D" allowed only 7 first downs on just 116 total yards and caused 6 turnovers.

The CC offense dominated between the 20's (295 yards total offense), but sputtered near the Trinity goalline. The Tigers could only muster a 37 yard Mike Ukropina field goal in the first quarter before the furious come back in the closing minutes.

Although Trinity had been dominated all day they held the lead with 3:10 left in the game. Trinity's touchdown came on a blocked punt in the closing seconds of the first half.

CC started its final drive on their own 21 yard line. The drive almost stalled before it ever got started, but Lorimer found senior WR T.J. Cole open on a fourth and long to keep the Tigers moving. And again on a third and 10 at the Trinity 20 Lorimer found Cole open for his second clutch catch, which set up Holt's game winning score.

Tiger Head Coach Jerry Garle praised the seniors saying, "The seniors have started a tradition at CC. They've worked hard and believed that they were winners."

Sport Shorts

MEN'S CLUB HOCKEY—Dean French and Jeff Metheny each scored hattricks to lead the men's team to a 12-9 victory over the Pueblo semi-pro hockey team. Kevin Doeh and Mike Blaxill had two goals apiece while Mark Pankoff and Dave Roe chipped in with one each. The Roe brothers, Kip and Dave along with goalie Perry Beliz provided the foundation for a stalwart defense.

The men are now 2-1, demolishing CU 22-3 but losing to the Air Force Academy's junior varsity.

This weekend the Tigers take on CSU, 11:15 at Honnen Ice Palace.

The seven defensive seniors who played their last game of collegiate football are: DE Steve Gurr, DE Steve "Timmerdome" Timmons, OB Chris "Gumby" Kinney, LB Co-Captain Mark Gorman, SS Kent "Tooms" Tooman, FS Doug "Burner" Burns and CB Freddy Owens.

The seven offensive seniors are: QB Charley "Chuck" Lorimer, HB Phil "Apo" Apodaka, C. Bill Young, WR T.S. Cole, T Co-Captain Jack Foster, TE Rich "Curious George" Lawton and inspirational team leader Todd "Bo" Carroll.

WOMEN'S CLUB HOCKEY—The women traveled to Boulder capturing their first victory this season. The Tigers defeated the Buffaloes 4-1 on goals by Sarah Meskin, Kathy Mahoney, Sarah Flynn, and Kendall Leet. Dorothy Digges anchored the defense with a strong performance in net while rookies Alison Knopf and Kim Keeley helped out. The women are now 1-2 and will take on the Aspen Motherpuckers at Honnen 11:15, Dec. 13.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL—The women's basketball team hosted the annual Thanksgiving Tournament last weekend. The Tigers had a successful showing making it to the finals by defeating Bethany College 82-79. CC lost in the finals to Buena Vista College 81-68. The women now post a 1-3 record under second year coach Beth Branson.

SWIMMING—The men's and wo swim teams open their season weekend at the University of Col Buff Invitational. Strong performanc the women's team are expecte sophomore sensations Chris Lutter Trish Franciosi, and diver Beth O Freshman rookie Alison Wolfinger expected to place well. For the men's Coach Jerry Lear expects the relays well especially 200 yard freestyle consisting of Jay Levine, David Sut Brandon Scheafor, and Rob Griggs. individual events Tom Hackett, 20 free; Doug Hodge and Wolf Gotschall yd. back; and Kevin Diffee and Vantre in the 200 yd. breast should strong races. Divers Craig Clear and Smith will also help out the team.

Spikers Hit the Coast

BY E BREITBARD

The women's volleyball team left a snowy Colorado Springs to play in the first round of nationals in beautiful, warm San Diego. Overcoming the urge to go to the beach, the Tigers put to use their indoor talents by pounding balls against their first match, Methodist College. The match was won in three games straight; Cathy Costello, with seeming ease, delivered 13 kills, as did Elissa Breitbard, with a bit more difficulty due to her height disadvantage. After the match, much effort and thought were put into consuming as much food as possible and working out strategies for the next night's competition, Menlo College. The most significant conclusion reached that night was that it would take nothing less than all six players on the court to play to the best of their abilities in order to win. In essence, that is what every player sought, but in reality, by the end of the fifth game against Menlo College, mental toughness diminishing. Telling your body to play when your mind has already deteriorated does not make for effective play. We

Although a seemingly gloomy w end, some light was shed when "golden hands" Smith and "freshman phenom" Costello honored as All-Americans. Though now being turned toward next season. The team collectively decided we must work on our aura; we must as as confident as our playing ability allow. And completely biased, our ability should allow for a lot of confi This positive, intimidating confi must stem from each player and then over into the team, as a whole. Just record, we are not anticipating that attainment of this attitude will take lo Menlo should be leary of the T forthcoming aura.

Armadillo's Alley

Did y'all know that Herschel Walker has only 1.42% body fat. I'm talking about the 225 pound dude who plays the macho sport of football. The man who represents "America's Team" the Dallas Cowboys. This is a mind boggling statistic! The average American male has well over 10% body fat. The only people who have tested lower than Hunkel (Herschel) are a couple of World class marathoners and every one knows that marathoners are a bunch of wimps of who look like they have been on a three week hunger strike. Doctors are not certain why Walker's body fat is virtually non-existent. A couple of other "is Herschel a weirdo or what" facts, he sleeps an average of only four hours a night, and eats only one normal size meal a day. I'm going to be curious to watch him in a game played in extremely cold conditions. I seriously wonder if his body will function. Well, enough on Herschel "the freak" Walker.

How about Michael Jordan? The man is space trucking through the NBA. When he scored 63 against Boston in the playoffs last year I knew he was something special, but I had no idea he would become so consistent this early in his career. He is averaging almost 40 points per game this season, only Wilt Chamberlin has ever averaged more. The season is only 17 games old, but keep your eye on that ex-Tar Heel Mr. Jordan.

This fall proved to be extremely successful for CC athletic teams individuals. The women's soccer t which reached the final four last before losing in the semi-finals, went further this season, defeat Massachusetts in the semi finals b losing to North Carolina in the finals means they jare the second best team entire United States of America! Nex it is all the way to No. 1, ladies.

The women's volleyball team also an extremely successful year taking th 1 ranked Division III team to five game the regional tournament. They emerged as a true power in the rank Div. III volleyball. Great job and this fan who is already looking forward to season.

The CC football team unveiled a go wishbone (watch out Sooners) bulldozed their way to a 5-4 record. their first winning season in years hopefully signals a change in CC's foo fortunes. Way to kick some ass this guys.

The men's soccer team had a rebuil year, but showed flashes of brilliance the No. 1 and No. 3 ranked teams in III this season. If they put it together year the sky's the limit.

Finally, Scott Kang had a fantastic country season winning five including the Regional meet. He po 16th at Nationals becoming CC's firs America runner.

Come and Get 'em!

. . . Your last minute X-mas tickets/ reservations (and "mouse cookies")

Call Taylor Travel

636-3871 818 N. Tejon Street

Icers Split With Huskies

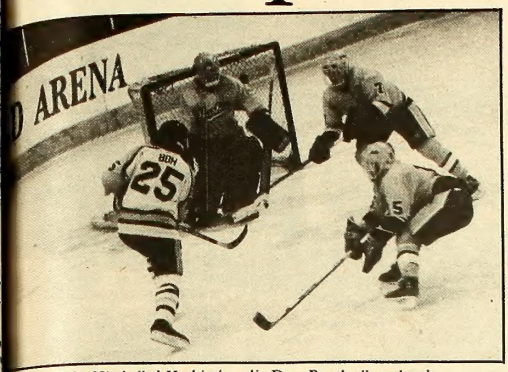


PHOTO BY JERRY WANG

CC's Rick Boh (25) shelled Huskies' goalie Dave Roach all weekend.

BY KATHLEEN MAHONEY

After a weekend split with Michigan ech at the Broadmoor, the Colorado llege hockey team has climbed to a fifth ace tie with Minnesota-Duluth in the estern Collegiate Hockey Association, arting an overall record of 7-8-1 (5-8-1 in WCHA).

The chance to move into third in the eadings eluded the Tigers Saturday night when they dropped a 3-2 decision in overtime to last place Michigan Tech. It was only the third victory of this season for the WCHA cellar dwellers.

Friday night, the Tigers came out skating hard from the start and the Huskies looked confused throughout the whole game. CC blew them away, 10-1, out shooting their guests 56-21. It has been an awfully long time since the Tigers have scored in double digits.

The Tigers spread the scoring evenly throughout the game with three goals in both the first and second periods, then one upped themselves for four in the final period.

Senior Rick Boh got his first hat trick of the year plus two assists for a five point evening while senior tri-captain Rob Doyle led the team with six points, assisting five goals and scoring his own from the blue line. This weekend's performance earned Doyle the WCHA Player of the Week Award. Sophomore Tim Budy scored twice and had a pair of assists while Cal Brown chipped in with two goals and an assist, ending an eleven game scoring slump for the freshmen. Tri-captain Marty Ketola tallied one, along with sophomore Steve Grumley who nabbed his first goal of the season.

The third period was penalty ridden for the frustrated Huskies who had nine players sent to the box in that twenty minutes. The Tigers did not get a penalty in the first or third periods and only three in the second.

Saturday the visitors turned things around to steal a 3-2 overtime victory. The Tigers out shot the Huskies again with 56 shots to the Huskies' 32, but the puck just would not bounce favorably for the home team. Michigan Tech's goalie, who was a human sieve Friday night, turned into a Division I netminder the next night, saving the game on numerous occasions. The Huskies offense also pitched in scoring twice in the first period to take a 2-0 lead.

CC tied it up in the second with goals from Ketola and Budy. Neither team could muster anymore offense though, and the game was sent into overtime. Michigan Tech put one past Tiger goalie Derek Pizzey in the last thirty seconds of overtime to earn the split.

Doyle earned a point assisting Budy's goal Saturday night raising his total points to 25 for the season (he is tied with Boh as the Tigers' leading scorers) and 173 career points. One more point will move him into a seventh place tie with Doug Lidster (1979-83) as one of Colorado College's leading scorers.

The Tigers stay at home again this weekend and host the other end of the spectrum, number one ranked North Dakota. CC was swept when they played North Dakota in the first half of the season.

Senior Scott Campbell feels the Tigers have a better chance at home.

"I think we'll do better this time. Last time we went in thinking about losing, but since then we've had some good games and we had some good practices this week."

Revenge is on their minds now according to tri-captain Gord Whitaker.

"It'll be a tough series but we're going to avenge during the weekend."

The Tigers faceoff at 7:35 at the Broadmoor World Arena tonight and Saturday night against the number one rated college team in the United States. It'll be a good weekend for hockey and the team would appreciate the fans.

B-Ball Entertainment

BY DAVID EVANS

The CC Tigers avenged a 3-game losing reak by punishing the University of olorado, Colorado Springs 97-57 ednesday night in the El Pomar Sports nter. The overwhelming win gives CC uch-needed confidence going into a full eekend against two tough opponents.

The Tigers, now 1-3, were paced by ptains Dave Rakel with 17 points and me fine aerial acrobatics, and Rob Bogue, ho connected on four three-pointers and ded up with 16 overall. The trademark running game was in top form as the ers scored numerous hoops off the fast reak. Their speed was just too much for e fledgling UCCS squad, which is now in eir first year of inter-collegiate mpetition. Aside from sporting one of 's largest win margins in recent years, victory was highlighted by perhaps the y alley-oop dunk ever successfully ecuted in El Pomar Gym when in the cond half John Sacha lobbed a pass two above the rim which Dave Rakel vincingly slammed home. As they say in Hollywood, "that's entertainment!"

After the game Coach Jim Cross was careful not to get too enthusiastic about the win. "Sure, we ran good breaks and played some good half court defense," yet Cross acknowledged that the real test will be for the Tigers to win at least one of their games this weekend when they go up against Sterling college at home this afternoon and Western State in Gunnison on Saturday. Yet the UCCS game was an acknowledged good beginning as Cross commented, "It's nice to get the win on the board."

CC's first three losses came against Dana College 108-81, perennial Div. III powerhouse Nebraska Wesleyan 119-91, and last week in a hard fought battle against Adams State 88-81, in which Rob Bogue continued on his recent scoring tear with 34 points.

The Tigers play host tonight to Sterling college (Kansas) this afternoon at 4:00 p.m. in the El Pomar Sports Center.

Happy Holidays

WE'LL DO YOUR LAUNDRY!!!

WASHED
DRIED
FOLDED

Holiday Special — First 5 lb. FREE
(minimum of 10 lbs)

Suds 'um
Laundry & Cleaners

1931 W. Uintah (across from Uintah Gardens)
473-3756 Special student offer w/CC ID

Happy Holidays

SKYWAY VIDEO

Rentals & Sales

577-9047

Hours:
Monday-Thursday
10:30-7
Friday & Saturday
10:30-8
Closed Sunday

- Foreign Films (Excellent Selection)
- Classic Films
- Operas
- Musicals

As well as an extensive selection of

- Current Releases

— No Club Or Membership Fees —
Tuesday Special - $1.49 Rentals
Sunday Rentals - Free

Skyway Plaza • S. 8th & Arcturus
(feel free to call for directions)

Our precision haircutters will give you the most up-to-the minute look...a look that stands out and lets you be who you want to be. Great Prices too!

20% off all regular priced services

exciting hair styles

Mon. -Fri. 8-7
Sat. 8-5
Sun. 11-5

6 Southgate Road
(Southgate Mall)
520-9957

NO APPOINTMENT NECESSARY
GREAT EXPECTATIONS
PRECISION HAIRCUTTERS

coupon

SAVE $2.00 CC
Shampoo, cut, & blow style now only $8.95
(Reg. $10.95)

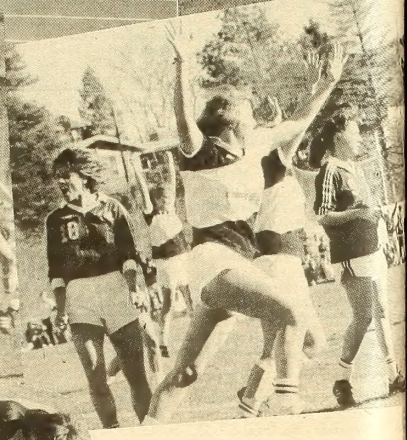
coupon

SAVE $5.00 CC
on any perm complete with shampoo, precision haircut, styling & our written guarantee.

coupon

SAVE 20% CC
on any coloring, frosting or cellophane

Tourney Reflections



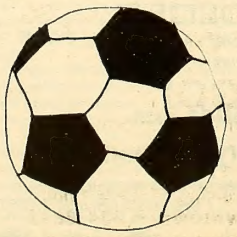
Photos by Jerry Wang

Soccer continued

game scoreless, sending both teams into a round of penalty kicks. While goalkeper Janine Szpara used skill and intimidation to stop UMass' shooters, Shelley Separovich, Maryclair Robinson, and Kerri Tashiro each blasted shots pass the U.Mass. keeper assuring a C.C. victory. On to the finals! But, first, they must rest. Replenishing drained mental and physical bodies at Lisa Beyer's house, they unsuspectingly returned to their hotel for a quiet evening of 4:30 A.M. "emergency" fire drills. (rumor has it U.N.C. supporters get a kick out of fire alarms!) Cute P.J.'s Shelly!

The championship match featured rivals University of North Carolina and Colorado College. CC did get to the game in time, but for some strange, unknown reason the Tigers again chose to watch, not play the 1st half. Thanks again, Janine. (18 saves!) Unfortunately, U.N.C. did manage to slip in two 1st half goals before CC awoke and decided that yes, it would be fun to play the game. The Tigers responded with a brilliant 2nd- half performance. "They will be back," remarked U.N.C. coach Anson Dorrance, referring to the foreshadow of excellence in CC's second half play.

The 2nd place finish finally gave CC respect and credibility on the national scene for senior Margot Stolte, the transition from an excellent Div. III team to a Div. I powerhouse has been amazing. "I never dreamed we'd come this far." For head coach Dang Pibulvech, effort and growth have been the goals of the program. And this concept will remain. Praising the development and accomplishments of CC, he emphasized "We are not satisfied with this symbol of success."



All-Regional Selections

1st Team: Janine Szpara - tedd lover, Shelley Separovitch and M
Bulgar - bumball sisters,
Willoughby - pseudo-gymnast.

2nd Team: Kerri Tashiro masseus, Jennifer Murphree - Kap Smurf.

3rd Team: Keri Schoredt -
Libbey Sheldon - leather lady, Ma
Robinson - Sister Maryclair.

Honorable Mention: Cheryl Peppermint Patty.

All-Americans

1st Team: Janine Szpara.

3rd Team: Shelly Seporovitch
Willoughby.

CC Student Special
Bring in this ad
Any Night Through Dec. 19 '86
2 FOR 1 PIZZA
TO GO!
Valid on large or medium only
Not good with any other coupon or promotion
11 am - 11 pm
Mention coupon when ordering • 1 allow 1 hour
118 N. Teion • downtown • 634-8812

OLD CHICAGO
FRESH
PASTA & PIZZA

Ellipses and Hyperbole

Fruit Chewy Kissy Tag

BY AARON SHURE

Yesterday, I was struck. Doubled over, I first grabbed my gut, then my head, then my arm. I was hit by an embarrassing memory, and I couldn't tell in what part of my body it surfaced. What I remembered was most of my childhood actually, but in special connection to the opposite sex.

Embarrassment concerning girls makes me exhibit severe pain in recollection, while recall of degrading blunders in front of guys makes me shadow box or pretend to do great violence to the figment of my memory. Yesterday, not only was I crawling with internal agony, but I was also pretending to bang someone's head repeatedly into the wall. All this was going on during my philosophy class.

I first discovered girls in a Starburst Fruit Chew add. It was a newspaper ad meant to be colored-in with crayons, showing a happy boy and girl picknicking on a landscape of giant fruits. The scene stirred something deep inside of me, as I realized something inexplicable was going on between those two youngsters—something other than giant strawberries and oranges. I resolved to acquire a girlfriend.

I was an outstandingly awkward twerp. They used to call me "snake hips," because no one could tell where my hips were located on my body, not even me. This characteristic made wearing pants a tricky proposition, to say nothing about keeping them on.

Prior to the Starburst revelation, in keeping with prepubescent custom, I had avoided girls. During kissing-tag, I would run away from the girls in earnest, and I couldn't understand why my buddies were such slow runners. They used to call me "flash." Once, because my belt buckle was hampering the movement of my knees, Sarah caught me. I was terrified, so I hit her in the solar plexus. How could I help but fall in love?

Susan, however, never chased me again. In fact, she started to chase Craig, who was molasses in the frig when she was on his tail. I would swerve dangerously close, and she wouldn't even glance at me. I would defiantly tie my shoes in the path, and Sarah and Craig would run around. Lying in the path, having just tripped, I would watch her hurdle me. Lying next to her in the path, having just tripped both of us, I would watch her get up and chase Craig. I was desperate.

I started fantasizing about ways to get her attention. Perhaps if I were struck on the head by a falling brick, she would run to me in the hospital. It would be even more ideal if I pushed her out of the way, before being struck.

One day, she and Craig took a walk. In delight in how I had chosen my upper thighs to be my waist for the day, my fantasies became more vindictive, and turned to visions of humiliating Craig and maybe even knocking him out. I was sure that someday, Sarah and Craig would be walking down the street, I would approach, say something witty, knock Craig out, pick Susan out of the way, and be struck over the head by a falling brick.

The school went on a field trip to Glenwood Springs where people paid money to swim in green stinky salt water. Craig was daring enough to dive off the high dive into that unusually hard water. It was time for me to make my statement with my speciality dive, the double front flip. I climbed above the steaming pool, looked at Susan, and jumped. I gave myself an angular momentum that can only be explained with certain Newtonian equations. In short, my smug face was the first thing to hit the water. They say that the water cleared, they could see me swimming back to the surface from a great depth, a very red face in all that green. With throbbing cheeks I climbed out of the pool and swore never again to eat Starburst Fruit Chews.

Upside Down Lampoon

House of
YAKITORI
Japanese Restaurants
Every Tuesday
5 pm - 9 pm
ALL THE YAK
YOU CAN ATTACK
$6.30
on the #17 dinner
*not available on to go or delivery orders
YAKITORI
Also try our Sushi Bar
DOWNTOWN ONLY
578-0915
M-Thurs 11 am-3 pm 5-9 pm
Fri & Sat 11 am-3 pm 5-10pm
Downtown
16 E. Bijou

...to a dazzling dramatic statement.
From a traditional style...
2 for 1 Haircuts by Tish
Artistic Hair Designers
703 North Tejon, Suite B
475-0679

College Shoe Shop
Bleat
632-6161
831 N. Tejon

FREE
FLAVORED CORN
Bring the coupon with you the next time you buy a 30 oz. bag of Vic's popcorn. You'll get a FREE medium bag of the flavored corn of your choice.
● buttery caramel
● zesty cheese
● spicy cinnamon
Good at Ulibarri location only
Limit one per coupon
CORN POPPER
1864 W. Uintah 520-9129
Mon-Sat 10-7 Sun 12-6

Please Recycle This Paper

"ADULT CHILDREN OF ALCOHOLICS"—Every Monday Boettcher Basement at 1:30.

APPLICATIONS FOR RESIDENT ASSISTANTS for academic year 1987-88 are now available in the Office of Residential Life for those students who wish to apply but are going on leave of absence for spring semester. Applications are due in the Office of Residential Life on December 5, 1986. Recommendations are due by Janaury 5, 1987.

HAVING PROBLEMS WITH ALCOHOL AND DRUGS? There is an informal gathering in the Boettcher Basement at 6 p.m. every Sunday. For further information call Ted H. x 286.

FUTONS

$ 99 single $125 double
$140 queen

All Cotton

KIKU FUTONS
2616 W. Colorado Ave.
(in historic Old Colorado City)
520-9951

The Residential Life Programming Committee will be sponsoring activities Dec. 10th - Dec. 13th dealing with issues of Relaxation.

Wed. Dec. 10th [1]All Campus Primal Scream, 6:30 pm at Tutt flagpole. [2]Stress Management Session, 7:00 pm in Loomis Lounge. [3]Message Therapy Session, 7:30 in Loomis Lounge. Guided Mind Trip, 8:00, Loomis Lounge.

Thurs. Dec. 11th. A discussion of personal spirituality with John Riker. 8:00 p.m. Slocum Lounge.

Sat. Dec. 13th. All Campus Winter Dance, 8-12:00 in Loomis basement.

T'ei Chi Ch'uan .

You do not have to be Mister or Ms. Rambo to learn a martial art. You don't need a home gym to be in good physical shape. Why sit and stare at a wall to increase your mental awareness.

T'ei Chi Ch'uan is a soft-style martial art. T'ei Chi Ch'uan is truly the "great ultimate." It's an exciting way to learn self defense and an intelligent way to physical and mental fitness. It's a system you can practice for a life time.

Chin Kuang T'ei Chi Ch'uan
Call 570-6250 for nearby classes.

HOT '69 BUG, new engine, clutch, tires, battery, paint, tune-up. AM-FM cassette, sunroof, rims and tires, extractor. More. Call for details. $1350. Greg 635-1205.

APPLY FOR ROCKEFELLER EDUCATION FELLOWSHIP. Visit Chicago schools and investigate topics of personal interest. For deadline and other information, contact Professor Paul Kuerbis in the Education Department, Mierow House, X726.

TO ALL THOSE INTERESTED IN THE ASSOCIATION of Students Interested in Asia (A.S.I.A.):—If you think you are on the mailing list and have not received any newsletters it might be because we do not have your on-campus address. We need your on-campus address!

Or if you are not on our mailing list and want to be... Please call Theresa or Lisa at ex. 329 and leave your address or drop a note by the East Asia House.

ACM INDIA PROGRAM—It is a great opportunity! And if you are interested, contact Jack Carter in the Biology department, Olin 415 or ex. 402 for more information. But...do it quick the deadline for applications has been extended but it is quickly approaching.

BETA BLOOD DRIVE coming up 3rd week of fourth block. Please give the gift that gives life.

YEARBOOKS—All those wait list people wishing to purchase the 1985-86 yearbook, pick them up at Registration in Janaury! Questions...call Janie x222.

FOR SALE: Smith Corona Coronamatic 2500 electric typewriter—$110. B/W television—$15. Bauer Challenger skates, men's size 9—$15. Nordica ski boots, men's size 9, great condition—$15. Peugot bike frame, 19"—$10. Call 633-7311.

WANTED: Chauffeur. Must be in Machiavelli, Fraterelli, Gucci able to handle a "three-on-the-tree" Wagoneer with auto-locking renumeration: |47,000/yr (not i wardrobe allowance); call Gres 123.

THE ROMANCE LANG DEPT. is now taking application 1987-88 program in Perpignan Applications are available Humanities Secretarial Office, A 120, ext. 635.

LOSER WANTED—Ne overweight people to try new hig weight control programs as seen No drugs. No exercise. Call Cliff

TURN C's INTO B's AND B A's—CC grad (Phi Beta Kappa, d thesis, dept. award) will tutor on a of writing. Research, drafting, edi pager to thesis. Also test taking a prep. Former Honor Council knows limits. Two glks. from Reas. rates. Call 635-7374 after 6

SEMESTER AT SEA IS NOT A TRIP AROUND THE W With the combination of provoking courses and field program can educate and chang who take part in it.

Departing from Nassau, Baha Spring 1987 voyage will begin o 27, and the Fall 1987 voyage will September 11.

Costs for the 100-day voyage ra $8,945 to $10,575, depending o accomodations. Certain types of f aid may transfer, and work-study p are awarded each semester.

For more information about Semester at Sea, phone 800-854 write to Semester at Sea, 2E Quadrangle, University of Pi Pittsburgh, PA 15260.

Ideal Fundraiser

For your club or organization. Fun, effective, fast, easy. Supported by reputable local business.

Call Ray 548-1684 for details.

PEAK POPCORN

"POPCORN AT THE PEAK OF QUALITY"

- Pre-Popped Popcorn
  Butter, Cheese, Caramel, Cinnamon
  Guaranteed Fresh
- Bulk Popcorn (Save!)
- Decorative Tins
- Popcorn Machines, Accessories & Supplies

306 E. Arvada, Colo. Spgs., CO 80906 • 633-7677

MDA SupeR DANCE

Registration
Dec. 11, 12, 15 and 16
$1 registration fee
Free Beer/Dance-a-thon/Live Band

CCCA
(Student Government)
ELECTIONS
Election Day is Tuesday December 16
VOTE
& SUPPORT YOUR SCHOOL

PIZZA SHUTTLE COMING AT YOU!

PIZZA SHUTTL

No one makes pizza as fresh, as fast, as cheesy, or delivers it so fast (and free)

OPEN DAILY AT 11:00

578-8686
2573 Airport Road — FREE DELIVERY to South Central Colorado Spri
INCLUDING Colorado College

390-4040
7070 S. Hwy. 85/87 Fountain — FREE DELIVERY to Ft. Carson, Security and Fountain

596-5272
4549 Templeton Gap Rd. — FREE DELIVERY to North Central Colorado Springs

THE "GEMINI" PROGRAM
TWO* PIZZAS FOR ONE LOW PRICE
Two 10" Cheese Pizzas only $5.89
Two 14" Cheese Pizzas only $8.89
Two 10" Pizzas - $1.25 per item
Two 14" Pizzas - $1.49 per item

INGREDIENTS
Green Pepper Rings
Fresh Sausage
Ham
Double Crust
Jalapenos
Onion Circles
Fresh Ground Beef
Pepperoni
Extra Cheese
Double Cheese (2 items)
Black Olives
Green Olives
Fresh Mushrooms
Anchovies
Pineapple

Single Pizza Prices :	12"	16"
Cheese	5.00	7.20
1 Topping	5.75	8.30
Additional Toppings	.75	1.10

A HOLIDAY GIFT FOR YOU!
Just mention this ad and receive
DOUBLE VALUE
for these coupons!
This special expires 12/31/86

16 Oz. Bottled Drinks
30 Minute Guarantee*
*Road Conditions Permitting

C1 SAVE $1 ON ANY 1 OR MORE ITEM PIZZA (12" OR 16" PIZZA)
PIZZA SHUTTLE FREE DELIVERY
One Coupon Per Order Not Good With Any Other Special
Expires 12/31/86

C2 FREE EXTRA CHEES ON ANY LARGE PIZZ (16" PIZZA)
PIZZA SHUTTLE FREE DELIVERY
One Coupon Per Order Not Good With Any Other Special
Expires 12/31/86

C3 SAVE $2 ON ANY LARGE 4 OR MORE ITEM PIZZ (16" PIZZA)
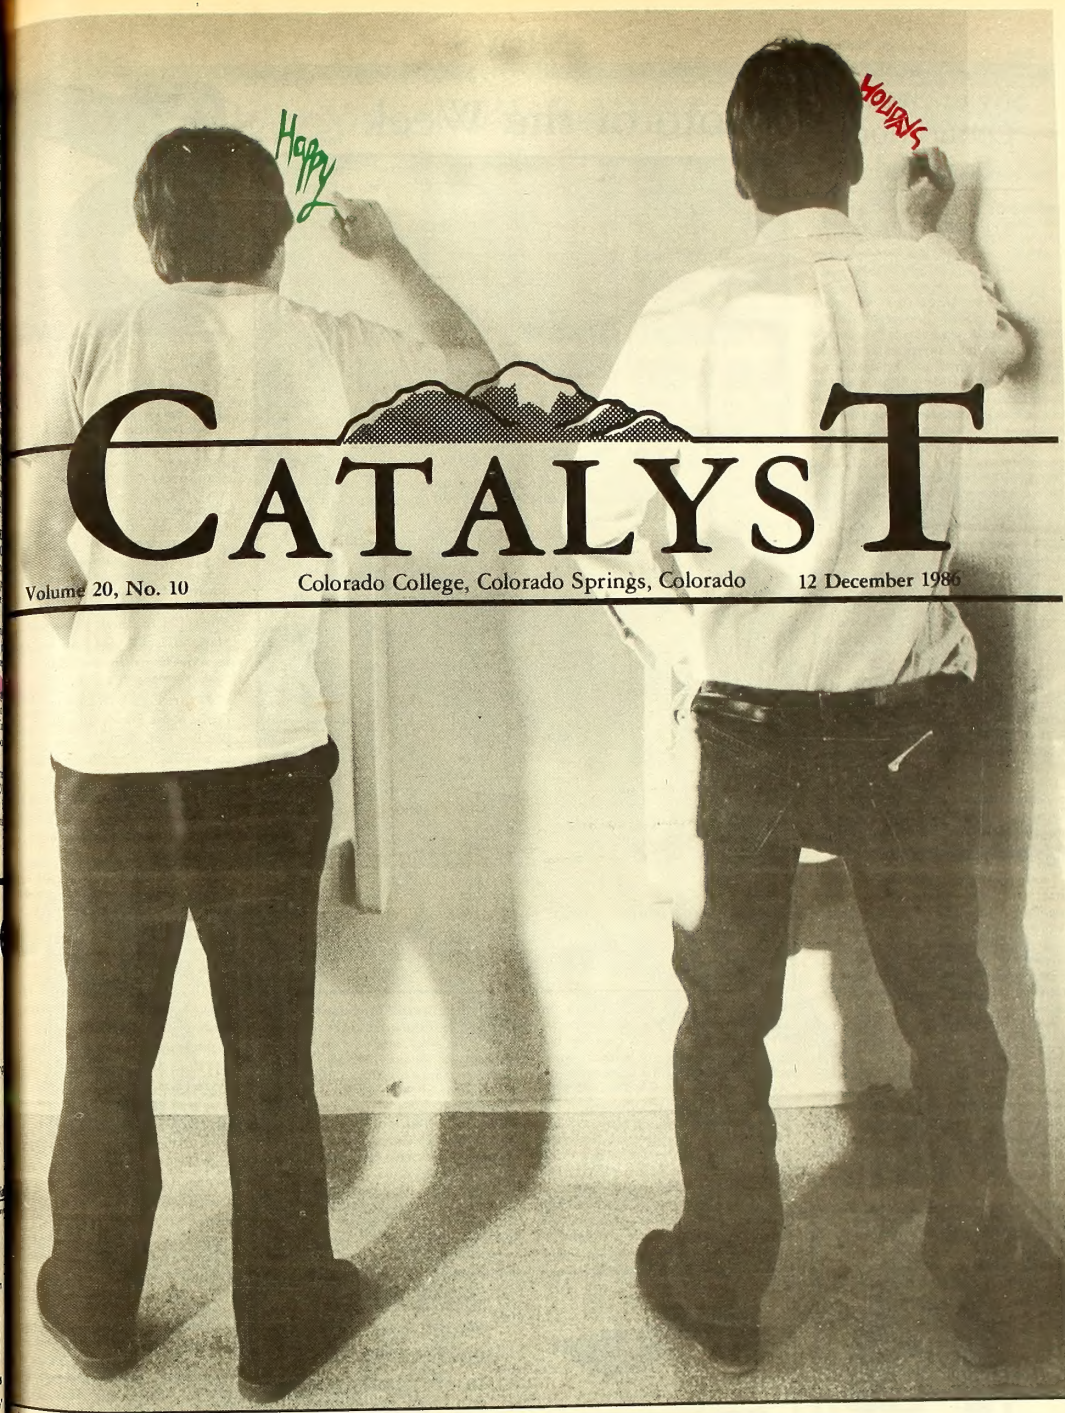
PIZZA SHUTTLE FREE DELIVERY
One Coupon Per Order Not Good With Any Other Special
Expires 12/31/86

TAX NOT INCLUDED



CATALYST

Volume 20, No. 10 Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado 12 December 1986

CAMPUS GRAFFITI

Pages 12-13

Don't make me crack up

Haudute lives

It's better to burn out than to fade away

Welcome my friend Welcome to the machine

Cracko

My My Hey Hey

Jah! Ganja

Why doesn't one of you morons write some good graffitti?

Olin students don't think enough about grammar

Save the snails Nuke the whales eat their tails put them in pails Shoot some avail

If I could think at the speed of light...

We'd all call you laser brain

Soviet-Syrian Connection Exposed

Political Union Wraps Up Symposium

BY AKLILU DUNLAP

"The Soviet Union has no natural business in Syria," asserted Talcott Williams Seelye, equating Soviet interests in Syria with pure strategics. The former ambassador to Syria and Tunisia offered this in his discussion of the Soviet-Syrian connection Tuesday, Dec. 9. The talk was one of five presentations in a symposium addresing US-Soviet relations. Beginning Dec. 4, the lecture series showcased five prominent speakers of such affairs—William Menold, Michael Yanney, John C. Currey, Thomas Cochran and Seelye—who addressed current issues such as arms control, the Strategic Defense Initiative, Middle East interests and business relations. The five-day symposium was sponsored by the Colorado College Political Union.

Having a strategically important geographical location, Syria offers critical advantages to the Soviet Union, explained Seelye. He added that this is the Soviet Union's latest attempt at obtaining access to the Mediterranean Sea. Still engaged in the old wars against its neighbors, Iraq and Lebanon, Syria is militarily dependent on its northern ally. According to Seelye, this dependency is illustrated by the increasing Soviet presence in Syria, presently estimated at 2000 soldiers. The ambassador continued that the Soviets are extending this much needed military aid unconditionally to the Middle Eastern country in hopes of building a stronger alliance.

"As long as Syria is militarily inferior to Israel and other countries, it can't negotiate with a position of power," continued Seelye. He added that Syria is the only Arab nation supporting the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. Syria expects greater Soviet involvement in its progress, including monetary commitment, for its support.

Ambassador Seelye also mentioned that the Soviet unpopularity in Syria is great. This resentment reflects the general attitude of the mideast toward Russia. He explained that Syria, like its neighbors, looks to the West. Said Seelye, "They want the education, the economy and the lifestyle [of the West]." However, despite its cordial attempts at diplomacy with the U.S. (Syria played a major role in the resolution of the TWA hostage crisis), dialogue between the two countries had been damaged because of Syria's terrorist record. He concluded the point by saying, "As long as strife exists with Israel, Syria will lean on the Soviets. Otherwise, it will turn to the West."

Seelye is a graduate of Deerfield Academy and Amherst College. After serving three years in the military and teaching history at his first alma mater, he entered the Department of State in 1949. He held a great number of government offices, working in such countries as Jordan, Kuwait, Saudia Arabia and Egypt. In 1972, he became Ambassador to the Republic of Tunisia. He held that office until 1976, after which he accepted the position of Senior Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs in the Department of State. Seelye was chosen Presidential Envoy to Lebanon in 1976. From 1978-1981, he served as US Ambassador to Syria. When asked to comment on the near US-Syria diplomatic break, Seelye answered, "Diplomacy, when conceived by the Venetians, existed between countries that didn't care much for each other. Having diplomatic relations with a country doesn't indicate support of that country's policies."

COVER BY JOHN KATSANIS

Photo of the Week

PHOTO BY OSCAR

81

BY ANITA WALLS

Hello, seniors!! This being the Senior Column for first semester, I th it only appropriate to dedicate it December Graduates.

Our December Graduate party th Wednesday was a smashing success great to see all you seniors having great time! I realize that we only ha week left of this block, but if you December Graduate, make sure you her/him the recognition she/he dese They represent many of the diff departments at Colorado College. So look at their names below, and I bet discover that you know at least on them.

William Hiatt Brierly (Economics)
Mark William Bryant (Lib. Arts &
Joy Lynn Carnahan (Poli. Sci.)
Timothy Thorn Clark (Biology)
Lesla Cyre Copley (Religion)
Cheryl Marie Dwyer (English)
Ben Earl Gell (Sociology)
James Joseph Grice (Business Econ
Whitney Paine Griffin (History)
Nancy Denton Hastings (Bs. Econ
Ann Kathleen Heaney (Psychology)
Alberto K. Hernandez-Lemus (Lib. & Sciences)
Ralph Benjamin Hitz (Geology)
Michael Allen Hopkins (Lib. Arts &
Linda Renee Knufinke (Pol. Sci.)
Rosalyn LaPier (Physics)
Athanasios Elias Loukakis (Lib. Arts Sciences)
Sarah Magallanes (Bs. Ec
Eduardo Alonso Martinez (Bs. Econ
Stuart J. Martz (Lib. Arts & Sci.)
Michael Given McKoane (Bs. Econ
Jean Anne Morrison (English)
Hasan Faraz Naqvi (Chemistry)
Mary Jean Penuela (Biology)
Eve Juliette Pollak (Music)
Frank Daniel Quintana (Bs. Econ.)
Scott Michael Ree (Biology)
Jonathan David Rubin (Econ.)
Kirk Alan Turner (Bs. Econ.)
Susan Laura Winter (Bs. Econ.)

With a special holiday message fro of us, here is our Senior Class Pres Chris Christie:

Dear Seniors,

The Class Officers and Agents w like to extend to you the warmes Season's Greetings. We hope that semester has been an enjoyable one f The Christmas break is always a welc sight for seniors as they anticipate the semester until Graduation!

We look forward to your return from Holidays and have planned a numb exciting events for the Class. Sp semester promises to be as much f this past semester. I would like to th those who have helped organize events, all of which have been successful. The support from members is tremendous and g appreciated by those working to unit Class of '87.

Finally, I would like to congratulat December Graduates who have comp their degrees this semester. The c class hopes they will be able to retu May to join in Commencement."

Have a happy, relaxing and safe ho season!!!

SILK STOCKINGS

A NOSTALGIC BOUTIQUE
Antique Costume Jewelry
Equisite Clothing
Unique & Fun Accessories
126 N. Nevada Ave.
636-9640
Use this for 10% off

BUSINESS MACHINES, INC.

Details & Registration
CALL Lois or Peggy 632-5157.

You build-we show you how!

$1,295.00 complete
VISA, Amer. Express accepted

6 hrs. of instruction on MS-DOS and basic computer concepts
Jan. 27 & 29, 6:00-9:00 pm

SPECIAL
Build your own computer from scratch in our classroom!
Jan. 22, 6:00-9:00 pm

Your computer includes
Color Monitor
Printer Port
2 Floppy drives
4.77/8 MHZ
Phoenix Bios
MS-DOS
IBM Compatible

Call for Special Prices available to CC Students
Compaq, Texas Instruments, PC Compatible

CCCAA Overcomes Violence, Looks to Future

BY PETER W. LOACH

The Shanty Town, erected on ovember 14 to protest the College's vestments in South Africa, experienced a dent turn last Saturday night, December In response to the incident, the CCCAA olorado College Community Against partheid) went ahead with plans to minate the Shanty Town project.

According to CCCAA member Wendy annett, an automobile drove through the hanties, demolishing one, while others were overturned. "If anyone had been inside the Shanties at the time someone could have been seriously hurt," exclaimed annett.

Appearing at first as an extreme breach of CC security, the incident led to an investigation by Physical Plant Director Claude Cowart. He concluded, however, that a car had not been used, and that the suspects are most likely some disgruntled students. The CCCAA has some definite leads but will only make public accusations if they are "positively sure," according to member Jorge Hinojosa.

At a press conference held with the CCCAA at the Shanty Town on Monday afternoon, attended by several local television stations that have been covering the project, the group reacted to the incident. While they planned to dismantle the Shanties over the weekend, the vandilism came as a shock and many members felt disappointed.

Ian Campbell described the violence as a "violation of our constitutional rights to freedom of speech and protest." The group remained positive to reactions about the projects in general, yet many felt the incident typical of numerous responses, being that of rash statements or actions instead of constructive debate.

A KRDO television reporter claimed to have received an anonymous phone call declaring that the CCCAA perpetrated the vandalism to get attention. Hinojaosa flatly denied the accusation, adding that group members are not "just some liberal radicals," but concerned students educated on the issue.

Another press-attended meeting was held Tuesday, December 9th at which time the student group completed the Shanty dismantling. Over twenty CCCAA members performed a short skit. Some students posing as police, armed with heavy clubs, dragged others out of the rotting homes, beating and arresting the tenants and demolishing the remaining shanties.

The purpose of the expressive skit, according to Hinojosa, was to show a "forced relocation," a common occurrance in South Africa. CCCAA member Stephanie Bryson drew a further parallel between the skit and the realities of South Africa. Stated Bryson, "as shanty towns in South Africa pop up after being demolished, so shall the CCCAA group continue to be active on campus."

Reflecting on the project as a whole, both the CCCAA and the Administration felt it a positive and constructive experience. Centered around the Fall Board of Trustees meeting, the group had hoped to arouse the consciousness of the issue, and engage in constructive debate with the Board.

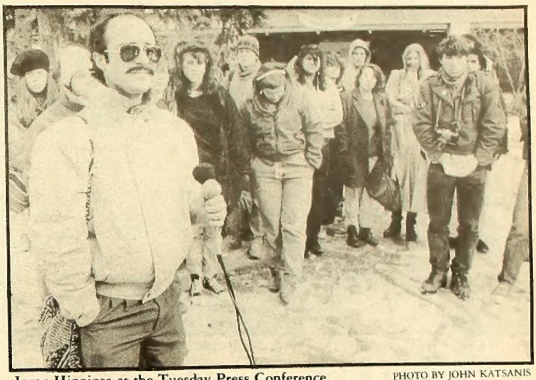
The Board permitted several members of the CCCAA to present their arguments at a meeting, an allowance unprecedented at the College. As a result, President Riley assured the group that the Board would "reassess" investment policies.

The mediator between the Administration and the CCCAA during the project, CC Legal Council Renee Rabinowitz, was "glad to see things resolved," referring to the success of the project as a whole, and particularly the group's handling of the vandilism.

Currently the CCCAA is working on a paper that summarizes their divestment goals, which they will present o the Board of Trustees at their march meeting. The student group plans to spend the next three months sponsoring lectures and debates to educate the student body and other groups, such as the NAACP and the Black Student Union.

The CCCAA also hopes to consolidate more support by gaining the endorsement of school organizations. This last effort became the obvious path after the Board dismissed as illegitimate several hundred signatures on a petition. With faculty and student organizations behind them, CCCAA hopes the Board will give their arguments even more attention at the March meeting.

The CCCAA welcomes student opinion about the project as a whole. They hope constructive debate will elucidate the importance of the issue and clarify its complexities.



Jorge Hinojosa at the Tuesday Press Conference. PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

DOMINO'S PIZZA

TWO 12" ONE TOPPING PIZZAS FOR $9.14

(TAX NOT INCLUDED)
Please see below for other selections.

Continued By Popular Demand

Limited Delivery Area
Our drivers carry less than $20

AVOID THE NOID
CALL DOMINO'S PIZZA

30 minute guarantee

If your pizza does not arrive within 30 minutes, present this coupon to the driver for $3.00 off your order.
One coupon per pizza.

Fast, Free Delivery
Good at listed locations.

One of the greatest offers ever from Domino's Pizza—two 12" pizzas for the price of a large! Twice the pizza for one low price!

For a limited time, order any two 12" pizzas (they don't have to be the same!), and you'll get them for the price of one 16". The price will be determined by the pizza with the most toppings.

Two 12" pizzas will only cost you:

Superb cheese	$7.95
1 topping	$9.14
2 toppings	$10.33
3 toppings	$11.52
4 toppings	$12.71
5 toppings	$13.90
6 toppings	$15.09

Twice the pizza for one low price—two 12" pizzas for the price of a large!
And, hot to your door in 30 minute or less, GUARANTEED!

Offer may expire anytime

635-1511

DOMINO'S PIZZA DELIVERS® FREE.

All Pizzas Include Our Special Blend of Sauce and 100% Real Cheese.

Our Superb Cheese Pizza
12" Cheese $5.65
16" Cheese $7.95

Additional Items
Pepperoni, Mushrooms, Ham, Onions, Green Peppers, Black Olives, Pineapple, Sausage, Ground Beef, Jalapeno Peppers,
Extra Cheese (1 item)
Double Cheese (2 items)
Thick Crust, Extra Sauce
Each Item
12" item $ .79
16" item $1.19

Ask about our Group Discount (on 5 or more pizza orders).

We accept checks.

Prices do not include tax. Our drivers carry less than $20.00.

Open for Lunch Every Day
11 am - 12 am Sun.-Thurs.
11 am - 1 am Fri.-Sat.

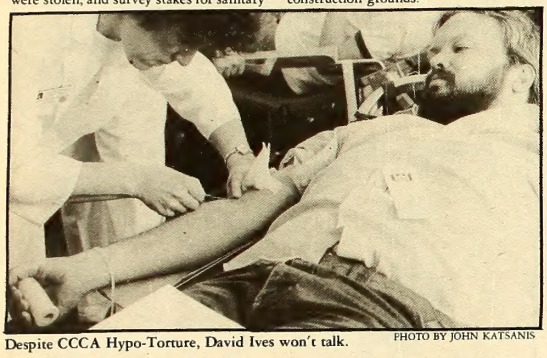
NEWS BRIEFS

Olin Site Vandalized

Breaking into the Olin addition construction site has become a popular activity amongst Colorado College students. Although the vandalism and theft on the construction site has been minimal, college administrators worry that students will be more tempted to enter the construction site as construction progresses. The progression of construction also increases the danger to trespassing students.

On one weekend, the fence surrounding the construction site was bent in sixteen places, thirty "Danger Keep Out" signs were stolen, and survey stakes for sanitary sewer lines were displaced. Although the cost was minimal, the college had to pay approximately $150 to have the sewer lines surveyed again.

Any student caught in the construction site will receive a disciplinary warning. Although all disciplinary sanctions are subject to appeal, most students caught in the construction site will bypass the hearing process and receive an automatic disciplinary warning. The Gerald Phipp Construction Company will also have the option to press criminal trespassing charges against any student caught on the construction grounds.



Despite CCCA Hypo-Torture, David Ives won't talk. PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Humanitarians Rewarded

The Robinson Student Humanitarian Achievement Award is designed to recognize and honor four students' outstanding contributions to public service, and to support them in carrying out a project to address social needs within a community. The award has been established by Mr. Gerald Robinson.

Four awards of $1500 will be granted to individuals at Campus Compact member institutions. The award money will be used to further humanitarian activities as directed by the recipient. In an accompanying application essay, candidates for the award will describe how they propose to use these funds.

Candidates must be nominated by the president of their institution. A letter of support from the president and an application form completed by the student must be sent to the Campus Compact office by March 13, 1987 to receive consideration. Award winners will be announced one month later and profiles of the nominees and final award recipients will be shared with the press.

For further criteria information, contact Dean Peterson, Summer Session, x 655.

Asian Opportunities

The East-Asia house sponsored a discussion on the Chinese, Japanese, and Indian programs Wednesday night. A.C.M. representatives, Professors Doug Fox and Jane Cauvel, as well as students who have participated in the program were present to discuss the programs. Professor Fox endorsed the Waseda program in Japan based on the prestige and respect given to the program by the Japanese. Another Japanese program, Kansai Gaidai, was recommended by a few CC students who have participated in it, but the program currently lacks prestige because it is not yet an A.C.M. program. Professor Cauvel recommended the Hong Kong and India programs on the basis that both provided an excellent environment through which to learn and immerse one's self in S and East Asian cultures. Past partici of the programs felt they were worth and many had plans of returning t countries where they studied. Any stu interested in these programs sh contact professors Jane Cauvel and J Fox.

To Chicago on Busine

The University of Chicago, for the consecutive year, is offering a u opportunity to Colorado College stud The Graduate School of Business is loo for a small group of outstanding jun from twenty select colleges to partici in the Chicago Business Fellows progr Two students will be selected from C attend Chicago next summer on a scholarship to begin studies for the M degree. Afterwards, the students return to finish at CC, and will have t years in which to return to the Univers

The program is widely known nation and has been featured in Newsweek University of Chicago is consistently near the top of the list in business sch sharing honors with Harvard, Stanf and Wharton (at Pennsylvan Undoubtedly, the program offers incredible opportunity. In addition to academic aspect, participants receive benefits, including corporate visits, ca seminars with professionals, etc.

It should be stressed that the progra not just for business and economics maj but rather for any interested student T purpose of the program is to attract a diversified, intelligent, and interest people to one of the top MBA progra Almost every major was represented last summer's program, and some stude simply attended for the experience of the challenge.

There will be an informational sess held next week with Professor G Griffiths, and CC students Scott McCa and Alison Graves (last yea participants). It will be in Palmer Ll 3:00 on Tuesday, December 16. interested students are urged to attend

BETA BLOOD

And More Greek News

BY J. TIM SMITH

The Beta Theta Pi blood drive began Monday and ended in great success yesterday. Over 75 more people donated blood this year than last, and the Betas reported that by Wednesday at least 300 pints of blood had been donated. the blood is distributed to several hospitals in the area, and credits are established so that CC students, faculty, and staff can receive free blood transfusions if needed. The Beta Blood Bash Party for those who donated or attempted to donate blood is scheduled for Friday and will include food, prizes, and live entertainment. Many thanks to the Betas for organizing the drive and also to those who donated.

The Fraternity of Phi Gamma Delta raised $3500 for the YMCA's annual Bowl-A-Thon held last weekend. Since October the Fijis have been collecting pledges and donations for the event. Bowling day was December 7, and Fijis Mike Travers and Jeff Schompers attained the highest scores. The Bowl-A-Thon is the YMCA's largest fund raiser, and a new record total of $27,000 was made; the money is directed to the Big Brothers/Big Sisters division of the YMCA and used to expand and improve the program. In addition to the Bowl-A-Thon the Fijis are hosting a holiday party for 40 young kids in the Big Brothers/Big Sisters program.

Fraternity rush begins early next block, and the IFC rush committee has spent many hours planning for a great rush. IFC Vice President Scott Holstein compiled and produced a new rush pamphlet that will be distributed to all freshmen. The pamphlet is more comprehensive than previous rush pamphlets. Open fraternity parties are prohibited during block 5, and there should be no invite parties for freshmen.

Happy Holidays and Happy New Year!

CAFE BIJOU
DINING & SPIRITS
• serving • lunch & light dinners, exquisite desserts & coffees
• first floor •
jazz, cocktails & hors d'oeuvres
• second floor •
Trip the night fantastic in a turn of the century home
411 East Bijou 632-9640
Bring in this ad for a free specialty drink with your lunch or dinner

patagonia®
Synchilla™

Mountain Chalet
CC's Outdoor Connection
266 North Tejon 633-0732
Downtown

ative mmunication

BY HARTLEY FLEGE

ite a recent contraction in the ing job market, the field still offers nities for creative and ambitious . This was the message delivered Roberts, an advertising executive he New York firm, SSC&B, on ber 4, in Palmer Hall. The event ored by the Economics Student y Board. Mr. Roberts began his ation with a brief summary of his ground, and then moved to an w of the advertising industry, h heavily on what it takes to do well rtising.

Roberts is a liberal arts graduate of a ollege in Pennsylvania. Like many dents upon graduation, he was not that he wanted to do. He picked up a manual and started from page one. flipping through the accounting the prospects of which did not him, he came permanently to ising. His first job was in media h, with Compton Advertising. Roberts joined SSC&B, a new York ising firm, the sixth largest in NYC. m operates in 48 countries," virtually where the free world permits free "Throughout his career, Mr. Roberts resented a diverse array of accounts, ing Coca Cola and Cover Girl ics.

berts next turned his attention to the stry as a whole, noting recent changes have diminished prospects for new s. These changes are primarily a ion of the current economic ion, more specifically the trend of mergers. As a part of a larger rn, advertising interests are ingly seeing their budgets cut. rs summed up the current situation e industry, pointing out that rtising operates in a zero-sum n environment. For the sake of ing employment, experienced rtising people are willing to take pay ions. Consequently, advertising has become a hard field to enter.

"Flaky Things"

n, how do you get a job in rtising? The first step is rking." "Get your foot in the door," berts puts it. His advice: "Use every ction, every road you can think of." mphasized the importance of the e in landing a job today, regardless of ustry. It may be your "only shot." ity in a resume is important. Of , creativity must be tempered to the e are seeking. In advertising, there is ot room for creativity. Take chances, mends Roberts. "Corny goes in the rbage can as boring." So, in trying aky things," you can only increase nces of being noticed, the first step ing an advertising job.

here is one thing that permeates aspect of advertising, whether it be go, promotion, packaging, ations, or the exciting legal side, it is ity. To be effective, one must be able rror society and the environment in we communicate." You must be able ualize, think on your feet, design gns that are relatively compelling." ididates for jobs in advertising ent many major fields of study. s in psychology, sociology, and , as well as business and economics, ood backgrounds for advertising. rdless of other credentials, munication skills are of great rance. You must know when to talk when to listen. Competition, rsity, and Communication.

e Roberts is but one of the many speakers the Economics Department lanned for this year. All students, ardless of major, are invited to attend all campus programs. Watch for ouncements.

Psycho's Convene

BY TIM CLARK

What is Farley Granger's character's occupation in "Strangers on a Train?"

In "Rear Window," what is it that the murderer sells in his spare time?

How long is the famous "Shower Scene" in "Psycho?"

So you thought Trivial Pursuit was tough? Well, the earlier questions are examples of the type of trivia that will be asked in the fifth annual Alfred Hitchcock Trivia Bowl. The Trivia Bowl, in which students of the course "Hitchcock, his Imitators and MacGuffins" participate, will be held this Sunday, December 14, from 3-5:00 p.m. in Olin 1.

The contest's moderator and master-in-arms is Ted Hunt. Hunt, captain of the winning team of the "ABC Wide World of Sports" trivia contest in 1976, has been described by Professor Gilbert Johns as a man whose knowledge is "notorious" and "certainly not for the birds." Johns, who has taught the film course for the past five years, concocted the idea for the trivia contest as part of the final exam for the students in his course. All of the students have seen 14 films twice and have written five papers on the films during Block 4. Seven teams of students and alumni will compete for top honors, with the winning

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Alec Rekow, left, and Mike Fraterelli were chosen this week as Co-Editors of next spring's Catalyst. Cutler Board also named Brian Smith as Disparaging Eye Editor-elect. All three have worked this fall for their respective publications, with Fraterelli serving as Copy Editor and Rekow as a Co-Sports Editor for the Catalyst.

Superdance To Fight Muscular Distrophy

BY WENDY ABRAMS

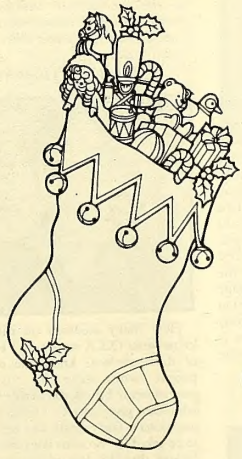
New on campus this year, the CC Superdance offers students an opportunity to have fun and support a good cause. Sponsored by the Muscular Dystrophy Association, the February 14th, team being exempted from taking the final exam of the course. Johns feels that the contest is an appropriate review for the course and gets the students to pay close attention to the movies.

Candy and popcorn will be served during the Trivia Bowl and all are invited to attend. In addition to refreshments, there will also be bad puns, funny answers and a good time. (Incidentally, the answers to the first three questions are: 1—a tennis player; 2—costume jewelry; and 3—45 seconds.)

Valentine's Day Dance is designed to earn money to fight the disease. The dance will last from 4 p.m. to 2 a.m., with FREE BEER and tons and tons of great prizes.

Registration for the event will be on December 11, 12, 15, and 16 at Bemis/Taylor during lunch or dinner. Pledge sheets for hours spent dancing will be provided (take them home for Christmas Break!) MDA will collect the money for you.

All campus support is needed to achieve the targeted goal. As David Cheek put it, "Party for those who can't." The event is not a dance jmarathon; you will not be expected to dance all ten hours! Contact Mark Scoggins or Lisa Foltz for more information. Be sure to join the fun.



Avoid the Christmas Crunch

Shop Early at

The Colorado College Bookstore

McGregor Hall

CC Shirts

Calendars

Stuffed Animals

Records & Tapes

Gifts

Children's Books

Bookstore Closed

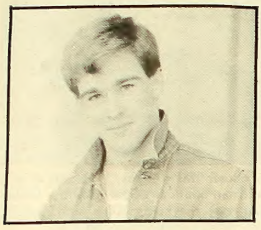
December 20-January 1

Happy Holidays!

The following students have submitted petitions declaring their candidacy for the Colorado College Campus Association.

Candidates for President

JON-MARK COLWELL PATTERSON



Leadership. Expereince. Integrity. These are nice words. When you vote on December 16, you'll be looking for these qualities in the candidates.

I'm Jon-Mark Colwell Patterson and I don't always reach the ideals that these words promise. However, as your CCCA Member at Large in the past year, I've kept my mind (and occassionally my mouth) open to make the base decisions concerning our interests and our money.

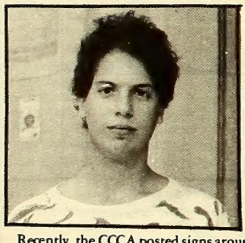
Last year, we allocated $100,000 of student money. I helped make the difficult decisions about where to use it. As leader of the CCCA, I will carefully oversee this process in the coming year.

You may have seen me involved in campus issues—like the discussion of the 8-block year plan. Keeping abreast of goings on is important. As CCCA President, I will make CCCA a larger forum for and catalyst of student debate and opinion.

These are the big issues. The intangibles are important, too. With your mandate, I'll be there guiding the council as we take on the campus issues in an organized, critical, and—dare I say it—"Liberal-artsy" manner.

If you have questions about specific issues or about my background and opinions, please call me at x336. I'm asking for your vote because I want the job and I'm capable of doing it well. Thank you.

CRAIG RENETZKY



Recently, the CCCA posted signs around the campus asking, "Do you care how your money is spent?" Unfortunately, that is about all the CCCA has been known for in the past few years. What about its important role as the liaison between the administration and the student body? In the same poster it put in brackets that the CCCA is your "student government."

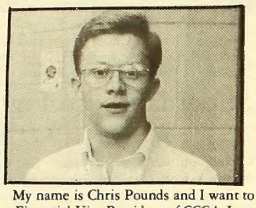
By running for CCCA President, I hope to increase its visibility. I would like to change it's role on this campus from a "bank" to an advocate for student concerns. It's important role as the distributing source of funds for student organizations must continue, but not remain its only function. The new council must in addition be receptive to student input. It must spend more time dealing with problems like the eight block plan and the yearly housing problems, just to name a few. Problems that can not be dealt with adequately unless we elect a council that is visible and accessible.

I realize that the task will not be an easy one, but it is one that my past experience would help me complete. I served as the president of my high school student body for two terms and was appointed by the mayor of Los Angeles to represent to the city council, issues that concerned the youth of Los Angeles.

I hope that you will consider me when you cast your vote this Tuesday, and together we can work to make CC an even better place.

Candidates for Financial Vice-President

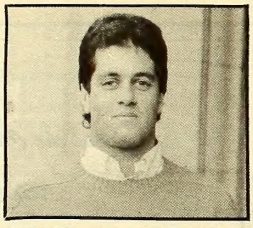
CHRIS POUNDS



My name is Chris Pounds and I want to be Financial Vice President of CCCA. I am ready to spend long hours in the budget committee sessions and am ready to work hard talking to the Board of Trustees about the eight block plan. Most of all I am ready to listen to any of your concerns over the next two semesters. I am ready to listen and to serve.

Candidates for Executive Vice President

DAVID BURSTEIN



I, David Burstein, would like to declare my candidacy for the office of Executive Vice President of the CCCA. I will bring to this position leadership and the intentions of getting the job done. I will to the best of my ability try to advocate student concerns and increase communication and awareness between the faculty and the student body. I will also try to encourage greater participation in the selection process of students for student/faculty committees. The bottom line however is that I will work hard and do the job to the best of my ability.

IAN GILCHRIST

My name is Ian Gilchrist. I am running for the position of Executive Vice President of the CCCA. As a very involved student, I will make a great contribution to the CCCA. I am a member of five student organizations: the International Student Organization, ORC, Extra Curricular Committee, CCCAA, and Alphal Lambda Delta, of which I am the treasurer. Because I am experienced in working with many of the organizations on campus, I will be able to get many things accomplished during my term. Important to me is the presentation of many diverse points of view on campus, and as a member of the CCCA I will work to help others have their views heard. In conclusion I would like to stress that, if elected, I would be very committed to my duties as Executive Vice President. It is for these reasons that I am asking you to vote for me, Ian Gilchrist, this Tuesday.

MARIN MILLAR

I'm Marin Millar and I'm running for Executive Vice President. Besides being involved in many groups within the college, I am also a member of the Academic Program Committee, on which I have worked on the eight block plan with students, faculty, and the Board of Trustees. Because of my familiarity with the plan, it will help me to work with CCCA on providing students with the best possible benefits. I realize the importance of the funding of the various interest groups, and their sponsorship of a variety of speakers and programs, which benefit us by exposing us to different views, which could not happen without the financing of the CCCA. I am familiar with the student-faculty committees, a large part of CCCA responsibilities, and am well aware of the time commitment. One of my goals is more publicity of CCCA actions, in order that students become more aware and involved in the decisions of the college. Vote confidently that I will devote the necessary time and energy to this office.

MICHAEL D. TREVITHICK

How many students on this campus know what CCCA stands for? How many of those students know the number of people who serve in our student government? I think the number of people who can give correct answers to both questions is fairly small. The next question to be asked is, "So what does that mean?" I believe that this lack of knowledge about CCCA is an indication of a serious problem.

The CCCA is intended to serve as an integral part of campus government which also consists of faculty-student committees and the college administration. Members of the organization are supposed to act as representatives and leaders of the student body. I believe the current CCCA has fallen short in its performance of both tasks.

CCCA is viewed by a large number of students as an ineffective organization which does not serve a very important and useful function at Colorado College. There are many reasons for this view. Not least among those reasons is the almost complete lack of effective publicity for the CCCA. A good example of this problem is the apparent lack of interest in these elections.

I consider myself to be a very involved student. I have served on the ... Program Committee and The E... Committee during this past se... addition, I have appeared be... student body and the Board of T... behalf of the eight block propo... does not mean that I am some... despised for supporting a plan... many students oppose. Instead, ... am the type of individual who is ... take risks in order to bring change... believe would be beneficial for th...

The CCCA needs some fund... improvement in its job perfor... believe the first task of the ne... must be developing an effective ... relationship with the student ... general and with the facul... revitalization of the grassroots ... can ensure an effective perfor... other student government fun... want the students of CC to know ... willing to work hard in order to ... CCCA fulfill its duty as the orga... which is intended to repres... interests of students in the develo... a successful campus community.

Candidates for Me... at Large

ALLISON ANDERSO...

PHOTO NOT AVAIL...

I am running for a Member... position on CCCA because as a ... realized I don't have any idea ... money is spent at Colorado Colle... CCCA is an extremely importan... our school, but sadly most peo... even have a clue as to what th... stand for! If elected, my main obje... establish a publicity campaign ... the student body of CCCA activit... vote on Tuesday for Allison And...

ERIC S. BOLTZ

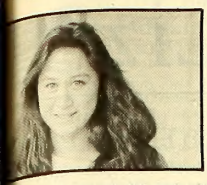
Although well aware of the ... among Colorado College student... "their money" spent on "wor... things like themselves, I think this ... sucks. The CCCA has the financial ... to better the lives of needy indiv... this and other communities and ... money to a truly good use. Th... commitment as a candidate for ... and as a concerned student. Simply ... want to see the students of C... College put their money where ... "liberal" mouths are. - Ire.

IAN CALKINS

I am running for a Member ... position because I'd like to get ... and give more input into student ... feel I could represent the views ... students and give them the attenti... require. I have had previous experi... Student Council and wish to furt... interest and understanding of ... government. I'm a practical yet ... thinker and an ambitious worker.

CCCA: SPECIAL ELECTION SECTION

KIM CROZIER



...never I sat around the house not ...anything my grandfather would say: ...maka'u i ka hana, maka'u i ka moloa." ...h means "Don't fear work, fear ...s." In other words he meant get up ...n something.

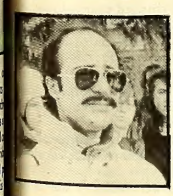
...though I'm far from home, my ...a's words still ring in my ear. CCCA ...ring this opportunity to be involved ...lieving this goal. This year CCCA ...ored events proposed by the East-...house and other groups that I am ...ved with such as the Rainbow Jam ...mittee, ACM-in-Asia programs, and ...VU-Polynesian dancers.

...running for CCCA member-at-large, ...to take this opportunity to work for ...dents. On December 16, vote Kim ...r.

DIRK FERTIG DYKES

...name is Dirk Fertig Dykes and I'm ...g for Member at Large. I'm running ...ice because my father has always ...d me to hold a leadership position. ...ly, I am running just because I want ...e an effect on my colleagues and ...environment. I am an open-minded ...and listen to others' views without ...dogmatic (even if I disagree with ...erson).

JORGE HINOJOSA

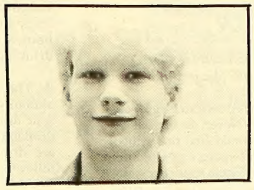


...s a returning student to the Colorado ...e after a six year leave to study, work ...ve in latin America, believe that I can ...valuable source of knowledge and ...erience to the CC community. Colorado ...ge, from 1978 to 1980, offered me a ...strong and diverse education which ...oubtedly has helped me over the years. ...ll strive to maintain this level of ...ence and diversity on the CC campus.

SETH KING

...Seth King. I have been a member of ...nt government for seven years, and have held the offices of Student Body: President, Vice President, and Treasurer. Therefore, I'm familiar with the procedures and functions of a student government; I have the experience necessary to be an effective CCCA member. If elected, I will work with the administration and the other organizations at Colorado College to continue the growth and progress of the college. I would appreciate your vote on Tuesday, December 16th. Thank you.

PETER D. MAURELLI



As an active student at CC, I feel that I have an understanding of the interests and attitudes of the CC community. Because I have participated in student governments in the past, I will be able to act effectively as a liaison between the students and the faculty, an important part of any school. Also as a resident of Colorado SpringsI would like to encourage the expansion of campus activities to include the community around us. I hope that there are at least a dozen things a block that catch students interests enough to motivate them into participation. The block plan allows all of us the time to broaden our horizons and to focus our interests, I would like to help all of us take advantage of that part of our college experience. Thank you for your support.

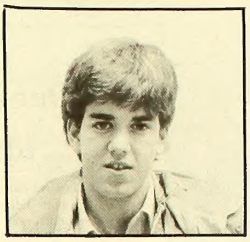
SINDI MEDAR-GOULD

I am running for CCCA member-at-large because it will afford me the chance to acquaint myself with the process of student government. As a member of the campus community it behooves me, as it should every student, to interest myself in the workings of that community. I consider this not only an opportunity to contribute, but also an opportunity to learn.

TIMOTHY I. METZ "SCHLUBB"

I am running for CCCA because I wish to help create a stronger link between the Colorado College student body and the administration. I feel that it is very important for us, as students, to be able to readily express our opinions on issues, such as the Eight Block year, which involve the administration, but will also affect us directly. Involvement is the key to achieving our goals as students while we are here at CC. I know that I can, and will, carry out this task with enthusiasm and integrity. Though my name may not be serious, my campaign is.

MARK JAMES PARADISE



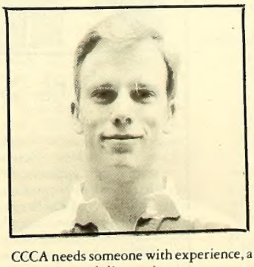
I have two main reasons for running for CCCA Member at Large: the first, as the posters say, is my interest in how our money is spent; the second is I truly believe I have something to add to the committee. In high school I served on my student government and this year as house manager for the Beta Theta Pi Fraternity I have become accustomed to working with the administration at Colorado College on a regular basis. If we are to have a successful year with accurate representation in CCCA, there must be a good voter turnout. But more importantly, I urge everyone voting to please do some research by looking into the candidates and make this more than a popularity contest. Thanks.

ANN SMITH

I believe that a Member at Large position in CCCA will allow me to reflect the opinions of the student body concerning the allocation of CCCA funds. This money is your money. Therefore, I will work diligently and enthusiastically to serve your monetary needs and wants. In addition to financial issues, my involvement in different activities on campus will allow me to familiarize myself with the desires of the student body about many of the other issues that will come before CCCA. Thus, my knowledge of student interests and my dedication to the job make me an extremely qualified candidate for student representative.

Please vote on Tuesday, December 16. A vote for me is a vote for you.

JAMES J. SNELL



CCCA needs someone with experience, a strong voice and diverse interests.

I am James J. Snell and I feel I am a person who can contribute these things if elected CCCA Member at Large. My reasons for running are many, among which are a desire to make positive changes at CC and to become involved in school happenings which affect us all.

I believe that I have the ability to deal with the pertinent issues at CC and to help to properly allocate student funds. A vote for James J. Snell would be a vote for Colorado College.

MIKE UKROPINA

My name is Mike Ukropina and I'd like to declare my candidacy for a Member at Large position on the CCCA. This campus association is important to me in various aspects. It is one of the only avenues for students to make a meaningful impact on campus affairs. The areas to which the CCCA allocates funds to a great extent effects the Colorado College experience. I would like to increase the CCCA's visability in sponsoring worthwhile campus organizations and activities and further develop a working relationship with our faculty through student-faculty committees. With these ideas in mind, I declare my candidacy for an At Large position on the CCCA.

RICHARD WALKER

PHOTO NOT AVAILABLE

I am one of many candidates running for Member at Large. What separates me from many of the other candidates is my dedication and consistency and my earnest concern for student issues. My goal is first, to enlighten students about the CCCA and its functions. Thereby allowing them the opportunity for input into the decision making of the CCCA. I would bring a new and fresh voice into a council that has lacked diversity. I am an individual, who wants to contribute honestly and fairly for the greater good of the CC community as a whole. My background as student senator and committee chair in high school; in addition to being parliamentarian for the youth department of the California Conference of the AME Church are just pluses. It's your choice and freedom to vote on Dec. 16. Vote for Order and Progress.

Vote on Tuesday
at

Bemis 11:30-12:30
4:40-5:30 p.m.

Taylor 11:30-1:00
5:00-7:00 p.m.

Mathias, Loomis,
Slocum
7:008:00 p.m.

Blair Sanford is looking for a date to the Theta Formal. Series Inquiries Only. 634-0494

Parting Remarks

At the beginning of this year we the Catalyst staff established numerous modifications and additions with one principal goal in mind: That the Catalyst have something for everyone. We believe we have been successful in achieving that goal. We walk away from the Catalyst neither relieved from a grueling experience nor in want of more time. Instead we are satisfied.

We couldn't have done it without the help of our faithful staff. In fact we are so greatful that if we had the money in the budget, we'd buy them all presents:

For Opinions editor Liz Cheney who has given the campus a look at the other end of the political spectrum, a life-size autographed portrait of the first family.

For News editors Dave Fitzgerald and Ted Craig, a charge account at Uptown and a working knowledge of the campus alcohol policy.

Features editors Pat Chisholm and Katie "lame dudette" Dalsemer probably the most incogrious editing duo, came through consistently with a strong section. To Pat we would like to impart the blessing, may your exacto blade always be as sharp as your mind. We would also like to buy Pat his dream pizza of anchovies, shrimp, and jolly you know whats. To Katie we would like to give the gift of mathematics, perception of space, and a clue.

To business manager Jean Boyer, we would like to give a pronouncable name and on in the P column.

Arts editors Eric Breitbard and Susan Griak have put life into a once comatose section. To Eric we give afternoon classes all next semester so that he may spend his mornings at Murph's. For Susan whose back page artistic ability has put those of us stick figure artists in awe, her own stipend check.

Sports editors Kathy Mahoney and Alec Rekow have added some innovations to this year's section including The Armadillo and front page sports articles. To Kathy we give some antibodies and an unending supply of mocha shakes. To Alec, next semester's co-editor, we give our best wishes for next semester's paper and an all vegetarian pizza.

To award winning Photo editor, John Katsanis, we give a campus parking pass.

We give German Apple Pancakes at Village Inn at 2 o'clock in the morning to Anne Manhart our Layout editor.

To Linda, our indispensable typesetter, we give Thursday evenings off next semester, and a typesetting machine that doesn't explode.

To Mike Fraterelli our Copy editor and next semester's other editor, we wish the best of luck next semester. We also want to give him a haircut and a shave.

To Editor Blair, David "Gutz" Klein gives his unfinished mocha shakes and the phone number of a dating service that says they can help anyone.

To Editor David, Blair "B-Dog" Sanford gives a comb, hot water and platform shoes.

We'd like to leave you with best wishes and some food for thought. To paraphrase Descarte: "We hope that posterity judges us kindly, not only as to those things which we have explained, but also to those we have purposely omitted so as to leave to others the pleasure of discovery."

—Blair Sanford, David Klein, Editors

CATALYST

Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado

DAVID KLEIN
BLAIR SANFORD
Editors

LIZ CHENEY, Opinions Editor
TED CRAIG & DAVID FITZGERALD, News Editors
PATRICK CHISHOLM & KATIE DALSEMER, Features Editors
KATHY MAHONEY & ALEC REKOW, Sports Editors
ERIC BREITBARD, Arts Editor
SUSAN GRIAK, Associate Arts Editor

•

JOHN KATSANIS, Photography Editor
MIKE FRATERELLI, Copy Editor
ANNE MANHART, Layout Editor

•

JEAN BOYER
Business Manager

LINDA SHIREMAN, Typesetter
LINDA IMHOFF, Typesetter

The Catalyst logo by JANE PATTERSON

The Catalyst is published by Cutler Publications, Inc., Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado 80903. Phone (303) 473-2233 extension 675. The Catalyst is printed tri-monthly from September to May, except during holiday periods.

Cutler Publications, Inc. does not discriminate on the basis of race, color, age, religion, sex, national origin, or physical handicap in its education programs, activities or employment policies in accordance with federal, state and local laws.

Editorials appearing in the Catalyst are the opinions of the designated author and not necessarily those of any other Catalyst staff member.

The Catalyst encourages the letters to the editor. Letters should be no more than 400 words in length and be typed or neatly printed. Address letters to the Catalyst, Rastall Center, Colorado College, Colorado Springs, 80905. Unsigned letters will not be printed.

A work of considerable length may be submitted as a guest commentary. Persons interested in submitting commentary should contact the Catalyst at 632-4099 or 473-2233 ext. 675.

The Catalyst reserves the right to edit or cut letters to the editor and guest commentaries.

Letters to Liz

Our American Identity

In this, the final issue of The Catalyst for which I will serve as Opinions Editor, I would like to make a few closing comments.

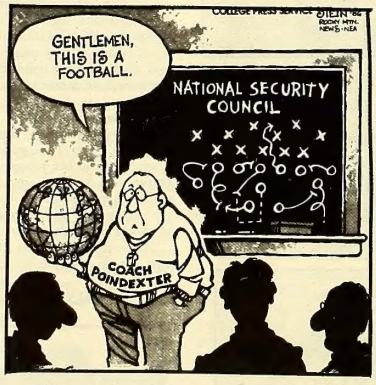
To those of you offended by the American Flag logo—please forgive my insensitivity. Never, in my wildest dreams, did I suppose readers would find this symbol "offensive." Many symbols are offensive, a swastika, for example, or a hammer and sickle. These insult our status as human beings because, among other more horrible things, they represent a total disregard for individual freedoms. One of the most important of these is the freedom to say or write whatever we choose.

The American Flag at the top of this page does not represent my conservatism, Ronald Reagan, or the Republican party. Instead, it stands for the fact that there is a Catalyst, and that anyone can voice any opinion and have it printed in this paper. The idea of freedom of expression is one that should be central to our understanding of ourselves as Americans. A Frenchman, Voltaire, perhaps put it best when he said, "I disapprove of what you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it."

I would also like to thank everyone who exercised one of their basic American rights and contributed to this section this semester. The Catalyst provides an invaluable forum for us to sharpen our writing skills and test the waters of editorial expression. Everybody should take advantage of this at some point during their time at CC.

The Catalyst should never be a mundane expression of views from one end of the political spectrum. It should continue, as it has this semester, to provide both balance and variety. Variety, after all, is more than the "spice of life." It is one of the keys to our liberal arts education

—Liz Cheney, Opinions Editor



Skiers Say Thanks

Dear Editor:

Alec Rekow's "Origins of a Ski Industry" was excellent and the tributes to the 10th Mountain Division were greatly appreciated. To the best of my knowledge, there were only two Colorado College graduates in the 10th. One was Pat Fitzgerald, a good baseball pitcher in 1940, the other a man from Littleton, whose name escapes my memory. Many of us moved to Colorado after WWII and there must be many members who became and are now parents of alumni. Our Rocky Mountain Chapter now has 300 Colorado members.

Again, thanks for reviving memories of this unique fighting group which did so much to buid the ski industry in Colorado and which will be honored on January 8th, 1987 during the ceremonies at the 40th anniversary of Aspen.

Sincerely yours,
Bill Boddington, Chairman
Tenth Mt. Division Foundation Inc.

Do You Have a Proble

Q: I find the need for a couple of beers every and sometimes miss class due to intoxicatio hangover. Also, every evening I sit down study in my room and drink Jack Daniele homework, or the bottle, is finished. Do drinking problem?

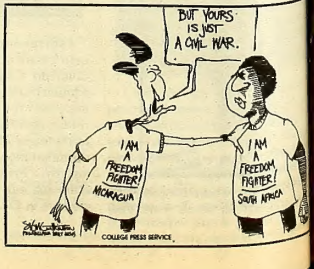
A: The fact that you are concerned about the alcohol you consume and the bahavior associ your drinking habits is a good indication of drinking problem. Anyone who wonders whe are drinking too much should ask themse following questions:

1. Do you lose time from school due to d
2. Do you drink because you are shy w people?
3. Do you drink to build up your self conf
4. Do you require a drink in the morning
5. Do you drink alone?
6. Is drinking affecting your reputation—o care?
7. Do you drink to escape from school worries?
8. Do you feel guilty or "bummed ou drinking?
9. Does it bother you if someone says that m drink too much?
10. Do things in general go better when yo
11. Do you get into financial troubles fro liquor?
12. Do you feel a sense of power when you
13. Have you lost friends since you started d
14. Do your friends drink LESS than you d
15. Do you drink until the bottle is empty?
16. Have you ever had a complete loss of me to drinking?
17. Have you ever been stopped by police fo driving?
18. Do you "turn off" or reject any stu programs about drinking? (For example, did you any of Alcohol Awareness Week on campus?)
19. Do you crave a drink at a definite time
20. Do you get the inner shakes unless you drinking?
21. Has drinking made you irritable?
22. Does drinking make you careless of the w others?
23. Has drinking changed your personality?
24. Has drinking caused you bodily complai
25. Does drinking cause you to have diffic sleeping?
26. Has drinking made you more impulsive?
27. Do you have less self-control since drink
28. Have your initiative or ambition decrease drinking?
29. Has your sexual potency suffered since dr
30. Do you THINK you have a problem with

• One "YES" answer indicates the danger problem with drinking.
• Two "YES" answers shows a high probabi problem drinking.
• Three answers of "YES" to any of the qu above indicates that one is clearly a problem dr

How many questions did you say "YES" to?

Please submit your questions about alcohol and the* Catalyst *box at the student center. All questi be treated confidentially.



Radicals, Change and Radical Change

BY COREY ABEL

The twentieth century has been an age of exceptionally rapid change, most evident in economic and technological growth and increasing social complexity. Still, though, no change occurs "overnight." Change occurs slowly, according to contingencies beyond our control, in addition to our voluntary efforts at change. It is the disposition of the conservative to gracefully accept this reality, and not to be frustrated by the inability of society to proceed in a manner in which it is impossible for it to proceed. This frustration is one of the sources of the antagonism and conflict mentality which is deeply imbedded in the views of radicals (often referred to as liberals in todays political jargon) wishing to redesign society according to a "rational plan." It is also the source of a misunderstanding of conservatism and the "status quo." The frustration is that of people desirous, but incapable, of escaping tradition.

The attitude of the "political perfectionist," or rationalist, is that of the ideologue, who seeks to impose a rational order on society. Because it is supposedly formed on absolute principles of reason, removed from the "chains" of tradition, it is considered to be a necessarily compelling social and political end. Because of this tabula rasa approach, the rationalist "...does not recognize change unless it is a self-consciously induced change, and consequently...falls easily into the error of identifying the customary and the traditional with the changeless" (M. Oakeshott, "Rationalism in Politics"). In the place of tradition the rationalist attempts to assert an "ideal," and typically pursues it in monomaniacal fashion. When society fails to respond to the rationalists' every beck and call and the liberal fails to accept the reality of the nature of change the response is often to discover and blame the presumed impediments to reformist success. The obstacles to change, often defined by a generalized categorical identity, are associated with the supposedly changeless status quo. Both the group(s) and the "existing social and political order of things" over which they presumably rule, are deemed deserving of overthrow, so as to clean up the "muck" of tradition.

In the way of justifying radical demands for change various "ruling classes" (whites, the rich, the church, males, etc) are indicted for their historical complicity in the "system." While it may be accurate to describe the position and power of such groups, it is a grave misunderstanding of the nature of historical change and tradition to indict them, or the tradition which produced them, merely on account of their position in the society. An indictment of the "ruling classes" also lacks cogency when it forgets that the existing order of things reflects more than the voluntaristic choices and actions of individuals or groups. To blame such groups for the ills of society is to imply that they alone specifically and intentionally determined the structure of society and did it through the unmediated excercise of subjective will. Of course it is not surprising that the rationalist makes the charge, since this is precisely what they believe is possible. Also, it is fallacious to condemn a tradition because of the fact that previous participants in a given culture failed in their time to live up to the dictates of the presently accepted values of socio-political life.

That George Washington kept slaves does not undermine the value and legitimacy of the American system, since our understanding of the principles upon which this society is based is changing, and has changed. This is not to suggest the legitimacy of his keeping slaves, I merely wish to point out that the ideas which guide and drive any culture are inherited, yet not static. Further, I do not believe that history has a moral end, to which we either willfully or inevitably progress. So, to condemn the past, or to condemn present segments of society for oppressiveness on account of their complicity in the tradition which has delivered us here is to assert that one's present position, due to its occuring at a later date is somehow closer to the truth (it also implies that one knows the truth, having constructed a "rational social paradigm"). Additionally, it is absurd to so blame and indict the past. Since the ideas that we have are derived out of our tradition, to insist that the past was somehow 'wrong' and that the "new direction" is 'right', is to imagine oneself to have escaped the tradition and set out to found "society anew," when in fact one has merely extended and modified (i.e. continued), the already existing culture.

To condemn the past is unnecessary from the standpoint of changing the current conditions in society. It is perfectly coherent to desire change without placing moral blame on the "system" and its past. To be conservative is to accept with humility the fact and the slowness of change, to have a deep and sincere appreciation of one's inescapable role in the historicistic continuity of one's culture, and to be able to live comfortably and constructively within its boundaries.

P.S. 101
"AN IDEA DRILL, ACTUALLY... ANY TIME AN IDEA BREAKS OUT IN A TEXTBOOK, THE ALARM RINGS AND THE CHILDREN EXIT IMMEDIATELY IN SINGLE FILE AND WAIT 50 YARDS FROM THE BUILDING UNTIL THE "ALL CLEAR" SOUNDS..."

The Arrogance of Liberal Creationism

BY INGER THOMSEN

I would like to thank Victor Greto for an eloquent and thoughtful rebuttal to my article in the Catalyst, volume 20, no. 8. However his article demonstrated a widespread confusion about the nature of the difference between liberalism and conservatism.

The confusion begins when Greto calls Conservatives "defenders of the status quo" and relates this to a middle-class numbness to social realities. His connection demonstrates a confusion about the nature of the status quo, the nature of change, and the difference between understanding and action.

It is true that Conservatives are defenders of the status quo, but this status quo is not static. We are constantly in a state of development based upon events within the framework of our tradition. The liberal doesn't recognize that the human condition is constantly evolving and thereby confuses the ongoing nature of change with a lack of change. In defending the status quo, Conservatives defend what they see as a natural process rather than a stagnant state of affairs. Conservatives recognize this more invisible, evolving form of change and accept it, realizing that we have most to gain from undertstanding it and not trying to escape from it. The liberal only recognizes change that is visibly "created" by humanity (resulting in the belief of the possibility of "revolution" in everything from soap to car design to political affairs). It is ironic that the liberal only recognizes the "creation" and not the "evolution" of change.

A further misunderstanding occurs with the notion that if one cares about a problem, one acts to alleviate it, and conversely, that inaction implies apathy, or worse. Like many liberal ideas, this notion is so deeply imbedded in many of our minds that it may seem surprising to question it. But the gap between understanding and action is a great one. Understanding the flaws of society only leads to action if one believes that actions will help the situation. Conservatives by definition feel that in our limited knowledge of the effects of our actions, they are as likely to harm as to help, the social/political problems we face, and since there is constant change, a degree of detachment is advisable. However, the Conservative may be to blame if the feeling of inability to alter our traditions is extended to a blindness to injustice, just as the liberal is at fault for assuming that the Conservative does not care.

Conservatives don't just sit back and let the world pass by. We all have to take responsibility for our own actions and assume control over many aspects of our lives. The medieval conflict between Providence and Fate reappears here as a conflict between the evolving nature of history and Free Will. Some degree of Free Will is necessary for a code of ethics. St. Augustine found the answer in accepting both the concepts of Providence and Free Will. Perhaps this would be the best middle road for Conservatives and Liberals as well.

In order to achieve a healthy understanding of the relationship between action and change, liberals would have to give up their buffet-style adherence to tradition — the feeling that they can pick and choose which elements of their past that they accept. The issue, then, is not one of compassion or apathy, but one of arrogance or humility. compassion can be expressed in other ways than action. The arrogance lies in thinking that we know enough to consciously alter the course of history with our actions. Humility would lead to a certain amount of acceptance of a course of events (dictated by the past) over which we may have but little control. Let us learn from Socrates and realize that, despite the Scientific Enlightenment of the 18th century, we really know very little after all.

Reagan Misses the Point

BY ERIC JOHNSON

In recent energy policy decisions, the Reagan Administration has again shown its stupidity and lack of concern for the environment. The President recently vetoed legislation that would establish minimum efficiency standards for home appliances. If it had become law, the U.S. would have conserved more than one billion barrels of oil in the next fifteen years. The bill had wide support in Congress, and was even endorsed by some appliance manufacturers. As if to accommodate the waste that Reagan's veto guarantees, the Department of the Interior decided on November 24 to recommend oil and gas development on the coastal plain of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge in Alaska.

The Arctic National Wildlife Refuge is one of the showpieces of the National Wildlife Refuge system. At about 30,000 square miles (19 million acres), the ANWR is a huge preserve. And, because of its remote location on the Arctic Ocean, the ANWR ecosystem is almost completely undamaged by humans. Bears, wolves, moose, musk ox, and countless birds and other creatures live within the ANWR.

Caribou are an example of a species that depend on the refuge for habitat. The "Porcupine" herd of caribou, numbering more than 100,000 individuals, has as its major calving ground the area proposed for oil and gas production. The presence of industry in the ANWR would certainly alter the habits of the caribou during calving time, with unknown consequences for their patterns of living. After calving, the caribou travel hundreds of miles south for the winter. The herd's numbers and annual migration make it a major component of regional northeastern Alaska ecosystems. Oil and gas development in the ANWR can only degrade the integrity of the regional ecosystems, which are among the last areas in North America that are fully ecologically intact.

Oil and gas development in the ANWR would also result in pollution on a large scale. The nearby oil fields of Prudhoe Bay are already a major source of air pollution. Annually, collosal New York City emits only twice the amount of nitrogen oxides that Prudhoe Bay does, according to one scientist. Prudhoe Bay is also responsible for large amounts of water pollution. And, the potential for ecologically devastating oil spills is another factor which makes development dangerous, of course.

Senator Ted Stevens of Alaska claims that energy production from the ANWR is necessary as national security insurance in the event of another OPEC embargo. That, to put it bluntly, is a bunch of crap. Average estimates of exploitable reserves in the ANWR are between 3 and 4 billion barrels. This amount of energy could be easily conserved, making development unnecessary. Nations in Western Europe, with standards of living essentially equivalent to ours, consume only 60% as much energy per person as we do in the United States. Comprehensive nationwide recycling programs would save far more energy than the ANWR could ever provide the efficiency legislation that Reagan vetoed would by itself do away with the "necessity" of 25%-35% of the ANWR oil.

Unfortunately, Reagan's veto of the appliance efficiency standards bill is only one small example of Reagan decisions that have promoted the waste of energy. Another example: research funds for renewable energy sources have been slashed. Reagan demonstrated his ignorance best when he said that he wasn't in favor of conservation because it meant we'd be too hot in the summer and too cold in the winter. Conservation is much more about insulating uninsulated buildings, using public transportation, and recycling. Learning to be comfortable with less heating and air conditioning would save energy, too (put on a sweater, Mr. President), but conservation doesn't mean we have to be tortured with temperature extremes. President Reagan missed the point about conservation.

The Reagan Administration also doesn't seem to know what purpose wildlife refuges serve. They provide critical habitat for species other than Homo Sapiens, which helps to make sure that the ecosystems that allow us to live continue to function. Industrial development such as the oil and gas drilling proposed for the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge is fundamentally inconsistent with the idea of a wildlife refuge.

The Department of Interior report which recommends energy development of the ANWR is open for public comment for 60 days. Write Interior Secretary Donald Hodel and Assistant Interior Secretary for Fish and Wildlife William Horn today, and tell them what you think about the proposal to destroy one of the most important parts of America's wilderness heritage. Write a letter to each of them at Department of the Interior, Washington, D.C. 20240.

Peaceful Co-existence

BY TOM ORI AND JON-MARK PATTERSON

Note: We are feminists. We are also masculists. We believe that women and men deserve equal rights and respect. However, we have our concerns about extremism—for sexism and chauvinism can work both ways. The following is intended to make this point.

It was a crisp autumn morning. The fiery colors of the leaves symbolized our anticipation of the new school year. Sensing uneasiness in the air, we decided to register for classes early. Heck, we had grown used to almost anything after Pat Robertson and running mate Fred Grandy's surprise election victory over Al Haig (a surprise compromise choice) and Rose Bird.

While playfully bounding through the Quad, we spotted Betsy and Jenni, two women we had always managed to treat with respect. We smiled and waved, only to have them frown and turn away in disgust. Something was going on. Something was up. Something was wrong.

And then we saw it. Our beloved, ugly Armstrong hall had been renamed...[gasp!]...Gloria Steinem Hall. Suddenly, two security guards gently, and "with full respect for our personal auras" accosted us, escorted us to the west end of G.S. Hall, and deposited us outside. Sitting on the steps were two well-dressed and well-groomed men, each with his head in his hands. Upon closer inspection, we discovered that these two were our old drinking buddies Gresham Riley and Max Taylor.

"I can't believe it...I...just can't believe it," muttered Ex-President Riley despairingly—but without any sincere, deep-felt emotion.

"Hey dudes, what's wrong?" we inquired, exhibiting our innate incapacity to share emotion and sensitivity.

Max spoke in frustrated certainty: "I wish I could express the sincerity of my feelings, but the emotionally bankrupt language of our male-dominated society doesn't permit me."

As we tried to console our buddies, Laurel McLeod was escorted out of the west side of G.S. Hall with the same respect, courtesy, and consideration for personal dignity that Gresh and Max had received; she came flying through an Admissions Department window.

The four of us hurried over to where Dean McLeod had fallen.

"What happened? What's goin' on around here?" we demanded. We were still encumbered and crippled by our aggressive, unthoughtful, selfish socio-cultural behavior—instilled in us by our competitive fathers who threw us the football and taught us to slide 'spikes up' before our sixth birthdays.

Laurel stood up, brushed glass off her skirt, and spoke quietly: "Gentlemen, I am afraid that true feminism is dead; the militants have occupied Armstrong, ...er...I mean, G.S. Hall."

"What do you mean? The fiery colors of the leaves symbolize our anticipation of the new shcool year!" we cried in unison. We were only beginning to comprehend the seriousness of the situation.

"That kind of emotion and creativity comes too little and too late to make a difference now. The militants have destroyed the true women's movement and have alienated sympathetic men and women alike. It appears that the moderates—like Gresh, Max, and myself—have no productive role in the eyes of the extremists. Our administration was so happy until...well, we should never...we should have known that something was brewing when the militants burned down the fraternity houses and hung Bob Guccione, Maggie Thatcher, and Vice-President Fred "the Gopher" Grandy in effigy in front of old Armstrong hall. And to beat all, we went out of our way to protect their freedom of symbolic expression! We're caught in the middle now, and we can only watch the extremes fight it out."

As we spoke, the militants were barricading G.S. Hall and building machine gun nests on the roof. A chant began atop the hall: "Better dead than insensitive and aggressive!"

The reason for these preparations was soon apparent, for sirens were approaching. Pat Robertson's own Black Shirts and tank columns were advancing up Cascade (name unchanged) Avenue. The conflict was beginning...

...The five of us turned towards Pikes Peak, the unchanging monument to liberal arts, moderation, and critical learning. Perhaps it would someday tower over a better world, one risen like a phoenix from the ashes of the one crumbling around us.

Note: This is the beginning of a semi-regular series of columns devoted to the satirical examination of issues and attitudes of our times. New columns will follow as often as the two of us can agree on something.

Twas the Night...

BY NORM LEAHY

Twas the night before Christmas
And all through the shanties
Not a liberal was stirring
Not even their aunties

The posters were hung
Through the trees with care
In the hope that some townie
Would stop and stare

The granolas were nestled
All snug in their beds
While visions of divestment
Danced in their heads

Fluffy in her tie-die
And I in my thongs
Had just settled down
After doing some bongs

When out in the quad
There arose such a clatter
I crawled from my bag
To see what was the matter

It crashed through a window
And spilled all the trash
It broke down a wall
And left a big gash

When what to my bloodshot
Eyes would appear
But a jolly old vandal
And eight tiny reindeer

On Dasher on Dancer
On Prancer and Vixen

On Comet on Cupid
On Donner and Blitzen

And into the night
He fled with glee
A twinkle in his eye
He'd gotten off scot free.

And I heard him say
As he faded from sight
Your symbols are hollow
And empty as the night

Death to Wayne

BY MARK THESING

Death to Wayne D. Rudner and his followers.

Mr. Nice Guy feels it necessary to inform the Colorado College Community of the subversive intention of the seemingly benign and humorous Wayne D. Rudner.

Wayne D. is attempting to be a guest on the very influential "Late Night" with David Letterman. Trust me, this is just the beginning of a career which if not checked now, could ultimately lead to the demise of the everything that is good.

Those of us that are friends of Wayne are especially scared because we know of his infinite ambition. His quest for money, power, and fame is boundless.

Last year Wayne started a 24 hour condom delivery service that brought much satisfaction to the College community. He also rented out his room to couples wishing to have private sex. Last year Wayne Inc. Sex Division alone made profits that put the bull market of the early 80's to shame.

Wayne calls himself and is entitling his autobiographical journal to fame, "Wayne D. Rudner; Voice of the Future." The journal will be published early next year and will also be translated and published in Germany and will be entitled "Mein Kempf."

The most frightening element of Wayne's campaign is that he professes to have all the answers. This is especially scary in this country that mindlessly accepts anything that appears on the T.V. screen. Please help Mr. Nice Guy curtail the actions of Wayne D. Rudner before it is too late.

This Is Your Life

BY THE BROOKS BROTHERS

Pack up your bags kids! We're going on vacation! N not to the land of egg-nog and drunken office par we're going to a unique spot where Robin Leach a us for a dream tour, where we'll get a peek at glamorama of the liberal arts, on Lifestyles of the and Infamous.

Our limo awaits us, and our first stop is the fabul restaurant, The Hub, which features an enchant ambience of plastic plants and the scenic view th many poets have written about. From any table i place, you can garner panaramic views of both Pi Peak as well as our next stop—the stupendous sor row.

These captivating abodes are equipped with all o latest in modern conveniences, for example, the D Gammas are having a body wrap salon installed a speak.

Our sweep across campus continues, as we br through the legendary fraternity quad, where flu freshmen and anxious brothers while away their d listening to the latest catchy disco tunes. A visit to quad would hardly be complete without a stop by the house. This cinder-block palace of ectasy is the pr home to such amenities as a broken tap system sporadic sound system and perhaps is most famou being the true birthplace of the Stacey Q fan club.

All this sightseeing has given us quite heal appetites, so we're off to SAGA—caterer to the stars special guest has joined us for lunch, that illustri Dean of Students Laurel McLeod. Ohh la la!! You translate for me any day mon cheri! (Our lifest experts report that Dean McLeod has a Bachel degree in French, which should come in handy in a dining establishment like SAGA.)

The international tigress of love, SAGA Joanne awa our arrival anxiously:

Joanne: Robin, I've been expecting you.

Robin: What culinary yummies are on the m today?

Joanne: Well Robin, today's entree' is Turkey Da

Robin: Laurel, how would you say that in Fren

Laurel: It's pronounced, Turkey Divan, just l Joanne said.

Robin: C'est la vie, you don't need a degree in Fr to figure that one out!!! How is this prepared Joan Joanne: Well, first we age a turkey. For example bird in front of us has been around since Thanksgi Then, we cut it in thin fillets, and wrap the fines equally aged vegetables.

Robin: It looks ambrosial Joanne, but alas I can't to taste it. We must bid adieu to this cuisine, for a a awaits us in that social hotspot, the second floor of T Library.

This place is the Copacabana of Colorado College, b economics and passion are always the fashion. J Collins and Linda Evans are sure to arrive, posing frolicsome freshmen, in their new outfits from The G (Our lifestyles experts tell us that both of those out cost nearly $20 and come in four, count 'em, four mix a match colors.)

Although Ann Taylor bags are a perennial favo fashion accessory, an absolute wardrobe staple is a hi knit Peruvian sweater, with a matching hand-knit p tag to boot. (Our lifestyles experts report that nearly of these sweaters have never been washed since remo from the sheep.) My oh my, those sweaters certa have an air about them!!!

After a hard night of "studying," it's time to p Just our luck, there is a soiree at the Kappa Sigma ho Kappa Sigma is the only place in town where you hold a bible in one hand and a brew in the other. W says you can't have your cake and eat it too?

"This party is lame," is a popular expression in th parts and we've heard it plenty tonight. If we're going achieve any sort of buzz tonight, we'll have to elsewhere. What better place than Murphy's Tavern Mixed Drinks (affectionately known as Murph's).

Murph's, with a clientele rivaling that of Maxim's proletariat pit of pleasure that comes complete wi circular bar, colorful booths, and is known to attract creme de la creme of the areas' high society. I convers briefly, with Tom the proprietor on concocting a pe prairie fire, a popular local libation:

Robin: Although the recipe is undoubtedly a se could you briefly run down the highlights?

Tom: Well, we start with a shot glass, add a dro tabasco and fill the glass to the top with the cheap tequila I can possibly find. How's that for a recipe

Robin: That's terrific Tom.

That just about does it for another episode Lifestyles of the Rich and Infamous. As we depart this magical land, we bid you champagne wishes caviar dreams.

But is it legal? CC just wants to have fun

BY KATIE DALSEMER

Besides writing letters to the Catalyst about how much we piss them off, believe it or not, people around CC find other ways to amuse themselves. Well, in the true spirit of investigative reporting and in the tradition of other mindless things I've written I'm here to tell you. People actually do the things I'll mention, and what's even more scary is that most of them are friends of mine.

Let's start off with a Colorado Springs tradition: cruising Nevada. What? You've never cruised Nevada? A different twist on this phenomenon involves cramming about ten people into a rented Ford Escort, yelling obnoxiously out the windows, and buying some of the town-folk in other cars stupid beer bottles at the car. Kids, don't try this on your own. Leave it to the experts.

But there's other fun to be had on Nevada. Have you ever ridden on the little merry-go-round in front of the nursery school down the road. Doing this in the middle of the night slightly intoxicated heightens the effect (or so I've heard).

Interesting sports are another fun thing people do outside. By now you've heard of Frisbee Golf, but how 'bout Shoe Golf? As far as I've witnessed, the concept seems the same except that shoes are kicked at selected targets: walls, mail boxes, cars on Uintah. Maybe it's not such a peculiar thing to do around CC, but people in London probably thought it was a tad strange when a friend of mine played shoe golf in one of the local parks this summer. Well, what do you expect from someone from Milwaukee. I of course don't go around doing this due to the fact that my shoes are so big and it would be deadly if one accidently hit someone.

But let's say the cold weather's got you down and you want to have fun inside. Tired of that drab dorm room? Why not decorate? Some friends have by far one of the most interesting ceilings I've ever seen. Among the many things hanging from it are a large inflatable dinosaur dressed in Saga apparel named Tito (as in Michael J's brother — "Tito get me a tissue"), a rather large pair of women's underwear, a car battery, a tea set, a weather vane (rumored to be from a faculty member's house), and a sign from a street named Bowser.

Ah yes, sign stealing: a favorite college past-time. I know some people with quite interesting collections of signs. Hmm, wonder where the old Rastall Center sign is today?

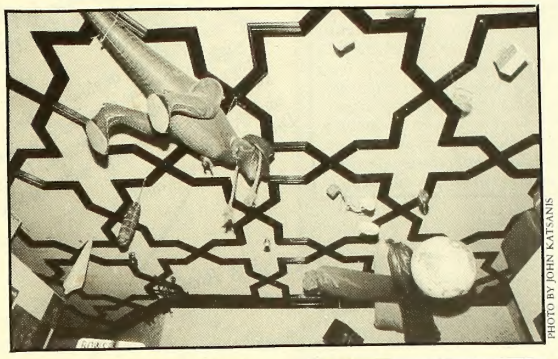

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

"Tired of that drab dorm room? Why not decorate?"

Well, I won't get into my own views on a little harmless crime. However, I did have to draw the line when one of the delinquents I was with recently wanted to take a sheep from a nativity scene. If you're going to steal something why not one of Saga's food sculptures? Hey, they're probably going to eventually throw them away. Why not help Saga out? Of course it is kind of tricky trying to sneak one past the I.D. checker. But what a perfect Christmas present it will make!

Crime isn't the only way to have an interesting time around CC. It is rumored that an RA in McGregor last year used to occasionally go through a strange ritual. He'd take an album that he hated (like Debby Boone's Greaest Hits), put the cover on his head, run down to the football field and toss the record around like a frisbee. Hey, I write it like I hear it.

And speaking of demented actions, I heard that some fraternity brothers recently got together and made bets on which of two Siamese fighting fish would be victorious when they were placed in the same tank. Excuse me? I mean, I can think of other themes to build a party around.

One of my personal favorites of late is a Yuppie party. You know where even people who usually don the tie-dye apparel dress up like young executives. I'd like to say hi to Bitsy and the rest of the gang.

So ends this edition of Lifestyles of the Crazed and Collegiate. And while I'm on the subject I'd like to say I've had a blast working with this semester's Catalyst staff. Happy holidays Lame Dudes!

CC's Holiday Wish List

Gene Gallegos—Junior—English
Vana White

Gentry Holloway—Sophomore—Biology
A pair of white lacy kid's gloves

Mark Towersap—Senior—Physics
An old pick-up truck

Michelle Fest—Senior—Anthropology
Green electric blanket

Dave Fitzgerald—Junior—Poli. Econ.
A trust fund

Lisa Cain—Sophomore—Poli. Sci.
Coloring Books

Meesta Hitz—Senior—Geology
An unlimited supply of triple cheese pizzas

Amy Hightower—Sophomore—English
An all expense paid trip to the Bahamas

Dan Hess—Sophomore—Art History
A pair of ski bindings

T. John Caldwell—Undecided—Propaganda
Revolution, Peace, and Free Markets

Ted Craig—Senior—Poli. Sci.
A new pseudonym

Susan Gereensher—Sophomore—Biology
A red 944

James Norbee—Para-prof
A beard and moustache trimming set

Libby Hendee—Freshman—Undecided
To pass my calc class

Trish Cownie—Freshman—Poss. Engl.
A new car

Danny Weiskopf—Senior—Poli. Sci.
Two front teeth

Beth Hodder—Freshman—History
A new knee/an injury free knee

John Katsanis—Senior—English
A place for Oscar to stay
PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Kelly Carney—Freshman—Art
Idaho potatoes

Steve Shaw—Senior—Bus. Econ.
Houseware "'cause you need them"

Correction

Last week's graphic of the 10th Mountain Division was not by Peter Scott. Vittorio Costarella should have been credited. The Catalyst regrets the error.

PEAK POPCORN

"POPCORN AT THE PEAK OF QUALITY"

- Pre-Popped Popcorn
  Butter, Cheese, Caramel, Cinnamon
  Guaranteed Fresh
- Bulk Popcorn (Save!)
- Decorative Tins
- Popcorn Machines, Accessories & Supplies

306 E. Arvada, Colo. Spgs., CO 80906 • 633-7677

'Tis Christmas Time Again, Fa-La
Wonderful Christmas Gifts and Cards, Fa-La
For Your Friends, Loved Ones, and Family, Fa-La
At the Fa-La-La Lotus Eater Boutique, Fa-La

Mon.-Fri. 10-6 pm Sat. 11-5 pm

THE LOTUS EATER BOUTIQUE

Downtown on Platte Between Tejon & Cascade

phone: 635-2118

Beam me up Cracko

This past week the Catalyst *staff spent long hours in the bathrooms of the three principal academic halls—Olin, Palmer and Armstrong—searching for yet unpublished prose. Our quest: Graffiti (Graf*fi*to /'gra-'fet-o/ n, pl /-(-)e/ : an inscription or drawing made on a rock or wall). In our quest we discovered poetry, profundity and profanity etched by writers all along political, socioeconomic and/or intellectual spectrums.*

In this feature presentation the Catalyst's intent is not to condone graffiti. To quote from the 7 March 1986 Catalyst staff editorial criticizing large, political messages on building walls, "What ignorance exists in the minds of those who deface property for the purpose of recognition...Pity the souls whose opinion is expressed in a medium of vulgarity." Granted, graffiti is a medium of vulgarity. Yet we must also grant that among the vulgarity there exists an element of candidness in the anonymous comment. Therefore, it is our intent to bring the more thoughtful and sometimes humorous contributions into a legitimate medium for all to contemplate.

Thelma lives

End Cultural Un

Why don't you?

Question not,
for only in the end
shall true XTC be granted.

Drugs are a form of slow suicide
People use them as a means of asserting self-control (Ironic, isn't it?). "I can Drugs are the effect of a prolem. To understand drug abuse, you have to un away a form of resistance to oppression. Deal with the oppressive problems a society.
Drugs are political after all.

Viva la 8 Block Plan

2: Are we not men?
A: We are DEva

Is there life on Uranus

Physics is fun

Dean Brooks' resignation during the Iran/Contra scandal: Coincidence or Correlation?

Kruschev lives!

F--- you commie

yes the incisive witty attack
For which CC students are famous

Beam me up Scotty.

Nixon was great!!! ('til he lost it)

My My Hey Hey

Vote Democratic — it's easier than thinking

Jesus is coming

EMAL SI ZOB

Now isn't it nice to send Saga food
back where it came from?

Drugs can be of recreation
Re-Creative

Learn physics America needs more fewer granolas

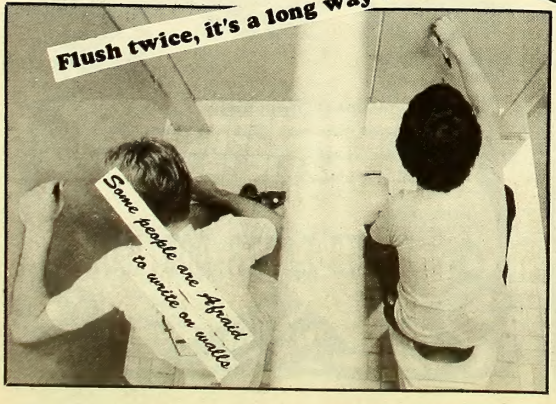
Flush twice, it's a long way to Taylor.



I have a dream

It's better to burn out than to fade away

Life sucks

Children of the Great
Who among you will

Einstein was a genius

Why are
Who ever his

D consumes 47 times its weight in reality rugs be a question, not an answer

Drugs are communistic

Jesus saves

-but Gretzky gets the rebound and scores!

is work heat ncreases entropy
h is disorder

us by studying we re increasing disorder in your brain!

Mad Chad & the screaming turds

If Reagan is pro-choice then plutonium is a vitamin destruction."

Try to take e a drug

You can't run a country
on a book of religion
Not by a heap, a limp
or a smidgin
Foolish rules of ancient date
Designed to make you feel great
As you fold, spindle
and mutilate
Those unbelievers
from a neighboring state.

There is no one structure which is universally appropriate handle drugs

Vote Republican, It's where all the good money is

Olin is a four letter word

I Love Reagan

Hey Remember, if you can't be good be careful and if you can't be careful name it after me! OK?

p speed —
f Trekkies Help!

DREAD

The white man came across the sea,
and brought us pain and misery,
He killed our tribes,
He killed our creed,
He took our game for his own need

We fought him long
We fought him well
Out on the plains we gave him hell,

Too man came
Too much for Cree
O will we never be set free

Iron Maiden — Wild Woman from Zorgon

Biko lives back in Kansas.

...If I only had a brain!
Oh but what a strain
to have a brain

and

Bio is for those who take drugs

Physics are for those who grunt and strain and can't take the pain

Van Beebs law: The amount of time taken for an exam is directly proportional to the amount of drugs taken afterwards

e to keep on dreaming

Night,
al?

Republicans?

ats better than
of a great piece of elephant?

dons just another word for nothing left to be lost

Colorado Sux
Texas Swallows

Drugs are for those who can't handle reality
Reality is for those who can't handle drugs

You're all crackers

Ground Waste: Loomis' Lost Legacy

—accidentally built over graves of insane asylum patients?

BY ERIK BROWNING

The typical male freshmen wing at Colorado College is a zoo. It features young human male specimens collected from all over the United States. The majority of them have just been weaned from their parents. This makes them fascinating objects of study.

They are naturally unsure of themselves, but like most male animals attempt to hide this by acting macho. This is done in numerous ways: 1) The study animal. "Dave, I'm going to the library, be back late." Cut to six hours later "Jeez Dave, I reckon I studied a good five hours and fifty three minutes today, I better enter that in my Studying: The Yuppie's Orgasm Diary. 2) High school sports exploits. "I once shot putted my jock strap a half a mile." 3) Drug exploits. "I scored a 1420 on the Sat while on nine hits of acid." 4) Sexual exploits. "Hey dude, I did Jane Fonda over block break. She recorded us and said I was so awesome that she is going to market it."

Take it from me, the night before your next essay exam, do not study, instead go to your nearest friendly freshmen wing for a few hours, nothing gets your creative juices flowing better. You will be able to bullshit your balls off!!!

There is your typical freshman wing and then, there is the infamous Ground Waste. Ground Waste is located deep in the bowels of Loomis Hall. Superstition has it that the wing was accidently built over the graves of deceased patients of an insane asylum. Annually, approximately 25 of the most warped freshman animals are assigned small cramped cages that the college erroneously refers to as rooms and observed for a period of nine months.

Ground Waste is traditionally an extremely close knit wing. A couple of years ago half the wing shaved their heads, an extreme example of wing solidarity. They find strength in numbers. Groups of ten or more ground wasters flocking to Saga together is commonplace.

A favorite of Ground Wasters is to go to the dining hall under the influence of a different mind altering substance each day of the week. Ground Wasters usually keep in touch throughout the rest of their college career. I believe this is due to the fact that after their nine month stint they are no longer compatible with humans brought up in normal environments.

A rumor is circulating concerning the dead underneath Ground Waste: supposedly they were all impotent. A study of the sex lives of the inhabitants of Ground Waste makes for exciting reading if you like reading pages that look like a polar bear in a snow storm. No signs of any sexual activity have been discovered in Ground Waste.

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Located deep in the bowels of Loomis Hall.

Seriously, women avoid Ground Waste like the plague. Next time you Loomis ladies are doing your laundry, instead of peering down the hall with a "What are the animals up to now" look, and then scurrying around the corner to the safe confines of the laundry room come down and say "hi." After all dogs are man's best friend, maybe Ground Wasters are womens best companions?

One year some Ground Wasters decided to place a dead fetal pig complete with all the trimmings on one of Saga's "here are the wonderful meals we have this evening" plates to see if anybody would notice. Needless to say Saga management was not pleased.

The wing inmates also enjoy antagonizing each other. A few years back a group of Dead Heads were happily shrooming at one end of the hall. The next thing they knew, a toy tank was rumbling down the hall shooting fire crackers at them — their trip rapidly took a turn for the worse.

Ground Waste has had more than its share of eccentric individuals. One guy played nothing but Bruce Springsteen. Normally someone would issue the friendly untimatum "Mellow out on that shit or your ass is grass!" Unfortunately for the majority of the wing, the Springsteen freak was the biggest guy on the wing. Adding to the misery was the fact the guy liked his Bruce loud! The wing suffered musical oppression at the hands of the Springsteen tyrant the entire year. Another Ground Waster's favorite method of relaxation was to crank Heavy Metal, smash glass shattering levels, jump in the shower and air-guitar to his hearts content. Another fellow would get incredibly baked (stoned) and take long 45 minute showers, seriously depleting the supply of hot water.

The most peculiar aspect of Ground Waste's illustrious history concerns its connection with cross country running. CC's four best cross country runners were all Ground Wasters. Could it be merely an extraordinary coincidence or did the experiences in Ground Waste give them the inner strength and resolve necessary to be successful distance runners? Unfortunately two of the four transfered to other institutions. Scott Elliot was the fourth man on the C.U. squad (seven men compose a cross country team) that placed fifth at the 1986 Div I Cross Country National Championships. He placed 57th out of the huge 200 plus runner field. Scott Wanek transfered to CSU (Div 1) for his senior year and while redshirted this season consistently beat CSU's No. 1 man. Wanek has one year of eligibility remaining and should make his presence felt at the Div 1 level. Fortunately, Scott Kang and Erik Browning are still at CC. Scott became CC's first All-American runner this season and they both shattered the school record for 5 miles at the regional meet. Scott won the race and set a course record of 24:29 while Browning placed 6th out of 110 runners with a time of 24:[illegible]. The best news is they are both Juniors.

This year's Ground Wasters are a typical lot. Their RA is a former Waster — he's about exhibiting masochistic tendencies he just couldn't get enough. The night I visited them they were playing hockey with removed floor tiles. Earlier this year they busted the water pipes in their lounge, flooded it and a few rooms with 500 gallons of water. Business as usual in the Ground Waste Zoo.

TACO JOHN'S

Happy Holidays

COUPON

Good through Dec. 19th

Get a FREE Soft Shell Taco

When you buy one at regular price

Offer Not Good With Any Other Special

per visit at TACO JOHN'S.

-Use the 20% Discount Card-

House of YAKITORI Japanese Restaurants

Every Tuesday

5 pm - 9 pm

ALL THE YAK YOU CAN ATTACK

$6.30

on the #17 dinner

*not available on to go or delivery orders

YAKITORI

Also try our Sushi Bar

DOWNTOWN ONLY

Downtown 16 E. Bijou

578-0915

M-Thurs 11 am-3 pm 5-9 pm
Fri & Sat 11 am-3 pm 5-10 pm

Yuppies, huh.

Are you sure you don't want some pizza?"

BY JULIE INGWERSEN

What do you make of Yuppies? This was story I had a hard time covering; no one seemed too interested in the subject, spare handful of student insights and a more detailed commentary by the Loomis Hall security guard, Ken. Maybe everyone's had with this phase of the Baby-Boomer generation, after the recent media blitz of books, articles, and television specials. At any rate, let's hear what sparkling, poignant, spontaneous, spur-of-the-moment social commentaries were available on the subject of the Upwardly-Mobiles.

I first encountered a group of sophomores who asked to remain anonymous. Confronted with the question of what to make of the Yuppie 'movement' (for lack of a better word), the preliminary reaction was, "Umm, I don't know. We got extra pizza, do you want a piece?" It was a slow beginning.

"My sister's one, so I can't really condemn them."

Soon, however, these people were able to warm up and give a sort of group commentary on the superficial aspects of the young professional life. One started with "I like Yuppies — I mean, a lot of them are really attractive. It's the clean-shaven, above-the-ears look. You know, they drink Perrier and play things like golf or racquetball. They're very fit, in a country-club kind of way." Others in the room at this point pitched in with some more favorite objects of these materialists, including Aerobics, Squash, Yachting, the Mercedes 190-E, BMW's, and dogs "of the sporting breeds, like spaniels and retrievers." "L.A. is swarming with 'em," commented one. Okay, so they're into a sophisticated style of leisure. Feeling good is more important than being good.

They have the money, but how did these people rise to the top of the corporate pyramid so fast? Are Yuppies compulsively competitive to a point where they could be considered scheming? The response from these sophomores was "No, they're basically trustworthy. They're generally no more back-stabbing than any other people. Are you sure you don't want some pizza?"

Freshman Jim Eubanks offered this short philosophy on the essence of the Yuppie: "If Yuppie-ness is defined as the desire for upward mobility, then anyone who tries to achieve something better for himself is a Yuppie." So then, is the word "Yuppie" just a meaningless label? Or have these so-called Coffee Achievers been with us since the dawn of Capitalism? Keith Perry, another freshman, passed over these questions and summed up his own perspective almost as quickly. "They're too successful. Kill 'em off. I don't need the competition."

One hurried student in the stairwell responded, "Well, my sister's one, so I can't really condemn them." Another had no opinion other than the term Yuppie was worthy of replacement. But as mentioned before, the most insightful comments came from Ken, the guard at Loomis. "Yuppies, huh. Well, with new types of technology . . . they've become the new class of businessmen. They've got this label that they have to deal with, but I don't think it means anything of real value.

"They all seem like they're trying to live a little bit faster than they can afford." So would you consider them materialistic? "Yes, they're a little more materialistic than the older generation before them. But then we've all had a hand in that — in the last few years, even up to the last few months, Education [as a national trend] has been geared more towards training for a specific job. When you keep teaching like that over a period of five or ten years, you get a generation with a new mentality."

What about the future of the Yuppie? Will we ever hear the end of this phenomenon? Ken says, "Every generation has a label, and every time you hang a label on people, everyone turns around and blames them with just about everything that's wrong with society. Soon this group will fade away and something new will come along." Ken's view seems to sum up the general concensus of the campus concerning Yuppies: their popularity is a passing trend. It remains to be seen what sort of idiosyncrasies will characterize the following corporate generation. I'll be holding my breath.

When The KKK Got Booted

—from the Springs, that is.

BY CHRIS ANDRESEN

Back when fraternity hazing was considered acceptable and women's literary societies were the rage on campus, the state of Colorado including Colorado Springs was being exposed to the power of the Ku Klux Klan. The 1920's saw the KKK's power grow in Colorado to a level subordinate only to Indiana. However here in Colorado Springs, the newspapers and churches defeated them.

The KKK was anti-Catholic, anti-Jewish, anti-black, anti-foreigner, and pro-American. Through subtle infiltration they gained control in several states during the 1920's, including Colorado. Denver was the seat of Colorado Klan activity. As one anonymous Denver klansman said, "this might not be as funny as it looks. There is something big starting in this country, and we've (Denver) just joined it."

Ironically, Colorado Springs' local chapter, klavern No. 11, never recruited more than a couple thousand members and never gained political control. It was the combined efforts of the (then left-wing) Gazette and Telegraph newspapers that damaged the KKK the most, causing the Springs to be one of the few cities in Colorado to defeat the Klan during this turbulent decade.

Machine guns and police were on hand because a police tip predicted the Klan planned to blow up the newspaper.

The Klan's many efforts included trying to get their candidates into public offices, but their means were rarely legal. During a 1925 election klansmen watched the poll activity and published sample ballots showing voters the "right" choices. The Gazette struck back by publishing the license numbers of the poll watchers and began a barrage of bad press against the KKK.

J. Juan Reid, author of Growing Up in Colorado Springs, relates how the biggest blow came in May of that year. In a Friday edition the Gazette announced they would publish the names and addresses of all the Klan officers and other incriminating material in the combined Gazette-Telegraph Sunday edition. According to Reid the pressroom was an armed camp that Saturday night. Machine guns and police were on hand because a police tip predicted the Klan was planning to blow up the newspaper. Nothing came of the threat.

An issue of the Gazette-Telegraph dated December 2, 1923 firmly states the newspaper's stand. The article read, "there is no room in the Pikes Peak region for the Ku Klux Klan, or for any other organization of like purpose. Organized religious and racial hatred are foreign to American thought and dangerous in their threat to individual freedom...It is fanaticism raised to high power, the more dangerous because it moves secretely and under cover of darkness."

Along with the newspapers and the churches, the Colorado Springs city government and police resisted the KKK's efforts. The Klan was even denied a parade permit. This intolerance led to the eventual demise of the organization in the Springs. After 1925 they disappeared almost entirely from the political scene, and so resumed life during the "good old days."

A Catalyst Student Survey

Last week the Catalyst surveyed CC students on several issues. 250 surveys were distributed, approx. 200 returned, and 170 tallied. They were placed in various dormitories (in the library for off-campus students) for anyone to complete. The breakdown of the surveys is as follows (figures approximate): 25% off-campus students, 25% Loomis, 22% Mathias, 10% Bemis, 10% McGregor, and 10% Kappa Sigma House. (Bemis is omitted in the individual results due to doubt whether every respondent was a Bemis resident.) The following percentages are rounded to the nearest whole-number.

Do you approve of Ronald Reagan as president? -Now?

	Yes	No	Undecided
Total	30%	64%	6%
Loomis	23%	73%	3%
Mathias	50%	45%	5%
MacGregor	13%	80%	7%
Kappa Sigma	77%	23%	0%
Off-campus students	19%	73%	8%

-Before Iran scandal?

	Yes	No	Undecided
Total	33%	58%	9%
Loomis	28%	60%	13%
Mathias	51%	47%	5%
MacGregor	14%	79%	7%
Kappa Sigma	79%	14%	7%
Off-campus	20%	73%	8%

Do you think there will be a nuclear war in your lifetime?

	Yes	No	Undecided
Total	8%	40%	52%
Loomis	5%	49%	46%
Mathias	5%	68%	27%
MacGregor	0%	69%	31%
Kappa Sigma	0%	39%	61%
Off-campus	14%	51%	35%

Do you ever think about third world problems?

	Much	Some	Rarely
Total	37%	52%	10%
Loomis	58%	30%	13%
Mathias	20%	63%	17%
MacGregor	50%	31%	19%
Kappa Sigma	23%	69%	8%
Off-campus	58%	39%	4%

Do you generally favor Democrats or Republicans?

	Dem.	Rep.	Neither
Total	57%	29%	16%
Loomis	55%	20%	25%
Mathias	46%	44%	10%
MacGregor	60%	7%	33%
Kappa Sigma	8%	77%	15%
Off-campus	72%	16%	12%

Do your parents generally favor Democrats or Republicans?

	Dem.	Rep.	Neither
Total	48%	39%	14%
Loomis	41%	39%	21%
Mathias	41%	46%	14%
MacGregor	47%	47%	7%
Kappa Sigma	18%	64%	18%
Off-campus	61%	29%	10%

Are you religious (in the traditional sense)?

	Very	Some	No
Total	7%	36%	57%
Loomis	3%	35%	63%
Mathias	21%	36%	39%
MacGregor	6%	25%	69%
Kappa Sigma	31%	39%	30%
Off-Campus	9%	32%	59%

Is financial success important to you?

	Very	Some	No
Total	24%	59%	17%
Loomis	25%	55%	20%
Mathias	30%	51%	17%
MacGregor	31%	56%	13%
Kappa Sigma	39%	64%	8%
Off-campus	17%	72%	11%

Are you for CC divestment in companies with South African ties?

	Yes	No	Undecided
Total	54%	30%	18%
Loomis	50%	35%	15%
Mathias	20%	57%	24%
MacGregor	50%	38%	15%
Kappa Sigma	0%	85%	15%
Off-campus	79%	14%	8%

Do you favor the 8-block plan?

	Yes	No	Undecided
Total	25%	57%	18%
Loomis	38%	45%	18%
Mathias	20%	68%	12%
MacGregor	20%	73%	7%
Kappa Sigma	15%	77%	8%
Off-campus	25%	53%	22%

With Imagination leading, Hedges Follows Through

BY BRYAN BREDEHOEFT

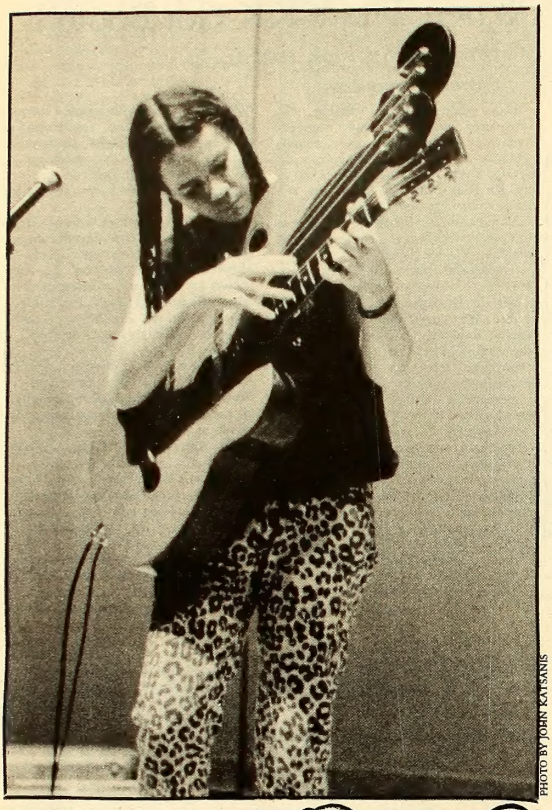

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

With braids flying through the air, a foot stamping on the stage, and a bright ringing sound of harmonics filling Packard hall came unique guitarist, Michael Hedges. Last Sunday evening he gave a prime performance and gave students feelings of tension and energy in his very active show. Illustrating such powerful and unique talent, Michael gave a mixed vocal and acoustical show in which he demonstrated many unusual techniques. "He plays his guitar as though it is an appendage." Hand over hand, hammer-ons, and a slapping technique (inspired by John Martyn) made the show very visual. Most of his songs were played on a custom made steel stringed Martin six-string, but new to his CC show was a 1920's 11-string Dyers vintage harp-guitar, known to followers as his Texan guitar. Highlights of the first set included Watching My Life Go By, (title track to his last album), Funky Avacado, and Streamlined Man. But the largest crowd response occurred during Silent Anticipations in which the mere speed incorporated with slapping, sliding, and harmonics was enough to confuse anyone. The few mistakes that were made were well hidden. And it is only Hedges, with his keen imagination and innovation that can create such unique music.

The second set put the icing on the cake. Michael opened with two new songs, Man Thing Shuffle and one for his little brother called Dancing in the Backseat. The highlights of the second set were improved versions of Aerial Boundaries and Breakfast in the Field (title tracks to his two instrumental albums). With hands totally independent of each other on Aerial Boundaries (just one example), Michael was able to play the rhythm and the lead at the same time which is definitely typical of his magnificent style. Most dramatic was his tapping with right hand on the fingerboard while his left hand was keeping the rhythm by means of hammer-ons. Awesome!

Between each song, he would change the tuning of his guitar while usually telling an odd story of some sort. His stories range from childhood occurrences in his home town, Enid, Oklahoma, and through his progress to fame. One of the funniest stories was a lead-in to a new harp-guitar piece entitled Shape of the Land. The song was written for a Japanese movie about the life of a mountaineer, Niomi Muramura. Fond of Niomi's dog—sled yell, Michael demonstrated it and commented that it was much "hipper" than the old cowboy yell. Also mentioning that the Japanese were angered at his making fun of Niomi he said, "Hey I like him...he got me a good movie gig."

Another story included [illegible] envy toward the sousaphone players in [illegible] high school marching band. They were [illegible] only members who got to do fancy [illegible] with their instruments. Inspired by [illegible] envy, he wrote a very Eastern sounding [illegible] march. But when troubled by puzzled [illegible] words to it he said that no words had ever been put to marches except for "da" as he sang the opening to "Stars and Stripes Forever." He finally chose to take [illegible] words from a book he was reading at the [illegible] time on Zen Tibetan Buddhism, thus [illegible] titled the song Let your imagination lead, reality will follow through. Smarmy [illegible] might be, but funny it was.

After asking Michael if there was [illegible] anything that he would like to convey to [illegible] students, he said, "Well, just tell them that [illegible] this is my favorite place to play." He must really like the acoustics of Packard Hall, [illegible] he even digitally recorded the show. [illegible] would be nice to see a live album recorded [illegible] at Packard, but its not likely to happen. [illegible] He is considering making two albums in [illegible] the future, another vocal (more romantic) [illegible] and a rock and roll album. We'll have to [illegible] wait and see.

Ending with a triple encore, Michael [illegible] topped off a phenomenal evening with [illegible] Love Bizarre by Sheila E. and Prince, Come Together by the Beatles, and finally Those Days Old an original. It is great to see such a personable performer come to CC and draw such a great crowd. And just as Michael Hedges appreciated giving the show, we must be thankful for being able to get such a wonderful performer.

Weekend Performances at CC

"Upstairs, Downstairs: An Evening [illegible] Dance and Drama" will be presented [illegible] the Drama and Dance Department [illegible] Colorado College Thursday-Sunday, [illegible] 11-14.

Slated are two separate productions [illegible] each leading off with dance pieces [illegible] Armstrong Theatre, and concluding with [illegible] trio of one-act plays in Armstrong 32[illegible]

The performance schedule is:

•Dances choreographed by A[illegible] Lommasson, assistant professor of da[illegible] nd drama, followed by the short pl[illegible] "Hello from Bertha" by Tenne[illegible] Williams; "Overtones" by A[illegible] Gerstenberg; and "Wooed and Viewed" [illegible] Georges Feydeau. This production will be presented at 8:15 p.m. on Thursday, Saturday, Dec. 11 and 13; and also at [illegible] p.m. on Sunday, Dec. 14.

• Dances choreographed by Peggy [illegible] assistant professor of dance, followed [illegible] the short plays, "Identity Crisis" [illegible] Christopher Durang; "Krapp's Last Tape" [illegible] by Samuel Beckett; and "Words upon [illegible] Windowpane" by William Butler Yeats. This production will be presented at 8 p.m. Friday and Sunday, Dec. 12 and [illegible] and also at 2:15 p.m. Saturday, Dec. 13.

The plays are directed by Colorado College students and the events are open to the public. Admission for non-students is $3 and tickets are available at the Student Center, 931 N. Nevada Ave.

Jah: The True Christmas Spirit

Well, Christmas time is coming around again and we're all pulling out the old Christmas tunes. But honestly, how many of us are getting sick of the old carols? Charlie Brown's Christmas is coming back along with the Nutcracker Suite but the standards like "Silent Night," "Joy to the World," "Jingle Bells" etc. are beginning to wear a bit thin... until now. A label called RAS, Red Authentic Sound, has recently recorded an album of various artists doing reggae versions of all the old favorites. The album features Freddie McGregor, Eek-A- Mouse, Michigan & Smiley, June Lodge, Peter Broggs, Don Carlos, Pablo Black, and the Studio One Band, along with other reggae artists. Their versions of our Christmas favorites old add new and refreshing flavor to the Yuletide spirit. Some of the tunes remain unchanged except for the reggae beat, however songs like "Drummer Boy" and "We Wish You a Merry Christmas" have a slight change in lyrics. My favorite tune on the album that has been altered is "The Twelve Days of Christmas." "On the sixth day of Christmas Jah Jah gave to me a garden full of sensi." Yahoo. Now it is totally cool to play Christmas carols at your parties. You can dance to reggae tunes and celebrate the holiday simultaneously. Also, you can smoke the good sensi in the true Christmas spirit without guilt. We all love Christmas and everything that goes along with it. Reggae Christmas can make it all a little new, a little refreshing and a little Irie.

REVIEW BY E.J. BERNACKI TREE BY SUSAN GRIAK

"Give the Gift of Music" A Wish List

Ginny Bunker—Senior—Political Sci.
The Smiths, "The Queen is Dead"

Pete Scott—Junior—History
Jackie Gleason, "Songs for Lovers Only"

Moira Anderson—Senior—English
Pat Metheny, "As Wichita Falls"

Kimball Temple—Junior—English
Television, "Marquiee Moon"

Doug Mann—Sophomore—Anthro.
Baboon Vocalizations

Ellen Stein—Senior—Art Studio
Rolling Stones, "Let It Bleed"

Jane Hines—Sophomore—Biology
Howling Wolves Greatest Hits

Ian Brogle—Sophomore—Undecided
ACDC, "Back in Black"

Ted Craig—Senior—Political Science
Cindy Lauper's Newest

Jack Klein—Senior—English
The New R.E.M.

Brooke Burbank—Junior—Art Studio
Talking Heads, "True Stories"

¡THREE AMIGOS!

PG An ORION PICTURES Release In Association With HOME BOX OFFICE
© 1986 Orion Pictures Corporation. All Rights Reserved

NOW SHOWING! at . . .

amc 598-5200
TIFFANY SQUARE 6
I-25 & WOODMEN RD.

MoviesMoviesMoviesMovi

Captain Kirk Saves the Whales

BY NINA DE GRAMONT

Have you seen any of the first three Star Trek movies? I haven't. Why spend money to see on a big screen what's free on your T.V. every day at four, right? Wrong. Despite being a Star Trek fan, I resisted seeing the Enterprise float across the silver screen for three films. Then when I finally succumbed on a dreary, rainy, movie day, I shocked myself by enjoying it.

Of the old crew, Bones had definately aged the most gracefully. If you remember the series, this shouldn't be the case because vulcans live much longer than humans. Remember when the rest of the crew were all dying of old age from an intolerable atmosphere on some planet? Considering Spock only had a few grey hairs then, he should be right about where we left him, wrinkle-wise. But apparently, at the onset of IV he's just been brought back from the dead, so maybe that explains the extra wear and tear. Scotty has certainly rounded out, but he looks sweet—cuddly. And alas, Captain Kirk, the heart throb of extraterrestial females everywhere, has gotten a might pudgy over the years.

But enough gossip, here's what the movie's about; all our old friends are in trouble for whatever they did that brought Spock back from the dead. As they nobly head back to Earth to accept their punishment, they discover that their home planet is being destroyed by this high tech thingamigig that has something to do with communication. No one on Earth can answer the calls it's transmitting, or decipher it in the slightest. Spock plugs into a computer, and realizes that the call the thingamigig is transmitting is that of the Hump Backed Whale. Of course by the 23rd Century, whalers have completely wiped out this species. Since the only thing that can save the Earth is a whale or two, Kirk promptly guides his crew back to 1986 or so to fetch a couple o'whales.

Alas, Captain Kirk, the heart throb of extraterrestrial females everywhere, has gotten a might pudgy.

Now this is certainly one of these movies that from the moment you sit in your chair, you know everything's going to turn out O.K. Kirk, Spock, Bones, Scotty etc. are completely indestructable, and even if they die in this movie we know they'll recover in the next. So it's not exactly Hitchcock. What it is is very good, light entertainment. The thing that sets Star Trek IV apart from all those other airy movies is that its story carries a very strong, important message that not many people ordinarily receive; SAVE THE WHALES. The movie not only effectively shows the horrors of the whaling industry, and the tradgedy of a species becoming extinct, but somehow does it with humor and care rather than preaching. So you'll go to see Star Trek IV, and you'll laugh and have a good time. And people will walk away realizing that they're not the only species on this planet, without hearing the words "Green Peace" once.

Taps, Bends, Wangs, and Whams from Yngwie

BY JOSEPH R. LEONARD

Yngwie J. Malmsteen has something that is all most of us want out of life. He has 28 Marshall heads, 30 Marshall cabinets, 3 stock Fender Stratocasters, and a distortion box. This is exactly what he brought when he, along with British group Saxon and Americans Black 'n Blue, came to the Colorado Springs City Auditorium on this past cold Tuesday night.

But it was hot inside the small auditorium. As Saxon opened their set, the drummer played the entire first song with flaming drum sticks. Later, there was some blindfolded guitar solos, and after one guitarist finished tossing his guitar about with the singer, the band ended with a slow ballad in which most of the audience raised their hands and swayed with the beat. The music was very metal, and it was a pleasure to the eye as well as the band used an early 60's Gibson white SG Custom and a same date Gibson wood Z Explorer.

However, history was made as the 23 year old guitarist from Stockholm, Sweden, brought what might be the last heavy-metal show to the Colorado Springs Auditorium. Already well heard, misunderstood, and praised as a new guitar hero, the Classically influenced musician was such an astonishment that often after a song the audience was too dumb-founded to speak, yell, headbang, or raise the devil sign.

The tour is to support Yngwie's third solo album, "Trilogy." While his last album, "Rising Force," was a very orchestrated instrumental guitar album, the new one has caught the techno-pop-music term because only two of the eight songs are instrumental. Having more singing, however, helped bring the band across better than when he played mostly an instrumental set at McNichols Sports Arena last October when opening for AC/DC. The assembled band was very tight and in pace. They all ran about a bit. They told knock-knock jokes, threw beer at, and made faces at the audience. The drummer, also from Sweden, set his kit with the drum heads and symbols flat rather than curved (Keith Moon style), giving a better view of his playing. While we're impressed with Tommy Lee of Motley Crue for spinning his sticks around between the beat of a meter, this guy would hit the high-hat on every half-beat and still have time to manage a few good stick twirls.

Similar to the style of live Edward Van Halen, Yngwie did not hesitate to fill the air with improvisational taps, bends, wangs, and whams. He played from the Star Spangled Banner and bits of Swedish Folk Songs. The material covered all three solo albums, a Mozart violin sonata, instrumental breaks for guitar and keyboards and the encores were an instrumental blues jam, the fine song 'Black Star' and lastly an old Alcatrazz song.

When I saw Michael Hedges, I thought it was impossible for one man to be so happy. At Yngwie Malmsteen, I saw a whole auditorium of them. While we can't prove the existence of a God, we can surely see his beauty in Heavy-Metal music, and his reflection in the talent and happiness of Yngwie Malmsteen.

Seasons Greetings from the Fading Catalyst Staff

PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

Left to Right: Standing: David Fitzgerald, Ted Craig, and Jean Boyer. Seated: Kathy Mahoney, John Katsanis, Pat Chisholm, Blair Sanford, Katie Dalsemer, Liz Cheney, Eric Breitbard, Susan Griak, Alec Rekow, David Klein, and Mike Fraterelli.

CC Downs #1 UND

BY KATHLEEN MAHONEY

The Colorado College Tigers upset the number one collegiate hockey team in the nation last Saturday, 3-2. To the surprise of many, CC split the two game series over the weekend with top ranked University of North Dakota at the Broadmoor. After dropping Friday's close contest 4-3 in overtime, most people figured the Tigers were done for the weekend.

There was a lot of pessimism about the Tigers' ability to play with the UND Fighting Sioux two nights in a row. According to history, the second game should have been a North Dakota blowout, but someone forgot to tell this CC hockey team. This is a team that is writing its own history.

"We were everything they could handle Friday night and more than they could handle Saturday night."
—Coach Bertsch

"I'd say that ninety percent of the people that night figured on a letdown after our last two overtime losses. (North Dakota, 4-3, the night before and Michigan Tech, 3-2, the previous weekend) But the team responded and I think that shows the character of this team," commented Head Coach Mike Bertsch.

The true character of sophomore Derek Pizzey came through, between the pipes both nights. Pizzey turned out a Western Collegiate Hockey Association "Player of the Week" performance, winning this honor after holding three of the top four scorers in the WCHA, (UND's Tony Hrkac, Bob Joyce, and Ian Kidd, one, two, and four respectively), to a total of four points (two goals and two assists) in the series. Robbing UND of a number of point blank shots and breakaways, Pizzey kept the game close Friday night and gave CC the winning edge Saturday night. Overall he turned away 61 of the Sioux's 67 shots.

After Friday's heartbreaking defeat, the Tigers came out skating hard Saturday night. Forty-one seconds into the game, leading scorer Rick Boh put CC on the scoreboard, capitalizing on a rebound from a Doug Kirton and Tom Pederson effort. UND did not roll over, however, and twenty-two seconds later Malcolm Parks slipped one past Pizzey to even the score at 1-1. The visitors went on to take the lead with seven minutes left in the first period. The odds were too great on a 5 on 3 UND powerplay. Hrkac, Joyce, and Kidd took to the ice for the goal. Pizzey did manage to kick away a few of the sure goals before UND's second of the night registered.

Down 2-1 at the start of the second period, CC once again found themselves two men short compared to the full strength of the Fighting Sioux. Pederson, Boh and Rob Doyle foiled UND's chances though and the score remained with a one goal margin. That margin was erased with six and a half minutes left in the middle period on a CC powerplay when Doyle, at the point, passed to Scott Campbell, who was positioned at the top of the circle. Campbell let loose one of his characteristic slapshots and Gord Whitaker was waiting in the slot to tip it in.

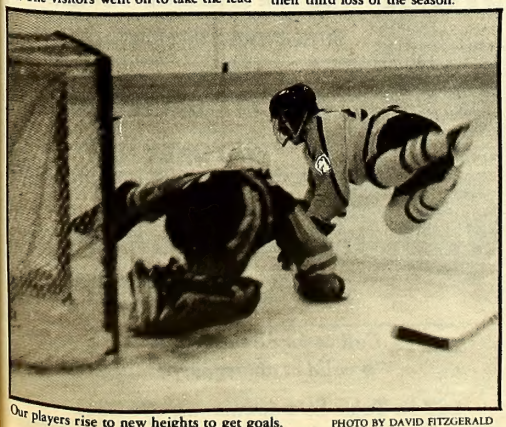
CC was still in the game but it looked like their luck had ended when Kirton was whistled for a five minute major with 4:41 left in the second period. UND's scoring trio once again took to the ice but the Tigers showed why they are ranked second only to the Fighting Sioux in penalty killing when they held UND scoreless for the full five minutes.

"Our special teams have done an outstanding job this year and with that kind of performance we will win hockey games," said Bertsch.

The score was tied going into the final period, and CC was still a man short for the first fifteen seconds. The Tigers kept the momentum going as the crowd of 3,637 saw an on target Rick Boh slapshot called back because a whistle had blown first. CC killed another penalty, but then leading goal scorer Tim Budy was handed a ten minute misconduct. He headed for the box and freshman Paul Noad headed for the ice.

Noad, in his sixth collegiate game, connected for the game winner. The play started in the Tiger's defensive zone when Cal Brown, playing defense (instead of his usual offense) for the injured Doug Clarke, gave the puck to Guy Gadowsky. Gadowsky took the puck down the boards on the left side and beat the UND defender, getting off a backhander. In the following scramble for the rebound, Noad, on his knees, swatted the puck with the shaft of his stick for Tiger goal number three.

CC held that slim lead for fifteen minutes. The Sioux pulled netminder Ed Belfour, with 1:01 to play. In the last 17 seconds, Rob Doyle cleared the puck from the CC zone and missed the open net by no more than two inches. Finally the buzzer sounded and CC handed the Fighting Sioux their third loss of the season.



Our players rise to new heights to get goals. PHOTO BY DAVID FITZGERALD

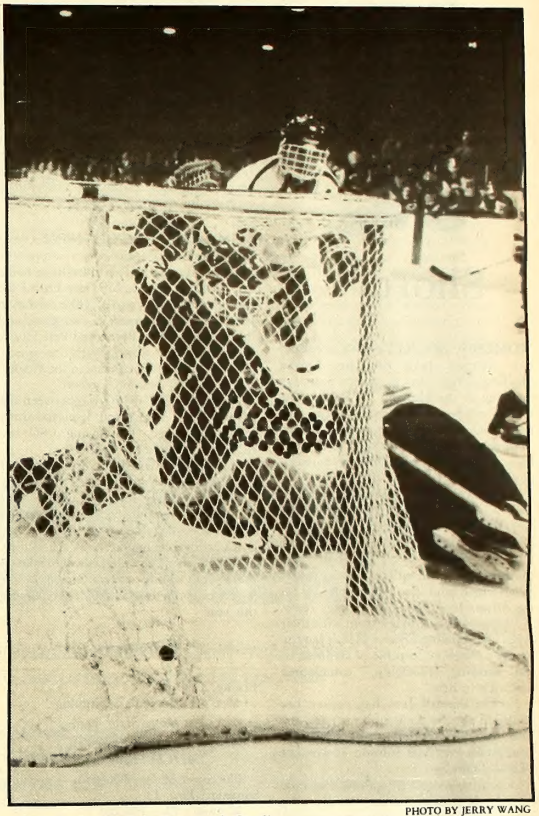


PHOTO BY JERRY WANG

Just another puck in the net, eh Gord!

Friday night CC played with the same intensity but lost in the last two minutes of the overtime period when UND's Joyce walked in alone.

The game was sent into overtime in the last minute and a half. Scott Schneider won the face off in the Sioux's zone passing to Rick Boh. Boh gave the puck to Dave Hardie at the point who sent it over to Scott Campbell and Campbell ripped one by Belfour to even the score.

Schneider had been a force all night scoring the first two goals for the Tigers, plus having another goal called back, all in the first seven and a half minutes of the game. He tipped in a Doyle slapper on a CC powerplay for goal number one. Doug Clarke and Doyle moved the puck well at the blue line to set up the goal. Less than two minutes later, Doyle and Clarke were passing at the blue line on another power play. Clarke gave the puck to Boh waiting on the boards. Boh shot and Schneider put away the rebound to put the Tigers' ahead 2-1.

UND's Hrkac tied things up taking the puck coast to coast and placing it in the upper right corner while CC was a man down. It was a tie game at the end of twenty minutes.

Midway through the second period, the Sioux regained the lead on a powerplay goal by Mickey Krampotich. The Tigers kept the pressure on in the middle period taking 15 shots to the Sioux's 12 but UND's goalie, Brower, stood strong.

At the other end of the ice, Pizzey came up with the saves while Campbell delivered some crucial checks at the blue line. Hardie, Doyle, and Pederson all had strong consistent showings on defense throughout the series too.

"They were both great games last weekend and we have no reason to be ashamed losing 4-3, with two minutes left in overtime, to the number one ranked team in the country. We were everything they could handle Friday night and more than they could handle Saturday night," praised Bertsch.

This weekend the team travels to the East coast to take on the University of Lowell (Massachusetts) and the University of Maine. Both teams are ranked in the top ten of the CHSB poll and the games count for the WCHA standings.

As of now, North Dakota is still ranked first in the country and hold first place in the WCHA. CC is tied for fifth with Minnesota-Duluth and only one point behind fourth place Northern Michigan in the WCHA standings. The Tigers also received a vote in the top ten rankings in the CHSB poll.

Milestone

VARSITY HOCKEY—Rob Doyle moved up another spot in Tiger hockey history this weekend. Doyle is now tied with defenseman Doug Lidster (1979-1983) with 174 career points for seventh place on the school's all-time scoring list after last weekend's series with North Dakota. Doyle notched an assist on one of Scott Schneider's goals in the 4-3 overtime loss Friday night. Also Doyle is quickly catching Dave Feamster as the all-time leading scorer for CC defenseman to leave his name firmly etched at the top of CC record books.

Sport

Shorts

WOMEN'S HOCKEY—This weekend the women take on the Aspen Motherpuckers in a game Saturday morning at the Honnen Ice Palace. The faceoff will be at 11:30 and the game will take about an hour. There will be a Shoot-the-Puck contest with $25 gift certificates from the Hub to the skillful ones between periods.

The women are looking to improve their 1-2 record with a victory. It will be the first time the team faces the Motherpuckers this year and last year the Tigers went 0-5 against the Motherpuckers. CC will be missing center Sarah Flynn who is in Africa, playing for the African Junior National Hockey Team.

"Aspen will be a tough team with their depth, and missing Flynn will hurt but the younger playes are capable of stepping in and showing leadership," commented Coach Dave Roe.

Rookie Kendall Leet has proven her ability to put the puck in the net and the line of Kristen Thompson, Dana Britenstein, and Julia Hanson, is working well as a unit.

Devensively, captain Sarah Meskin leads the crew of rookies with captain Dorothy Digges having a spectacular year so far in goal, anchoring the relatively young squad.

"The women looked good in practice and as long as they play well as a team, the chance for a win is there," said Coach Lowe Billingsley.

MEN'S BASKETBALL—Lynn Cherepy, a 6'7" forward from Tucson, Arizona, will enroll and play basketball at CC starting in January, head coach Jim Cross has announced.

Cherepy currently attends Central Arizona Community College in Coolidge, AZ, where he earned all-star recognition as a sophomore last season.

"He runs well, rebounds well and shoots well," Cross said. "I don't know if we'll activate him when he gets here. We probably won't. Rather than use him for half a season, I'd rather give him some time to learn our system then have two full years of eligibility left. He definitely will be a player for us in the future."

MEN'S CLUB HOCKEY—In a battle of the offenses, CC came out on top, 9-6, against Colorado State University at home last weekend. Sophomore Dean French led the tigers with five goals, while freshman Jeff metheney chipped in two goals and three assists. Dave Byron and Pete Husak finished off the scoring with one apiece. Kevin Boeh had four assists in the victory. The men now post a 3-1 record.

Jerry "The Cat" Wang was between the pipes for the Tigers and displayed some feline maneuvers in denying CSU the chances to stage a comeback.

CC played a man short through alot of the third period when Tyrell Billingsley traded his stick for his gloves. But freshman Rich Leibhaber, with Bubba and Dave Roe, delivered the crucial body checks at the blueline to secure the victory.

This weekend the men travel to take on the Pueblo semi-pro team Saturday. The Tigers beat the team in their first meeting this year.

THIS WEEK

Friday, Dec. 12
Men's & Women's Swimming at Metro State, 4 p.m.
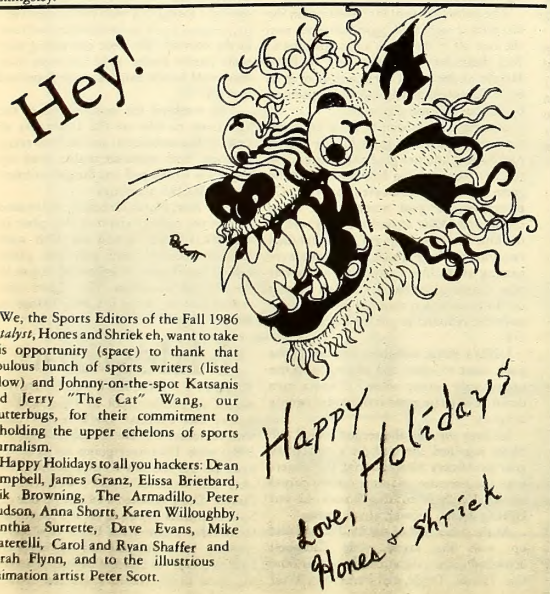
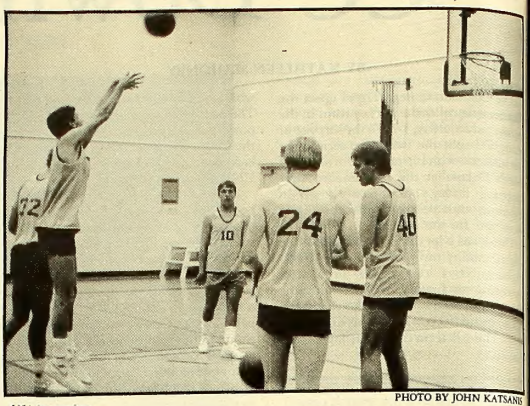
Men's & Women's Basketball
at N.M. Highlands, TBA
Hockey at Maine, 7:30 p.m.
Saturday, Dec. 13
Women's Club Hockey.
Honnen Ice Rink, 11:30
Men's & Women's Basketball
at Adams State, 7:30/5:45
Hockey at Lowell



We, the Sports Editors of the Fall 1986 Catalyst, Hones and Shriek eh, want to take this opportunity (space) to thank that fabulous bunch of sports writers (listed below) and Johnny-on-the-spot Katsanis and Jerry "The Cat" Wang, our shutterbugs, for their commitment to upholding the upper echelons of sports journalism.

Happy Holidays to all you hackers: Dean Campbell, James Granz, Elissa Brierbard, Erik Browning, The Armadillo, Peter Hudson, Anna Shortt, Karen Willoughby, Cynthia Surrette, Dave Evans, Mike Fraterelli, Carol and Ryan Shaffer and Sarah Flynn, and to the illustrious animation artist Peter Scott.

Bogue Leads Hoopsters



CC in action. PHOTO BY JOHN KATSANIS

BY DAVID EVANS

Nobody ever said that victories would come easy this year for the CC Tigers. After winning one of two tough games last weekend, the Tigers fought yet another hard battle Wednesday night against Colorado School of Mines, yet suffered a heartbreak loss to the Orediggers 98-92.

The Tigers, despite shooting a horrible 29.6% from the field, trailed by only 5 points at the end of the first half but failed to chalk up the win. In the losing effort Rob Bogue led all scorers with 33 points and David Schroeder led all rebounders with 13.

CC's second win of the season came at home on Dec. 5 as the pulled out a close one over Sterling College 71-69. The game was won on the boards as the Tigers outrebounded the taller Warriors 46 to 31. Leading CC in the victory was co-captain Dave Rakel with 12 points and 16 rebounds.

The next day the Tigers travelled to the icy outer reaches of Gunnison to take on perennial rival Western State. The game, however, was never close as State led by 11 at the half and beat the Tigers in every statistical category to win the contest 92-73. As usual, Rob Bogue led CC in scoring with 24 points and also in assists with 8.

In order for CC to win on the road this weekend they will have to improve on their dreadful 36% shooting mark of the last three games. The Tigers, now 2-5, will have the chance to prove themselves as they hit the road for New Mexico Highlands tonight and Adam's State on Saturday. CC's next home game is January 2 against Pomona-Pitzer. Let's all come back from break early and cheer 'em on!

JOSÉ MULDOON'S

YOUR FAVORITE NIGHTS OF THE WEEK ARE MONDAY, TUESDAY & WEDNESDAY at JOSE'S!

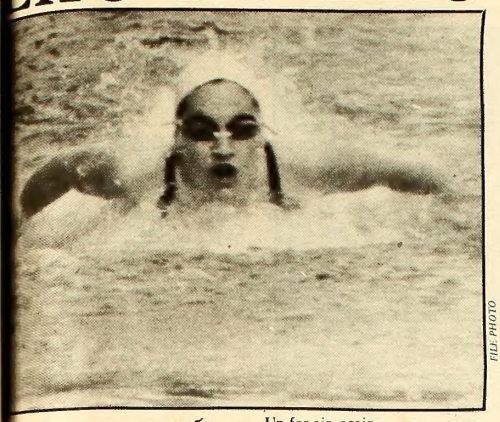
MON. 2 FOR 1 MEXICAN DINNERS
BOTH ENTREES INCLUDE SALAD BAR

TUES. COMPLETE DINNER FOR TWO ONLY $13.95
DRINKS, APPETIZER, SALADS, ENTREES, DESSERT

WED. FREE BLUE CORN NACHOS
WITH SANTA FE SPECIALITIES
Blue Margaritas $1.95!

Call us for all the details
● valid at dinner only ●
222 N. Tejon St. ● downtown ● 636-2311

Life In The Fast Lane



FILE PHOTO

Up for air, again.

BY CYNTHIA SURRETT

For the women's swimming and diving team, life in the fast lane means opening the season with a first place trophy. Last weekend they did just that with a divisional win at the CU Invitational in Boulder.

Sophomore diving sensation Beth Olsen wasted no time in qualifying for Nationals—in the 1 meter and 3 meter diving events. Beth led the way and the swimmers followed her example, winning 15 out of 19 events.

Although none of the swimmers qualified for Nationals (after all, it was only the season's first meet), many of the Big Cats cranked out lifetime best races and 72% of the goal times were reached. Freshcat Joy Hanks sprinted to a 27.9 goal time in the 50 free while sophomore Denise Collins cruised through a grueling 400 I.M. in 5:25.1.

Sophomore freestyle sprinter Chris Luttenegger grabbed first place in both the 50 free (26.2) and the 100 free (58.59). Trish Franciosi followed suit by winning both the 100 breast (1:14.95) and the 200 breast (2:44.11). Chris and Trish combined forces with sophomores Gina Olsen and Liz Stron (200 medley relay) and with sophomore Michelles Skeels and freshcat Alison Wolfinger (400 medley relay) to win both of those events.

Denise Collins, endurance queen, had a strong performance in the 1650, completing the event in 21:08.

Sophomore Ann Walsh, senior tri-captains Alex Trovas and Cynthia Surrett also had a rewarding weekend hitting goal times or personal bests in their respective events.

Coach Joani Schofield was very pleased by the overall performance of the team. They have been working hard and she hopes everyone will reach their goal times this season. if this weekend is any indivation of what is to come, the 1986-87 Big Cat season will be very successful.

Both the men's and women's teams head up to Denver today for the first dual meet of the season. The women's first home meet is not until Jan. 10 when they host the CC Invitational Relays. It will be lots of fun and we hope to see all of you Big Cat fans there to cheer on the swimmers. So until then, have a great vacation and keep your feet dry.

Big Cats Take Third

BY P. SCHLESSMAN

Taking on teams that have been practicing longer than you have been, is not usually the way a team would like to open its season. But the men's swim team traded up to Boulder last weekend for the annual University of Colorado's Buff Invitational under these terms. The Big Cats placed third out of four teams but according to Coach Lear this was an improved showing on last year's placing. CU took first and Metro State was second. CC topped the Colorado School of Mines for third in the standings.

"I felt the team did really well for the short time that we have been practicing. CU and Metro start practice in September and they have alot longer conditioning time. But we had some fine swims and I am really pleased with the team," said Lear. Kevin Diffee placed first in the 400 yard individual medley for the Tigers while freshmen Tyler Mingst and John Dorsch in the 1,650 yard freestyle had strong showings in that endurance contest.

"The team is developing and coming along really well. It takes the freshmen awhile to get acclimated to the longer distances in collegiate swimming compared to the high school level. Their 200 yard races are now 200 yards," commented Lear.

The divers, Craig Clear and Tom Smith, turned in second and fifth place showings in the one meter competition and placed third and fourth in the three meter event, respectively. These two should be consistent for the Tigers throughout the season.

"Overall, there's a really bright outlook for this year's team. By the time we host the championships in February, it will be interesting to see how we do," said optimistic Lear.

The Tigers travel to Metro State for a dual meet today at 4:00.

WHEN IS THE RIGHT TIME TO CALL YOUR BOYFRIEND?

a) When the president of Phi Gamma Delta asks you to Saturday night's Fiji Formal.

b) After raquetball class, to tell him that the instructor with the Australian accent and those blue eyes did wonders for your serve.

c) When you just feel like telling him you miss him after all.

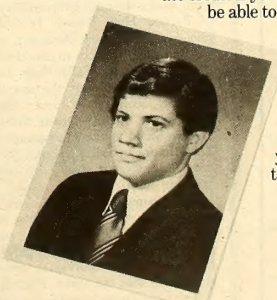
Maybe you shouldn't tell him everything that's going on. But if you still care about him, why not call and whisper some sweet things he'll never forget?

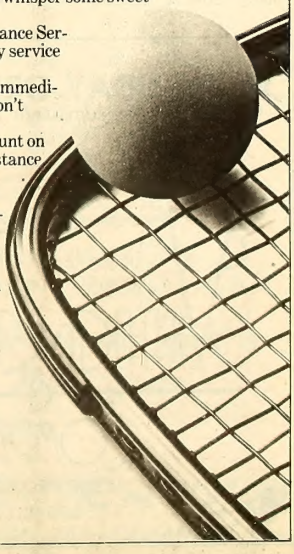
Like why you call using AT&T Long Distance Service, and why you trust AT&T's high quality service and exceptional value.

When you tell him that AT&T gives you immediate credit if you dial a wrong number, he won't be able to get you out of his mind.

And telling him you can count on AT&T for clear, long distance connections will drive him crazy.

All of which will probably inspire him to drive out for the weekend, giving you an excuse to blow off that silly frat party after all.





AT&T

The right choice.

© 1986 AT&T

Talented Tiger; Nation's Toughest

Last Leaps and bounds above the rest. FILE PHOTO

BY DEAN CAMPBELL

The summer Colorado College sophomore history major Janine Szpara had the opportunity most amateur athletes only dream about; she represented the United States in an international soccer tournament in Jesolo, Italy. Szpara, a two-time NCAA Division I 1st Team All-American and 1986 NCAA Division I Final Four Tournament Defensive MVP was the starting goal keeper for the 1986 US Women's National team, leading the US squad to victories over Brazil, Japan and China in four tournament games. (The US lost 1-0 in the final to host nation Italy.)

Though international powerhouses England and Denmark were absent, the US team's and Szpara's performances established them among the world's best.

Szpara's sojourn with the National Team began in May at the Sports Festival tryouts at the Olympic Training Center. With National Team head coach Anson Dorrance looking on, Janine was picked among a twenty-four member "player pool" to attend a training camp and further tryout in Minnesota.

From there a travelling squad of sixteen players (with Janine as number one goal keeper) went to New York to train for three days. Then off to Italy.

Aside from the absolute necessities of sunbathing and shopping, the two week trip was mostly business. If selected at next year's Sports Festival tryouts, Janine could again journey to Italy as the country's best goalkeeper.

Although Janine insists she "could have played better" at the Jesolo tournament, she still considers the U.S. team as good or better than their international competition. And although she played with the best opponents from college (and teammates from previous youth and Sports Festival teams), Janine maintains that CC's players "can play out there with the best of them." Says Janine, "our talent is just as good; we're just not as flashy or as well known (as players on other teams), but we get the job done."

When asked about CC's chances for a National Championship in 1987, Janine replied, "we could win it all. It's just a matter of bringing out the best in everybody." With a solid, experienced team returning (midfielder Margot Stolte is the team's lone graduating senior), this is one promise that the best goaltender in the country surely has the potential "to keep."

Biased Basketball

BY CATHY BUCHANAN

Perhaps I am a bit biased, but the Lady Tiger Basketball Program is definitely on its way up this season and it is a joy (with rapture) to be a part of it. It is as though we've found the missing links and can now successfully stalk our prey.

Tigers are not generally known to hunt in packs, but this offensively threatening team, under the leadership and experience of Brenda Hull, Brenda Frihauf, Terri Livermore and Kitzie Pettersen, seems to have huddled together to plan their hunts. The newest cats, Sally Bush and Julie Miller, have experienced the taste of a good kill, by scoring 26 and 19 points respectively, against Doane College this past weekend at the Marymount College Tournament in Salina, Kansas, where the Lady Tigers came away with two wins, boosting their hunting record to 3-4 overall. Paige Lorimer, also new to the pack, has shown her stealth as a huntress by catching her kill with rebounds. Pettersen, a Tiger captain, is pleased with the amount of individual talent and strength within the spirit of team unity.

The Lady Tigers however are not as free to prowl as they would like. They are still working through some inconsistancies generally caused by inexperience in the front court. According to head coach Beth Branson (a tough Tiger in her own time), practice, patience, and time will perfect the Tiger prowl.

The Lady Tigers, along with the men's team, will travel to New Mexico Alamosa Co, this weekend with hopes keeping the ball rolling. over Chris they venture to San Bernadino, Ca, and be home again to face-lift Ripon Colleg Jan. 7, 1987. You can look forward to fast style pouncing basketball from poised and powerful pack of Lady Ti Grrr..., How?, Grrr!

Armadillo Alley

Warning, warning major log jam your way courtesy of the Am Football Conference (AFC). The teams are playing hot potato wi home field advantage for the playo the early frontrunners have nosedive into the pack. The New York Jets that only three weeks ago were Jo looked capable of winning it all have collapsed, losing their last three. Granted, their entire defensive fron has been injured as of late, but that explains why their once potent offens scored all of sixteen points in the las games. The New England Patriots exposed at home last weekend in a mauling at the hands of the Cinc Bengals. The Bengals rushed for on yards. Denver obviously does not w play in the friendly confines of Mile come playoff time; they lost 37-3 Kansas City who the week before ha at home to Buffalo a team that had straight road games. The King award goes to Mr. Elway, who sho the best quarterback in the league throwing four interceptions.

With two games remaining in regular season nine AFC teams still shot at the playoffs. Cleveland, New Denver and New England are Cincinnati is 9-5. Los Angeles, Seattle Kansas City are 8-6, and even 7-7 has a mathematical chance. Denver AFC West champion, is the only assured of a playoff berth. Who is go prevail and capture the elusive home advantage? To quote my good friend Piscipol "Who cares."

The best teams in the N.F.L. seem in the NFC at this moment. Three are slugging it out for the home advantage, we are talking gloves off, the last five years the team playing their home turf has represented the in the Super Bowl. The New York G Chicago both 12-2 and Washington are the belligrents. Contenders still for a playoff spot are the L.A. Rams San Francisco 8-5-1, Minnesota 8-6 Dallas 7-7. But, forget football, what happened to the Houston Rockets hoops scene. They are 7-10 and just annihilated by a mediocre Seattle team 80 at home. They seem to be absol nothing without the injured Akeem Dream." Good ole seven foot four Ralph Sampson is making a strong ca himself as the tallest loser in history.

Seeing as this is the last alley of the I'd like to wish all y'all a merry Christ have had enough of this cold and whit all over the ground, I'm gonna w south of the border and catch me s rays. Adios Amigos.

HOLIDAY ORIGINALS
Clothing, Jewelry, Furnishings, Textiles, Collectables
Antique Kimono's
$20-$45
MANITOU SPRINGS VINTAGE CLOTHING & COMPANY
ON THE PROMENADE
685-9077
725 MANITOU AVE. MANITOU SPRINGS

Hi Mom! Working on Football
Yes dear, Football satisfies the american need for slow violence mixed with commercials
Oh, it doesn't matter any more, honey
Hey kids! Don't kick your pet at home. Kicking pets isn't funny in real life. Go play Football with small kids instead!

Ellipses and Hyperbole

Pastel Vice

BY AARON SHURE

Imagine, if you will, the following last ode of "Miami Vice." The producers ed something to hook the audience, to ke people watch when the season ns again; the producers need this ot.

Action. The theme music fades in, all ctronic, with galloping rhythm, boo ooga boo chooga boo, do du do du do du

The background: sexy city, all pastel, n on magenta, mauve, maroon, fuchsia, artreuse. There isn't a hard earthtone where.

Enter Tubbs and Crocket (call him Davy" and your dead.) They go to see eir captain, to stand around with sour es like they were looking at some eous color like beige or, god forbid, own. Their captain is tough, he has to be, was nearly killed by acne in his youth. Captain wants to show them something w, something strange: its a pair of ndcuffs. Crocket and Tubbs are confused, y don't know what handcuffs are. They en't been this embarrassed since that ode with that thingamajigger...what's alled? Oh yeah, a search warrant. They n cyan with embarrassement.

They decide to learn about those new things later. It is time Crocket and Tubbs go get the bad guys—guys that iron their clothes. They drive fast, find some foreign looking people and blow them away. Meanwhile, music plays.

Suddenly, a Cuban sneaks up behind Crocket with a huge switch-blade. The screams are terrible, as the Cuban gives Crocket a shave and then gets blown away.

Everyone is dead, there is cocaine all over the streets, but Tubbs is alright, and it looks like Crocket's stubble will grow back in a day or two.

Now comes the crucial scene. The theme music, in full stereo, gets louder—du do du do—the pastels get more pastel. During an intense close up, Crocket looks at Tubbs. Tubbs looks at Crocket, and they kiss—a long sexy kiss, in stereo. Credits roll.

This episode would have dramatic effects on the American society and economy: the stock market would fall, shell shocked fathers would be mowing the snow in their underwear, Oral Roberts would hail the millennium, the sell of shaving cream would increase. But the first episode of the new season would definitely be well watched...

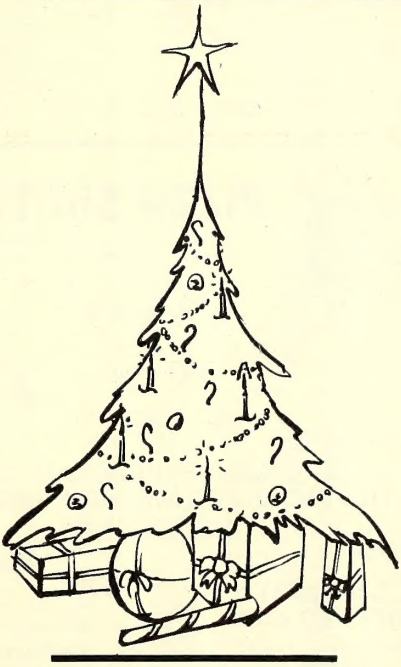
Hair Designers for Men & Women

RAPUNZEL

Style cuts, Cellophanes,
Perms & Color.
Nexus, Redken, and Tri products available for sale.

Stop in or make your appointment:

827 N. Tejon at Cache La Poudre 632-3532



We thank you for your business in 1986...
...We're looking forward to serving you in '87.

A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year from

TAYLOR TRAVEL

the Stagecoach Inn
702 Manitou Ave.
(On Fountain Creek in Manitou)

Affordable Elegance

Open all Year
for
Lunch • Dinner
Sunday Champagne Brunch

RESERVATIONS 685-9335

COMPUTERS FOR SALE
Used Texas Instrument computers and printers. Sold by area distributor. Call Peggy or Lois at 632-5157.

CLIMBERS—Ice climbing equipment: SMC crampons, Forrest Aeve axe, Forrest Mjollnir axe. $110.00 Call Steve, 574-6515 (days), 531-7659 (nights).

EDDIE MURPHY PRESENTS Trading Places, Tuesday, December 16 at 6:30 p.m. This truly entertaining film will be shown at the south video room of the Tutt Library. Free and open to all. Sponsored by The Investments Club!

ANYONE WHO INVESTED in or participated last spring in preparation for The Grounds coffeehouse and would like a refund or to help decide what to do with the rest of the money, please call Jim at 632-9910.

WANTED: Yuppie Orgasm Manual; Call Brown Trout, 555-1234.

THE STAGECOACH INN is celebrating the season with an old-fashioned Christmas. The restaurant's romantic Victorian-style tree was designed and decorated by Evelyn Adams, manager of St. Nick's Christmas Store in Manitou Springs.

Charles Rockey's winter landscapes and elfin characters are displayed in the entry area.

Lynn Barnett Vance, a weaver from Antonito, Colorado, is showing her baskets.

The Stitchin' Underground, a local creative stitchery group, has provided a number of Victorian inspired decorations. And, a crazy quilt is unusual for its block arrangement.

This Christmas exhibit can be seen from 11:30 a.m. to 8:00 p.m. at the Stagecoach Inn, 702 Manitou Avenue, Manitou Springs.

PARTY FOR THE WOMEN'S SOCCER TEAM! Come watch the ESPN coverage of the Division I women's soccer tournament in which the CC women's team placed second in the nation. Yea! Let us all eat cake! (hint) Come to Mathias Lounge after the Grinch show. Soccer coverage starts at 7:45 p.m. on Tuesday, December 16th. See you there!

WANTED: Chauffeur. Must be well-read in Machiavelli, Fraterelli, Guccioni, etc.; able to handle a "three-on-the-tree" Grand Wagoneer with auto-locking hubs; renumeration: $47,000/yr (not including wardrobe allowance); call Gresham, ext. 123.

TURN C's INTO B's AND B's INTO A's—CC grad (Phi Beta Kappa, distinction thesis, dept. award) will tutor on all aspects of writing. Research, drafting, editing. Five pager to thesis. Also test taking and exam prep. Former Honor Council member knows limits. Two glks. from campus. Reas. rates. Call 635-7374 after 6 p.m.

YEARBOOKS—All those wait list people wishing to purchase the 1985-86 yearbook, pick them up at Registration in January! Questions...call Jane x222.

FOR SALE: Smith Corona Coronamatic 2500 electric typewriter—$110. B/W television—$15. Bauer Challenger skates, men's size 9—$15. Nordica ski boots, men's size 9, great condition—$15. Peugot bike frame, 19"—$10. Call 633-7313.

DO YOU WEAR a green army jacket, black leather boots, glasses and refuse to shave? If so you may be eligible to be a member of the Ted Craig Fan Club. Benefits include discounts at Uptown and free seminars on America's China policy. If interested call the Catalyst, ext. 675.

MORE WORD PERFECT 4.1
Come by our clean and comfortable classroom and use a Texas Instrument equipped with Word Perfect 4.1 [OR] if you prefer rent a TI and a printer. Try our inkjet printer. We make copies from your Word Perfect files—only 10¢ a page.
Mention your from CC.

THE AMERICAN SOUTHWEST comes to you next semester in Leviathan; be a part of it. The art, culture, and politics of the region will be featured. Deadline for submissions is January 15th, but hurry to be the first on your block to contribute. Watch for the Winter '86 issue on the newsstands THIS TUESDAY!!

NEED A DATE? Over fourteen young, good-looking and newly eligible Catalyst editors now have much time on their hands since their editing tenures are expired. If interested call Dates By Fitz, ext. 675.

LOST: My car. I don't know where it went; last seen southbound on I-25; it's a nice red one. If found call Rawline-May, ext. 900.

FUTONS

$ 99 single $125 double
$140 queen

All Cotton

KIKU FUTONS
2616 W. Colorado Ave.
(in historic Old Colorado City)
520-9951

You do not have to be Mister or Rambo to learn a martial art. You do need a home gym to be in physical shape. Why sit and stare at a to increase your mental awareness.

T'ei Chi Ch'uan is a soft-style m art. T'ei Chi Ch'uan is truly the ultimate." It's an exciting way to learn defense and an intelligent way to p and mental fitness. It's a system you practice for a life time.

Chin Kuang T'ei Chi Ch'uan
Call 570-6250 for nearby classes.

This Week

DECEMBER 14 - 19, 1986

SUNDAY (14)

2:15 pm & 8:15 pm - DANCE & DRAMA DEPT. PERFORMANCE - ARMSTRONG THEATRE & ARMSTRONG 32

"Upstairs, Downstairs: An Evening of Dance & Drama"

Sets of one-act plays and dances performed by the Drama & Dance department. Directed by students, choreographed by Alan Lomasson and Peggy Berg. Each performance will take place in Armstrong Theatre & Armstrong 32. Tickets available at the Student Center. Free with CC ID, Gen. Adm. - $3.00.

*3:00 pm - 5TH ANNUAL ALFRED HITCHCOCK TRIVIA BOWL - OLIN I
Prizes, refreshments; everyone welcome!

6:00 pm - ANNUAL ADVENT-CHRISTMAS CANDLELIGHT SERVICE - SHOVE CHAPEL
CC Choir and Handbell Choir. Readings and music.

*7:00 pm - LOOMIS LASH LECTURE SERIES - LOOMIS LOUNGE
Discussion with Devon Pena.

7&9:15 pm - FILM SERIES - OLIN I

"The King and I"

The hit play by Rogers and Hammerstein crackles with vitality on the screen. Yul Brynner's magnetic, Oscar winning performance as the virile and demanding 19th century King of Siam has indelibly linked him with the role. The clash of temperaments between governess Anna and the King culminates with "Shall We Dance," one of the screen's most joyous musical celebrations.

FILM SERIES TICKETS OR $1.00 AT THE DOOR WITH CC ID, GEN. ADM. - $2.00.

MONDAY (15)

*1:30 pm - ADULT CHILDREN OF ALCOHOLICS - BOETTCHER BASEMENT

*7:00 pm - GAY RAP GROUP
Call ext. 384 for details.

*7:00 pm - AN EVENING OF ETHNIC MUSIC & POETRY - LOOMIS UPPER LOUNGE
An evening highlighting ethnic tradition in words and music! (Sp. by BSU and ISO).

*OPEN TO CC CAMPUS ONLY

MONDAY (15) continued

7:30 pm - LECTURE - GATES COMMON RM., [illegible] HALL

"Big Mountain: Spirit, Resistance, and Support"

Alice Benally, elder Navajo w[illegible] of Big Mountain, and her daughter Louise, will speak about the l[illegible] of the traditional Dine, th[illegible] struggle to remain on their [illegible] land, and the need for continu[illegible] support. (Sp. by Pikes Peak [illegible] Big Mountain Support Group).

TUESDAY (16)

*8:00 am - 8:30 am - MEDITATION - SHOVE CHAPEL
Music, silence, mystical and other writings (enter by north east door).

*6:30 pm - FILM - TUTT LIBRARY, SOUTH RM.

"Trading Places"

With Eddie Murphy. No cost, free and open to entire campus. (Sp. by the Investments Club).

WEDNESDAY (17)

*5:30 pm - FRENCH TABLE - BETWEEN BEMIS & TAYLOR
Come practice your French!

THURSDAY (19)

End of Block IV -
Christmas vacation begins!!!

ANNOUNCEMENTS

HOCKEY TICKETS AVAILABLE FOR THE DECEMBER [illegible] GAME (BOSTON UNIV.) AT THE STUDENT CENTER DESK.

NEW SECTIONS OF MODERN DANCE & BALLET WILL BEGIN IN JANUARY. STUDENTS INTERESTED PLEASE REGISTER WITH PROF. BERG, EXT. 471, OR PROF. LOMASSON, EXT. 460.

DON'T FORGET TO SIGN UP FOR BLOCK V ARTS & CRAFTS CLASSES AT THE STUDENT CENTER DESK. LEAVING FOR CHRISTMAS BREAK. SEE THE STUDENT CENTER DESK FOR A SCHEDULE OF CLASSES OFFERED.

*OPEN TO CC CAMPUS ONLY

PIZZA SHUTTLE
PIZZA SHUTTLE COMING AT YOU!
No one makes pizza as fresh, as fast, as cheesy, or delivers it so fast (and free).
OPEN DAILY AT 11:00
578-8686
2573 Airport Road — FREE DELIVERY to South Central Colorado Springs
INCLUDING Colorado College
390-4040
7070 S. Hwy. 85/87 Fountain — FREE DELIVERY to Ft. Carson, Security and Fountain
596-5272
4549 Templeton Gap Rd. — FREE DELIVERY to North Central Colorado Springs

THE "GEMINI" PROGRAM — Special, may expire anytime
TWO* PIZZAS FOR ONE LOW PRICE
Two 10" Cheese Pizzas only $5.89
Two 14" Cheese Pizzas only $8.89
Two 10" Pizzas - $1.25 per item
Two 14" Pizzas - $1.49 per item

A HOLIDAY GIFT FOR YOU!
Just mention this ad and receive
DOUBLE VALUE
for these coupons!

INGREDIENTS: Green Pepper Rings, Fresh Sausage, Ham, Double Crust, Jalapenos, Onion Circles, Fresh Ground Beef, Pepperoni, Extra Cheese, Double Cheese (2 items), Black Olives, Green Olives, Fresh Mushrooms, Anchovies, Pineapple

Single Pizza Prices :	12"	16"
Cheese	5.00	7.20
1 Topping	5.75	8.30
Additional Toppings	.75	1.10

16 Oz. Bottled Drinks
30 Minute Guarantee*
*Road Conditions Permitting

This special expires 12/31/86
FREE DELIVERY ANYWHERE IN OUR SERVICE ZONES
OUR DRIVERS CARRY LESS THAN $20

C1 SAVE $1 ON ANY 1 OR MORE ITEM PIZZA (12" OR 16" PIZZA)
One Coupon Per Order Not Good With Any Other Special
PIZZA SHUTTLE FREE DELIVERY
Expires 12/31/86

C2 FREE EXTRA CHEESE ON ANY LARGE PIZZA (16" PIZZA)
One Coupon Per Order Not Good With Any Other Special
PIZZA SHUTTLE FREE DELIVERY
Expires 12/31/86

C3 SAVE $2 ON ANY LARGE 4 OR MORE ITEM PIZZA (16" PIZZA)
One Coupon Per Order Not Good With Any Other Special
PIZZA SHUTTLE FREE DELIVERY
Expires 12/31/86

TAX NOT INCLUDED

the* HI-FI *shop
"Music for your Home."
We Transform Records into Music
a tempo
We Have the Best Sound in Town
CHRISTMAS CASSETTE OFFER
maxell XLII 90 XLII 90's $1.49 each
*Limit of 3 per customer
2026 N. Academy Blvd. (303) 574-7747

DISPARAGING

A Journal of Social and Political Thought

Vol. 11 No. 4 December 15, 1986

Not In This Issue:

REAGAN EXPOSED

Happy Holidays

BY BRIAN SMITH

With the holiday season getting in full swing and my lack of vehement feelings on any burning issues of the day, I am going to devote some time to a celebration of life in America. Now a cynical, pessimistic type would probably ask: "Man, what's there to celebrate? We have a president who either doesn't tell the truth or doesn't know what the hell is going on in his own administration; we have homeless, hungry people roaming the streets of our major cities; we have family farmers who are broke and factory workers who may be permanently out of work; we have massive budget and trade deficits and we have some serious environmental problems. So what is there to be happy about?" Well, to all you cynics out there, my answer is that, as a society and as individuals, we have PLENTY to be happy about.

Let's begin by looking at our system of government. We have in our constitution a set of amendments which by law guarantees the rights of every individual—the right to free speech; the right to practice one's religion without interference from others; the right to equal opportunity regardless of ethnic background or skin color; the right to equal protection under the law and the right to vote, among other things. America is one of the few places in this world where citizens are inherently guaranteed their rights as individuals. Many people in this country take these liberties for granted, some by engaging in apathy (the majority of people eligible to vote do not even take the time to do so) and others by attempting to impose their self-righteous, moralistic views on everybody else.

Granted, even though liberty and equality of opportunity are stated in the Constitution, discrimination, curbs on liberty and unequal opportunity still exist in American society. But when one takes the time to compare the degree of individual liberty and opportunity found in America with other nations, one can easily conclude that there is no comparison. In relation to the rest of the world, America really is the land of liberty and opportunity.

America can appropriately be called an individualistic country. American citizens, from the time of our founding fathers up to the present, have always concerned themselves with the dignity and rights of the individual. Madison's classic, articulate argument (in Federalist #10) supporting diversity as a means for controlling 'the tyranny of the majority' still holds true today. Ideologically and demographically, America stands as perhaps the most diverse society in the world. But Americans pride themselves in their diversity. Even though it is often hard to develop a clear consensus, it is also nearly impossible for Madison's worst fear—majority tyranny—to take place. Our diversity and individualism reinforce one another. Perhaps it is these traits which have prevented radical, dogmatic political movements (from either the left or right) from ever taking hold here.

Possibly the one characteristic of American society which fascinates those from other lands is our high degree of prosperity. Never before has the human race experienced such material comfort. Even in this century America has more than tripled its standard of living. Since 1950, per-capita income has more than doubled, while the percentage of those living in poverty has declined by one-half. Most of us exist at a level of affluence which our grandparents and great-grandparents could never even conceive of. Even during the economic slowdown in the 1970's (when many intellectuals were speaking of an uncertain and dismal future), the "stagnant" American economy created 16 million new jobs, and successfully managed to absorb a wave of new entrants into the job market (i.e. women and teenagers).

But it doesn't end there. In spite of a very serious recession during the early part of the 1980's, as well as continually large budget and trade deficits, the American economy has continued to grow at a

Continued to pg. 8

STAFF

Editor In Chief
Munir Meghjee

Art Editor
Peter Scott

Associate Editors
Lelia Deykin, Brian Smith,
Rob Lynch, Michael S. Mehan,
Dave Lazerwitz

Layout Editor
Nina Farquhar

Copy Editor
Dean Campbell

Contributors
Norm Leahy, Stacy Stanford,
Dave Makerechian, Jean Maxfield,
Eric Johnson, Shannon McGee,
Craig Heacock, Greg Ewald,
Kevin and Tony Lopez

The opinions expressed herein do not necessarily reflect those of the Disparaging Eye staff. The Disparaging Eye reserves the right to edit letters to the editor and guest commentaries.

LETTERS

Dear Editor:

I appreciated getting my opinion printed last ("Environmental Activism Begins at Home"). I'm sure I understand why the drawing (cartoon?) attached to the end, though. Forgive me if intention was otherwise, but I thought the dra was sarcastic and/or made fun of what I was wri

A staring, mostly naked hip-type perso meditating outside in the cold while his solar pow hot plate fails to heat his can of natural beans (d lack of sun, I suppose?).

I was definitely disappointed after putting in time writing about an issue that's important to me, drawing seemed sort of cliche & stereotyped. point of my article was specifically to reach ou folks who wouldn't typically be pigeonholed into stereotype. I think the drawing tended to negate intent.

No offense intended—maybe just do s consulting of authors next time? I don't know—j think about it though, ok?

Thank
Eric S. Johnson

Dear Editor:

At the very expense of our Journalist pride we m the ill-biased Catalyst. Hurrah, hurrah. No inkling a that shanty Town suggested not merely the rhetor debate and discussion, but was a concrete and compell situation still existent on campus. It was far mo valuable and worthy than the reporting it received.

Journalism is an endeavour to objectively produ elementary fundamentals of communication, i requires integrity on the part of experienced editors first and initially wiegh the relevance of each particu story in the measure of its news quality. This i persistent and primary axiom of Journalism. If we are introduce the necessity of political voice, it is mo responsibly heard with the Opinion pages, and we mu as editors evaluate the mirage of opinion for what i and deal a hand of strenuous cold examination of fa and reality. The lead story should be that story which altered, reflected, or undone the status quo of t previous week. It is not enough to personally disagr with this twist of circumstance, whatever and howev this circumstance exists. Fact: Shanty Town. Stor Shanty Town.

It is a fact which may not extend itself in time an space or be renewed. It is a fact which might mean confirm the nature of the bombasting and mediocr mentality of the liberal. It was a fact heavily noted b numerous and professional medias, highlighted an reported as much in the area of neutrality as is possibl could focus and fervour in the medias not in recen memory equivalated. Yet in the perceptions of Catalysts mind, it was minimally a picturesque anomal more to be written a man bites dog human interes story, and rushing to the side of the dog's point of vie the Catalyst mind vindictively slurred and splatter that dog's blood across its pages in the form of sarcas and cheap shots.

If Liz's cartoon indicated that divestment will effect, turn the lights off in South Africa, it is a fair repa to state that Freedom of Expression is itself turned off South Africa, it is a fair repay to state that Freedom Expression is itself turned off by the color of catalyst jaundice. Not because of the issues at hand. Not becaus of the conservative monopoly of the last Opinion page This monopoly was fairly laudable and indeed, ha sparked the scene for debate and discussion, but we w all have to approach these implications later. The arousal and active introduction of a sincere and serio clash of views can only benefit the best within us. But th complete shortage of responsibility, and of tha adolescent experience when one kept either the girls o boys out of the clubhouse, as well as taking int consideration that the coverage was only a slight apo the Editor's awareness, rather reduces the futur legitimacy of a proper and accessible medium o exchange. The Catalyst has done damage toward existing in this role.

Kevin Lee and Anthony Lopez

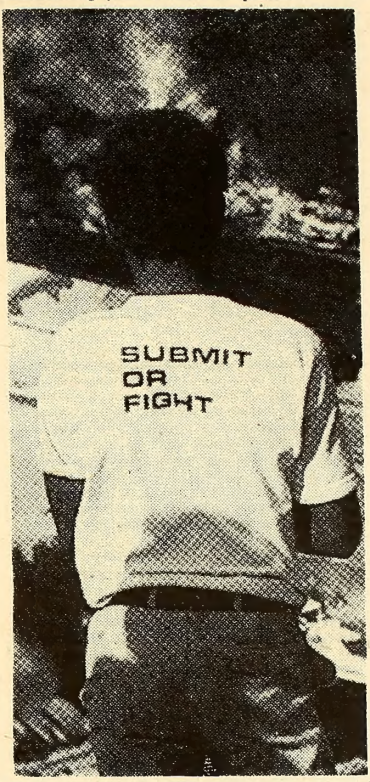
Apathy or Student Action?

KEVIN & TONY LOPEZ

e original and revolutionary intent of the colonists ed from an economic and political distaste with an sh government too many leagues away to rately assess their situation. Assertion of Liberty nd against Authority assumed itself, not so much rotection against Tyranny, but insisted that rulers no longer conduct themselves in callous and ferent policies. The rulers must be made to operate porarily, and in this limited amount of time, be nized as solely serving the interest and will of the e. Former legitimacy of government had consisted ially in its role as a necessary haven against nal enemies. Former governments were recognized t being responsible to their subjects, but existed and separated from them. In the course of a ing legitimacy of individualism, a new ethic of ical conduct was introduced which both initiated limited where government would be necessary and ient. This was determined by common law, checks balances, and certain inalienable rights. Liberty here ined as the principle which purposefully allowed free and equal discussion. We the people have gled and are familiar with our nation's tendency to e our expression.

numerous events past and present, we the people gnored, altogether due to a delegation far removed our examination, but ringing our bells in the ds of National Security. What is this delegation? e dare someone elsewhere implement a social policy he exclusion of our individualism. And we listen: esence of the red menace makes this necessary." The ssing of weapons is obviously useless then, until al war begins, and before it triggers, this cache es our present dilemna in the international world. s obvious governments are proceeding in the ociated status of an assuring Big Brother, if you will, ards protecting us from external enemies. Yet still, is ght to live now adequately and safely if this Big ther exists in himself immorally? The Conservatives scoff at the nuances of the previous election but it is isely one key difference which they avoid. It is the oduction of a genuine and viable ethic to the slative process. Liberals focus on envisioning, not ys obtainable, quests for social justice. It is this exact ntum of universal sympathy which divides the es and shapes their ideologies.

olitical activists don't speak the commercially-sound es. The emphasis of the present anti-apartheid onstration is applicable as thrusting a democratic symbolic gesture against unconscientious corporations profiteering in South Africa at the obvious expense of its people. It calls for immediate divestment by Colorado College; to engender conscientious decisions from the college participants linked in the undeliberating system of racism and apartheid.



Our students are at grips with ideas and movements and possess the convenient vantage point of intellectual discernment. Thus a Shantytown has been founded. It is an act bearing both social and individual significance and acceptance of its effects. It would be absurd if the US government legislated that their citizens were compelled to register for Shantytown duty; yet the ignored and unfortunate fact of our existence, is that the impoverished souls of far away lands are registered at birth and socially repressed in ignoble Shantytowns. It cannot be said that in the attainment of our own rampantly in the soul of every man. The character of the student recognizes this dialectical process innate in mind and in our system. But television, alas will not recognize the same. Television provokes disinterest and apathy and thus contributes to the present errors of the world.

It is the degree as to how we interact and are made aware or each other which describes our part in the drama of democracy. One of the important questions is whether or not television (and various medias) undermine our individual liberties towards proper expression. If it doesn't, by virtue of the argument that it increases communication, it can be a potential fact of this communication to extend our empathies across the seas and among ourselves in elimination of oppression. It is plausible that we exploit our communication capabilities, generating responsibility into our own political process, and augmenting an international concern. The present usage of prime-time, of biased journalism, and the intermittent one-liners of the "great communicator" in the midst of this mediocrity now insults our greater mentalities, contributes to a prolongment of conservative myths and attitudes, and further separates the Presidency from its proper constituency.

So, let us take the other case, that indeed, television undermines our individual liberties towards proper expression. A one-sidedness of personal and political dialogue will always undermine our civil liberties. If we explore the alternatives which may compete as flamboyantly and as well against the tenacious Mr. Telly, invite ideas and convictions to be adequately analyzed, and educate the working force will-numbed in todays

Continued to pg. 8

Is Capitalism Out of Control?

BY DAVE MAKARECHIAN

The American poor live in deplorable conditions in e world's wealthiest cities. They can't get educated, ey can't get jobs, and they can't even get a good ducation.

The U.S. economy has developed from its agrarian ots into the most advanced and complex in the orld. As the nation has grown, market forces have come stronger and stronger. The government has reated a "mixed" economy to suppress market forces. mprovements" in the market include a war on overty, affirmative action programs, and public ducation. But judging from the conditions of 1986, ey haven't worked. The government has not done nough. To your average radical, capitalism is out of ontrol.

But to your above-average radical, the government s done too much. A closer look at market capitalism deed shows failure. The poor are in dire straits. But s the government that has failed, not the market.

Poverty as we know it did not exist in the days of mple America. As the nation developed, and as apitalism rose with big cities and big city problems, e government intervened to improve conditions. By 86, these improvements manifest themselves in tensive housing, income, education, and health rograms.

The government has created a number of income rograms to help the poor. A fundamental problem to ll welfare programs is an equation that determines w much a recipient is entitled. The equation is based ot on how little a person or family has, but on how much. Of a pool of qualified applicants, those toward e top of the cut-off point have incentive to be worse off, and those at the bottom have no incentive to move up. Thus a program that requires the absence of a working male keeps the male out of the house and out of a job. The system is backwards.

Concurrent with the rise of the welfare state has been a rise of the welfare bureaucracy. Tax dollars that could be going to the poor go to bureaucrats who make sure the male is still out of the house and still out of a job. Cash inflows through the bureaucracy don't approximate outlays to the poor because of the scale of the programs.

Another attempt to arrest capitalist exploitation is the minimum wage law. Again, the government meant well, but it ended up doing more harm than good. Since the law went into effect all employers must pay workers an arbitrary rate. Businessmen allocated more resources for the same amount of labor. But not all businessmen—especially small businesmen in urban areas—had the resources to meet the wage. The result: some workers made more money, but more were out of a job overall. Youth unemployment—especially among urban teen-agers—closely follows trends in the minimum wage.

The government has also tried to intervene in the free market to arrest discrimination. Affirmative action laws affect many industries and many groups, but have solved no problems. They have furthered discrimination and kept minority groups from advancing.

Affirmative action and other labor laws force employers to spend resources to meet regulations. The laws may force employers to spend extra resources in recruiting and training a group specified. Less workers may be hired overall, or output may suffer because unproductive workers had to be hired. These effects spiral through the economy, and all people—including the poor that were supposed to benefit—suffer. Even if some members of a group get a job, the group as a whole suffers. A net betterment of nothing. Minority groups get acustomed to distorted hiring practices, and the vicious circle continues.

Low-income housing programs have failed, and have kept the poor in deplorable conditions. The government meant well when it established housing projects. It seemed as though the poor had no place to go. In some cities, governments established rent control so everyone could have a place to live. But when you think of low-income housing, it is likely that you think bad thoughts. Crime, racial tension, rats, and an overall bad scene.

Some present the generic argument that housing programs give the poor an incentive to stay in the slums. While this may be true from an economic perspective, it's hard to believe that any one would want to stay in their current conditions. But why do they stay there? Because there aren't enough places for poor people to live. Why aren't there enough places for poor people to live? Because low-income housing is regulated by the state. The projects have to meet expensive restrictions attained by construction lobby groups and their friends in Congress. Resources to meet the restrictions are limited. In addition, certain areas in cities—even if they are not being put to better use—are off limits to new housing construction because of antiquated zoning regulations.

But we are still left with the question of why conditions are so bad. You don't need pop sociology to see that too many people in too few places causes destruction. And if a land lord can't make money for rent restrictions, his only recourse is to save money by not paying for maintenance.

Out of the government created slums has arisen one of the worst illiteracy problems in the western world. The correlation between education and socio-economic environment is one of the most consistent. The government sought to arrest the problem with a public education program. Again, its heart was in the right place.

The nation's system of public education has kept the economically underprivileged educationally underprivileged. It's not capitalism that has kept the poor from having the same chance as the rich, it's the government.

The amount of money that the government spends

Continued to pg. 8

Have Parents Abandoned Education?

BY STEVE GERAGHTY

A long time back, children were not educated in the classroom. Dad took his sons out to the fields to hunt and farm, and Mom kept the daughters inside to teach them how to cook and make clothes. But as time went on, and man had accumulated more and more knowledge, people went to the classroom to gain that knowledge. Mom and dad became financial supporters, a shelter for the evenings. Parents taught the little lessons in morality and good behavior, and teachers gave the children the real knowledge, the information that would someday let them become parents too. Somewhere along the way to our yuppie world, parents jumped out of the role of educators and hopped on that freight train of wage earning. Which would all be fine and dandy if they continued to be educators. But for some reason, today's parents don't seem to be able to handle both. This situation has handed modern society a rather ominous question: who should educate our children, and how should they do it?

When education goes awry.

Many career-oriented women are becoming mothers in society. Yet all too often, motherhood stops with the miracle of birth (and don't expect dad to help out). Once that child can be fed a bottle, enter the babysitter. From nine to five (plus travel time), the children of today are in the care of someone other than their parents. And then come the weekend, the parents have to get away from the children so that they can spend some time with only each other. So who ends up raising the kids? All too often in yuppie-land it's the girl from Sweden. Pretty soon the child has grown up enough to enter school. Exit the girl from Sweden and enter the elementary school teacher. Elementary school age is the disciplinary development stage, and the teacher is now awarded this task. (But give too much discipline, and the teacher just might be slapped with a lawsuit.) And for the next fifteen years of life, the main guiding force in a child's life becomes the teacher. Yet this is the very reason that the problem arises. A teacher has to see anywhere from fifty to one hundred students a day, and most likely for only a period of nine months. The student ends up taking courses from close to forty teachers (a low estimate I would guess). No stability is given to the child's life. And the one force that could tie everything together, that being the parents, isn't always in the right condition.

You might ask what I mean when I write that. The parental attitude toward teaching is not the most healthy in modern society. First you have the parents who use the school system as a babysitter. They don't care how their child performs or if he attends classes; as long as he is away from the house, everything is just great. When the teacher approaches this type of parent about a delinquent child, he is met with an uncaring attitude or even no response at all. The teacher should not have to put up with that garbage; but if the student is turned away, the school system takes the rap (and we all know that the school system can't do that—it's bad public relations!). So too many administrators have turned the deans' offices into playrooms for the delinquent, and it just isn't fair to the teachers. Secondly, we might encounter the aggressive parents: they always know what is wrong, but their child certainly isn't it. Two specific cases of this type come quickly to mind.

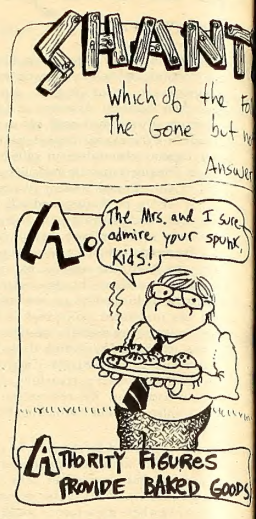
> "The parental attitude toward teaching is not the most healthy in modern society."

In Aurora, Colorado, at a small elementary school named Polton in the Cherry Creek School District, a parent is challenging the academic credibility of his daughter's teachers and principal. Last year, the Polton third-graders took standardized tests along with the rest of the students in the nation; however, they didn't score as well. In fact, they scored the lowest in the district. As a result, the parent I have mentioned has gone before the school board to get some answers—as well as the transfer of the principal and the resignation of a certain teacher. He has recently followed his daughter around to her classes, plopping himself down beside her, thus becoming a serious distraction to the teachers. But to him, that doesn't matter; his daughter is possibly going to receive the worst education possible in the district, and he is going to make sure that that doesn't happen. Yet does this same man ever sit down and help his daughter with her homework? Does he go over her report card with her, or discuss the results of the parent-teacher conferences? Probably not, but still he feels capable of telling teachers how to teach. A little cooperation just might solve the problem.

The second of my examples involves a group of parents down in Tennessee who have decided that they know what their children should and should not be taught. It seems that the Wizard of Oz just might get their little angels a tad bit too full of rowdiness. Now we can't have that happening in the households of America, or we just might develop a big problem. So the Fundamentalists took their case to the courts and emerged—and I do feel that this is a rather scary verdict—victorious. If the parents don't want their children to read a certain textbook for class, then the child doesn't have to read it. So what does the teacher do now? Provide a different, acceptable reading assignment? Excuse the child from classes pertaining to the book in question? Or is that decision up to the parents as well? Very important questions lacking just as important answers.

> "It seems that the Wizard of Oz just might get their little angels a tad bit too full of rowdiness."

I believe that a more cooperative spirit must develop between our parents and our teachers if the educational system is to pick itself back up again. parents need to become more involved with their childrens' education—help the child out, show a little interest in the schoolwork, attend parent-teacher conferences with working together in mind—yet at the same time positively reinforce a teacher's decisions. At the same time, parents should realize that education doesn't begin when the child is able to and does take his first step into the classroom, nor does it end when the final bell rings in the afternoon. Parents are not relegated to just teaching the moral lessons in life; they can also help the teachers by helping their children, both academically and motivationally. A healthy educational system can only be found where parent-teacher cooperation is abundant—and the parents stop blaming the school systems for everything that goes wrong.



Preacher

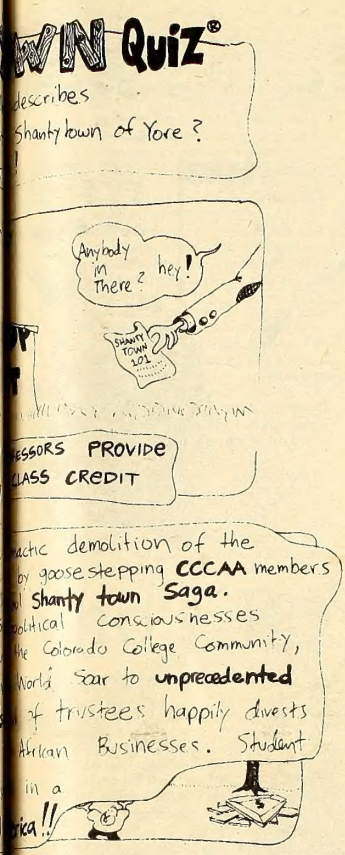
BY GREG EWALD

It is an opportune time, on the eve of Constitution's two-hundredth anniversary to examine the original intent of our founding father several key issues. One such issue which has be distorted is the role of religion in politics. The nec separation of church and state was distinctly ma the writers of our Constitution. Why then are t several Presidential hopefuls for 1988 who religious leaders?

There is little doubt that these "divine candid are no serious threat to their more secular poli opponents, but their mere existence some unnerves me. All of our Presidents have been, a outwardly, religious men. The problem arises wh religious fanatic who believes that only his follo are morally sound becomes President. Could thi easily lead to the type of religious tyranny threatened our ancestors over two hundred years

In addition to the possible theocracy which result from a religious leader as President, we consider the inherent conflict of interests bet being President of the United States and leadi religious group. First, how willing are these relig leaders going to be to give up their prior commitm and concentrate on being President of the U States? Ronald Reagan and Jimmy Carter gav acting and peanut farming respectfully in order to this country, but would Jesse Jackson or Robertson refrain from stirring up emotional fervo order to make arms deals with Iran?

Is the threat of being damned by Satan rea



Free Speech or Smut?

BY NORMAN LEAHY

1986 has given us perhaps the most odious assault upon common sense and reason since the so called free speech movement at Berkley in the mid 1960's. Whereas then the radicals agitated for change from outside the system, today, the crackpots are on the inside preaching to the docile masses. As examples of this psycho-babble being heaped upon the public, let's use Ed Meese, Tipper Gore and Nancy Reagan, representing the concerns of the insiders on pornography, rock music and drugs, respectively. Combined, this triumvirate shows us just how far the moral confusion of the nation has progressed and perhaps what lies ahead for we the people.

Ed, perhaps the most bumbling cabinet official since Aaron Burr, came out with his now infamous tone on the evils of pornography. The fact that it (porn) is degrading, insipid and dull was mentioned, but so too was the proposition that boycotting, picketing and other tactics should be used to stamp out the menace. So effective was this recommendation that 7-11, under duress, dropped its offering of smut, and the cheers went up from the peanut gallery.

No one will argue with a person's right to protest something they disagree with, but when a government advocates, incites, economic warfare against free speech, we are left to wonder what precious right is next, besides the right to bear arms which is always under a cloud. Who will decide what is smut and what isn't? The grey areas are immense and potentially dangerous.

Speech and expression come under fire again through the gunsights of Tipper Gore and her PMRC. They seek to constrain the influence of rock on kids. In a throwback to the '50s, we are told that the music devastates our youth, making them bobbling, devil worshipping goons. Granted, not all music put out today is of great social value, but no one has any right to prevent its production. Common sense dictates turning the radio off, don't buy the record. Common hysteria says monitor, censor, eradicate it. Only the state can save us from ourselves.

Which brings us to Nancy. Her crusade against drugs has now become the issue for intellectually bankrupt politicians. Death penalties, sealed borders, military surveillance: It all boggles the mind at the extent to which the elected will go to stay in favor with the masses.

Of course these methods bring even greater intrusions upon the rights of the individual, but it's good for the country as a whole.

PHOTO BY CYNTHIA JOHNSON

Nancy with Flash Gordon at a "Just Say No" rally.

A trade-off, then, between individual choice and reason and collective moral dictation becomes evident. History should show these people that moral Platitudes cannot be thrown at the citizenry, they have a tendency to rebel, and yet these people have legitimate concerns about what they see as wrong with the country and are correct to voice their concerns. We must be wary, though, when these concerns come from within the halls of power and they seek to legislate corrections. A free people, if they desire to stay that way, must realize that the cranks—especially when they have the means—can pervert the underpinnings of freedom in the name of normalcy.

1986 gave us these three examples of this process. They may die out as they become unfashionable, but vigilance against them becomming entrenched may be our greatest challenge for 1987.

A Challenge to Business

BY ROB LYNCH

The Press calls the eighties the decade of the yuppie, a time when the protesters of the sixties are the investment bankers of today. If this is the decade of such capitalistic fervor in the U.S., why are we getting beaten by young Asian upstarts in the field of international trade? Further, we are still having problems with unemployment and underemployment in many of our industries. The business sector has largely restructured its emphasis from heavy industry to a more service oriented economy. Should American business continue to go in this direction in the future? What do we the business community do to make it more competitive at home and abroad?

Efficiency, quality, adaptability, and vision, are the catchwords for a successful company. U.S. business must face these important subjects or they will be doomed to failure. The question of efficiency has always been a difficult one to solve. Companies become more efficient through cutting costs or increasing productivity. Cost control has always been a very touchy issue especially when people's jobs are at stake. Since Unionization is a fact of life, management has been forced to increase wage rates and abide by work rules. Business must form a new strategy for labor relations and unions must be more flexible in their negotiations. I am optimistic that through strong cooperation between labor and management costs can be cut and productivity can increase.

The business community can accomplish greater efficiency and quality by changing many of its views about what motivates a person to be more productive and more quality oriented. Unions and management have put too great of an emphasis on wage increases and work rules to make the worker content. Although increased hourly wages do provide some incentives, it is only one of a variety of methods to get people to strive for greater quality and efficiency. To achieve greater productivity, companies must learn from the Japanese by giving their employees more input into the way they do their job. Further, Unions must grant concessions by reducing very rigid and unproductive work rules so that workers have more incentive to look at the bigger picture. Only greater coordination between management and employees can ensure an increase in quality and efficiency.

Managers and union leaders must redefine their roles within the corporate structure. They must end their hostile relationship for companies to compete nationally and internationally. The old ideas no longer work. The days of management convention vacations and endless bonus pay and workers constant guaranteed wage increases are over. Belt-tightening is a painful process, but it is the only way which corporations can survive. Corporate leaders must have the foresight to see that their protected position is diminished rapidly. The Government is experiencing a time of cutbacks in defense contracts and protectionist measures from imports. Business must follow suit and realize that the honeymoon of unrestricted spending is over.

> "Belt-tightening is the only way which corporations can survive."

Corporations must face major challenges of focus and direction. The recent trend towards the successful service industries like high tech is a cause of some concern. Although there is great demand for high technology throughout the world, it is erroneous to believe that our economy can subsist purely on the success of this industry. As of late, growth in the computer industry has stabilized showing that its expansion has limits similar to other industries. In the long run the service sector is only as successful as its customers who buy their products. If heavy industries like auto companies fail then eventually so will the service sector because it will lack customers. The answer to this question of balance lies in diversification of industry. For the most part the heavy industrial sector has pared down its size to be more competitive, but now it must prove that it can increase efficiency and quality to compete on the world market.

Even with all its problems, I still am optimistic about the future of American industry. Although at times it seems painfully slow in changing its ways, I think that there are enough visionary corporate leaders who realize the importance of reform within the industry. Only through flexible, realistic leadership can American industry strengthen its position and continue to assume world economic leadership.

President

nough to vote for a religious fanatic for President? On he other hand what about the promise for eternal eace (always in the back of my mind!)? How about a ash rebate? These candidates are tax free due to their eric status and usually have plenty of funds from randma's pension check. Besides, these guys do not now how to dress. Seriously, do you want Jesse ackson to go negotiate with the Soviets looking like just came from a funeral?

If these sound like ludicrous notions, then my point as been made. Is not the entire idea of a religious ader running for this nation's highest office omewhat absurd? I am not proposing that some type censorship should be instituted in order to restrict olitical candidates. I will leave censorship for the eople to whom I am referring. I merely wish to use me of my many freedoms as an American (Article I) in rder to preserve the rest!

Religion does serve a purpose in society. That is eligions in general, not one specific type. The broad orals which transcend religious boundaries are eeded in societies. In our society many of these orals were written into the Constitution. They are to protected by and administered to by our political stitutions and leaders. To ensure our personal eedoms, which include religious beliefs, we elect aders who will be fair and who are committed to eserving our Constitutional blessings. Our founding thers had many insightful ideas and they wrote most them into our Constitution. We must accept some odifications as necessary and inevitable. However, I o not perceive any need nor positive outcome of llowing religion to integrate with politics.

Killing For Coats

BY CRAIG HEACOCK

How much is twenty million? It is three and a half times the number of Jews killed by the Nazis. It is forty times the number exterminated by the first atomic bomb, and it is equal to the number of animals killed each year in traps in the U.S., mostly in steel jaw leghold traps. It is time we stopped this atrocity; steel jaw traps must be outlawed, as they are unnecessary, ecologically destructive, and brutally inhumane.

Trapping in modern society is totally unnecessary. We no longer need animal furs to keep us warm; effective substitutes exist which are more practical and less expensive. Then why does trapping persist? The almighty dollar comes into the picture here. People are willing to pay large sums of money (one coat could probably finance a soup kitchen for a week) for the privilege of wearing authentic fur. Human vanity is the cause of this needless nationwide slaughter. The next time you see someone wearing a fur coat, think of the number of animals that had to die for that person to feel "good" about themselves.

Steel jaw leghold traps are also undiscriminating. Any creature which happens to step into the trap will die, whether it be an endangered species, or somebody's German Shepherd. Studies show that half of the time, the trapper does not get the desired animal in a trap. What happens than? Obviously, the "trash" animal must be killed and disposed of, so as to save the trapper from huge fines or the wrath of a pet owner. The only loser in the event of a "trash" animal becoming trapped is the animal itself. On a larger ecological scale, traps wreak their havoc by disrupting the food chain. Many of the animals caught in traps are predators—an all-important link in the chain. By taking the predators out of an ecosystem, all species are seriously affected. When the wolves, bobcats, and bears disappear, there is no longer a check on the reproduction of their former prey.

Perhaps the most disturbing aspect of trapping, however, is its inherent cruelty. A trapped animal has two options: lie down and await death, or twist and bite its way out of the trap. In the latter case, the animal regains its freedom, only to die of massive infection, or starvation due to impaired hunting ability. If the animal waits in the trap, it will either freeze to death (trapping seasons are usually in the winter), be eaten by another animal, or the trapper will arrive and beat the animal on the head and stomp on its ribcage. Shooting the animal leave a nasty hole in the precious pelt, and what an embarrassment it would be to have a flaw in a fur coat noticed during an important function! This writer shudders at the possibility.

Frank Conibear, in his book "Testimony of a Trapper," describes one of his experiences with a steel jaw leghold trap: "I have known two lynx to lie down for three weeks in traps and still be alive when I got there, but they were very thin. The feet of the lynx are so large that unless it steps fairly in the middle of the trap, it is caught by one or two toes and as the days go by, the jaws of the trap squeeze tighter till they separate the joints of the bone. Sometimes the sudden jerks of the lynx breaks the last shreds and it is free. By that time, the whole foot is usually frozen, so the lynx must die from rotten foot. Of all the deaths from trapping, I think that from a foot thawing out and rotting out is the most awful."

The "sport" of trapping must stop. We can no longer justify killing for fashion and pleasure. I would like to finish with a poem read at a House subcommittee hearing on trapping in 1976:

Tis strange how women kneel in church and pray to God above

Confess small sins and chant a praise and sing that he is loved

While coats of soft-furred things

upon their shoulders lie

Of timid things, of tortured things which take so long to die

An equally chilling form of animal abuse.

Restoring Whole Eco-Systems

BY ERIC JOHNSON AND SHANNON MCGEE

On Saturday, November 15 eight CC students traveled to the University of Colorado at Boulder for a conference titled Beyond Boundaries—Restoring Regional Ecosystems. The conference was sponsored by CU Environmental Center, Boulder County Nature Association, and Colorado Earth First! Presentations were given by both Reed Noss and George Wuerthner. The purpose of the conference was educational, but also hoped to initiate work towards restoration of regional ecosystems in Colorado.

The day long conference focused on many issues, one being that theories of management do not take into account the natural fluctuations that occur within ecosystems over long periods of time, i.e. species population and climate. For example, decisions to maintain game populations at steady levels and the suppression of naturally occurring fires adversely affect the regeneration of aspen groves. In Jackson Hole, Wyoming, the consistent elk population feed on the aspen sprouts regularly, not giving the aspen sprouts time to reach an inedible state. If the population of the elk was not controlled, the number of elk would occassionally reach a low enough level so that the aspen groves would have time to grow. Therefore controlling elk population causes a decrease in the aspen population.

Fire clears out dead wood and underbrush which allows new aspen trees to sprout. When fires are suppressed, spruce and fir trees will take the place of old aspen trees. The aspen then will disappear. Management decisions therefore can disrupt the ecosystems and prevent them from functioning naturally.

Another issue raised at the conference concerns how land is actually set aside for preservation. Commonly land preserves are small fractions of whole ecosystems and are isolated from each other. The lack of connection between areas prevents the transferring of genes that occurred when the entire region was undeveloped. The lack of gene transfer will lead to inbreeding within populations of large mammals. Also, local extinction of a species would not have been a problem a hundred years ago, because individuals of the species would have migrated and repopulated the habitat. Today, because development has isolated areas, migration has become difficult or impossible, making local extinction permanent.

The size of an area that is set aside is generally not large enough for large predators. Large predators require a great deal of land to survive and without them, prey species population expand unnaturally. This leads to an imbalanced number of animals and will effect the entire ecosystem. When determining what will be preserved, management has chosen land that is mountainous and scenic. More diversity however is necessary to complete whole ecosystems. Inclusion of grasslands, forests, and wetlands on a large scale is vital to preserve biological diversity. Traditionally, wilderness areas tend to be rock and ice with a limited amount of habitat.

While the conference only lasted a day, it presented many varying ideas concerning the restoration of whole ecosystems. If implemented the ideas will provide the preservation of biological diversity and maintain naturally occurring ecosystems.

The Debt Crisis: Who's to Pay?

BY FRANCESCA FOA

Today the United States is faced with an economic problem of such magnitude that it could cause the collapse of the economy. This is the problem of the enormous debt that Latin America has incurred. The United States has lent Latin America billions of dollars, but now needs to be repaid. The catch is that many of the nations in Latin America are unable to pay their bills because their countries simply do not have the funds, and probably will not have the money for many years to come.

The United States is asking for the money back, not out of a callous insensitivity towards the plight of the struggling Latin American nations, but out of a need to keep the U.S. economy afloat. The U.S. has lent Latin America so much money that it cannot afford to let the bills go unpaid. If these nations default on their loans, major U.S. banks in New York could go bankrupt which would cause chaos. Out of fear, Americans would rush to get their money out of the banking system, trust in American financing would be lost, and the economy would collapse. The possible failure of the U.S. economy has not only national consequences, but international ones as well. The world economy is based on the stability and strength of the American economy, and if the U.S. economy fails, there will be world wide repercussions which would result in havoc.

The United States originally became heavily invested in Latin America for self serving reasons, but reasons deemed valid by America. For example, the United States wanted to have a foothold if not complete control in Latin America so that there would be security south of the U.S. borders. The United States wanted to be assured that its military and political decisions would be protected in such a key geographical location as Latin America. The U.S. had economic reasons to invest in Latin America as well as military ones.

The United States wanted to enforce the Open Door Policy in Latin America. This meant that there would be a freedom of access by the U.S. to many of Latin America's natural resources. In addition, there would be profitable trade and investment opportunities for American businesses. Latin American countries seemed as if they would start strong economies that would be worth the U.S.'s original investment. The United States saw no reason not to help its southern neighbors. In fact, it wanted to provide foreign aid so that it could dictate U.S. policies easily. Of importance to the U.S. was that Latin America was firmly rooted in capitalist practices, and that the U.S. would have a major role in the development of the Latin American nations.

In general, the U.S. sought control over Latin America, as was indicated when John F. Kennedy stated: "Foreign aid is a method by which the United States maintains a position of influence and control around the world and sustains a good many countries which would definitely collapse, or pass into the communist bloc." Although all of these reasons were clearly not in the best interests of the Latin American nations, they were in desperate need of funds to boost their economies. Latin America was looking to gain economic independence through successful trading industrialization, and an overall strong economy, but it needed help from the U.S. to get started. Unfortunately, these goals were never achieved.

Latin America was heavily dependent upon high commodity prices, but in the late 1970's there was a sharp decrease in the commodity prices. This was detrimental to Latin America, and the nations have not been able to pull themselves out of their depressed economies yet. The United States has continued to funnel funds into Latin America in the hopes of a turn-around, but so far, the U.S. has only lost money, and Latin America has only accrued higher bills.

In the face of overpopulation problems, tremendous corruption on high government levels, an increasing devaluation of Latin American currencies, and in Mexico's case, an oil glut, the future for Latin America is grim. The options for the United States are not bright, and there is a need for both Latin America and the United States to boost the economies in the Latin American nations.

The United States has some choices in the actions it can take. First, the U.S. could lend Latin America more money in hopes of boosting the sagging economies into at least workable ones. Once the economies are back on their feet, the money that the nations owe can be repaid. This solution will probably do nothing but make Latin America ever more dependent upon the U.S., and make it harder to become self-reliant. The second choice would entail cancelling the debts owed to the United States in some cases, and in others it would entail lowering the amount of money due to a more manageable sum. This plan however would leave the U.S. bankers for the most part unpaid, which could lead to bankruptcy.

Latin America's debt is a problem of extreme complexity that has no end in sight. Both the United States and the debtor nations are going to be in greater economic difficulty if the loans cannot be paid, but so far, there have been no answers to a problem that millions of people desperately want solved.

Who's Breaking the Law?

BY KATRINA KELLEY

The Sanctuary movement was developed to aid Central American refugees in their efforts to flee the violence and persecution of their countries.

Sanctuary, although nondenominational, is most often run through churches. Although universities, towns, and states have also declared themselves official public sanctuaries for Central American refugees.

The objective of public sanctuaries is to "protect, defend and advocate" the rights of Central American refugees.

In addition to helping the refugees, Sanctuary aims to educate North Americans with the testimonies of the refugees, and to eventually change the U.S. government's treatment of the refugees.

Hundreds of people, including many priests and ministers have risked being jailed to work with Sanctuary.

Yet with the humanitarian objective of protecting refugees from the civil wars of their countries the Sanctuary movement is illegal. Many Sanctuary workers have been persecuted for their involvement with refugees.

In Central America, refugees are subversives; here they're deportable illegal alians. If you aid refugees in Central America you become a subversive or dead. If you aid them here you become a felon. (The Chicago Religious Task Force on Central America.)

Closer examination proves that the U.S. government is really doing the law breaking in its treatment of the refugees.

Under our Constitution, Article VI, Section 2, we are bound to the treaties that our government enters into. In 1955 President Eisenhower signed the Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Civilian Persons in Time of War. Article III of this Geneva Convention forbids all parties of a civil war from committing violence to the life of civilians. And in Article XXXIII the Convention says that no government that has signed the convention "shall expel or return a refugee, in any manner whatsoever, to the frontiers or territories of a country where his life or freedom will be threatened on account of his race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group or political opinion."

The 1968 United Nations Protocol Relating to the Status of Refugees and the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights also bind the U.S. to protection of refugees. These laws say that a refugee, no matter how many countries he/she crossed to get here, can't be sent back by the U.S. government.

Some may argue that for population and economic reasons, our government can no longer afford to abide by these laws. However, our government continues to grant asylum to people fleeing Communist countries. The refugees fleeing from countries with governments we support, although their lives are far more endangered, are far less likely to receive asylum.

This leads to the conclusion that foreign policy, not the individuals situation, dictates our government's response to a refugee.

Another policy called Extended Voluntary Departure (EVD) requires the government not to deport somebody, even if they entered the U.S. illegally, if that person is from a country with "widespread fighting, destruction and breakdown of public services and order."

In the past our government has granted EVD to people from Poland, Ethiopa, Afghanistan, Lebanon, Uganda, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Vietnam and many other countries. Yet now our government refuses to grant EVD to people from El Salvador. The government justifies this by saying that in some parts of El Salvador there is less violence than in others.

Under the 1980 Refugee Act, the number of refugees which should be admitted each year to the U.S. is determined. For the year 1983, 2,000 refugee visas were allotted Latin America—six were granted. Four went to Cubans, two to Argentinians.

Our government continues to ignore all of these policies by deporting Central American refugees and then accuses Sanctuary workers of involvement in illegal activities, or civil disobedience.

Thomas Jefferson wrote, "Whenever any form of government becomes destructive...it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it..."

Make Your Opinions Count

Raise Social Consciousness

Improve Global Awareness

Bring Activism Back To Life

Win Friends & Influence People

Contribute to the Disparaging Eye

Burned Out and Abused

Volume 2 of the Disparaging Eye comes to a close with this issue. Burned out and abused most of us move on to bigger, maybe better things with the new year. We remain a little disappointed that despite our best efforts, student activism refused to present itself on print and continued in its round-a-bout hollow manner, providing a cause but presenting no meaning to the Colorado College community. Although the founders of this great periodical, who were torn between maintaining an independent journal of unsupervised thought or creating a staid legacy controlled from above, decided to place The Eye under the auspices of Cutler Board we still managed a modicum of credibility (at least with our parents). We urge those who wish to establish a wide reaching campus consciousness on topics of social and political importance to contribute to during the upcoming semester, to help make it through a difficult transition phase for The Eye.

We place our faith in Brian Smith to continue and improve on our tradition of attempted objectivity and creative journalism. He needs your creative input to help him through the next five months with The Eye. In trying to establish a base of support, we have reached out to all campus perspectives and come up empty. We wish Brian the best of luck in providing ample opportunity for those who wish to voice opinions in such a far reaching and accessible forum as the one we have established.

—Munir Meghjee
—Peter Scott

Smith continued from pg. 2

reasonable pace, creating new jobs and more wealth. Assuming our congressmen and the president can get our government's fiscal house in order, the future may be even brighter than the past, for a variety of reasons.

First and foremost, America is part of a growing, dynamic and increasingly integrated world economy. The Ricardian notion of comparative advantage has now taken shape. Assuming that countries do not put a halt to the relatively free flow of goods and capital, competition among countries will ensure that individual enterprises, and nations as a whole, will become as productive as is humanly possible. America will HAVE to become more productive in order to compete. Given America's very efficient economic system, with its built-in incentives, American productivity will most likely rise. And as we all know, increases in productivity are the key to increases in the standard of living. America's astounding growth in its standard of living during the last 50 years has been the result of large increases in productivity.

Changing demographics also promise a bright future. Our generation represents the end of the "baby boom" and the beginning of the "baby bust." America's birth rate has experienced a steady decline in the last 20 years, with the result being that the rate of labor force expansion has slowed and will continue to slow. Thus labor will become a more scarce commodity (some areas of the country are already experiencing labor shortages), and will therefore find itself in a position to command a higher wage. This is especially true for skilled labor (i.e. college graduates). As our economy becomes more technologically advanced (with capital becoming an ever-more-important factor of production), skilled labor, especially highly-skilled labor from the top academic institutions (such as CC), will be able to command higher incomes for their services.

True, American society faces many problems and challenges. Many members of our society have not experienced the fruits of our economic system. Our high level of material consumption has brought about negative side-effects, such as some serious environmental problems. But America is not a utopia, nor can it ever become a utopia. American society has some serious problems it must face up to. But we have achieved a level of freedom and prosperity which most of the human race can presently only dream of. Most of us have a lot to be thankful for, and most of us have very bright futures. The holiday season represents a time of reflection and a time of celebration, for all that we do have, as individuals and as a society. So while you're kicking back and reading this optimistic commentary, throw another log on the fire, uncork the champagne and celebrate! As John Naisbitt once said of the '80s, "God, what a fantastic time to be alive!" From yours truly, Happy Holidays everybody.

Lopez continued from pg. 3

capitalism, the alternative lies in the rare demonstrations of political activists. Both thought and action must plank off the rotten timber of unjust hypocrisies. Collective phenomena sways unjustly upon individual rights when an unexamining elite mandates economic slavery and prevents opposing political expressions simply by an unqualified power of ordinances and base law.

In our own comprehension, the utility of government is at most an instrument, not completely a bludgeon of conservatism, nor completely a lighthouse of Liberalism. We conveniently discover ourselves waving in the forces of both ideologies. This is only appropriate. A philosopher once remarked that the sound of thinking is in the clash of ideas. Echoes of joy and sorrow move freedom, we wane at the opportunity to voice our just perceptions of Life. That South Africa is a land of much natural wealth and resources and is required to recognize its political foundation in the form of a Shantytown is a reflection of a historically imbalanced economic polity. It reminds one of "Soylent Green," of jelly slurpers aloof in the skyscrapers of leadership, whilst the dusty derelicts must feed upon each other below. Our part in this support of the South African governments' towering inadequacy must cease. If we can not adequately assess their dilemmas, at least let us not contribute to it mindlessly.

Happy Holidays - from the Staff

Makarechian continued from pg. 3

on education is limited by tax dollar inflows. What governments squeeze from the taxpayers is funnelled through extensive bureaucracies. Politicians with the most power get the most dollars for their districts. The ones with the most power are usually the ones from the wealthiest districts. The remaining pennies fall to the poor, providing minimal educational resources. So what a poor taxpayer must pay for state-education may not in the long run approximate what he receives in return. Compulsory education laws force all students to remain in their third-rate schools with those with no desire for any education. The teachers have a captive audience—and little incentive to improve conditions. The result: a majority of the students lose interest, and end up on the street.

Faced with the debacle of public education, a family with limited resources may seek alternative education. But private schools are likely out of reach. Few families can foot the bill for their children's education—in private schools—and the bill for everyone elses—through public education taxes. In addition, teachers' lobby groups have helped to erect strict barriers on the number of private institutions. If low-income private education were available, they would have to compete by teaching better. Then we might find out how bad they really are.

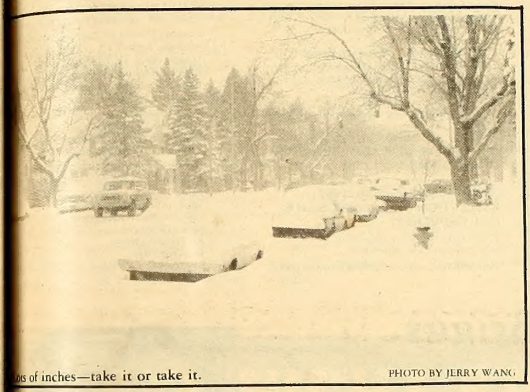
Current social programs at first glance seem to result from the evils of capitalism. But the above-average radical knows that social problems result from the evils of government. Fundamental economic relations have not changed much through the nation's history, but state intervention has. Welfare programs have turned into ineffective bureaucracies. Income programs that were meant to protect the workers have kept them down. Public housing and education are dismal failures. 200 years of history have proven that Big Brother isn't the answer to our problems—less government is.

THE COLORADO COLLEGE

CATALYST

Volume 21, No. 1 16 January 1987

King Holiday Activities Announced



os of inches—take it or take it. PHOTO BY JERRY WANG

The Rev. James Smith, Sr. and Roy Younker, Co-Chairman of the El Paso County Martin Luther King Jr. Holiday Committee announced the schedule of events surrounding the National Holiday (Monday the 19th), honoring the life and work of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.. Both Smith and Younker emphasized that the celebration would involve much of the community, including the Colorado College.

Regarding the creation of the Holiday, Smith observed that "since Reagan has come to office, there has been a set back for certain groups in their pursuit of freedom and justice." Smith felt, "the Congress declared this holiday to keep the nation striving forward," curbing this backward trend of recent years.

The real essence of Martin Luther King, Jr.'s work, according to Smith, was that he "tried to remind and awaken the people so that they will know what equal justice is." Dr. King "challenged America to seek the Dream of the human spirit-justice and equality." Doctor Gerald Tree of First United Methodist Church clarified that Dr. King "not only helped the blacks, but also liberated the whites from a lot of the boxes they had enclosed themselves in." Sindi Medar-Gould of the CC Black Student Union emphasized that since the Civil Rights Movement of the 1960's, not only has the minority movement ceased to progress, but that "much of what they achieved has eroded away."

The highlight of the observance will be the Candle Light March from Acacia Park to Shove Chapel. Once at Shove, the Rev. Kenneth Burton will lead a convocation. The BSU, which has contributed considerable energy and money toward the organization of the March, will then read excerpts from Dr. King's letter from the Birmingham jail.

The BSU is also sponsoring a workshop and lecture, to be lead by Maulana Karenga, Director of the Institute of Pan-African Studies at the University of California, Riverside. Karenga is the author of several books, including The Husia, and Introduction to Black Studies, a renowned work considered the bible of the Black Movement. The workshop will take place on Monday the 19th from 1-3 p.m. in Cossitt. Titled, "Organizing in Black and Brown Communities," the workshop will discuss various aspects of coalition building within the community—under what

Continued Page 2

Donahoo Athlete of the Year

Kate Donahoo, a junior at Colorado College, has been named national Athlete of the Year in the sport of judo, the United States Olympic Committee announced today.

Donahoo recently won a silver medal in the 56-kilogram class at the United States International Invitational Judo Championships and was instrumental in leading the U.S. women's team to the North American Judo Confederation Team Championships.

The Las Vegas, Nev., native captured her second consecutive collegiate title in 1986 when she also won the National Junior Olympic, National USJA and USJF junior women's championships and U.S. Olympic Festival gold medal in the 123-pound category. The victories all occurred within four months of each other, a feat that no other American female judoka has accomplished.

Donahoo, 24, was granted the first-ever scholarship by the National Judo Institute in Colorado Springs. She has consistently proven that she is deserving of the honor, having displayed the character and talent demanded of those who receive scholarships.

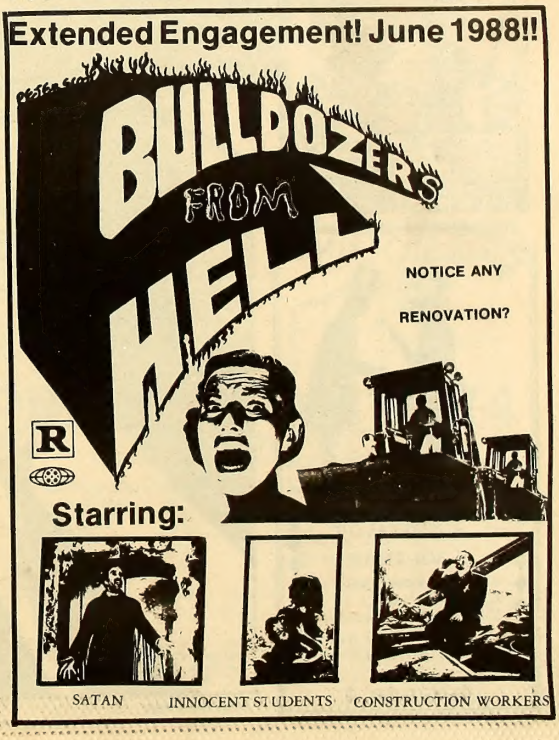
Renowned Historian Speaks

Visiting Fulbright lecturer Lord Asa Briggs spoke in Packard Hall last Tuesday on the Victorian experience in England. Known as one of the world's foremost Victorian historians, Briggs has spoken throughout England and the United States. He has also played a major role in shaping post World War II English higher education by serving as vice-chancellor of the University of Sussex and leading it to national prominence. He now holds the honorary position of Chancellor of the Open University and serves as Provost of Worcester College in Oxford England.

Briggs opened his speech by describing the awesome length and scope of Victoria's reign from 1837 to 1901. She was born only 18 years after the Napolenic Wars (1819), but died only 13 years before World War I. Briggs divided the Victorian eve into 3 chronological periods. 1837-1851 (the era of precipices and ravines) was filled with economic uncertainty, social conflict, and political inconsistencies. Briggs labeled the period from 1851 to the mid 1870's as the plateau era for its highpoints in literature, science, and poetry. The aristocracy was secure, the middle class prosperous, and the working class income rose. The late 1870's through 1901 though saw a return of the social and political uncertainties that permeated the earlier era of ravines and precipices. Late Victorian society began to question its Golden Age values.

Lord Briggs criticized earlier Victorian historians as being caught up in Victorian stereotypes that generally were not true. He decided to write 3 books on Victorian people, cities, and things to give a complete view of society free from the past stereotypes. He has completed the first

Continued Page 2



What's News?

Questioning the Issues

As the 100th United States Congress convened a number of days ago, the Nicaraguan Contra-Aid debate began to flourish. This debate is highly controversial, and may have long lasting effects on how the U.S. conducts its Latin American foreign policy. It is therefore important that we ask a few questions now, during the debate, while we have a chance to evaluate and possibly reform our current policy.

Here are a few questions with which we must concern ourselves. What is our final goal in enacting a foreign policy toward Nicaragua? Do we want military control, and as a result, political control? Do we just hope to be a continuing menace that prevents the Sandinista regime from obtaining legitimacy as the governing force? or are we hoping to force the Sandinistas to power-share with the Contras?

If it's military victory we desire, how do we suppose to achieve it without a full invasion, that necessitates many U.S. troops and therefore U.S. casualties? Is such an invasion worth the price in lives lost on either side? With such a victory, can we expect the Nicaraguan people to reach a majority concensus on the democratic system we impose? Or shall such an invasion be the midwife to chaos?

If being a thorn in the Sandinistas' side is what we long for, then what do we expect the Nicaraguan people to do in the meantime? While we remain a military and political menace, do we care if the Nicaraguan economy further crumbles and more and more people remain deprived of basic needs? As the situation gets more desperate, will not the chances for peaceful negotiation between Nicaraguan power contenders diminish?

If we simply hope to legitimize the Contras as an opposition group that should be allowed to power-share with the Sandinistas, why have we pursued so few diplomatic channels? Why has the U.S. not only avoided negotiations with the Sandinistas, but withdrawn as well its support of the Contadora process?

It is understandable that most Americans would prefer not to have the Nicaraguans export revolution to other Central American nations, or allow Soviet or Cuban military bases in the region. Yet do we know for certain that just this will happen if we do not intervene? How well do we understand Latin America, her history and political culture? Have we asked these pertinent questions, or have we not outlined the debate, to a large extent, as either, "for or against communism in Nicaragua?"

As Americans it is our decision. This should not be a Republican this, or Democrat that, issue. It should be an informed debate that outlines a specific plan of action, or inaction, that points to a feasable, concrete goal. So far the U.S. has failed to match a workable means to a definite end, and neither has reflected a true understanding of the historical and political culture of either Central America or Nicaragua. We should all be students of the nations we propose to affect, and so far, class has been dismissed.

—News Editors

Martin Luther King, Jr. National Holiday

Calendar of Activities

"Living the Dream: Let Freedom Ring"

THURSDAY, JANUARY 15, 1987
PEACE AND JUSTICE DAY

Human Relations Workshop (Ft. Carson)
Main NCO Club - Instructor Carrolle A. Rushford. 8-10 a.m. (Soldiers Only)

10:00 a.m. - Community of Colorado Springs and El Paso County, opening ceremonies in honor of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. First United Methodist Church 420 N. Nevada Ave.

Teach-In
"The Life and Work of Martin Luther King, Jr." (All School Districts)

FRIDAY, JANUARY 16, 1987

7 a.m. - Community Prayer Breakfast in honor of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. First United Methodist Church. 420 N. Nevada. Cost is $5.00 per person.

Guest Speakers: Bishop Richard C. Hanifen, Diocese of Colorado Springs
Dr. Harold Terry - Superintendent of Harrison School District 2
Dr. Michael Kneale - Superintendent of Colorado Springs School District 11
Rev. Verdell Taylor, Assistant Pastor, Payne Chapel, A.M.E. Church

Musical Selection: Mrs. Betty Wainright

11:00 a.m. - Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., Memorial Luncheon. Ft. Carson Officers Club (Invitation Only)

SUNDAY, JANUARY 18, 1987
REFLECTION ON DR. KING'S LIFE (ALL CHURCHES)

12:00 Noon - "Let Freedom Ring"
The Chiming of all Church Bells.

Memorial Service Cadet Chapel (open to public)

Guest Speaker: Dr. Gerald Durley, Co... to President of Clark College, Atlanta... Assistant Pastor, Ebenezer Baptist Ch... Member of the Board of Directors of t... King Center for Non-Violent for Social...

5:00 p.m. - Candle Light March in hono... Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. from Acacia... Colorado College. Shove Chapel

6:00 p.m. - Tribute to Dr. King. Shove C...

MONDAY, JANUARY 19, 1987
NATIONAL HOLIDAY OBSERVA...

Community Encouragement to fly the American Flag.

A plea to the community to feed the ... in the name of Dr. Martin Luther King, ...

12-1 p.m. - "Light for Dr. King" (Turning on of car lights)

12 o'clock - El Paso County Ministerial ... Tribute to Dr. King, Jr. at New Jerusalem... sionary Baptist Church, 5483 Alegre Ro... CO. Guest Speaker: Rev. James D. Peas... Hope Baptist Church, Denver, Colorado

Other Dates & Activities

Fort Carson Prayer Breakfast will be co... at MSU Dining Facilities the week of Ja... 12-20, 1987. Civilian Employees & Dep...

Coloring Contest Ft. Carson Children Ce... 1-3 p.m., January 15.

January 20 or 23, 1987 - Buffet Luncheo... High Country Inn in honor of Dr. King. ... Band will play. (Open to Military/Civilian assigned to USAFA)

USAFA's Base Newspaper will publish ... articles on Dr. King during the week of Ja... These articles will be provided by the Eq... Employment Committee.

During the week of his birth, the Comm... Center Library will have a memorabilia d...

Please call the following numbers for additional information:

City of Colorado Springs
Human Relations	57...
Air Force Academy	47...
Peterson Field	55...
Fort Carson	57...

Lord Briggs

(Continued from Page 1)

two but has spent 20 years trying to finish the third. He emphasized the many fields of knowledge one must be familiar with to undertake such a large endeavor, but pointed out many fascinating tidbits of information one comes across such as the near obsession of Victorian society with matches. Briggs ended his lecture by crediting history with providing a never-ending source of wonder and happiness to his life.

Mike Fraterelli

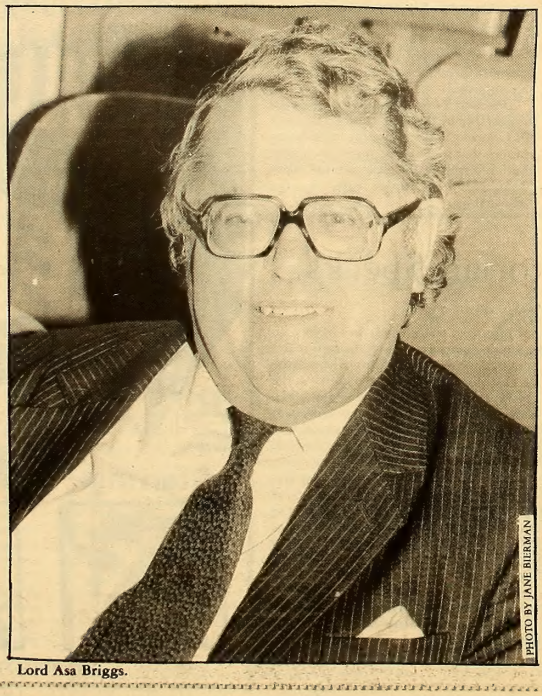


PHOTO BY JANE BIERMAN

Lord Asa Briggs.

Dr. King

(Continued from Pa...

circumstances can Whites, Blacks, ... Mexican-americans effectively w... together in a consociational environm... Karenga's lecture takes place Mo... evening at 7 p.m. in Gates Common Ro... He will speak on "The Legacy of ... Martin Luther King Jr.: Historical ... Current Relevance."

As Dr. King stressed the importan... community involvement and sharing ... addition to education, the BSU wil... placing containers in most dorms over... weekend, for donations of non-perish... foods. The local Share and Care group ... distribute these donations to the nee... Colorado Springs. Marshalls are ... needed for the Candle Light March ... those interested in helping, call S... Medar-Gould ext. 215, Richard Walker ... 336, or Lezlie Roach ext. 252.

Peter W. L...

Urban Revolutions?

—Three Part Lecture Series

ve you ever sneaked cautiously into the hours of Sunday morning wondering if world would survive until the year
00? Have you bantered with friends over gs and folk guitar about starting the olution that would save us all? Or did abandon all that radical ideology when graduated from high school because it s time to prepare for the real world? It is e to take a second look at the real world.
ording to a global study completed der the Carter administration, if we intain the present rate of technological elopment, the earth will not be habitable as we know it by the year 2000.
e face the choice of dramatic social nge or a future of underground sistence at best.

Walt Reiner, a professor of Urban Studies in Chicago who is deeply concerned about the future of our world, will be delivering a series of lectures on the possibilities of true revolution in modern technological society at Colorado College from January 21-13. His topics are: "What has Happened to Revolutionary Movements?" (Gates, Wednesday, January 21, 3:00); "Growth, Efficiency and the Need for Change" (Gates, Thursday, January 22, 3:00); and "Theology and Revolutionary Possibilities" (Gates, Friday, January 23, 3:00). Living and working in Chicago for over 20 years, Walt devotes his time to researching our technological society and advocating for a necessary revolution. He talks with people from all walks of life, befriending corporate heads as well as drug pushers from the notoriously crime-ridden public housing projects. He integrates the day to day news of the city with perspectives from highly acclaimed lay theologian and social critic, Jocques Ellul, with whom he has met frequently in the last 20 years.

Walt will also speak to Shove Chapel Council for lunch at noon on Thursday, January 22 about freedom, gender, and values. He can also present "Bringing It Home," a personal story of how he helped families from the housing project, Cabrini Green to the small, white town Valparaiso, Indiana. Students and faculty are welcome. Please contact Dixie Goodenough x245 or Judy Alexander for more information.

Dixie Goodenough

International Student Forum

Wednesday, January 14, 1987 the first ternational Student Symposium was ld in Gates Common Room. Jorge stamante from Mexico, Gina Calderon
m Costa Rica, Irene Lei from Bolivia, ina Lorenzo from Spain and Celia Silva
m Brazil participated.
Each student gave a brief talk discussing hat he or she considered important about eir country. Jorge Bustamante discussed exico's struggle to turn its economy ound. He briefly outlined Mexico's story as a means to explain why Mexico s economic problems today. He also scussed how the United States has influenced, and continues to influence, Mexico's economy.

Gina Calderon gave a broad overview of Costa Rica, stressing its beauty and the peaceful nature of her people. She explained that Costa Rica seeks to educate its citizens to develop a democracy rather than to use force or military rule. In fact, Costa Rica abolished its army at the end of its civil war in 1948 and has not formed one since. Gina especially emphasized that although Costa Rica borders Nicaragua it is a peaceful country that has remained basically unchanged by the neighboring conflict.

In describing Bolivia's government, Irene Lei said that the presidents change with frequency, some staying in power only a year. She was also apparently amazed at how the congressmen get elected in her country. She reads in the paper when a new member of congress takes office, but has never seen a congressional election actually take place in Bolivia.

The students not only discussed their governments. They also discussed the status of women, the values of society, the major religious beliefs and the educational systems in their respective countries.

Jean Anderson

Administrators Retire

Margaret Van Horn has succeeded Harriet Todd as the new Assistant Registrar. Ms. Todd, who retired on December 31st, served in her position for twenty years. After spending some time travelling around the country, Todd will make a decision about where to live during her retirement.

Margaret Van Horn begins her eighth year at CC in her new capacity as Assistant Registrar. Previously, she worked with Vice President Chamberlain for four years. She notes that she wanted to move to the Registrar's office in part to expose herself to a different segment of people at the college. Working with the Vice-President, she hadn't had the opportunity to know students as she worked primarily with administrators. Ms. Van Horn looks forward to the "interesting change."

During her last three weeks at the Registrar's office, Harriet Todd helped orient Van Horn, who spent the first week of this semester on her own, as all students registered for the new term.

Business Manager, Don Fulghum retired on December 19th after serving the college for twenty-three years. As Business Manager, he served as Accountant for the College, doing taxes and acting as Purchasing Agent. David Lord, from Orlando Florida, arrives February 2nd to replace Fulghum. Lord previously served as the Associate Vice President for Business at Rollins College in Winter Park, Florida.

Don Fulghum plans to retire with his wife in Colorado Springs, but will spend some time in Phoenix where he will aid with his son's computer company.

LATE NIGHT SPECIAL!
One 12" two topping pizza for only $4.99 plus tax! (After 9 pm)

Now from Domino's Pizza, it's the late night special. Any night of the week beginning at 9pm, you can get a 12" 2-topping pizza for only $4.99! (tax not included) Just $4.99 for a fresh, custom-made, 2-topping pizza delivered hot to your door in 30 minutes or less—guaranteed! So when you get the late night hungries—no problem! Just call Domino's Pizza. One call does it all to make your late night special. Offer expires February 28, 1987.

We accept checks. Prices do not include tax. Our drivers carry less than $20.00.

All Pizzas Include Our Special Blend of Sauce and 100% Real Cheese.

Our Superb Cheese Pizza
12" Cheese $5.65
16" Cheese $7.95

Additional Items
Pepperoni, Mushrooms, Ham, Onions, Green Peppers, Black Olives, Pineapple, Sausage, Ground Beef, Jalapeno Peppers,
Extra Cheese (1 item)
Double Cheese (2 items)
Thick Crust, Extra Sauce
Each Item
12" item $ .79
16" item $1.19

$3
If your pizza does not arrive within 30 minutes, present this coupon to the driver for $3.00 off that order—right then.
For safety reasons, if roads are icy, snowpacked, or flooded, please add 15 minutes to our guarantee.
One coupon per pizza.
30 minute guarantee good with any offer.
Fast, Free Delivery™
Good at listed locations.
DOMINO'S PIZZA®

Coke Classic® 12 oz. cans
Coca-Cola Classic

©1986 Domino's Pizza, Inc.

$4.99
Order a 12" two-topping pizza for only $4.99 from 9 pm until closing, any night of the week!
Offer expires February 28, 1987.
No coupon necessary.
Fast, Free Delivery™
Good at listed locations.
DOMINO'S PIZZA®

TWO 12" PIZZAS FOR $9.14
ONE TOPPING
(TAX NOT INCLUDED)
Please see below for other selections.

One of the greatest offers ever from Domino's Pizza—two 12" pizzas for the price of a large! Twice the pizza for one low price!

For a limited time, order any two 12" pizzas (they don't have to be the same!), and you'll get them for the price of one 16". The price will be determined by the pizza with the most toppings.

Two 12" pizzas for the price of one 16" pizza!

Superb Cheese	$7.95
1 topping	$9.14
2 toppings	$10.33
3 toppings	$11.52
4 toppings	$12.71
5 toppings	$13.90
6 toppings	$15.09

Twice the pizza for one low price—two 12" pizzas for the price of a large!
And, hot to your door in 30 minute or less, GUARANTEED!

Offer may expire anytime

635-1511

Open for Lunch Every Day
11 am - 12 am Sun.-Thurs.
11 am - 1 am Fri.-Sat.

Limited delivery area.

Biology Field Programs Discussed

On Tuesday, January 12th the Biology department held a brown bag lunch seminar in Olin 100 in order to provide CC students with information regarding summer and semester-long research programs.

Three faculty members and two students spoke about programs in which they had participated—Biology Professor Jack Carter on the ACM Wilderness Station in Minnesota, Chemistry Professor Nate Bower on the Oak Ridge, Tennessee program, Biology Major Dori Borgjesson on the ACM Costa Rica Semester, senior Robbie Schwartz on the Sea Semester at Woods Hole, and Biology Professor Ron Capen on a new CC summer program taught at Buzzard's Bay, Massachusetts in conjunction with Lloyd Environment Center.

Processor Carter introduced the meeting as an opportunity "to get students together so they can find out who to contact" regarding various summer and semester-long programs and internships.

During the meeting a variety of programs were mentioned. Some not covered by the speakers included: The Associated Colleges of the Midwest (ACM) programs such as Wild Field Station, Tropical Field Research, Indian Studies, and Japan Studies.

Additional programs mentioned were: Bodega Bay in cooperation with the University of California, Rocky Mountain Biology Lab, University of Minnesota program, Iowa Lakeside Lab, and internships with the Aspen Center for Environmental Studies and the Denver Botanical Garden.

Professor Carter also spoke of the CC summer program which offers a variety of field research programs at a low price. "In fact, going to CC in the summer runs about 1/2 the cost of normal tuition," he said.

At the meeting's end Carter again emphasized the variety of programs open for student participation. "The opportunities are endless, but it's up to you to decide what you want to do. Take charge, communicate with your professors, he advised.

Alec Rekow

Photo of the Week

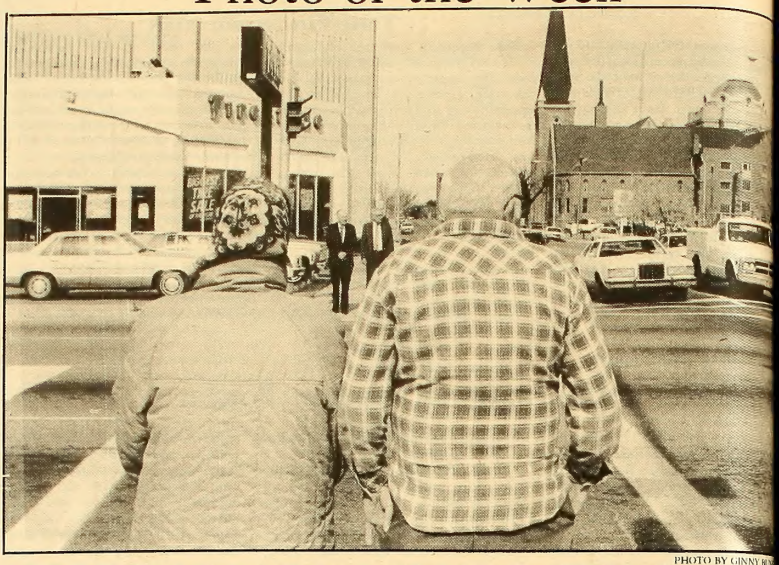

PHOTO BY GINNY BOU

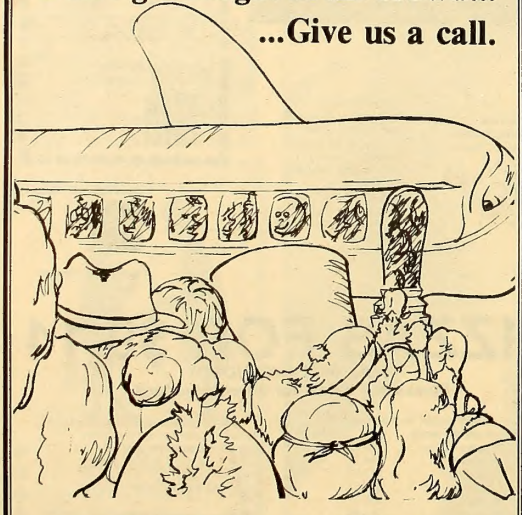
Writing Tutors Sought

The Writing Center, located in the first floor of Cossitt Hall, offers help with writing at any stage of the writing process. Students can obtain help between 10:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. daily at the Writing Center. Call ext. 742 to make appointment. In addition, tutors available on weeknights in the basemen Tutt Library between 7:00 and 10:00 p

Director, Robin Root is currently hir four new tutors for the '87-'88 school y Students who like to write and en talking with other people about th writing are encouraged to apply. (Tut are payed for their work.) Stop by t Writing Center to pick up an applicati All applications must be in by the end Block 5.

Destination Europe?

Don't get caught in the crowd...
...Give us a call.



TAYLOR TRAVEL
"Your Campus Travel Agency"
818 N. Tejon 636-3871

the Date Bar a Restaurant
Serving UNIQUE HOMEMADE RECIPES

10% off with CC ID

Serving Breakfast & Lunch
Mon.-Sat.
7 am - 4 pm
24 E. Kiowa 578-5693

the Stagecoach Inn
702 Manitou Ave.
Manitou Springs

Join us.....
And let our affordable elegance make every occasion a special occasion.
Enjoy fine traditional fare and our chef's specialties in an attractive setting on Fountain Creek. Start your meal with a home-made soup, complement it with a premium wine and top it off with a dessert fresh from our oven.
Join us.....and enjoy!

Lunch from 11:30 and Dinner from 5 Monday through Saturday
Champagne Brunch from 10:30 and Dinner from 4 Sunday
Reservations 685-9335
Banquet Facilities On All Occasions

Tap the Kegs—

REEK UPDATE 16 JANUARY 1987

ATERNITY RUSH SCHEDULE:
FRIDAY, 16 JANUARY 1987
7:30 - 9:30 P.M.
Beta Theta Pi
Phi Delta Theta
9:45 - 11:45 P.M.
Kappa Sigma
Phi Gamma Delta
Sigma Chi

SATURDAY, 17 JANUARY 1987
1:00 - 3:00 P.M.
Kappa Sigma
Phi Gamma Delta
Sigma Chi
3:15 - 5:15 P.M.
Beta Theta Pi
Phi Delta Theta

SUNDAY, 18 JANUARY 1987
3:00 - 5:00 P.M.
All Houses Open

MONDAY 19 JANUARY 1987
5:30 - 7:30 P.M.
First Seating Preferential Dinner
7:45 - 9:45 P.M.
Second Seating Preferential Dinner

TUESDAY 20 JANUARY 1987 —
WEDNESDAY 28 JANUARY 1987
n up to become a pledge at the House
e received a bid from and wish to accept.

The Interfraternity Council invites all reshmen and other prospective rushees to rticipate in fraternity rush this weekend. ush is the most important time for any reek organization because the future of the fraternity or sorority is dependent on the success of rush and the formation of a great pledge class. Rushees should know that each house is trying to impress you just as much as you are trying to impress them. It is very important that as many questions as possible be posed during rush because the only way to truly know what a fraternity is all about is to talk to its members.

Be objective when visiting the different fraternities. Most stereotypes you may have heard are probably wrong or blown out of proportion. There are differences between the fraternities at C.C., and each house has its disadvantages as well as advantages.

Be sure to visit all of the houses. The rush schedule is designed to allow rushees the chance to see each house, and fraternity members expect rushees to go to the other houses.

When you have started to make your decision about the houses you are interested in, tell the brothers in those houses. If you like a particular fraternity, you must express your interest. Also be sure and meet as many members as possible. This makes the arduous task of selection on Sunday night much easier for the brothers, and it increases your chances of receiving a bid from that fraternity.

As with any organization that selects its members, there will be disappointments and hurt feelings on Monday morning when the bids are distributed. The selection process the fraternities go through is long and thorough, but sometimes mistakes are made, so please understand.

All things aside, rush should be fun and informative. Do not feel uptight; be yourself and enjoy yourself, and keep an open mind.

Rush the Frats

Tune in next week for a full listing of this semester's student group activities.

CONGRATULATIONS
Newly Elected CCCA Members
— Here are the newly elected members —

President: Jon-Marc Patterson
Financial Vice Prez: Chris Pounds
Executive V.P.: Dave Burnstein
Members - at - Large
Allison Anderson Kim Crozier
Dirk Dykes Sindi-Medar Gould
Seth King Timothy I. Metz
(Schlubb) Mark Paradise Ann
Smith Richard Walker

SKYWAY VIDEO
Rentals & Sales
577-9047
Hours:
Monday-Thursday
10:30-7
Friday & Saturday
10:30-8
Closed Sunday

- Foreign Films (Excellent Selection)
- Classic Films
- Operas
- Musicals

As well as an extensive selection of

- Current Releases

— No Club Or Membership Fees —
Tuesday Special - $1.49 Rentals
Sunday Rentals - Free

Skyway Plaza • S. 8th & Arcturus
(feel free to call for directions)

PIZZA SHUTTLE COMING AT YOU!

PIZZA SHUTTLE
Where The Pizza Is Out Of This World

Welcomes Back Colorado College With Not 1, Not 2, Not 3, But

4 BIG DEALS!

FREE DELIVERY!

578-8686

FREE DELIVERY!

2573 Airport Road

Special May Expire Anytime

The Gemini Program
Two Pizza For One Low Price

Two 10" Cheese Pizzas Only	5.89
Two 14" Cheese Pizzas Only	8.89

PIZZA SHUTTLE Guarantees To Deliver Your Pizza Within 30 Minutes Or You Get $3.00 Off Your Order.*

*Road & Traffic Conditions Permitting

Single Pizza Prices:

	12"	16"
Cheese	5.00	7.20
1 Topping	5.75	8.30
Additional Toppings	.75	1.10

Open Daily At 11:00

Our Drivers Carry Less Than $20
Tax Not Included

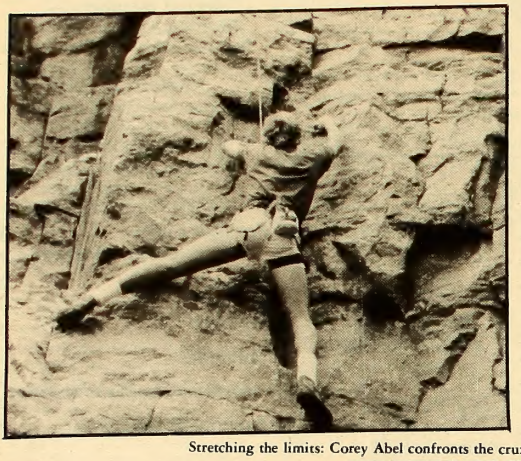
BIG DEAL #1
$1.00 OFF Any Order
ONE COUPON PER ORDER
NOT GOOD WITH ANY OTHER COUPON OR SPECIAL
EXPIRES 2/28/87

BIG DEAL #2
$2.00 Six Pack
16 Oz. Drinks Of Your Choice
ONE COUPON PER ORDER
NOT GOOD WITH ANY OTHER COUPON OR SPECIAL
EXPIRES 2/28/87

BIG DEAL #3
$3.00 OFF Any 16" Pizza
With 4 Or More Toppings
ONE COUPON PER ORDER
NOT GOOD WITH ANY OTHER COUPON OR SPECIAL
EXPIRES 2/28/87

BIG DEAL #4
$4.00 TOTAL For A 14" Single Item Pizza
With This Coupon Only
Thick Crust Only 50¢ Extra
ONE COUPON PER ORDER
NOT GOOD WITH ANY OTHER COUPON OR SPECIAL
EXPIRES 2/28/87

CC's Rock Climbing Traditio



Stretching the limits: Corey Abel confronts the crux.
PHOTO COURTESY OF COREY ABEL

Colorado College students and professors have a long legacy of climbing the vertical soft sandstone of the Garden of the Gods. Due mainly to the aesthetic and environmental attitudes of a particular CC student and the rock characteristics of the Garden, climbing styles initiated in Colorado Springs differed greatly from the attitudes and techniques of climbers in the more popular, Boulder region. Returning from a Rhodes Scholarship to England in 1914, CC student Albert Ellingwood brought the European rock climbing tradition home and embarked on the first technical rock climbing the Garden of the Gods had witnessed.

Ellingwood learned from the locals in Wales and the Lake District in England an aesthetic approach to rock climbing. The emphasis in the U.K. at the time was a form of climbing which limited the use of pitons and equipment which protect and assist the skills of the lead climber. With a minimum of specialized equipment and a great deal of confidence, Ellingwood delicately put up routes of high quality on the gritty sandstone of the Garden by relying more on balance and poise than on ropes and pitons.

But environmental issues aside, piton availability was scarce, and climbing equipment was at a level of improvisation in these early days. In contrast to the imported, sticky rubber, shoes of the modern climber, Boucher and Twombly were often found using "double-gaited saddle cinchers as carabiners and climbed in army combat boots with leather soles."

By 1950, most of the obvious routes in the Garden had been climbed. The large chimneys, ledges and ramps had all seen repeated ascents. The eyes of the younger climbers were looking to the steep and smooth walls for ascents. Harvey T. Carter, son of a CC history professor, was one such young climber who was to become quite prolific if not controversial in the Pikes Peak region. Carter climbed with Boucher and was strongly influenced by the tradition which had been handed down by Ellingwood. Yet, in order to climb the new, steeper routes, another method of protecting the leader from falls was needed. Carter devised an innovative piton technique which provided sparse but adequate protection for the leader while also minimizing environmental impact.

"Both environmental and stylistics ethics direct the approach of climbing today."

Since the blank walls offered no cracks for pitons, Carter would drill holes into the soft rock and then drive a large angle piton into the small hole. These drilled-in pitons became permanent fixtures for all subsequent climbers to use. Carter's new technique virtually eliminated the environmental problem of damage to cracks which resulted from repeated insertion and removal of pitons, as was the custom in California and Boulder. "Fixed" protection became the norm on new routes in the Garden in the 1950's and thanks to Carter, it is still the most effective method in the 1980's.

However, Harvey Carter also brought some less than brilliant ideas to the climbing scene. Perhaps due to his military training at Fort Carson, Carter conceived and actualized the first National Championship meet for rock climbers in the mid 1950's. Climbing has traditionally been one of the few sporting activities which can be approached non-competitively. Yet a spirit of seriousness and machismo has invaded climbing circles and Carter was first to kindle this spirit when he won the event and crowned himself "Master of Rock Climbing." For thirty years organized competitions among climbers had never created much interest. But now the modern era with olympic training regimes winning over the attitudes of the climbing world, national and international climbing meets have become quite fashionable, most notably in California, France, Russia and both East and West Germany.

Along with overt competitions, climbing ethics have become a dominant issue for the modern climber. Both environmental and stylistic ethics direct the approach of climbing today. CC climbers at the Garden are seeing the effects of a once relatively obscure sport turn popular and exploitative as white gymnastic chalk has been banned and certain high-use sections of the park have become prohibited to rock climbing.

"...it is time that the modern climber rethink old ethical questions."

According to Ken Sims, a recent CC graduate who grew up climbing at the Garden, the park has in recent years become an example of what can happen when first ascents and personal glory run rampant and the environment pays the price. Due to a first-ascent-at-any-cost mentality where the rock becomes a battlefield for adolescent egos, climbers in the 1970's put up many routes which tradition would consider dubious style. Rappeling down the prospective route and "fixing" the protection prior to the first ascent became the new means which enabled modern climbers to push standards. However, because of this new ethic for first ascents, climbing routes began popping up like crab grass in areas which probably would have remained virgin had the traditional ethic survived. But the damage was not only to the environment. Attitudes of climbers became even more oriented towards success-at-the-summit.

In the 1920's and 1930's Robert Ormes joined the efforts of Ellingwood in the Garden and established routes of greater difficulty than the existing routes in Boulder. Both men later became professors at CC yet continued their vertical pursuits. During the 1940's Stanely Boucher and Vernon Twombly founded the Colorado College Mountain Club. Adhering to the British tradition which Ellingwood had embraced, Boucher and Twombly were sensitive to the soft rock conditions at the Garden and continued the environmental ethic of minimal piton use. Although Boulder area climbers at this time were using pitons extensively, to the point of rock scarring on some routes, these Colorado College climbers wanted to preserve the fragile and unique Front Range ecosystem of the Garden.

Since finding first ascents are almo thing of the past at an over-crow Garden, it is time that the modern clim rethink the old ethical questions wh Ellingwood must have pondered bef embarking on his first sandst adventures. Just back from a semester Wales, English major Randle "Dea Zuckermann reconfirmed the attitud climbers in the U.K. which Ellingwood found seventy years previous. Not only Zuckermann find climbers minimiz their reliance on specialized equipm and pushing their limits to the extrem very pure style, but he also discover wealth of people from grandmothers toddlers who climbed through all seas simply because of an aesthetic attracti vertical movement.

"CC climbers at the Garden have inherit a tradition which has lost touch with the aesthetic approach."

An aesthetic approach in climbing primarily a personal and pure Adventure is channeled through individual relationship with the which is not solely a push to the top. T aesthetic is an emphasis on the proces movement and not where that move ends up.

CC climbers at the Garden h inherited a tradition which has lost u with the aesthetic approach, leaving climber in the 1980's without a ro understanding of the possibilities involvement with the rock.

If climbing at the Garden is to beco sustainable in a fragile environment satisfying beyond glory impulse, too climber must look into the tradition wh has brought us to our present situation

An excellent resource for th interested in the history of climbing at Garden of the Gods should read: Cli Rock Climbing in Colorado, written by J Godfrey, Alpine House Publishing.

Scott Allen

Mountain Chalet
2 FOR 1 Ski Rentals
A Great Deal That Expires January 31st.
½ Price Ski Tune
Normally $12 (Expires January 31st).
CC's Outdoor Connection
266 North Tejon 633-0732
Downtown

Grand West
OUTFITTERS

GAMBLERS SALE

EVERYTHING IN THE STORE 30% OFF*
SPECIALS TO 70% OFF

CLOTHING • BOOTS • TELEMARK & BACKCOUNTRY SKI EQUIPMENT
PACKS • TENTS • SLEEPING BAGS

COLUMBIA GRAND CACHE ANORAK
GREAT FOR SKIING!
REG. $69.98 SALE $48.99

SOREL "CARIBOU" PAC BOOT
MENS REG. $76.00 SALE $53.20
WOMENS REG. $67.50 SALE $47.25

FISHER EUROPA 99 ST METAL EDGE BACKCOUNTRY SKI REG. $165.00 SALE $99.99	FISHER EUROPA 99 CROWN METAL EDGE WAXLESS SKI REG. $169.00 SALE $104.99	SWALLOW TR ALPINE TELEMARK SKI (cosmetic 2nds) REG. $180.00 SALE $69.99
PATAGONIA SYNCHILLA JACKET MENS & LADIES REG. $73.50 SALE $49.99	TELEMARK & X—C BOOTS ASOLO, MERRIL & ALPINA 30% OFF	CHOUINARD XCD BINDINGS REG. $39.50 SALE $26.99
EUREKA WINDRIVER II TENT 2-3 PERSON DOME REG. $140.00 SALE $104.00	EUREKA DOME 2-PERSON DOME REG. $110.00 SALE $64.99	NORTH FACE STOWAWAY GORE—TEX JACKET REG. $145.00 SALE $99.99

PATAGONIA, NORTH FACE, MARMOT, GREGORY, KARHU, FISHER, CHOUINARD, VUARNET, LOWE, MOONSTONE

FRI—JAN 16TH
HOURS 10:00 A.M. TO 7:00 P.M.
RED TAG SPECIALS ALL DAY
3-4:00 P.M. 10% DISCOUNT
4-5:00 P.M. 15% DISCOUNT
5-6:00 P.M. 20% DISCOUNT
6-7:00 P.M. 25% DISCOUNT

SAT — JAN 17TH
HOURS 10:00 A.M. TO 6:00 P.M.
RED TAG SPECIALS ALL DAY
12-1:00 P.M. 10% DISCOUNT
1-2:00 P.M. 15% DISCOUNT
2-3:00 P.M. 20% DISCOUNT
3-4:00 P.M. 30% DISCOUNT

SUN—JAN 18TH
HOURS 12:30 TO 4:30
RED TAG SPECIALS ALL DAY

30% DISCOUNTS
ALL DAY

Sale Merchandise Limited to Stock on Hand.
You Gamble on the Time and Price!
(30% OFF APPLIES DURING DESIGNATED HOURS ONLY)
RED—TAGGED MERCHANDISE DISCOUNTED FROM 30%—70% AS MARKED

Hourly discounts do not apply to red-tag specials
Quantities and sizes limited
No layaway, hold or special order during sale

1330 NORTH ACADEMY BOULEVARD — 596-3031

Grand West OUTFITTERS

In Search Of: The Soviet Experienc

CC Student Raps with the Ruskies

What are you willing to do for peace? You could meditate or march, encircle the Pentagon, or canvas for nuclear freeze; you could study politics, support a strong defense, or just mind your own business and hope everything works out.

In her freshman year at CC, Joanna Hambidge decided to take the issue of peace very personally. And her decision led her to the shores of the Black Sea, in search of the answer to a question that is so simple it might sound naive:

"I wanted to know why the United States and the Soviet Union could despise each other enough to threaten to destroy each other and the rest of the world." At that time, her image of the Soviet Union, as it is for many Americans, was one of grey oppression.

Joanna studied the Russian language and culture. She wrote papers about the USSR, including one in which she relied on Soviet sources. But her real interest was not with official positions and numbers of warheads; she wanted to know what the Russians thought.

After graduating in 1986, Joanna had her opportunity. Despite the Chernoble catastrophe, she and twenty Americans spent nine and a half weeks behind the iron curtain.

Led by Professor Bernhardt, the head of the Russian Department at Wooster College, the group toured the obvious cities—Moscow, Leningrad, Baku, etc.—but they spent six and a half weeks in Krasnodar, east of the Black Sea.

Krasnodar has only been open to Westerners since 1985, so Joanna and her group were probably the first Westerners the provincial town had ever seen. Although most of the natives mistook her for a Bulgarian or German, upon discovering her origins, they would first be wide-eyed and then delighted.

In fact, she was such a novelty to the people that she enjoyed near celebrity status. At a movie theater, she would be swamped with offers to visit peoples homes.

She ended up living with a gregarious Russian family, instead of in the Intourist hotel for Westerners. Joanna's goal was to meet the Soviet people uninhibited by government tour guides and contrived ceremonies. Despite a few official urgings to the contrary, Joanna was able to stay with the family that adopted her for the entire six and a half weeks.

Just as Joanna had pressing questions for the Soviets, they, too, wanted to know about life in the U.S. and, above all, peace. Many of them had the impression that the West is extremely violent, with rampant crime, and they would be afraid to visit here for fear of being killed.

"Why does Reagan want war?" was a common refrain. Joanna found that the average Soviet citizen is as concerned with peace as an American, if not more. On Krasnodar's streets and walls, murals and posters vaunt the theme of peace.

Government sponsored peace committees are a common facet of Soviet life, and Joanna became good friends with Elena, a young chairperson of Krasnodar's peace committee. Joanna had frequent dialogues with Elena throughout her visit there.

One of Joanna's projects was to conduct a small scale survey. She asked twenty people the certain questions, like "Do you think you will be alive in five years?"

The general results were positive. Most felt optimistic about the welfare of the human race. Eighteen of the twenty thought nuclear weapons would eventually be eliminated.

Joanna found that war weighs heavily on the minds of many Soviets. The highest honor a Soviet youth can receive is to be appointed to stand guard at the eternal flame, a common Soviet monument honoring the millions who died in war.

The town and the people Joanna came to know were warm hearted and peace loving, but life there is indeed different. Over the door of Krasnodar's Young Pioneer palace, the local center of the Soviet youth organization, hangs a banner saying, "March in step."

Some of the instances of government dominance that Joanna experienced, a direct result of the tension her pres created. She was under the impressio her abandoned hotel room was bug "because the ceiling sprinkler had ele wires coming out of it."

When driving in an Intourist bus, were hailed by the driver of a st ambulance. Because Soviet citizens are allowed on Intourist buses, the tour g would not allow the ill passenger of ambulance to be taken aboard and shut to a hospital.

One citizen commented that it mus nice for Joanna to be in the U.S.S.R. wh there are so few militia men on the str In Krasnodar militia men are seen on ev street.

After her sojourn, Joanna wrote a rep in which she concluded, "the people of world working together could w through the mess that governments misconceptions had created."

Krasnodar is still open to Weste and the program in which Joa participated is now an accredited A program accepting applicaitons fo semester in the Soviet Union. Joa herself is expected to give a talk next bl in the Russian House.

Bill Gotthelf and Aaron Sh

Summer Starts Readjust to CC Life

The new year has brought us the glorious return of the summer-start freshmen. Summer-starts are students who began their education at CC this summer, took the fall off, and are now returning to continue school on the normal schedule.

Fifty-six summer starts and about a hundred upper-classmen spent the past summer sunning and studying at everyone's favorite summer resort... Slocum Hall. Students took either one eight week institute or two four week classes. Either option yielded three blocks of credit.

Students were left on their own to decide fall plans. Most people worked and possibly took a class or two as well. Many managed to take advantage of the excellent opportunity for travel the free fall term provided. Several students attended other colleges or universities full-time for the semester.

Summer-starts seem to agree that fall was an unusual learning experience. For most of those who didn't attend school it was the first time they had been out of school for such an extended period of time. Being in the much less structured environment of "the real world" forced students to set goals and make life happen for themselves. Kara Waller, a summer-start, felt that being on her own for fall term really helped her to put her academic goals into perspective. Summer-start Stephanie Trovas shared Kara's feelings, "Working at the Denver (a department store) with people who were working there for a living reminded me that I came to CC because I want more for myself." The overwhelming consensus of summer-starts was that their fall semester was by no means dead time, but rather, a very valuable learning experience.

Summer-starts were reunited at a dinner in their honor on January 4. On the seventh, a pizza party was provided for summer-starts and their welcomers. People generally agreed that the orientation activities were the bare minimum. Kara Waller asks, "What orientation activities?" Although no one seems interested in more summer-start olympics or orientation activities of that sort, interest in one more informal gathering was expressed. Another suggestion was allowing the summer-starts to move in one night earlier to get settled and reconnect with old friends.

Summer-starts can be found living in all three of the large dorms as well as Bemis and Mullet, the spanish house. Students were moved in wherever space was available. The distribution turned out as follows: Loomis-28, Mathias-17, Slocum-8, Bemis and Mullet-1. Some students found themselves in exceptionally nice rooms whereas others were not so lucky.

Fifteen summer-start males were assigned to lounges. Although they've been assured the situation is probably temporary, the guys stuck in lounges are none too happy about the situation. One loungee complains, "lounges make us feel extraneous, like we don't belong." Another agrees, "People act like we are in the way—like we are an infringement on their lifestyle," Paul Jones, Assistant Director of Residential Life, feels confident that rooms will open up in the near future. Furthermore, he reassures that the fall freshmen went through the same ordeal and survived.

Most people seem to be adjusting well to the "real CC," however; students stress, that it is an adjustment. Summer-start Tim VanLuven explains, "Leaving h twice—it's like going to two diff colleges." Another student emphasize takes a real effort to switch back int studying gear after working fo semester." Most summer-starts felt fall-start students have been friendly supportive. However, one summer reported, "I've run into a considerable of inhospitality—people just a interested in meeting summer-starts.

"I've run into a considerable wall of inhospitality—peop just aren't interest in meeting summe starts."

Beyond the obvious changes in num of people and weather, students no other differences. "Summertime was m like a family," commented summer-s Ben Dover. Students felt that, over summer it seemed that you were at le acquainted with everyone around. Now seems there are always a lot of people don't know each other. Other stud observed that the atmosphere was m more laid back in summer than during regular year. Now everyone seems to moving at a faster pace.

Despite a few complaints summer-st generally expressed a positive atti towards the program. Many stud reported being less than thrilled about summer-start program when they f heard about it, but now are really glad were chosen as summer-starts. Old new summer-starts agree, the prog creates a common bond between stud that lasts throughout college.

Margo L

WE'LL DO YOUR LAUNDRY!!!

WASHED
DRIED FOLDED

Suds 'um
Laundry & Cleaners

1931 W. Uintah (across from Uintah Gardens)
473-3756 Special student offer w/CC ID.

Special Collections: A Good Research Source

Tutt Library offers a variety of services, ome of which have gone undiscovered by students, particularly those abailable rough the "Special Collections" vision of the library. People refer to this a vaguely as the "Colorado Room," but Colorado Room is just one of several visions within "Special Collections," the ction of which is to provide students, ulty and members of the neighboring mmunity with a wealth of documents—me dating back to the 15th century as ell as numerous contemporary texts.

Barbara Neilon, curator of Special llections, distinguishes among the five ajor divisions within the department. e speaks of the branch devoted to cords of faculty members and alumnae of olorado College, inclusive of esentations by distinguished faculty, arbooks, photographs and momentos ating from the founding of the College. he Colorado Collection houses "anything ertaining to Colorado and unusual aterials of the South West." Works by elen Hunt Jackson, a 19th century ovelist, "probably one of the best known olorado authors" are contained within e Collection. Rare Books and Special ditions comprise another category, cluding originals by Dante, Dickens, Mollere and Steinbeck. Also, among the are Books are several incunabula: books hich precede the invention of the inting press, hand-copied and illustrated xts. The fourth category consists of proximately 250 manuscripts: papers ritten by influential people, personal urnals (memoirs), maps and also some prized illuminated manuscripts. There is an oral history division of audio-visual materials as well as selected miscellaneous items and photographs.

What determines the quality or "rarity" of a book or document which is contained within Special Collections? Several of the "rare" books are first editions signed by the author, or they may have unusual bindings or may have been published by distinguished presses. One text has "fore-edge painting" on its pages, which reveals an image of a scenic countryside or chateau, a technique which is no longer practiced. There are several texts written in non-Roman alphabets, among which is an ancient hebrew scroll (the exact date undetermined), the oldest document in the library.

One of the greatest concerns and challenges of the curator and staff is the preservation and maintenance of these materials. Many of the Special Edition and Rare Books are stored in humidity—and temperature—regulated vaults to preserve the bindings and keep them dust-free.

Barbara Neilon stressed that the other primary goal of the department is "accessibility" of materials to faculty and students; Special collections exists for the benefit of the CC community. The books available are selected and received in hopes that they correspond to the curriculum of the classes offered at CC. Neilon feels confident that there isn't a single field at CC in which Special Collections doesn't provide some kind of documentation. The materials include everything from mathematics to philosophy. The most widely used texts and most complete collections are those which pertain to the study of history, political science, art history, the evolution of printing and literature.

"Neilon feels confident that there isn't a single field at CC in which Special Collections doesn't provide some kind of documentation."

Where do these documents come from? Most are donations from people in the community—the CC community (faculty and alumnae), as well as the community at large. The Friends of the Library have been generous donors, for instance.

A dedicated staff, comprised of both full-time professionals and students, works hard to compile and organize all of the new materials, the cataloging of which takes "25 hours. per cubic foot of material received," reports Barbara Neilon. Ellen Davis, full-time technician and Judy Finley, who works with the oral history division and photographs and four students assistants are available to aid you with your research.

The staff of the Special Collection division of Tutt Library (located on the second floor south) wants you to be aware of its services and encourages you to come explore the resources available. To better accomodate students' schedules, Special Collections has recently extended its hours from 9-12 and 12:30-4 Monday-Friday to include two evenings per week, Tuesday and Sunday nights from 7-9 p.m.

Special Collections is an important division of Tutt Library and should not be underestimated. You'd be surprised what you might find among the archives on the 2nd floor...so don't hesitate to do some investigating, which may prove valuable to your particular research or interests. The staff would agree with the following opinion stated by contemporary writer James Sledd: "Respect for tradition...does not forbid us to live and work in the twentieth century."

Mary Butcher

S T A R T
MAKING
S E N S E

Be Sure To Attend The 1987

CAREER SYMPOSIUM

Qu' Est - Ce Que C'Est???

Talk with real CC grads about their backgrounds and experiences.

Wednesday, Janaury 21st

3-5 PM

Gates Common Room

Ellipses and Hyperbole

"The primary distinction between humans and apes is that fewer apes claim they can write."

—Hy Lowmam

I wonder how many apes claim to be editors. Sorry, if I sound vindictive, but I am just venting my frustration, having just read the Leviathan. So far this year, they have been doing a commendable job, except for one little thing.

Almost three years in a row now, I have been submitting and submitting, and they just won't publish me. Perhaps I should try submitting a different story. But it's such a good story about a penal colony of impotent narcissists that try to revive the lost art of limbo dancing.

Every year they tell me the same thing. "It's just not abstract enough. Haven't you ever heard of stream-of-consciousness? Who needs all these sentences. And your story is so chronological. Come now, Aaron, it almost makes sense. We can't print that!"

The people who write for the Leviathan are so intimidating. They're all so profound and depressed, and it seems like every story is an excerpt from a novel. Can you imagine, these extremely deep punctuation-less twenty-year-olds are writing novels!

Well, I've worked on my stream-of-consciousness a little and thought you might like to sample it. Picture a page of the Leviathan:

The following is an excerpt from the first paragraph of the author't novel, Genetically Unhappy. The eight volume work was an outpouring that occurred after a spiritual sojourn and bad cold.

"mucous membranes seething mucous membranes i am so unhappy"

Sometime I'll let you read the rest.

It's just as well they discourage me from submitting; everyone should be discouraged from writing. Creative writing is a disease that, like most epidemics, begins on college campuses. The infection begins when we forget that people, namely teachers, have been paid to act interested in what we write.

The disease, aided by a victim's desire to get paid for the way he/she/it thinks, attacks the organ of perception, entering the grandiose lobe, the portion of the brain that makes us think life is a music video starring us.

The disease not only makes its victim want to write, but, worst of all, makes them want to write interesting things. The only problem is it's very hard to write interesting things, so most incipient writers try to be obscure.

These writers don't bode well for the future of English. Actually no one bodes well anymore, it's another lost art. They all need to be sent to boding school or to my fictional penal colony.

It's well documented. English is being destroyed. I don't mind so much as long as people don't write 'i' instead of 'I' and don't say 'I' when they should say 'me.'

My fear of collapsing language was best summarized by Reginald Snickerty who wrote the following:

"I beseech you, on the guts of your grandmother, respect the language, for already a creeping slime mold of miss use is devouring the august body of our speech. Why, I have heard news reports in which their vowels was all wrong. How can us keeps communication with conjugated and syuntaxing all higa-dee-pidge?"

"Would you take a picture of Judy and I?" asked my housemate. "And ME," I corrected. She thought about it a minute and then said, "Ok, you can be in the picture too."

Aaron Shure

THE FIRST ISSUE

Hola! Welcome to a new semester at CC. With the new semester comes a new Catalyst. Many things are changing rapidly around campus. Take care where you step—the busy renovation gophers burrow and claw at our campus's frozen ground. Work should slow down for several days, however, with this storm front that hangs heavy over the front range and plains.

A changing of the guard. With a new staff, this semester's Catalyst will strike out in new directions. While we accept the challenge of maintaining the standards set by last semester's crew, we also plan to make some innovative changes regarding layout and topics.

As we head into this fresh semester I'm amazed as always with the variety of activities and interests that circulate throughout CC's student body and faculty. So much of what CC people do with their time really is fascinating. Much of it also qualifies as newspaper material to boot. Hee hee! Consider your friends' activities when they travel abroad or study biology in Yellowstone—The write about them.

Also, we want to encourage your participation in the opinions section. It's really your responsibility as citizens of the CC community to voice your ideas and opinions. Fill that section.

As we scramble to meet weekly deadlines and assign writers to cover a diverse range of topics, we encourage any students interested in getting involved with the Catalyst to attend our Sunday night 7:00 p.m. meetings.

As CC carries no Journalism major, the Catalyst serves as a breeding ground for experimental journalism. I call it experimental because many of us arrive without preconceived notions of what constitutes good journalism. We read various city papers, consult with friends and professors in order to compare standards and form ideas. It's a learning experience working for the Catalyst. Most of all it's great fun.

Come on down and join us. We're always thrilled to accept new talent into our exclusive and highly professional ranks. Enjoy the issue.

A.R.

THE COLORADO COLLEGE

CATALYST

ALEC REKOW & MIKE FRATERELLI, Editors
KATIE KERWIN & PETE LOACH, News Editors
DAVE EVANS & ANNE MANHART, Features Editors
MUNIR MEGJHEE, Opinions Editor
ERIC BREITBARD, Arts Editor

DEAN CAMPBELL & KATHY MAHONEY, Sports Editors

JERRY WANG & JANE BIERMAN, Photo Editors
PETE SCOTT & SUSAN GRIAK Layout & Graphics Editors
MARY BUTCHER, Copy Editor

JEAN BOYER, Business Manager

LINDA SHIREMAN, Typesetter
LINDA IMHOFF, Typesetter

The Catalyst is published by Cutler Publications, Inc., Colorado College, Colorado Springs, Colorado 80903. Phone (303) 473-2233 extension 673. The Catalyst is printed tri-monthly from September to May, except during holiday periods.

Cutler Publications, Inc. does not discriminate on the basis of race, color, age, religion, sex, national origin, or physical handicap in its education programs, activities or employment policies in accordance with federal, state and local laws.

Editorials appearing in the Catalyst are the opinions of the designated author and not necessarily those of any other Catalyst staff member.

The Catalyst encourages the letters to the editor. Letters should be no more than 400 words in length and be typed or neatly printed. Address letters to the Catalyst, Rastall Center, Colorado College, Colorado Springs, 80903. Unsigned letters will not be printed.

A work of considerable length may be submitted as a guest commentary. Persons interested in submitting commentary should contact the Catalyst at 632-4999 or 473-2233 ext. 673.

The Catalyst reserves the right to edit or cut letters to the editor and guest commentaries.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

A Word for Art

To the Editor:

We all have our little Iraguagates in the closet, and Leviathan has decided to come clean. This is first of all an apology to Ben Trissel for the dreadful misarrangement of "Quiet Night" in issue number two. After briefly considering auto de fe en masse, the staff decided instead to do penance through work, opting for three sparkling issues this coming semester. It's up to you, the reader, to fill these issues. Our new quality control system guarantees impecable reproduction.

This is secondly a sales pitch. If we at Leviathan had a dime for every would-be artist or social commentator in the community, we could winter in Jamaica. It won't get easier. Now is the time to confirm and display your talent. Answer "yes" in the future interview, "yes I have been published." Fame and fortune await.

Art is said to flourish in repressive times. While 1987 America is far removed from repression, one does feel a moral grip tightening on the nation. Bad for freedom, good for art. Grab a pen or brush, fire off a polemic, take a stab at art eternal.

The Southwest? While we do hope to focus on this theme, Leviathan remains a forum for art and politics of any color, with no limits on subject matter.

Three Leviathan canvases this semester translates to a lot of space, and we intend to fill it with the very best CC has to offer. Give your dreams a chance. Submit!

—The Staff,
Leviathan

Keep Food in Your Mouth

To Users of Tutt Library:

In the second semester the library will enforce its policy on food and drink more stringently. If violations continue, the policy will be reconsidered.

We were, admittedly, rather lenient in the first semester, due to the movement of the Hub and the change in availability of lounge areas. The situation has, however, gotten out of hand. I have discussed the problem with the Library and Teaching Resources Committee and others.

More, and larger, signs are posted to remind you that food and drink is allowed only in the lower level of the south building (addition, Tutt-let-whatever you want to call it). There will be people coming around occasionally to remind you of the policy, as well. If these steps do not greatly increase compliance, I will close down the snack room and completely prohibit food and drink for a few days and then we'll try again.

The deleterious effects of crumbs and liquids on library materials are not usually dramatic or immediate. But they do work against the successful preservation of books and periodicals for future generations of learners. I trust a shared commitment to your successors will encourage you to establish an atmosphere which doesn't tolerate scofflaws. I believe restricting food and drink to a limited area is a workable solution. If there is not adequate compliance, a total ban may be necessary.

If you have ideas, comments or criticisms you may get in touch with me or Noel Lenski, Brenda Spoelstra or Lisa Norberg, the student members and alternate, of the Library and Teaching Resources Committee.

Together we can have a nicer place to research and study.

Sincerely,
John Sheridan
Head Librarian

Handling Drugs

To the Editor:

My wife and I read your publication with considerable interest and much enjoyment. In your December 12th issue we were struck by some of the Feature quotes—may we suggest an adaption of one of them?

Reality is for those who won't handle drugs!

Best regards,
J.P. Boyer

Our Natural Society

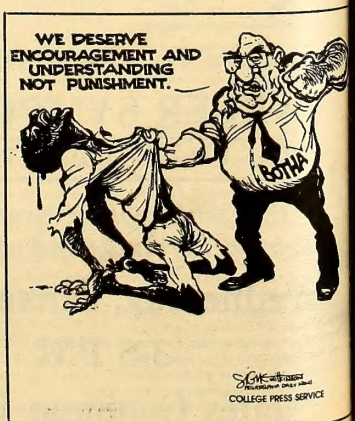
To the Editor:

This letter is in rebuttal of Inger Thomsen's rebuttal of my previous rebuttal for her previous argument. Got it? To clarify: Inger Thomsen argues that I am confused about the "nature" of the difference between conservatism and liberalism, and in my subsequent relation of conservatives as defenders of the status quo and their apathetic stagnation. Well, I claim no confusion. I reported that the middle-class conservatives are "achingly slow" in their reforms of an essentially repressive society, and that these "reforms" are always supported if they do not affect them (the middle class) strongly. I still stand by that statement. I question, however, Inger Thomsen's ease in accepting the status quo as "natural" (a word she employs a great deal in her article-rebuttal), and defending her conservatism as realistic in its evolutionary approach, that is, as opposed to my "liberal creationism."

I find her argument, her acceptance of the way things are and her generous slow change, arrogant in the point of unsophistication. Why must we assume that our society, its structure and assumptions, are natural? Why? Why do I get the feeling that it is beautifully convenient to consider a societal structure as "natural" when one happens to be comfortable in it? Why do I get the feeling that the underclass of capitalist America do not find our society particularly "natural?" I do not accuse conservatives of letting "the world pass by." On the contrary, I accuse them of deliberately forming the world in the image of themselves and their values, and wishing to stay in control. I accuse the conservatives of pleading ignorance and the human being's "limited knowledge" in refusing to make important and needful reforms in our socially unjust society. I accuse them of playing with words, explaining their lack of imagination and empathy for others in the guise of "advisable detachment."

Liberals, to continue, do not have a "buffet-style" manner of seeing history. On the contrary, I do not blind myself to the fact that history has occurred year after year; I do not refuse to recognize one era over another. I do refuse to accept "tradition" as an inviolable basis for our values today. I question every assumption I have, my society, my religion, the reasons why I feel the way I do. I do not create castles in the air, I question the castles which have already been constructed and attempt to understand their validity, why they exist to begin with and what is their justification. Is that creating? Perhaps from the point of view of an individual who too easily accepts our society the way it is today, who too quickly buys into tradition, whether or not they individually feel it to be right or wrong. Yet I believe the conservatives to be the creators of self-satisfaction, that is, as acceptance of the way things are because they are, regardless of who suffers, starves or is unjustly treated. Never will I accept the status quo of society and claim it as natural because I happen to benefit from it. Question it all, question every aspect of your life, your society, the people around you, your very self: then, if you are still the defender of the status quo; if you allow slums to exist, a working class to be the "natural" support of the upper middle class, then I wonder who is doing the creating: me, who questions its validity, or you, who rationlizes and gives it justification.

—Victor Greo



David Makarechian

1986 was the year of the collapsed summit, of the ashed space shuttle, of the stagnant economy and of uncovering of corruption in foreign policy. And 000 people got MBAs. What's the outlook for 1987? ere's a rundown of what to expect in the coming nths in the areas that effect us the most.

The Economy. 1986 may have seemed uneventful, but st analysts see significant changes for 1987. sinesses and individuals will have to alter their nomic activity to adjust to the government's latest ms. Provisions in the new tax bill, including higher es for business and less incentive for capital estment, is likely to mean recession for the U.S. nomy. Recession may be compounded by our nomy's shift to the "service sector," already being ned for continuing high rates of unemployment.

The Democrats' ascension in the Senate clouds the ture even more. The United States faces a whole new nomic agenda, typified by protectionist trade policies, bulous labor programs, increased regulation and trictions on profitable businesses. Try and spend your ney early in the year—because big brother will try to it for you.

Foreign Policy. America will be back—but back to ere it was six years ago: Absolutely no credibility in reign policy. Rep. Lee Hamilton and Sen. Dan Inouye air committees investigating the Iran fiasco. As the odlight shifts to the Iran-Contra connection, we'll hear about South Africa, the Philippines, and differences th the Japanese.

The U.S. has similarly run the full circle in arms ntrol: No real progress and a dim outlook for the ure. Lame duck status, dwindling popularity from the kjavik collapse, and the Iran affair have all weakened President's political base. Time and time again agan has showed that he will not cut deals when he's disadvantage. With failures in other areas of foreign licy Reagan will likely cling harder to the one project at he still believes is a success: Star Wars. On that ue, neither the Soviets nor the U.S. seem ready to dge.

All indicators suggest that U.S. foreign policy will ntinue its tradition of interventionism, secretiveness, d disaster. Buy terrorist insurance when you go oad. We're targets and its not hard to see why.

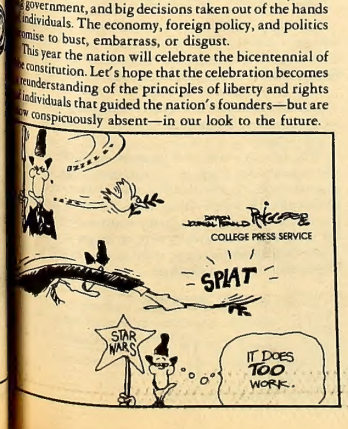
Politics. The new year rings in the new race—mocrats and Republicans will begin jockeying for sition as we move closer to the presidential primaries. th parties seem to be staying the course—so get ready r the revolting rhetoric we've all heard before.

Early polls put Bush slightly ahead of Dole in the OP. Its too early to tell what will happen with Baker, mp, DuPont, Lexalt, and Robertson. But the ndering to the New Right seems to have begun in rnest. The Republicans are thinking of new ways to ntrol individuals' social views, particularly by rallying hool prayer, banning abortion, and legislating aditional" values.

Gary Hart holds a big lead over Coumo, Jackson, and a st of other collectivists. The Democrats seem to be eased with Hart's plans to increase the size of the vernment and to limit choices open for individuals to ake, but it's still tough to figure out what Hart -and e Democrats—stand for.

In summary, it looks like 1987 will be another year of g government, and big decisions taken out of the hands individuals. The economy, foreign policy, and politics omise to bust, embarrass, or disgust.

This year the nation will celebrate the bicentennial of e constitution. Let's hope that the celebration becomes reunderstanding of the principles of liberty and rights individuals that guided the nation's founders—but are ow conspicuously absent—in our look to the future.



Victor Greto

I remember New Year's Eve when I was a kid, with my family. Listening to the strains of Guy Lombardo's music, I would be at the front screen door, waiting as my father screamed "Thirty more seconds!" I would then close my eyes, ball my hands into shaking, tense fists—and wait. And IT always came, the ball dropped in Time's Square, my mother and father kissed one another as though making up, and I would open my eyes to the new year. I would look at myself, my clean hands (I would always take a bath on New Year's Eve, wash my hair, etc.), my pared nails, my whole body, and we would all as a family go outdoors and scream with the rest of the neighbors, the new year beginning with a joyous celebration of possibility.

When I grew up, left home, I thought about those days as Romantic, believing that a single tock of the clock could change the world, that something outside, Time, could change all men's attitudes forever.

I have often wondered who was the first person to call childhood Romantic. Childhood, for me, is the antithesis of Romanticism; it was tyranny, a belief in a Truth outside oneself which had the power (at will?) to change all things in an instant, a deux ex machina of sorts, a hand of a god who's finger would plow through my mind the correct path to what is right and correct. What would show me the Truth, this outside force, would also show all others the Truth; how sweet, I would think: a world without doubts, ordered, filled with a profound hope and common vision.

Yet alone now, doubtful of a greater Presence whose finger can plow my mind, direct me to what is Right, I am as free as a bird, as a bird whose convictions and possibilities seem as limitless as the skies it flies. Yet even birds are chained to the sky.

The idea of a New Year, of beginning again, of wiping the slate clean, is amazingly nonsensical. Life is messy. If the ghetto existed on December 31 it is probable that it will exist on January 1st. So what's my point? Instead of looing for man-made markings in Time, like hashmarks on some ludicrous timeline, instead of blindly hoping for a change in our society, in our outlook because a second has passed, we must, as always, look within ourselves for the faults of all things around us. Now I'm Romantic, for I hold the belief that I, as an individual, can transcend the traditional chains which bind me, can usurp wishful thinking and its implied fatalism through knowledge, through the accumulation of experience, through an understanding that others must find their own way, towards a unique conception of my own life, and the burden I carry of freedom with responsibility.

Now to messy politics: President Reagan has dealt arms to Iran in exchange for hostages. The profits taken from these sales were funneled covertly to a paramilitary fighting force which plans to overthrow a sovereign state. It is often considered good to kill two birds with one stone; as I have heard some people say, "Think about it, that was a damn good deal he made. Don't ya think?" Yes, it was, but don't ask me to think about it too deeply. I can see President Reagan over the Christmas holidays, in bed with wife Nancy, clenching his hands into fists, closing his eyes and hoping and believing that it will all go away with the new year.

He is back (the President, I mean) for two more sordid years of capitalist apologetics, two more years of our seeing, after Dan Rather's smiling face, stolid old Republican dinosaurs mumbling rationalizations out of the sides of their mouths on the evening news: We bombed Libya because we're bigger and tougher than they are...We destroyed detente, arms control, because of this really neat thing called SDI which we cleverly call Star Wars...We knew nothing about the arms sales to Iran, it was that cowboy Ollie North...We knew nothing about money to the Contras, money to Republican campaign funds—remember Ollie North? It was him and that guy Poindexter—and, yes, did you all know that North was mentally disturbed about fifteen years ago? Surely that says something... But, Hell Mr. President, isn't Oliver North "an American hero?" Aren't the Contras the "equivalents to our Founding Fathers?" And aren't the Republicans and the current Administration the possessors of the Truth, who have the Right to lie, steal, and cheat from the American people for "a good cause?" Look at that old paisan of mine, Machiavelli, blushing to the roots of his hair, putting his thin, dark hands to his face and lamenting to whom, if he had only the proper foresight, he could have dedicated his book to, and not to that horribly ungrateful Medici.

Happy New Year, Mr. President! I'm afraid, that no matter what the calender shows, our problems are still with us. Perhaps what we ought to do is to take New Years literally and examine our own self-righteous souls. Here are some questions you can put to yourself, and some reflections: Does the world really revolve around America? Could I possibly be wrong in assuming I'm right, and was thus wrong in "bending" the law to reach the ends I consider right? And, really, what is this "American Way" I (and superman) am preserving and imposing on the world? I must be thinking of American ideals, not practice, could I? For the first 70 years of the American Way we had slavery; for the next one hundred it was a nation of Jim Crow, of robber barons, of stampeding and irresponsible individualism. Ah, the good old days, when me and the Mrs. would sit back in our all-whiteub and listen to Al Jolson sing "Is it true what they say about Dixie?"

But these questions will never come to Mr. Reagan. There is too much invested, too much at stake; to admit to being human is simply too much of a price to pay. "I am not wrong," Reagan must think, "I have a mandate from the people, I am older, much older, and wiser. Can't anyone understand, friends? America is new, a shining example to the rest of the dark world, an example of freedom (and inequality—my addition—V.G.), of political liberty (and social tyranny—me again). Now, everyone," he will conclude, the rouge on his cheeks deep and red, his eyes sympathetic and welling with tears, "close your eyes, clench your hands into fists of might and righteousness, and pray. Yes, pray, for our hour is at hand!"

Amen!

Elizabeth Cheney

Did the Bombs Fall?

"All you have to do," they said, "is scrub the tables, replace the doily, and refill the salt and pepper shakers." No problem, I thought as I began my first day as an official SAGA table cleaner. How hard could this be? After all, I'm attending an institution of higher education where the students are pretty close to becoming adults. Certainly, by now, everyone has developed an adequate set of table manners which they put to good use when they dine at Taylor or Bemis, right? Wrong!

We hear a great deal on this campus regarding the horrors of a nuclear war. If anyone would like first-hand experience of what our world might look like after the bombs fall, come to Taylor Dining Hall at 7:15 p.m. and I'll show you around.

The mess is unbelievable. Although it's startling that people who are at least 18 years old still play with their food, it's even more incredible that they leave the resultant mess for someone else to clean up.

Those of you who have forgotten that SAGA is a cafeteria (at cafeterias we clear our own dishes) know who you are. What you are lacking it seems—besides a working knowledge of common courtesy and table manners—is any knowledge of the people who clean up your messes. We are not a nameless, faceless cleaning crew. We live in the same dorms you do. We take the same courses. We go to the same parties. We even have moms, dads, cats, dogs, brothers, and sisters. What we don't have is the time or desire to clear away your dishes so we can clean the tables we're paid to clean.

So what, you say. After all, you're paying $11,000 per year to be here and you deserve some service, right? Wrong. If anyone would like to pay me $11,000 I'll gladly bus your dishes. I could even be talked into doing windows and floors. In the meantime, I make $3.50 an hour, and I like to think I live in a community of people mature enough to take responsibility for themselves.

So, the next time you get an urge to put your potatoes in your jello, take your tray to the dishroom and spend the time reading a book instead. It's really much more stimulating.

OPINIONS

Michael S. Mehan

The Bottom Line

My new year's resolution was to relax and take it easy this semester. No deadlines to meet, no two or three articles to write a week, no worrying where my next article was going to come from; it would be a nice, quiet semester. However, we know all too well about the best laid plans of mice and men...

With all the excitement in the world, presidential crises, new prospects for arms control, Soviet Union trying to find some boot straps by which to pull itself into the twentieth century, student protests in China, and a whole array of things happening in our world, it is hard for such a loud mouth like myself to keep quiet.

With President Reagan, my favorite "target," in the dumps, and his mighty conservative "revolution" running out of steam, I find myself unable to resist the temptation to spread the word, as it were, and prove that rational, liberal thought still shines through the fog of the final Reagan years. I find the task especially important, after accusations that the Catalyst had taken on the political air of the National Review.

Therefore, rather than just a sporadic column or two, like I wrote during the previous semester, I find it necessary to enlighten the campus every week with my political insights and views on world events. So, for 1987, Michael S. Mehan will climb down off his mountain in order to give you, "The Bottom Line."

The bottom line this week shall be drawn under that yearly event, which has caused so much tension between the Administration and Congress for the last six years, namely, the budget. President Reagan, in the midst of the Iranian arms scandle, was able to sneak his budget for 1987 into Congress. Sneak I say, for the budget was hardly much cause for any excitement. As a matter of fact, if you saw last year's budget or the year before's or any of the Reagan budgets since 1981, you have seen this year's budget.

The record high, trillion dollar budget does not represent any kind of change in the Reagan Administrations economic thinking. It is the same old, tired, cut and slash budget we have seen every year for the last six years. It is even a little ironic, that the President, who has spent his political career attacking the "big governmental spenders," has submitted the largest budget in history, 1.02 trillion dollars.

The Reagan Administration has tried to take the new Democratic controlled Congress into consideration, but its concessions fall far short of the mark. Reagan has asked for only a three percent increase for military spending, 312 billion dollars, or 29 percent of the budget. That is less than he asked for in previous years, 320 billion in 1986. However it is still a sum that is unacceptly high.

Even as the President tells us how well our economy is doing, there are entire regions of the country, the farm belt, the "oil patch," timber, and textile regions that are in desperate need of help. If Reagan is looking for a "third term" period of economic growth, nation wide, he will not get it by burrying a third of our budget into a corrupt, waste-filled, inefficient military industrial complex. While strangling the rest of the economy.

With the "decrease" in military spending, the President has given the Democrats some concessions by increasing spending for job training programs and AIDS research, but he nullifies these "concessions" by cutting funds for education, aid to farmers, and social programs, and, ironically enough after the "just say no" campaign, funds for law enforcement and drug education programs.

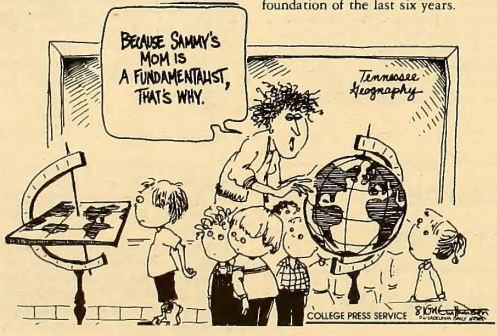
The "new" budget does not represent an economic blueprint to start an economic revolution which will carry us to the end of the decade, but the same, tired, old ideological manifesto, that will turn Congress and the whole budget process into a battle ground.

Instead of giving the country a rehashed version of his 1981 budget, the President and his economic team should be handing us a coherent policy that will promote growth in ailing sectors, reduce our trade deficit, and tackle the federal deficit. Mr. Reagan approaches the whole budget process all wrong. He hands over a budget, which he knows congress will attack, then he turns the whole affair into a political, ideological battle of "taxers" and "cutters." Instead he should work with Congress, to build a bipartisan plan that will lead to real economic growth.

Mr. Reagan in his budget has once again given us his supply sided solution to the deficit that George Bush called "voodoo economics" six years ago, and which has been largely responsible for the record growth of the deficit throughout his two terms.

Here again, we hear nothing new, just the same thing he tells us every year. Reagan predicts we will have a rate of economic growth greater than what is really possible, 3.2 percent, this year. He then bases his estimated revenue intake upon this figure, thus on paper, by the Reagan numbers, we should grow that old deficit away. Unfortunately, his figures do not coincide with reality, we do not grow at his high rate of expansion, as many feel we will not do this year, again, and the revenue intake falls far short of the government's expenditures, increasing the sea of red ink.

In concluding his budget message to Congress, Reagan said, "A foundation for sustained economic expansion is now in place." However, the material for building on that "base" as well as an innovative, economic policy are not available. Instead of providing Congress and the Nation with the "bricks and boards" to build a strong and stable economy through the rest of his term, the President has only given us more of the same, dreary, old "concrete" to pour on top of the sagging foundation of the last six years.



Editor's Note-

This year's opinion page springs to life with a new attitude. It has been argued that the opinion page of last semester, rather than providing a forum for political views across the spectrum, became a vehicle for the expression of an extreme political viewpoint. Despite rhetoric from the previous opinions editor to the contrary, this feeling remains strong with many campus leaders (one going as far as to call the Catalyst "that fascist magazine" in conversation). Let it be stated here, this opinions page does not and will not conform to political bias.

The new opinions page's main role is to provide these pages as an open forum, not only political opinions but, opinions regarding local, campus, and state issues. This section will by no means restrict itself to discussing issues of only national consequence, but regards issues of less far-reaching scope of equal importance.

To provide possibilities for a basis of discussion, the opinions page has recruited Victor Greto, whose eloquent writings have been seen in the Leviathan as well as on these very pages last semester. Dave Makerechian has expounded the virtues of libertarianism in The Disparaging Eye for some time, and now comes to the Catalyst also as a columnist. The steady, familiar writings of Michael S. Mehan and Elizabeth Cheney will continue to grace this paper, Michael giving us the bottom line and Liz articulating her political view point. Finally, "No More Mr. Nice Guy" will return in February to continue in his quest for attention.

Letters and articles are welcome and will be given equal consideration.

—Opinions Ed

What's the Point

By Dickson Musslewhite

Paul "Shaeffer" Hamamoto

You know, I've always wanted the widely acclaim
No More Mr. Nice Guy to say that. To just say FUCK throw caution to the wind. To speak what he thinks think what he speaks. To give us a SHIT. A GODDA
Perhaps, a DICK. A cuss word or three. Heck, All I nee to believe that No More Mr. Nice guy is for real is on only one expletive deletive. You know, I'd settle CRAP.

While you're at it, why don't you ask Santa to send yo a teddy bear?

Quiet. Now, I was about to say, before MY PARTNE rudely interrupted me, that old Mr. Mean isn't und inspection, really Mr. Mean. He's more of a sheep wolf's clothing. He's the guy next door who wants h door painted black.

He's obviously listened to the Rolling Stones to much.

He craves blue velvet; but, when it comes down to he ends up clad in tweed, a plaid tweed. Althoug apparently antagonistic, he is, at heart.....

.....Sheer cream puff. Let's face it, the guy's a.....

.....phi delt. But, even disregarding such a terrible blemish, Mr. Mean remains a nice guy. Just look at th first article, in which Mr. Mean takes a wide-stance clenched-fist attitude towards a clan of emasculatin female figures on campus. He wails on these sorori whales (at least, he finds them a bit big boned), by callin them all the dreaded "B" word! Christ, Mr. Mean, at be at very best, the "B" word merely denotes one of th more redeeming feminine qualities.....

.....Shh.....
.....What?
.....Do you hear that?
.....Hear what?
.....The sound of paper tearing .....
.....What?

I was just trying to imagine the sound of wome reading our article.

Oh. Anyway, before MY PARTNER stole precio column space, I was telling Mr. Mean about his style. Y see, Mr. Mean, the "B" word cannot, even when troope in and launched en force, pack the power of the "C word. The "C" word is the atomic bomb of vulgarity only seems logical that you would have used it. As John ny B. Swift dictates in his *Discourses of the Contests a Dissensions between The nobles And The Commons
Athens and Rome,* "The art of criticism, that is the art offense, necessitates the unabashed use of one's heavies and most potent artilery." Translated into mor mundane terms, it means.....

.....Ya gotta use the "C" word.

Shush. Now, that's just one example of your half hearted quest for infamy, Mr. Mean. I'm sure there ar more.

.....Unfortunately, butt head here's too lazy to look fo them.

I am not. Really, if animosity is one's ultimat objective, one must be truly mean, and I don't mean th mean.....

Eany, meany, miney moe. Jesus. What is this crap

Shut up, just shut up. Would you? This is, afterall serious endeavor. I can't get people to take note of th well concealed, antagonistic tendencies of this oxo benign liberal arts student, when you keep interrupting

Why do you want to do that?

Because his condition reflects something more aspect...a more alarming fact.....

Like what?

Why, he's an example of the ruinous, chaotic state this country. Mr. Nice is a microcosm, who, like th macrocosmic U.S., like all of Western Civilization, is self destructing. He's unravelling, from the inside, just lik this half of the world. He actually wants to be Mr. Mean
My God, what if he actually were no longer a nice guy

Well, then we'd have one more asshole in this wor who would soon go unnoticed.

Oh. How decidedly pessimistic.

Sure is.

Uh...Uh.....

Well, go ahead. Tell 'em

Tell them what?

You know.

Oh, yea. Honor Code Upheld.

Armstrong Overwhelmed by Bucket Dance Theater

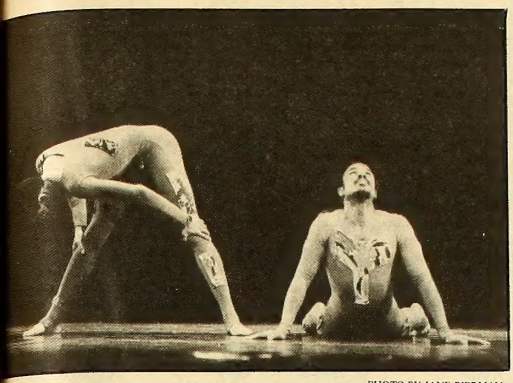

PHOTO BY JANE BIERMAN

Bodies. Powerful and quick. The hands nd arms were propeller-like. Energy uded from the stage, inspiring an asional twitch and convulsion from the dience. Last weekend Garth Fagan's cket Dance Theatre let loose on the rmstrong stage, incorporating several fferent dance styles, rhythms, costume signs and lighting techniques that led to overwhelming performance.

Fagan created the company over fifteen rs ago, focusing on his dancers' strength ther than their technical ability. In the cussion following the performance, the ncers expressed their loyalty and miration towards Fagan and the style he s created. The intensity of the group ows through in the consistency of their rformances and the dedication of the ncers.

The dance movements were diverse, nging from African style isolation to ditional ballet. For example in the first ce, "Discipline is Freedom," the woman ve diagonally across the stage in an dulating fashion, followed by ntrasting diagonal movements of the uscular men with graceful balletic leaps. These aesthetic contrasts typify Fagan's ability to design a complex structure with the full force of his company.

Watching "Spring," consisting of a man and wman moving in perfect synchronization, was like watching sculpture in motion. The two bodies seemed to merge together as one. Short and poignant, the dance demonstrated Fagan's concern with precision.

The last peice "From Before" embodied the African rythms of musician Ralph MacDonald. The choreography was organic, allowing the dancers' movements to be natural. Fagan keys in on the natural. According to the dancers, during the company's African tour, audiences understood and related to the style, to the rythms, to the beats. They responded by dancing along with them, and in one instance, a woman sent off a singing, screaming call. While the appreciative Armstrong audience did not react in this extreme manner, the Garth Fagan Bucket Dance Theatre did leave a tremendous impression.

Julie Sterling and Elissa Breitbard

PHOTO BY JANE BIERMAN

1986: The Critic's Choice

Too hip to synthesize 1986: The Year in Music, we merely present Catalyst Critics' top three LP's of the year gone by. Not necessarily in this order, they are:

MARTY BROAN:
1. The Smiths, "The Queen is Dead"
2. Mark Isham and Marriane Faithful, Soundtrack to he movie "Trouble in Mind"
3. Billy Bragg, "Talking to the Taxman"

JODY REED:
1. The Bo Deans, "Love and Hope and Sex and Dreams"
2. REM, "Life's Rich Pageant"
3. Paul Simon, "Graceland"

CHRIS DUNN:
1. The Jazz Butcher, "Bloody Nonsense"
2. All of the Blue Note label's jazz re-issues
3. The Fluid, "Punch and Judy"

E.J. BERNACKI
1. Joan Armatrading, "Sleight of Hand"
2. The Jazz Butcher, "Bloody Nonsense"
3. The Housemartins, "London O Hull 4"

The Best of Broadway Comes to CC

Theater Workshop Production Next Weekend

"Of course it isn't Broadway; this is Colorado College," explains Nina Essman, producer of this block's unique patchwork production of the best of Broadway. Presented by Theatre Workshop and Dance Workshop, A Sampler of American Musical Theatre salutes The Great White Way with a montage of musical numbers that, in their entirety, showcase The Musical as a distinctly American folk art that represents the many faces of its people. This democratic production makes its way to Armstrong stage for a preview performance (free to all) on January 22 at 8:15 p.m. Regular shows are on Thursday, Janaury 23 and Friday the 24th at 8:15 p.m.

After inviting everyone who "can walk, talk and snap your fingers" to open auditions third block, ten directors, 15 technical hands and a cast of 85 set to work on bits and pieces from Broadway shows that span the years from 1935 to 1979. A Sampler is dedicated to the people: students with little or no stage experience quickly found themselves hoofing and humming right in the thick of it. The show provides ten student directors—each responsible for the number he or she chose to produce—with the chance to strut their stuff in the technically chaotic world of The Musical. Likewise, the program appeals to an expansive audience.

From the show-stopping pizzazz of Cabaret! to the eerie social commentary of Sweeney Todd to the heart-felt emotion of Fiddler on the Roof, the various musical themes represented in A Sampler allow the audience to look deep into the many personalities of Broadway and, consequently, the American Character. As Essman describes the unifying theme of A Sampler, "The Musical is a truly American art form, and Broadway is its home." Thus invoking the muse of Americana, the creators of this show set out to produce "a sampler" of musical entertainment in the spirit of Broadway but in a style unique to The Colorado College.

Tapping hidden resources in all corners of the campus, directors and performers alike removed The Musical from its traditional home and, searching their souls for elements of the American Character, created a show jam-packed with excitement and personality. The performance moves its audience. Something about this cast of—relatively—thousands mesmerizes the viewer. Realizing, as the show moves effortlessly along, the amount of organization and miracle-working that must have gone into getting so many people together leaves the audience in awe.

A Sampler takes some of the most poignant moments in Broadway's history to the CC stage and, as a result, provides an intriguing, delightful sample of this American folk art complete in itself!

Lisa Lane

Weekend Cult Flicks in Olin

Come up to the lab and see what's on the slab. Saturday, January 17, 7:00, 9:00, and midnight at Olin Hall. Plus, "A Clockwork Orange," Friday, January 16, 7:00 and 9:30. Sponsored by the Film Series.

7th
ANNIVERSARY
Sale!

20% OFF
ALL MERCHANDISE
JAN. 17th THRU 24th
WINE & CHEESE SERVED SATURDAY, JAN. 17th
FINE VINTAGE CLOTHING & JEWELRY
FOR MEN & WOMEN
HOURS
10 to 6:30 SATURDAY
11 to 6:30 MON.-FRI.
12 to 5:00 SUNDAY

THROUGH • THE
LOOKING • GLASS
10 Ruxton Ave. Manitou Springs
685-1666

Totally Naked and Hot in Minneapolis

Just two short weeks ago while at home in Minneapolis over Christmas break, I awoke one morning after a wild night of drinking and dancing with a catchy tune pounding in my head, and a slight recollection of the verse "Totally nude...totally naked..." and I needed to hear the song again, just to clear my head and allow my hangover to set in. After a quick phone call, I learned that it was the hottest new dance single called "Totally Nude" performed by Minneapolis' own band The Wallets. The Wallets? I couldn't believe it. They played at my senior prom! This was getting exciting. I went out immediately and bought their only album "Take It," and listened to it really loud, over and over again.

Steve Kramer, lead singer, keyboard, and accordian player, is the mastermind of The Wallets, combining playful accordian phrases with a mimicking saxophone, played by Max Ray. Kramer's lyrics and tunes are bouncy and enthusiastic, and overall very fun to listen to. I like every song on the entire album, "Ghosts," "Sometimes," and "Because You're Mine" are amongst my favorites.

